Special Correspondence.

New York, Sept. 3.—The lateness with which I received notice of the date of issue of the Dramatic Review prevents me from giving more than a brief outline of the more important bills at the local theatres the last week. Next week, however, I promise a long, gossipy letter.

The Academy of Music is having a continued success with Andrew Beach and the new production, "The Last of the Romans." At the New York, Kitty Lotan and "The Man in the Moon" have been the features. Maggie Clune, Marie Dressler, Polk and Kol- lins, the Hawthorne Sisters and Lotty are also popular still.

The Rounder is running at the Casino. The Girl from Maxim is still drawing well at the Criterion. The Governor is on at the Empire. A Young Wife is making money. For the 14th Street Theatre Dear Hearts of Ireland is the play at the Third Avenue, and at the Star, A Soldier of the Empire is to be seen.

All these seem to be playing to exceptionally good houses, and the season really lacks brightness than ever before.

The Vaudeville houses are crowded nightly.

From New York comes the information that Edwin Stevens, the popular comedian and character actor, has been engaged by Charles Frohman to play the leading role in "His Excellency the Governor."

Miss Ray Rockman

England and Paris both have enthroned another American actress. She is Miss Ray Rockman, of San Francisco, and is a particular protege of Bernhardt; indeed, she has been likened to the great French actress, having the same slender, willowy figure and sinuous grace, besides talent of a high order.

After a season of study at the Comédie Française she was intrusted by Bernhardt with the farcical role of the Duchess of Liverpool in "Snoo," a social satire by Gustave Guiches. Her success paved the way to other roles in the repertoire of the famous Frenchwoman. When Bernhardt's last English tour ended Miss Rockman, who was well received, remained in England to accept an engagement with Henry Irving to create the part of Eudokia in "Peter the Great." She subsequently played Jessica, and the Princess Flomlino in "Mine, sans Gene," with Henry Irving, and during Ellen Terry's tour last spring she made a marked success both as the Queen of Naples and as Ophelia in "Othello." At present she is playing the Countess Mirtza in "The Great Ruby."

MARGARET ANGLIN

We wonder if the new will ever displace San Francisco's present idol, Blanche Bates, in the favor of the theater-going public.

KANSAS CITY.

Special Correspondence

Kansas City, Sept. 4.—The regular season opened yesterday, with the following attractions: The Orpheum, with Idelene Cotton and Nick Long, Terry and Lambert, Elizabeth Mann, Dave Meil's Kinetoscope, a moving picture machine, Lex Brown and Millian and Shilts. The theater has been renovated and refitted throughout.

Coate's Opera House and The Gillis are both dark.

DENVER.

Special Correspondence

Denver, Sept. 2.—The six weeks engagement at the Broadway, of the Lombardi Grand Opera Company has proved a big success. The critics go into raptures over the wonderful voices of the foreign company, and its reception has been most enthusiastic.

The Tabor Grand opened to-night with Ben Hendrich in a "Vendite Venitienne." There was a crowded house and the week promises big box office receipts. Brown's in town and will be seen at the Tabor Grand, beginning on the tenth.

The Denver Theatre, vaudeville, is in its second week under Mr. Frank Readick's management. The American European Vaudeville company will be the attraction next week.

The season at Elitches was closed by a Masked Ball, and at the Manhattan Beach by the force "My Wife's Mother" and a vaudeville company.

MISS LILLIAN RAYMOND

Miss Lillian Raymond, whose picture appears on our title page this week, is said to be one of San Francisco's prettiest chorus girls. Besides being pretty she has an exceptionally good voice and hopes one day to be something more than a mere chorus girl. Miss Raymond's stage experience has been short, having only adopted the stage a little over a year ago. Her first appearance was made at the Tivoli, where she has been until the last week when she secured her contract with that house and accepted an engagement at the Grand Opera House.

Bob Bieen, who will some day make his mark with that magnificent bass voice of his, is one of the San Francisco people who will go. His rough, very short, in-parts voice development.

MRS. THORNDYKE BOUGICAUT

She poses well—Don't you think so?
Asiatic Invasion a Failure

While our American players are invading the Orient it is interesting to note the fate of our Japanese cousins who have attempted to "beast the lion" in this country.

The Japanese company that recently played a short engagement at the California would have undoubtedly met with greater financial success had their enterprise been under proper management.

The company, nineteen in number, was induced to come to this country under very alluring promises by some of their countrymen named Kashihiki, who saw fame and fortune awaiting him. He did not however have the necessary wherewithal to launch the enterprise and seeing the difficulty suddenly left for the east.

The stranded company gathered enough money from their countrymen to take them to Seattle, where they hope to secure proper backing and management for an extended tour.

Otto Kawasaki, the leading man, is also a playwright of ability and stands at the head of the profession in Japan, while Madam Yacco, his wife, occupies a similar position among the actresses of her country.

Little Tsurru, the juvenile member of the company, has been left behind in the hands of J. Asaki, an artist of this city. She will complete her education under his care.

If some good, live manager would take hold of this combination it should prove a big money-maker.
The Dramatic Review makes its first appearance to-day. It needs no apology for its publication. It does not come to fill any long-felt want. Nobody wants it, because nobody ever saw it before and naturally would have no secret banking after something about which nothing is known. But there is such a thing as creating a demand, and that is exactly what the Dramatic Review Publishing Company intends to do. The Dramatic Review will be made the leading theatrical paper of the West. It will be to the West what the Dramatic Mirror of New York is to the East. But there will be no dramatic journal in the United States, the Mirror not excepted, that can equal it in the scope of territory to be represented, or in illustration and reliability. All this cannot be accomplished in a day; therefore we ask the hearty cooperation of the profession throughout the country, the interest of the local managers and a good word from the public.

The West has produced some of the best and most successful actors and actresses, who have strayed from home and fortune in the East and across the Atlantic. California glories in the success of a score of her noted men and women who have risen far above the mediocre in the theatrical profession. There are others yet to be seen and heard—those whose natural ability is being guided by the dramatic school and by the experience of managers and teachers. It is this idea that the Dramatic Review intends to foster and protect, never, however, overlooking the interests of the hundreds of the profession from the East and from Europe who regularly visit us.

The Dramatic Review will have a correspondent in every town and city on the coast and in the principal cities of the East. It will keep thoroughly up-to-date in all matters of interest and benefit to those whose livelihood is obtained behind the footlights. In short, it will represent all phases of the theatrical business.

Judging by the great success in London of Maclyn Arbuckle, it might not be amiss to enquire if all his admirers are aware of the fact that not many years ago, it was a Justice of the Peace in a backwoods town of Arkansas, as awkward as it is possible to imagine, and having no prospects of a successful stage career or anything else. His success is well deserved, and his friends hope to see him here again soon.

Chester Bailey Pernald, since success of his Chinese sketch "The Cat and the Cherub" and its successful production in London has become quite an important figure in London dramatic circles. He has adopted for acting version in English of Henry Heyerman's "The Ghetto" for Mrs. Potter who will soon produce it.

The benefit performance given at the Orpheum recently for the Californian soldiers, brought out some big box sales. Mrs. A. T. Townsend purchased a box for $175, and Mayor Phelan gave $1000 for a box. It was one of the most managed benefits ever given in the city.

If the world doesn't know pretty soon "Why Smith Left Home," it never will. The play is being translated into German, Norwegian, Swedish, Finnish, Dutch, Italian and Danish.

Mrs. Langtry is impersonating herself in a new play, "The Dignitaries." One of our irreverent scribes wonders why she doesn't try the novelty of impersonating an actress.

Mary Van Buren is playing Catharine Hulscher—"Madame Sans Gene," in place of Blanche Bates in Los Angeles.

Frank Coflin, the well-known church singer, who has sung several times in Tivoli productions, leaves soon for a season of voice study in Europe.

Harry Samuel, son of J. Samuel, a well-known pioneer merchant, has home after several years spent in violin study in Europe. He returns an artist of more than ordinary merit.

CORRESPONDENTS

and Managers Out-of-Town

Should remember that all copy for the Review must be in the office not later than Wednesday of each week to insure publication. Have it reach the Review by Wednesday afternoon.

MISS CHARLOTTE THOMPSON

It is a pleasure to notice how Miss Charlotte Thompson—the new playwright—is forging to the front as a dramatic critic. It is not a surprise to her intimate friends who have felt all along she was preparing for a great future. Her wonderful command of language makes her an elegant writer, who always has the only word to give the exact shade of meaning to express her thought.
Florence Roberts Interviewed

"I am fearfully busy packing" said Miss Roberts to a Dramatic Review man last Tuesday morning at the hotel Savoy. "I leave for New York to-night and with that common failing, have put off making ready until the last moment." The same charm and magnetism which characterizes Miss Roberts' work behind the footlights pervades the personality of Mrs. Morrison of private life and one might imagine her about to receive at five o'clock tea or performing some other social function, but the worry incident to "packing up" seemed to rest very lightly on her shoulders.

"Tell me all about your new paper," she said. The reporter reviewed briefly the aims and hopes of the Dramatic Review.

"I am deeply interested in all things pertaining to Drama" she said, "and hope your enterprise will be a grand success. There is certainly a broad field here for just such a paper."

"I go to join Mr. Morrison in New York and we will rest at Pecksville on the Hudson for a few weeks before starting rehearsals for our regular fall tour, which closes in Portland, Or., this fall. Then I play an engagement of eight weeks at the Alcazar without Mr. Morrison, Mr. Whitelaw will not be with the company the coming season, but joins us here in San Francisco for our oriental tour, which immediately after I close my season at the Alcazar."

"I am looking forward with a great deal of pleasure to the trip, for while I have played in almost every city of any size in America, my professional engagements have never taken me off the continent." "We will show at Honolulu, several places in Japan, possibly Manila and Australia and New Zealand."

"Have you any new productions in view for the coming season?" was asked.

"Mr. Morrison attends to that and though there are several in prospect I cannot say what they are with any certainty."

"Are you pleased with San Francisco and your reception here?"

"Do I like San Francisco?" exclaimed Miss Roberts, "why it is my home. I came here often when a child. My mother lives here. I made my first professional appearance on the stage where I have just closed such a successful engagement. I met my husband here. Do I like San Francisco? There is only one city in the world for me and that is dear old Frisco."

"The audiences here are uniformly kind and sympathetic with me, but on Sunday night last when I closed my season at the Alcazar the bond seemed so strong and the sympathy so pronounced I had a hard time keeping the tears away. I was the certain fall for the last time I was in my dressing room with Miss Thompson of the Old and the orchestra came outside of the door and played 'good-bye sweet heart good-bye.' I broke down completely and wept."

California Theatre Changes

A complete transformation is being effected in the interior of the California Theatre and when it is reopened in about three weeks the public will be amazed at the change presented. The dividing line between the Alcazar and dress circle has been removed, there will be a gradual slope from foyer to stage, and by this arrangement one hundred seats will be added to the two hundred of the lower floor. Two new curtains and a complete set of scenery will be added, the house will be re-tinted and frescoed, a new switch board and electrical work will be put in place, and, in short, the theatre when completed will be one of the handsomest in the country. Manager S. H. Friedlandier, is now East looking after his booklings which include the strongest attractions now traveling. During his absence, S. C. Oppenheim, his business manager, is on deck looking after affairs.

Paderewski's long-talked-of opera is now definitely announced for next November, at Dresden. The subject is Polish, and it is said that the music will be Polish in character alone. The pianist is shortly to make a concert tour in the United States, and if his opera proves a success in Germany, he hopes to make arrangements for its production in the United States.

A NEW SINGER

Fannie Francisco, better known to her San Francisco friends as Fannie Michelson, has been making for herself a most enviable reputation in Europe. She was a phenomenal success in Amsterdam, where she sang an engagement of nine months. She was invited to sing at the coronation of Queen Wilhelmina, at Amsterdam, who afterwards invited her to appear before her at the Hague. The young queen was so pleased with the American singer that she presented her with a very handsome bracelet as a token of her regard.

Miss Francisco will appear the coming season at Dresden.

OUR LETTER BOX

Persons wishing to reach members of the profession out west, whose addresses are unknown, may send letters in care of the Dramatic Review. A stamped envelope, plainly addressed, must be enclosed with application for each letter. After 30 days letters will be sent to the dead letter office.
Grand Opera House.

The Grand Opera House is crowded nightly by enthusiastic audiences who never seem to tire of the clever little comedies of "El Capitan." Wolff, as the bloodthirsty humpage, with his "penetrating glare" is too strong for the play. Mr. Wolff is an artist, and has become during his stay here immensely popular. He is really, musically a comedian with a good voice, and his singing of the drinking song in the last act encored three and four times each night.

There is little for Perse to do but love, fight, and kill the little ad- vance and walk through the opera. Arthur Wooley, as Pozzo, the wretched representative of the Vicar, gets a laugh out of every line, and Goff, as the insufferable leader, gives a most convincing performance. The new member of the company, Hubert Sinclair, as the peppy lover of El Estrella fits into the company as though he belonged there. He has a very rich, musical voice, and is a natural comedian with a good voice, and his singing of the drinking song in the last act encored three and four times each night.

Alcazar Theater

I f the opening of the Alcazar Stock season last Monday night is a prom- ise of the future then may the patrons of the popular Forrest Street playhouse take in hand all the more by the well qualified company presenting it. Eugene Or- pher's "Christopher, Jr." is a good, graceful act, a good dresser and pos- sesses an refreshing pliobility which wins the hearts of the audience from the start.

As Christopher Colt, the junior of the name, he showed a truly apprecia- tion of the spirit of the period, and gave a clever light comedy characterization. If we are not very much mistaken, when he as a more emotional parts, there will be a matinee girl furor around the Alcazar that will eclipse any of the numerous previous ones. Gertrude Foster, who made her work here a couple years ago as the Alcazar's leading woman is once more enacting leading roles. There is always an intelligent purpose in Miss Foster's acting and charm of dainty woman- likeness about her that has made for her a great and personal following among the theatre gosi of this city. Her voice was most enjoyable and reflected the charm of her personality. Clarence Montaine who has a habit of making much of small parts was very good in the light part of Mr. Glibb. Geo. Webster's Major Hedway was suffi- ciently abrupt and outspoken as the retired Major; Marie Howe was good, as she always is. Frank Denithorne was Denithorne, well dressed and reliable. Helen Henry, had a small part in which she made a lovely sister. The balance of the cast was in suitable roles, and the stage settings and management—just a word about them—they were directed by a man who knows his business. Some of these times we shall have a word to say about him.

The Columbia

Mr. Clay Clement has often ap- peared in "The Bells," but never to better advantage than during the past week at the Columbia Theatre. It is safe to say that Mr. Clement expected some adverse criticism of the piece, and in order to require com- mitment has been pleased on seeing that some of the most particular reviewers complimented his earnest and pain- staking work. With but one or two minor exceptions, no improvement could have been made upon the dramatic piece, and to say that Mr. Clement is a one-part actor is misjudg- ment. At all events, the attention of his auditors fairly riveted on his masterly handling of the character of Matthew and red, and his acting was superb. Mr. Clement is to be congratulated on sur- rounding himself with such a suc- cessful company. Augustus Cook and H. S. Dufield were especially strong in the character parts of father Walter and twins and Mr. Cook makes out shows him to be a past grand master of the art. H. G. Littau and Maria Christian has a few unfortunate mar- nerisms which rather mar his other- wise excellent work. W. B. Mack and his Williams play their small parts acceptably. Mr. Mack's reading of his lines in the dream scene was especially good; Miss Nell McKeown made a lovely Annette and Miss Phoa McAl- lister gave an earnest delineation of Catherine. As such, the cast, Miss Gertrude O'Malley she make the character bored to a turning. To sum it all up, the play was well acted, well costumed and well staged and de- serving of better houses than have been the rule.

Dewey, Oakland

The Octofoon has held the boards at the Dewey the past week. The piece is too well known to require com- ment. Sufficient to say that the mount- ing was elaborate and good. E. J. Holder, manager of the house, was pressed into the service, as the cast is a long one and made a hit with the disagreeable part of Jacob McClosky.

Landers Stevens as Wah No Tee the Indian did an excellent bit of character work, while Miss Gilbert as the tearful heroine had the sympathy of her auditors from the start.

George Herrmann gave the old part of the lead in the part starring Carl Bench, Maurice Stewart and Grace Plaisted was good with the exception of Charles Franks who was unable to learn the dozen lines of the Auctioneer by the middle of the week and was separated from his position in con- sequence, and Walter Whipple, a large man with a large voice over which he has very little control, essayed the part of Capt. Ratts.

Amusements *

The Grand

That tuneful and delightful opera "Fatina" will be the attraction at the grand opera house next week. It will be put on better than ever be- fore.

The Alcazar

The Alcazar managers have decided to put on the "Wages of Sin" next week, and, like "Christopher Jr.," it will no doubt be sufficiently attractive to draw crowded houses.

The Columbia

The Columbia Theatre is to be dark the weeks of September 11-18. The regular fall and winter season will be inaugurated on the 25th inst. by the great Polish actress, Modjeska, who is to be supported by John E. Kellard and other very capable people. Elaborate productions of "Marie Antionette," "Mary Stuart," "Macbeth," and "Nuovo Ado About Nothing" will be included in the repertoire to be presented.

The Orpheum

The next week's program at the Orpheum will include the Bachelor Quartet which will depict the scenes and incidents in bachelor apartments between 11:30 p.m. and 1:30 a. m. This feature promises to be the hit of the show. White and Harris, singers and dancers, will also be new on the bill; also the Crawford sisters, famous change comedians. They are an exceptionally good comedy team. The boys' band and the leading actors of this week will re- main.

The Orpheum.

Judging by the applause, the leading features of the Orpheum's exceedingly good bill this week were the Mouliere Sisters on the triple horizontal bars and the Hungarian Boys' Military Band. The women are certainly wonders in their line. There is a noticeable improvement in the music of the clever boys' organization since it was here a year or two ago, and it will be ever more popular than before. Felix Morris, the prince of comedians, is not given sufficient scope this week for the best that is in him, and while his sketch "Behind the Scenes" is good and almost true to life, it does not show the talents of himself, nor of the members of his company. However, Miss Mary Townley and Miss Ethel Harrison acquired themselves really better than could have been expected, and under more favorable circumstances would no doubt have made a lasting impression. Mr. Lardner, as a typically impetuous stage manager, brought out all interest possible. Mr. Morris has clever support throughout. Charley Case, in black face, tells some original stories and sings some new songs in a most entertaining way. Charley admits himself that he would never take more than the leather medal in a prize vot, but he does pride himself on the fine points in his stories. While they—the points—are exceedingly fine, Charley expects vaudeville lovers out west to laugh by the time the point is reached. Not so with San Franciscans—they want time to think it over, or wait until the joke is seen by the smallest boy in the balcony, so that all may laugh together, but by that time Case is telling another story, and each succeeding one is better than the one that went before it. Arnold Grazer and Little Hazel continue to excite the admiration of crowded houses in their mirror dances. Apollo, the wonderful wire artist, and Montrell, the leading trick juggler of the country are splendid features of the program. Probably the best moving pictures ever seen in the city are those shown at the close of the performance by J. C. Bredelkin, of the American Biograph. As the circus speaker would say, this feature alone is worth the price of admission.

The Chutes

The Chutes Free Theater had an exceptionally good show this week, the principal feature being Adgie and her lions. Other vaudeville villains were Ruth Nella, soubrette; Du Bell, automatic Leah; Frank Barton; Bragg & O'connor, the comic sketch artists; Kelly & Davis, Irish comedians and the animascope. Edward Schell still remains down the Chutes a bicycle. Emil Markeberg will give balloon ascension this afternoon.

The Randburg house opens up October 2nd, J. L. Woodward manager.

Geo. Lask's New Role

Everybody who is anybody knows Geo. Lask, the sunny natured stage manager of the Tivoli. He is an author, but one would never expect him to be the author of 'coon's stories. Here is one he wrote for the DRAMATIC REVIEW, because he said he liked to interest the profession by at least one item out of the regular channels. The readers may themselves judge of the story's merits.

"DE OLE OMMA."

A Mississippi Character Sketch by George E. Lask

"I'se an ole nigger now, boss; once I was a slave, now free—richer in slavery than in freedom; dough my freedom was not given by de war. I was free afore; a wretched nigger eder way; wretched 'kase de old massa am dead an' burried; he who bo't me from de cap'n's Tom; yo'; he said unto me, like him in de good book, 'Jef, you is free.'"

"'Kase you don't pass an old nigger by like I was so much trash, I'll tell you as how it all came 'bout. I was born up on de Red River, raised with a lot of piccaninnies as best de ole folks could; dey neber dreamed of freedom; bo'n demselves in slavery, they 'pected dere kids to be sold and residjust de same as dey had. Well, de first years of my life I played, I laughed, I sang like any ole happy darky kid, with nothing for to do but to enjoy myself. When I was 12, I was put to work on de corn rows, then 'mongst de cotton—then—how sad it is to tell—I was torn away from de home I loved, taken to New Orleans and sold—sold to de highest bidder, Cap'n Ephriam Jotts, steamer Magnolia."

"From dis on, rondounced in my ear, de cry, "To work, you lazy nigger, or I give you rats. Work or I'll blow de top of your lazy body off. Work, or by de Jehovah, I'll send you where de blood hounds 'll never scent you.' I ax you, who has neever known a massa say bo's free, what tormens would dis not put you through. I wurked, wurked, wurked as best I could from morn to night, from night to morn, on de steamer Magnolia, that run from New Orleans to St. Louis. For three years, life day after day was as I has just told you. But in the the winter of '88, when de ole ribber now flowing at your feet was choked with its wealth of waters, deliverance came unto me.

"How kau I describe to you the anguish of my deliverance; if I tell you she was like de angels, you will say you neber see dem—if I tell you she was more b'utiful than anything else on earth, you will say it's an ole nigger pred-a-dice—so how can I tell you of her as she appeared to me, standing on de seat of de steamer Magnolia, her long, slender form floating to de winds, her angel face wreathed in de smiles of happy childhood. De ole massa stood behind her, pointing out de beautiful along this glorious river, when all of a sudden de sound of a gun was heard; the mass turned to see from where it came, took his arm from her waist, and into de rushing waters of de king ob ribs, bers fell de Angel of Magnolia."

"As the piercing scream raung through de still December afternoon, which told of de sudden fear dat crossed her mind. One thought crossed my mind, de thought to save dis angel; was not death as welcome as dis worse than slavery, de cruelty of Cap'n Jotts, of de steamer Magnolia. I stood up on de seat, saw her rise for de second time, gave one jump and landed within a stone throw of where she has risen. When for de last time she came up again I caught de mass and de waist securely and raised her head on my shoulder 'bove de waters of de swiftly flowing ribber."

"Cap'n Jotts, of de steamer Magnolia, had by dis time lowered a boat, which took us in, an' bore us safely on board de steamer. When de ole massa pressed de chile to his bosom, he cried aloud, 'Cap'n, how much for dis brave, brave nigger?' 'A thousand dollars' answered he. 'De ole money-squeezer he only paid four 'undred and fifty for me, and he had de cheek to ask a tousand.' 'I'll buy him,' says de ole massa. 'He's yours,' says Cap'n Jotts. 'I'm dam glad,' says de ole massa, an' den we looked at one another an' both busted out crying."

"I neber left de ole massa wile he lived. Five years ago he died. De cruel 'ministrator robbed my noble angel of all. From poverty and broken heart, last year she died. I done what I could to keep her going, but when she died de light went out of my life."

"Dat's why I say I'd rather be de ole massa's slave to-day, an' he alive, with de little angel by his side, dan de freest nigger in all America.'

Weston and Herbert's vaudeville came in from the North this week and immediately left again to play Martinez, Henicia and Vallejo this week. Next week they go South, playing Salinas, Watsonville and other towns. The Company gives an excellent show, and is meeting with deserved success. A. E. Thompson does the advance.

Between booking the people for Williams Tent Vaudeville Company, getting the bookings off for the Eureka Fair, securing vaudeville people to accompany the Passion Play to Eureka, booking Weston and Herbert's vaudeville, Hart's Twentieth Century Players and the regular bookings of vaudeville houses, the Hallett agency has been more or less busy this week.
THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

PORTLAND.
Special Correspondence.
PORTLAND, Sept. 1.—The theatrical prospects are brighter in Portland this year than they have been in years, and all of our local managers look forward to a most successful season.

The Marquam Grand is this week playing the Sam T. Shaw Company in "From Sire to Son," "The Westerner" and other stock plays. The regular season, however, does not open until September 15th, when The Boston Lyric Opera Company will play a week's engagement.

Cordray's theatre, which has been entirely remodeled, redecorated and enlarged since last season, opened August 27th, with Hoyt's "A Midnight Bell," L. R. Stockwell and other sterling actors and actresses in the cast. Next week, "The Girl from Chili" will hold the boards, and the following week, Naue O'Neill will come. Cordray's theatre, with its enlarged stage, is now capable of handling the largest attractions that may come to the coast.

The Metropolitan opera house is a new Portland play house. It was formerly Cordray's old Third street theatre, Clarence J. Jones is manager and the house promises to be a success, having been thoroughly overhauled and handsomely decorated. It has played the Georgias Minstrels to crowded houses all of last week, but is dark this week to permit of the installation of new opera chairs. Manager Jones has gone to Seattle to arrange for his next attraction.

The Frederick Scott Music Hall, under the management of Louis Remmich, given good concerts and vaudeville performances, and continues a popular resort.

SHELL.

FRESNO.
Special Correspondence.
FRESNO, Sept.—While the people of Fresno have long been acknowledged to have one of the finest opera houses in any small city in California, there are reasons why this acknowledgment is more just and appropriate this year than at any time previous, for Manager R. G. Barton has had the house thoroughly renovated this summer, with the result that even some of its regular patrons, when they enter it for the first time this year may be forgiven if they wonder whether they have not strayed into the wrong pew. From floor to ceiling, changes have been made, all tending both to increase the comfort of the visitors to the place during the coming winter.

The Jileffords are here this week and will remain six nights. They opened on a creditted house with "A Flag of Truce" on Monday night, and will probably close with "The Great Metropolis," the intervening nights to be occupied by "A Summer Matinee," "A Rauker's Daughter," "Uncle Dudley," and "The Enigma." Frensoans are pleased at exceedingly good performances.

But the real opening of the Barton Opera House for the season will not take place until September 20th, when Modjeska will appear with her company. Manager Barton has always shown excellent judgment in his selection of companies, but probably he has never done better in that decision to bring Modjeska here. Following her will come some of the leading companies appearing on the company of time. In fact, Manager Barton has a selection of companies in contemplation which will certainly result in bringing larger houses than have heretofore been seen in Fresno.

The fact that this will be a prosperous fall and winter generally throughout this part of the State, indicates that the stage will be well supported. And as this has always been the case in this city, no matter what the season was, it looks as though this season would be a record breaker.

Benjamin C. Jordan.

SPOKANE.
Special Correspondence.
SPOKANE, Wash., Sept. 5.—The theatrical attraction at the Auditorium, (H. E. Hayward, Manager,) will open on September 15th, with the Boston Lyric Opera Co., for a week in repertoire. The next week will have "Vanity Fair" and "Break of Promise," and Clara Thropp in two new plays, will appear September 22nd and 27th. The Pacific Industrial exposition in October will have half a dozen different troupes, followed later in the season by Modjeska and a week of the Gran Opera Co. The bookings for the season show a smaller proportion of melodramas and so-called farce comedies, as the better times have encouraged the managers of higher and more expensive attractions to risk a trip into the far away Northwest.

HONOLULU.
Special Correspondence.
HONOLULU, Aug. 25.—Mrs. Chris. Turner (Anna Montague) who for many years was identified with grand opera for a time at our school of a musical in San Francisco, has started a similar institution here. Honolulu is Mrs. Turner's home. The Orpheum Theatre is playing to full houses nightly. The program is changed twice a week, Tuesday and Saturday, when excess into and from the house is crowded to the doors. This success is due to the efforts of The Orpheum Theatre Co., recently incorporated, of which Maj. J. C. Cright, Simon Al-isco, is President. First class vaudeville artists are constantly being signed. Jas. F. Polk, manager, as of the comedians well known throughout the States, is also to be praised for the way which he presents lack of interest. Other shows show that chairs are on the way from the East and as soon as they arrive, the Orpheum will be closed and extensive repairs be made. The Upas to be enlarged several feet. The contemplated repairs cannot help but bring them good returns. The people who are holding the boards at The Orpheum are: Gus Post and Dave Marion in Irish and Negro sketches; May Ashley, soubrette; Miss Lillian Leslie, vocalist; Francis Buggs and Lilias Halwost. Dramatic sketch arti- stes are doing excellent work and are de- sirable.

Ebbi Dixon, who made her professional debut a few weeks ago as a contralto vocalist has been decidedly the talk of the theatre patrons. Miss Dixon's facial expression is perfect and shows that her heart and soul are wrapped in her work. A Hap- argue, another among the artists with his clever work. Ebbi Lynwood con- torsionist puzzles the male and causes the fe- male melanchs to shudder while she twits and bends herself in all imaginable ways. She is a most finished artist in her line.

The Maggie Moore-H. R. Roberts Co. arrived from the Colonies on the steamer Alameda, to play a season of two weeks at The Opera House. The repertoire is: "Brook's Ollie." "Hans The Boozman," "49," "Mrs. Quinn's twins," "A Prodigal Father!" "Da- vid Garrick." "A scene of Jean Maltman," and "The Golden Giant." Aside from the Orpheum, Honolulu is de- pending entirely upon travelling companies from Australia for amusement, as a consequence does not have as many attractions as might be desired. However, the theatre has always a sure good house, this is especially true as pertain to light comedy or minstrels. It was at one time hoped that either the Southwell or Tivoli Co. would be on the boards at the Opera House this month but indications were that the show was not to go on and negotiations were called off. The reason for this is that a large majority of the theatre going people were out of town. October or November would be much preferable and without doubt bring large houses.

NATIVE SON.

LOS ANGELES.
Special Correspondence.
LOS ANGELES, Sept. 5, 1899.—For the past few weeks the Orpheum has had the theatre pretty crowded, as there are many small affairs of minor importance and not of a pro- fessional character. Hence, not withstanding the generally favorable weather, crowded houses have greeted the performances at this popular play-house. Nick Long and Aladon have been brought in immediately favor, and the little lady's conception of Mrs. Leslie Carter in the fourth act of "Zaza," was exceptionally clever.

With Sept. 30, Oliver Moreno entered upon his career as a Los Angeles Manager, reopening the Burbank Theatre, under the name of Moreno's Burbank Theatre, with the Frawley Company in "Madame Sanzé." Large and fashionable audiences have attended performances thus far given, and notwithstanding the dropping of such well-known artists as Blanch Bates, Hope Ross and Agnes Cook from the cast, as presented here, the play, is considering it is produced at reduced prices, very well put on. "The Senator" is utilized for Septem- ber tenth. Maud Northam, who was in Modjeska's Company last season, is appearing with the Frawley Company, and nego- tiations are under way for securing Mary Hampton as an addition to the Company. Mary Van Buren has created a very favor- able impression with local play-goers. Em- lia Leader, who has been singing at the Tivoli in your city for the past three months is visiting her mother in this city, prior to accepting an engagement in the East. Jessie Paugham Conant is attending her sick mother at Pomona, having broken her engagement with the McCulls Opera Company to perform this fallal duty. Miss Conant was formerly a very popular artist of this city and was on tour last season profes- sionally with "Why Smith Left Home." The Los Angeles Theatre will open Septem- ber 11th, with Madame Modjeska and Com- pany, under management of John C. Fisher, San Diego. Mr. Fisher was very successful in ridding the affairs of Modjeska last season, and is quite sanguine as to the out- look of her present season, which opened in Los Angeles, September 27th. The War Board has accepted the tender of the Or- phuem for a benefit performance, in behalf of members of D. B. N. S. V., to be given afternoon of September 24th, when, in addition to the regular Orpheum tag, the principals and members of the Modjeska and Frawley Companies will participate.

SALT LAKE CITY.
Special Correspondence.
SALT LAKE CITY, Sept. 5.—Salt Lake is passing through one of the driest seasons therapeutically that could be imagined. Since the closing of the theaters for the season, three months ago, playgoers have been left entirely without dramatic amusement. The coming of Henry Miller and Clay Clement... was looked forward to with considerable interest and the crowding of their engagements in this city has caused much disappointment. It is now stated that Mr. Miller's real reason for "passing" Salt Lake on his return to the East was not on account of his haste to reach New York, but rather because of the indifferent reception his company received on the occasion of its appearance here early in June. Mr. Miller felt that a visit from an organization such as his should be regarded as an event of the season and not as the appearance of an ordinary attraction.

The San Lake Theater opens the season September 7, with Ward and Sackett's Co-medians in "A Batchelor's Honeymoon." Following this attraction the next piece will be "Hotel Toppy Turvey."

Ed Carruthers, Treasurer of the New Grand Theater, returned from New York last week. He reports the Grand booked for the entire season with a strong line of attractions. The house will open September 10th with Ben Hendricks in "A Yeaswo Gentleman."

Miss Ruth Eldredge a Salt Lake lady has been engaged for the coming season to play second leading part in the Standard Stock Company, Philadelphia.

JOHN K. HARDY.

SEATTLE

Special Correspondent.

SEATTLE, Sept. 2.—The Georgia up-to-date Ministrels, colored, gave a good performance at the Seattle Theatre, on Labor Day.

The Jessie Shirley company, which closed a week's engagement at the Third Avenue Theatre this evening in the great drama, "Child of the Regiment," have met with a flattering reception here, the theatre being well filled at every performance.

Sam T. Shaw and his clever company returned to the Third Avenue Theater next week, opening Saturday evening in Milton Noble's great play, "From Sir to Son." The repertoire for the week will be as follows: Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, "From Sir to Son." Wednesday and Thursday, the sensational melodrama, "Always on Time!" Friday, Saturday and Saturday matinee, Mr. Shaw's great success, "Farmer Stebbins."

J. B.

EUREKA

Special Correspondence.

EUREKA, Sept. 4.—The Sisters Waterman, Lowell Bros., Charles St. Clair, Miss Schell and her Sons, The Zanni Oriental Troop and Capt. Teach, the water tank man, constitute the vaudeville attraction at Eureka Fair. T. B. Cutler, secretary of the Fair, has exercised good judgment in his selection of acts.

Manager Wells of the Ingomar, in Eureka, has the Passion Play, augmented by a number of vaudeville acts for the Fair week attraction at his theater.

SACRAMENTO

Regular Correspondent.

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 4.—I am sorry to say that the highest class companies have given Sacramento the go by, and with good cause; they are not patronized nor appreciated by the public and are unjustly criticized by the papers. However, several companies, such as Shaw's and Dailey's, will undoubtedly book this place this season for the usual one week only.

The people of this city who enjoy theatricals are obliged to go to Frisco to satisfy their craving—and this they do quite often.

JOHNNY Williams' Tent Vaudeville Show opens up at Sacramento Saturday night.

The company includes Waldot Elliott, The Four Silvias, La Jesus, Minnie Ward, Daisy Bishop, Wm. Flemen, Cha. Conley, Cha. Nixon, and a number of lesser artists, including uniformed band and orchestra.

MISS MARY TOWNLEY

Miss Mary Townley, who has appeared with Felix Morris at the Orpheum, the past two weeks in a Chicago girl. She is the daughter of a prominent Chicago merchant and has studied for several years under the best dramatic instructors in that city.

Her first professional engagement was with E. H. Sothern last season and she appeared with marked success in all of his productions. Her work attracted the notice of Mr. Morris and he offered her an engagement with his company which promised so well for her advancement in the business that she accepted it.

She has appeared here as Kate Desmond, in "Night and Morning," and Rose Jufard in "Behind the Scenes." Next week at Los Angeles, she assumes the roll of Dorothy Ashton in "The Old Vagabond" and is cast for the part of Lady Plato in "The Rough Diamond" and Rosa in "The Game of Cards."

The field covered in these parts shows the great versatility of the young woman and the approval she has received from San Francisco audiences augurs well for the future in her chosen profession.

MRS. A. S. TOWNSEND.

Mrs. A. S. Townsend at "home" is one of the most delightful hostesses in the world. After you pass the guard stationed at the outer door and are admitted to the lady's presence, you settle facts with the firm conviction that you are going to enjoy the interview. Mrs. Townsend is always glad to see people and is extremely modest about her good deeds. She will talk for hours about her "boys," "but" she explains to you "I am tormented to death by people who want me to give them money for all sorts of enterprises. If ever they catch me, they simply won't go." My friend Miss Rattigan sometimes rescues me from their clutches but even she sometimes fails. Hence the barricade that greets you at the door. If you have not the "open sesame," a Chinaman with a very blank expression greets you at the door and leads you to believe from his remarks, that there never was such a person as Mrs. Townsend in existence.

Mrs. Townsend is very fond of the theatre and all that appertains thereto. She attends the theaters three and four times a week and feels so she says, an interest in all of the players she sees. Her most cherished possession is the original drawing of the official programme for the great benefit given by the theatrical people of this city for the reception of the rst California's. Mrs. Townsend's great generosity on that occasion has passed into history. She is truly "the soldier's friend."

Female Hamlets

Clifton Clymer, a New York critic, thus aptly speaks of Sarah Bernhardt's success in Hamlet:

"I must confess that Sarah Bernhardt's success in Hamlet surprised me. I have seen several female Hamlets, and I have never seen one that was not a disappointment. As a matter of fact, it is always difficult, well-nigh impossible, for a man to play a woman's part, or a woman to play a man's. There is the difference in the figure and bearing and manner of walking, and, more than all, the difference in voice, to destroy the illusion and to remind us that the performer is not of the sex of the character which he or she is personating. Then again, with all his hysteria, Hamlet is a 'manly' character. He dares and does. He bears his uncle; he is not afraid to use his word or risk his life in doing so; and there are certain moments in the action of the play in which a woman must of necessity betray her sex. Therefore Sarah Bernhardt's success was extraordinary. Her Hamlet is as masculine as a woman could make it; indeed, one French critic declared that she was robust and violent. The effect on the crowded and brilliant audience of the first night was remarkable, and in two bits of 'business' she sent an electric thrill through the house."

The divine Sarah could repeat her wonderful success at Hamlet in New York, Chicago or San Francisco, but it would not necessarily be from the fitness of things. The curiosity and novelty of the performance would do the work.

An Actress for Him

From New York comes the story that Frank Gould, the youngest of Jay Gould's sons, is showering attentions and presents upon Lulu Sheppard, an English ballet dancer, appearing in the spectacle, the 'Man in the Moon.' Seeing the happiness that has resulted in the cases of both his brothers, George and Edwin, who choose stage beauties as sires, who will find fault with the youngest member of the family of millions?

G. D. Plata, manager of the Modesto Opera House was in the city this past week. Mr. Plata reports that the good bookings for the season and says his city will liberally patronize good shows.

Manger Bamberger of the Ogden Theater is in this city. He is now arranging for a number of strong acts and novelties.

They'll soon be Rich

In a Broadway cafe yesterday I saw two returned actors, who seemed to be sorry they were back in New York. One was Jack Raphael and the other Ed Stevens. Raphael is the tenor whose career has been marked by numerous exciting adventures, while Stevens is perhaps best known as the successor of De Wolf Hopper, in "Wang."

"I have been in San Francisco five years and I hate to be back in New York. Not for one single instant while I was on the coast did I long for Manhattan—that is, the borough, and not the beverage bearing the same name. No my boy, all this rot about 'dear old Broadway' and 'little old New York is good enough for me,' doesn't make a hit with me. There is not a city in the land, scarcely, in which I would prefer to live to this particular hamlet."

"You're about right, Jack," said Stevens, who has also just returned from the coast. "Market and Kearny Streets are every bit as good as Broadway."

"Then what are you fellows doing back here?" I asked.

Struck it Rich

The Kondike has furnished another romantic story that will prove extremely interesting here, in that the principals are well-known on this Coast.

When the remarkable discoveries of gold were made in the Kondike region, J. C. Anderson went with prospectors along the Yukon to find dirt with an abundance of gold in it, and soon had enough to call it a fortune. The Drummond Sisters were vaudeville artists, and interested themselves in mining when the people of Juneau stumped up the river three years ago. The young women acquired wealth, and one of them married Anderson. At the time the first excitement over the Forty Mile strikes reached the outer world, Grace Drummond and her sister Myrtle were playing at Juneau. They had the gold fever and were among the first to brave the dangers of Chilcoot and make the long and arduous trip down the Yukon. The Drummond sisters made money at Forty Mile and saved it. A few months later, when the stampede to the El Dorado diggings began, they were in the front ranks. Grace proved her business ability by investing her savings in a silver mine on the North Klondike. It proved to be rich in dust and grain gold. Later she disposed of it for nearly $1,000 an ounce.

Now, with her husband and sisters, the erstwhile vaudeville actress is in San Francisco, finding all things coming her way.

Sylvia Gerrish Again.

Henry Graham Hilton, son of the millionaire merchant, and iniciation of several of his friends. The Judge Henry Hilton, has been disinherited by the will of his father, who left the late Mr. Gerrish's fortune to his son.

Young Hilton had met and loved the actress Sylvia Gerrish and she has on several occasions publicly paid his debts. Vainly the father postulated with his son. The latter stuck to Sylvia and now says she will stick to him even though he be disinherited.

A few years ago columns of newspaper space were devoted to the gay life and extravagance of young Hilton and Sylvia Gerrish, the handsome daughter of H. C. Kollins of Oakland, and in New York there is not an all-night resort that has not stories to tell of the gaieties of a dashing quartet, made up of Miss Gerrish, Bella Flee, Hilton, and his brother Frederick. The name of Hilton first became connected with that of Miss Gerrish in 1886, when the young woman was in the height of her popularity at the New York Casino. He married her after the divorce of his first wife in 1893.

Needed Encouragement

Sibil Sanderson had good personal charm, but she could not overcome the effects of a small part and succeeded by Henry C. John in his volume of Famous Singers of Today and Yesterday:

"Once when she sang in London, Van Dyck was the tenor. At the rehearsal he sang into war in order to save himself, and he supposed that she was doing likewise. In the evening, at the performance, the opera was 'Manon,' which Miss Sanderson sang in Europe two hundred and fifty times. She was overwhelmed by the power of his voice. Van Dyck, hearing her small, clear tones, and thinking that the love scene, which came near to offer encouragement, and urged her to 'let out your voice.' 'This is all the voice I have,' she replied, and he, still thinking she needed encouragement, sang all the louder. Her great personal charm makes itself felt across the footsteps, and while she was heavily handicapped in having to sing with such a tremendous tenor, she was able to capture the audience by her sweetness.

A letter from Carl Hart says I 'am doing as well as I ever did, and putting a little in the bank each week. If things keep up as they are now running, I will return in a few years, making my home in dear old Frisco.'
Of a Personal Nature

Sol. Smith Russell is coming to the Columbia soon.

Mojdeesa is to present a new adaptation of 'The Ladies' Battle'.

J. C. Smile is a popular eastern manager.

Maxine Elliott and Nat. Goodwin will be seen at the Columbia this season.

Everybody is pleased to hear that Janet Waidorf has made a decided hit across the Pacific.

Cal. A. Barnett, a popular sketch artist in the East, is expected out West in a month or two.

Jas. A. Hoome will direct the rehearsals of the dramatised version of the 'Children of the Ghetto'.

Maurice Grau, the operatic manager, has been made a Knight of the Legion of Honor, in recognition of his work in behalf of art.

W. R. Dailey has shown his shrewdness by booking his company at San Diego for Christmas week and at Los Angeles for the New Year season.

The friends of Geo. A. Waton, an actor of more than average ability, are griefed at his suicide in this city last week. He was to have played a part in 'Ingeborg'.

Though the death of young Juanita Terry, a niece of her husband, it would appear that Silvy Sanderson will come in for an additional slice of the Terry money.

Stockwell must be tickled at the big business he is doing with "A Midnight Bell" in Oregon and Washington. Max Steinle, as Martin Tripp, has received a measure of praise for his work.

Carrie Roma, for a long time a favorite with Tivoli audiences, has been engaged as a prima donna by an Italian opera company. She has been singing in London with great success.

Ernest Hogan, certainly the funniest man of his race on the stage, who is particularly remembered here on the coast as the bright particular star of Black Fatti's Troubadours, writes from The Antigades that he is all kinds of a success there.

Miss Lulu Snider, soprano soloist of The First Congregational Church and sister of Charlotte Beckwith of the Tivoli, was married last week at the Colonial to Spencer J. Johnson, Jr. of Chicago. Immediately after the ceremony the happy couple left for their future home in the Windy city.

We note by an associated press cable that Captain John Morgan City, off the coast of Japan, in addition to the soldiers bound for the Philippines, on board of the ship "Dramatic Review"'s Manila correspondent, Mr. T. Epstein. As all hands are reported saved the only news to reach the land of the Review will be a slight delay in our first letter from "New America."

The brilliant success of last season, "The Christian," will be seen at the Columbia.

Al. Onsee, manager of the Coeur D'Alene Theatre, Spokane, Washington, will arrive here on the 15th.

Clay Clement will give his final performance of "The Folks At the Columbia Theatre, on Sunday night.

Eddie Foy has been a tremendous success at McVicker's Theatre, Chicago, in the production of "Hotel Topsy Turvy."

Sol. Smith Russell began his season last Monday at Brooklyn. He comes across the continent for the first time in six years.

Robert C. White, well and favorably known to the amusement-loving public of the city, will act as treasurer at the new California Theatre.

Mojdeesa has begun her season in the Southern part of the State, and the reports are that her work and accompanying success are as great as ever.

Mrs. Fred Rich, wife of the popular Montana manager, is here on a visit to her sister Mrs. Walterstein, wife of the well-known manager of the Olympia.

Miss Hattie Quinn, a San Francisco girl of great dramatic promise, is with the Clay Clement Company, at the Columbia. She is sure to be a success in time.

C. S. Denby, one of the managers of Honolulu Opera House is on a visit to this city, bringing business with pleasure. He has booked enough strong acts to run into the holidays.

Rhy Thomas and Bertrice Holmes have signed with the McVicker Opera Company and will go to New York at once for the coming season. Both are popular performers who have been heard to advantage at the Tivoli.

Gottlober, Marx & Co. are at present negotiating for a holiday attraction for the Columbia, which will prove an immense drawing card. It is one of the first-rate productions of its line in the world, and the holidays will take on an additional importance by its presence.

Everybody in the business who knows Harry Campbell, formerly treasurer for Manager Friedlaender, of the California, will be pleased to hear that he is now in charge of the box office at the Grand. He will be well liked by the patrons of that popular opera house.

Willie Collier will use exclusively this season his new play, "Mr. Smooth." This amusing concoction is the work of the star himself, and from all accounts at hand he has succeeded with more than ordinary success in turning out a first-rate laugh proctor.

When Sousa's new opera, "The Bride Elect," is presented at the Columbia Theatre, the celebrated composer's two latest masterpieces, "Unchain the Dogs of War," and "Hands Across the Sea," will be introduced with great effects. Kwaw and Edgar are directing the tour of this opera.

There are already on hand at the box office of the Columbia Theatre enough orders to fill the greater part of the space on the program of the theatre.

This star is a great favorite here, and the promise of some new and elaborate productions by her has been received, with indications of much pleasure by theatre-goers in this city.
Pioneer Amateurs

The latter day generation of San Franciscoans who have adopted the stage will read with much interest a brief sketch of the first amateur dramatic organization on the coast. There are but two or three survivors. It was in 1849 that the San Francisco Amateur Dramatic Club was organized in Platt’s hall, which stood where the Mills building now stands. Among the promoters were William D. English, at present secretary of the Harbor Commission, and Oscar Lewis, until recently manager of the Manufacturers’ and Producers’ Association. The time-stained hand bills do not credit Mr. English with any special part in the casts, but Mr. Lewis was the tragedian whose name was always put in bold-faced type and his appearance hailed with shouts of delight. He was especially at his ease in Shakespearean roles; though time has made a change, Mr. English avers that Lewis had the ideal Hamlet. Among other old-timers long since dead, who participated in the ups and downs of the dramatic club, were Wm. K. Cranna, whose daughter is now a professional; Robert Fulford, who turned professional and married an heiress; James Carlton, whose Irish wit drove him to the stage as a profession; Charles Smith, and Frank Mayo’s friend Brown. Mr. Lewis the other day recalled some of the interesting incidents of the club. He said that after the organization began to attract public attention and charged admission, the members made a practice of securing the services of any professionals who happened to be in town. He remem- bered that Agnes Perry (Mrs. Booth) took a leading part in “Lend Me Five Shillings.” This performance was given in Odd Fellows’ hall, which was the Chlinie building now stands. Julia Dean Hayne, Emily Jordan, Mrs. Frank Mayo, Edward Wilton, and Mrs. Saunders, who is still living in this city were among the players of the club in the sixties. The club changed its name to the Dashaway Amateur Association in the early sixties, and later joined the Western Addition Literary club. A regular company of amateurs was then organized and played Stockton, San Jose, Sacramento, Oakland, etc. It was managed by J. B. Badger, brother of Wm. G. Badger of this city. The organization was continued for eight or ten years and regular engagements were played at the old Metropolitan theater on Montgomery street, Maguire’s opera house and at a hall in Hayes Valley. Mr. Lewis recalls a master builder given by the amateur for the famous California battalion of volunteers that fought through the civil war. He has promised the DRAMATIC REVIEW some interesting articles concerning the early days of amateur drama in this city.

California Comedy Co.

The performance of the California Comedy Company under the management of Kushner and Lipman at Sherman & Clay’s hall, September 1st., was unavoidably postponed by the serious illness of Miss Corrine Fisk. The young lady is reported to be much better and will be on hand to share the honors on September 29th., when two plays will be given with the following casts: “Dream Faces” one act farce.

Amateur Night Incident

During the amateur turns at the Olympics last Friday night the audience was in somewhat of an up- roarious mood, and the performer, who failed to strike a responsive chord with the first note of her song might as well have been giving an imitation of a song ten miles away. After a particularly bad performer had left the boards, the orchestra struck up the introduction for another song and a big, good-natured, two-hundred-pound soldier arose and made a short speech, as follows: “This lady now coming out is a particular friend of mine, and if any one within the sound of my voice makes the slightest sound during her song, I shall feel obliged to thrash him.” His tone carried conviction with it, and the audience in that section might have been dumb from the volume of noise made around him. The song finished, they one and all gave the performer a big round of applause. We have since learned the lady’s name to be Miss Norma DeVerne, and the soldier one, Maguire, from Pueblo, Colorado—a returned veteran from Manila.

Musical Notes

Katherine Bloodgood, the well-known California contralto, is in Europe for two months.

Mrs. Oscar Mansfield will give a piano recital in Sherman-Clay Hall, next Friday night, September 15th. She will be assisted by Mr. Marquardt and Mr. Von Der Mehden, with violin and cello.

Beethoven’s only opera, “Fidelio,” as sung recently with great success by the Tivoli Company, calls to mind the first performance of it ever given in San Francisco, in which appeared most successfully, among others, Mrs. Itoz Fabri, soprano; Miss Anna Elzer, contralto; Theo. Habelman, tenor; Carl Fones, basso.

Paloma Schramm is a nervous wreck—too much work. Such is the report that comes to San Francisco. If it is so, it is the result of parental carelessness, and means the blighting of one of the most remarkable artistic futures, and one of the sweetest, most fascinating natures ever possessed by a child before the public. Let us hope that the report is exaggerated.

The Tivoli

For the seventh week of the grand opera season, commencing next Monday evening, the Tivoli Opera House will present the strongest program of the season, consisting of "Lohengrin" and "Othello," which will be shown alternate evenings. Wagner's famous opera "Lohengrin," is offered by all musical critics to be the greatest work of the distinguished German composer, and the fact that it is to be sung at the Tivoli next week will cause a big demand for seats. "Lohengrin" requires artists who thoroughly understand the unique method of composition of Wagner, and the cast which is to sing the opera at the Tivoli consists of artists who have made success in Wagner's compositions. Barron Berthold will be "Lohengrin," and much interest is being displayed as to his singing of the role, for it was in this part that he made himself famous in a single act in Boston a few seasons ago. William Mertens is to sing "Telramund" and his magnificent voice in this role has won fame for him in Europe, in many cities. Ella Prossnitz is to sing "Elsa." Miss Linck will sing "Ortrud," and the clever American contralto will have every possibility to display her talents as a singer and an actress, for the part abounds with possibilities. William Schuster will sing "Henry, King of Germany," and Signor Zani has the important role of the "Herald." "Lohengrin" will be sung on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings and the chorus and orchestra will be enlarged for the opera.

Verdi's greatest opera "Otello" will be sung on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday evenings, and at the Saturday matinee. Signor Avedano will be "Otello," Signor Salassa will be "Iago" and he will without doubt make as great a success next week as he has in the past. Anna Lichter will sing "Desdemona" and this sweet singer's pure tone and sympathetic personality should make her an ideal lover of the "Moor of Venice." The other principal characters will be rendered by William Schuster, Signor Fonari, Zani, Arthur Messner, Marcel Perron, Charlotte Beckwith, etc.

The Chutes

The attractions at the Chutes next week will be Adgie and her performing lions; J. H. Du Bell, in his authoritative electrical trapeze performance; Kelly & Davis, the "Irish Noblemen," in a new sketch; last week of Ruth Neala, the winsome serio-comic; Waldo & Elliott, comedy acrobats; Travelle, shadowgrapher and illusionist. There will be new moving pictures, showing the arrival of the transport Sherman and bay parade, march of the First California up Van Ness Avenue and scenes on the firing line in the Philippines.

Alhambra Benefit.

Twenty-five hundred friends and sympathizers crowded the Alhambra Theater Sunday evening at the big benefit tendered Private John W. Slade, the hero of the First California Regiment, who left a good right leg in the Philippines and came back with his comrades a cripple for life. The following participated: Kenneth McLeod, elocutionist; Baby Devine, vocalist; O. Wanek, sleight of hand, Miss Margaret Balbis, whistler; A. The Most Beautiful Chorus Girl on the Pacific Coast

The REVIEW offers a valuable Gold Watch to the one selected by popular vote.

I hereby name ..................................
Frank Seymour and Harry Moll have joined forces and do a comedy act, on merit.

Fischer's new Oberon when completed will be a vaudeville house that the city will be proud of.

Harry Richards has arranged with Archie Levy for some clever acts for his Australian circuit.

Waldo and Elliott, having worked the Pacific Slope, are “resting up” a few weeks before returning East.

Rumor has it that the Comedy Theater will put on Vaudeville and Burlesque. On second thought, this might pay.

Cornalla and LeClaire (sister of Tod Sloan) have just closed a very successful month’s engagement at the Chutes and Olympia.

The four Silvins, acrobats, go to Sacramento next week, and will then proceed to Mexico, October 1st. to join O’Rin Brothers’ circus for a long engagement.

Van Gofre and Cotrell, the Videllas, Friedlander Bros., Kohl and Barney, Lajess and Cunningham, Seymour and Laurine are among the many good performers in the city at present.

Hallett’s Dramatic and Vaudeville Agency reports a good demand for clever acts all over the Coast. A long string of Eastern attractions has already been booked for the Coast by this agency in connection with the Western Theatrical Exchange, P. M. Barnes, of Chicago, Manager.

J. L. Peckerman and H. Rosen- cranzt have just arrived from Hong Kong with a couple of male Chinese, seven and eight years old. The youthful Celotrians do one of the cleverest boxing acts ever seen on the stage, scientific and yet full of comedy. Dressed in their gorgeous native costumes with “pig tails” they are indeed a novelty. Hallett’s Agency will book the next act over the North Coast and East.

The season has no perceptible effect upon vaudeville in San Francisco. The Orpheum has played to full houses all along. The Chutes has done a good business as well as the Olympia, Midway, Central Park and Glen Park.

Armstrong and O’Neil and Travelle depart for Honolulu on the 20th.

Madeline, May Walton and ‘The Kellys are the new faces at the Ti- voli, Stockton.

Maggie Colburne has made a decided impression at the People’s Theater in Seattle.

Hines and Hilton, leading features with Maine’s big show will open at the Chutes on the 18th.

Archie Levy is booking the “Herbert and Weston Show” through California. They report big business.

Frank Barton, the well known coon singer, has been specially engaged for the Spokane Exposition.

White and Harris, a clever comedy team, will be features at the Orpheum, opening to-morrow evening.

Matt Trayers and Junie McCree make their New York debut at the Dewey Theater, September 11th.

Lil Kerlakes Pig circus will soon will soon play an engagement in this city with the coast circuit to follow.

Mabel Bowman, the clever little California soubrette, will make her first appearance as a vaudeville star at the Chutes on the 18th.

George Felix and Lydia Barry were made the target for a large amount of rice and an assortment of old shoes at Bath Beach, July 26th. They will visit the Coast again the coming season, playing the Orpheum Circuit.

Weston and Herbert’s Vaudevilles are working the interior towns to good business. The Stanleys of “O’Grady’s Wash Day” fame, Weston and Herbert, the musical team, and Hugh J. Emmett, the ventriloquist, are the stars.

The Willards, Charles and Kittie, who have just closed a successful engagement at the Chutes, have one of the finest settings ever presented by a musical team in this city. It is said to have cost in the neighborhood of $2000.00. Their aluminum chimes are especially pleasing and their mammoth Guatemala octophone is an instrument original with Mr. Willard, and played by the team with great skill.

The Morrels are at the Frederick- burg, Portland Or.

El Nitro Eddie, Emil Walton and Louis Marcus left for Honolulu on the 6th.

Billie Doiron has made a decided hit at the Savoy Theatre, Vancouver, B. C.

Miss Mattie Nichols, formerly of the Nichols Sisters, will soon play in this city.

Rosa will soon depart for the interior, playing the circuit as far as Chicago.

Irene Viiton, the popular balla- div, is at the St. Luke’s Hospital, seriously ill.

Mae Tinson’s sweet voice will soon be heard in Honolulu, with Aus- tralia to follow.

Cad Wilson is booked at one of our vaudeville houses. She will be here in a few days.—“She’s such a nice girl too.”

Antonio Vargas met with much favor at the Frederickburg Music Hall, Portland, Or. He goes to Van- couver, with Victoria to follow.

Harry LaRose Seymour, the tumb- ler, is to work with Laurine, the Com- jess, and with the handsome Laurine, the act ought to sell on sight.

There is a gold mine in store for the manager that will open a good con- tinuous show in San Francisco. It is reported that Proctor is casting his business eye in this direction, but as yet nothing has been done.

The Mechanics’ Fair and Industrial Exhibit, now open, has shown us that among our neighbors across the Pacific there are some very high class musical and athletic talent to be found. Every one of the Filipino acrobats, from Cairo, the strong man, who does a wonderful turn on the parallel bars, to the midget tugboat, “Tod Sloan,” do his or her turn to perfection. They furnish a very entertaining athletic program that has enough of the novelty about it to recommend it to American Vaudeville managers.

The Olympia

The Olympia presents the usual good show this week. The headliners are Givens Bros., grotesque acrobats and Ed Nolan in Irish “funnies” and songs.

Joe Matthews’ popularity as a singer of “coon” songs at the Olympia has thus far been unapproached. He responds to three encores at every appearance.

The other favorites at this popular hall are: The Keensings, Carlton and Royce. Dena Mervin, Dollie Mitchell, Josie Gordon and Sue and May Belle.

The Oberon

Mr. Louis Ritzen, conductor for the American Ladies’ orchestra, has an unusual and unusual amount of work this week of which the large nightly audiences are duly appreciative.

Miss Mae Tinson devotes her time to her music with her songs and Irene Wellington contralto, jumped into instant popu- larity.

La Petite Ross with song, and Harry Factor, violin soloist, round up the good evening’s entertainment.

Morton and Clifford in an original sketch, and Rivera and Little Egypt head this week’s bill, followed by a long line of specialties at the Midway.

Look out!

For the next issue of the San Francisco Dramatic Review. It will be a fine number.
LONDON BUDGET

LONDON. Aug. 19.—According to original arrangements, the run of El Capitan should have ended with the present week but the piece has "caught on." The popularity of "America's greatest comic opera" and of Mr. De Wolf Hopper, "America's greatest singing comedian," and of the book and tuneful music composed by Mr. John Philip Sousa, "America's greatest composer," has advanced by leaps and bounds and the run is to be continued until further notice. Indeed, it is said that, if Mr. Hopper could continue his present popularity he would remain the rest of the year, as he likes English audiences and has good reason to believe they like him.

El Capitan is full of good things of which the often recurring but never tiring "Behold El Capitan" perhaps takes the lead, while the luminous chorus and the matrimonial duets are to be enjoyed and remembered.

The Union Jack and Stars and Stripes March not only tickles the ear and sets the feet moving but puts a patriotic glow into the hearts of the hearers and strengthens the convivial feeling which has recently sprung up between England's sons and daughters and their American cousins.

An item, which will be of interest to San Francisco is the opening of this season by Mr. Forbes Robertson at Prince of Wales Theater, in Mr. Chester Bailey Fernald's new Japanese play "The Moonlight Blossom." Hikurto, plays dealing with Japanese subjects have been either humorously or frankly burlesque. Mr. Fernald has invested his play with a poetical and romantic interest on the principle that human nature is not changed by costume, religion or local customs. The scene of the drama is a small island near Nagasaki, where an evil grows which blossoms only in the moonlight. Hence the title. The play is, of course, a love story and the romance of the play is associated entirely with the flower. Mrs. Patrick Campbell will appear as the heroine.

The successful run of Pot Pourri came to an end Saturday at the Avenue, Miss Chips, the new comic opera in two acts, book by Mr. George H. Sims and music by Mr. Clarence C. Corliss, was produced for the first time in London last Monday at the Coronet Theater. The action is full of life; the music tuneful and the production cordially received.

Another new production which met with an auspicious verdict, is an Irish drama entitled "The Rose of Katlby." It opened at the Prince of Wales Theater for a short run and will be replaced by Mr. Forbes Robertson as stated above. "Your country woman," Miss Jessie Mackay, of Mr. Hopper's company, has received many glowing tributes from the press and public and is pronounced one of the daintiest and most fascinating little ladles ever seen on the boards of the Lyric Theater.

A NEW YORKER.

WANTED

Good people for a first class company to be organized October 1st, by a well known manager. Also vaudeville actors, actresses, teams and single performers; lady pianist.

HALLEY'S AGENCY.

LONDON. Sept. 1.—Mrs. Langtry's appearance at the Haymarket Theatre last evening in Sydney Grundy's new comedy, "The Degenerates," was a decided success. She remarkably portrayed what are generally considered to be scenes taken from her own life. The realism of the initial act is so intense, bringing in as it does, the scandals associated with her name, that the unanimous comment at the close of the performance was, "It was good, but she was awfully brave to do it."

Mrs. Langtry acted better than ever before, seeming to throw herself thoroughly into the spirit of the comedy, which bristles with epigrams, but is occasionally vulgar. The Duchess of Malborough, among other titled persons and a large number of well-known Americans, including Nat Goodwin, were in the audience.

The Prince of Wales telegraphed from Masthead:

"My best wishes for a brilliant success. Booked for a fortnight from to-day."

ALBERT."

Charles Cawley, Miss Lily Hanbury and Miss Lily Grundy were the pick of the cast. Mr. Grundy's clever dialogue met with the usual appreciation.

It is probable that "The Degenerates" will be taken to the United States in the course of a few months.

Although all of the roof gardens have not closed for the summer and but few of the regular theaters have yet opened, enough business has already been done by the preliminary attractions in the metropolis to warrant the prediction that the season of 1899-1900 will be one of the most prosperous in many years. Managers in general realize this and they also bear in mind that a year from now the first half of that season will be disturbed somewhat by the excitement which usually precedes a married holiday, the Epiphany.

Paces of all grades of merit and morality are running in New York this week. "Why Smith Left Home" is a rollicking American farce which has settled down to a long run at the Madison Square Theater. It is of interest to any young married pair who have ever been bothered by too many visits of their dear relatives. "His Excellency, the Governor" was one of last season's successes at the Empire gave way this week to John Drew in "The Tyranny of Year."

The questionably morals of "The Girl From Marseilles" has not impaired the popularity of the Criterion Theater. There can be no question about the morals of "The Rounders" at the Casino which has been running all summer. Friends of Minnie Seligman who is now separated from Robert Cutting, think she made a mistake in re-entering the drama in such a ragged-edge play as "In Paradise," which might have more appropriately been called "In Pajamas," since those garments seem to have failed to make the place of Off-Broadway theater for the purpose of this play. If the play live to get to California the manager who gets it will probably have to cut out an injunction against the pajamas. In striking contrast to Miss Seligman's broad drama at the Bijou is "A Little Bit of Sunshine," in Wallack's, across Broadway, which is not in the least offensive. "Mr. Smudgel," with Willie Cullier at the Manhattan is not too good and not too bad.

Daniel Frohman has succeeded to the management of Daly's theater. New Yorkers know of no one better qualified to duplicate the Daly successes. He started the season at Daly's this week with E. H. Sothern, in "The King's Musketeer," in which he achieved successful last season. Mr. Frohman modestly says that he will do his best to uphold the Daly standard in art.

If he does not marry a stage beauty it will not be because his brothers have not chosen congenial companions from the footlights.

Ruth White of San Francisco, who started out four years ago singing "Ben Bolt" behind the scenes, in the now almost forgotten "Trilby," is doing at least as well as one of her limited capacity could expect. She was assisted last season by Jack Raphael, the old Tivoli favorite in San Francisco, and she has so well as to have learned this summer. Among her best songs is a rolle of Fordman's Sandwich Island opera which never received a larger hearing in this city. If Miss White's mezzo-soprano voice had the necessary volume, she might have stepped into the place in the Castle Square Opera Company made vacant by the sudden death of Lizzie Macnichol, who was last heard singing "Habitations" in a hotel occupied. Jessie Bartlett Davis is about the only woman who could really make the part appear as well as Miss Macnichol, and it is not likely that a woman who has made as much money as Miss Davis would ever consent to work as hard as Miss Macnichol did.

SAN FRANCISCAN.

Lillian J. Rollins who went to school in Oakland, Cal., and won considerable notoriety on the Casino stage as Sylvia Ger- rish ten years ago, has been the cause of having Henry G. Hilton cut off with only $5500 of his father's $95,000 estate.

They live on Sedgwick avenue near 177th street in a house which stands in her name. Her mother and sisters also live in the house. Mrs. Henry G. Hilton lives on Fifth avenue, and has persistently refused to get a divorce. It was on account of Henry G. Hilton's attachment for Sylvia Gerrish that his father took him out of the firm of Hilton, Hughes & Co., formerly A. T. Stewart's, and now Wasmaker's. Henry G. Hilton is now 42 years old. He and Sylvia Gerrish sowed wild oats together, and unless he succeeds in getting his brother and sister to divide with him, the old-time Casino favorite may be forced to return to the stage.

A press agent worked up a good adver- tisement for his show last week by an- nouncing that Frank Goul, youngest son of Jay Gould, had married Lina Shepard, an English ballet dancer. The story gained credence from the fact that Edith Kinghorn, the actress, and Howard Gould had married Buffalo Bill's protege, Katherine Clemmons who before she tried to be an actress, was Viola Dayn of San Francisco. Before Howard Gould married his name was frequently linked with that of the ingénue, Miss Ottey Tyler, now the wife of R. D. Shepard, known on the stage as R. D. McClan. It turned out that Frank Gould had not married the ballet dancer. He had merely sent her many valuable presents out of his income of $12,000 a week.

ST. LOUIS

Special Correspondence.

A hot wave that is reminded of the warm zephyrs of the Mojave received the traveling thespians and ushered in the theatrical season of 1899-1900.

The summer gardens, with interesting vaudeville stock, still retain the favoritism of the theater-goer, though all of the local theaters have roused up their curtains, save the Century Theater which will ignite its calciferous "Hotel Topsy Turvy" September 17th.

The Olympic opened last week with George Boniface, George Ober, and a clever coterie of clever players in "Dear Old Charley." It is a clever farce. Jake Rosen- thal, who popularized it, manfully speaking, is at the helm for "Charley." This week we are the recipient of a visit from "The Purple Lady" and the farce is— not minned. The Grand Opera House and the Columbia throw open their doors this month, the former with Richard's and Pringle's minstrels, while Mr. Herrmann having the advantage at the Columbia. The Watson Sisters Extravaganza Co., a scintillating aggregation of abstractedly-gowned thespians, who were almost known for this week at the Standard. "At Piney Ridge," a melodrama replete with gore, knives, and Frank and Sontag's, is "shooting itself into favor at Havilin's, whilst "The Prodigal Daughter," a racing drama, with a vande- relle, is launched on the board by poppins, is enjoying a profitable week at Col. Hopkin's new Theater that was formerly the Castle Square's fixtures. Lawrence Hanley and his own Stock Company, who have been playing at one of the Gardens all summer will go on the road next week. He recently received many offers of deontology on the occasion of his little daughter's tragic death in Los Angeles. Miss Mild Lilian Berri, one of your charming "native daughters" who is in private life Mrs. Fisher, made a pheno- menal hit during the summer as prima donna with the Spencer Opera Co. She has received several flattering offers to star in vaudeville opera-bouffe. CATT FÄLEN.

CURTIS SNEAKED AWAY.

New York, Sept. 16th. — There was great excitement in the Colored Professional Club, at No. 111 West Thirty-first street, owing to the receipt of a cablegram from Sydney, announcing Mr. Mortimer, president of the organization. The cable was read and inwardly digested, and half an hour later telegrams were being dispatched to various parts of the country, asking for aid for forty-five Senegambians, stranded in the Antipodes through the heartlessness of Mr. B. Curtis, better known, perhaps, as the creator of "Sam" of Poe.

The cablegram was from Ernest Hogan, author of that touching ballad, entitled "All Coons Look Alike to Me." It was prepaid, and worded with corresponding economy, but Mr. Mortimer had but little difficulty in deciphering it to read:CURTIS SNEAKED OUT OF NEW ZEALAND, SEEN AT ATLANTIC CITY. COL. F. A. W. SMITH, LIEUT.-COL., D.B.I., D.S.O., D.S.C., LIEUT.-COL., D.S.O. HOOGAN.

This was as much as the members of the Colored Professional Club knew, but it was sufficient to cause their grief to be interrupted, and but little interest was manifested in the drawings at Frankfurt. The news spread with the rapidity of a prairie fire throughout Seventeen avenues and its environs, and many a little soubrette failed to receive her clean laundry last night, owing to the fact that the lady who does the washing was hustling along the Tenderloin, trying to raise subscriptions for the unfortunates ten thousand miles away from home.

"I tol' dat Er's Hogan not to make no fool trip like dat to de Antipodes," said Big Jim Johnson.

Sydney, Australia, with a population of less than 400,000, has the following play-houses open: The Royal, Her Majesty's, the Criterion, the Lyceum, the Opera House and the Standard, with an average nightly attendance of 6,000. In addition there are two variety theaters—the Anzac and the Palace—which average 1800 nightly.

Katherine Bloodgood, the well-known San Diego singer, will replace Mme. Schuman-Heink, at the He-Wer- cester Festival, in September, singing selections from the Ortruda music of "Lohengrin," preceded by "O Mio Fernando," from "La Favorita."

The Death Roll

Frank Paul, who, a dozen years ago was one of the most widely-known managers in the country, died at Brattleboro, Vt., on August 8th. For twenty years Mr. Paul was connected with prominent traveling organizations, among them being Haverly's Minstrels and C. B. Bishop's company.

Mrs. Bertha Allicote, wife of James Allicote, died recently at Canton, Ohio, as a result of injuries received while dancing on the stage. She was a daughter of the late John Wild and had performed in vaudeville for many years.

Florence Barr, wife of Walter J. Barr and mother of Harold Vosburgh, died at home in Toronto, Canada, on July 31st, of a tumor.
A good story is told of the famous tragedian, John McCullough, illustrative of his ready wit in an emergency. At one time he was on the program for a recitation at a charity entertainment at the San Francisco theater, and Edwin Adams, knowing his aversion to interruptions, was in a box ready for him. Mr. McCullough came on the stage, advanced to the footlights, and, in an easy, conversational tone, began: Let Harte’s “Flynn of Virginia”:

Do you know Flynn—Flynn of Virginia?

Mr. Adams rose in his seat, and said: “Oh, yes, I know him. I know him quite well.”

“All right, if you know him, I have nothing more to say. You tell about him. And the tragedian stalked off the stage.

A DRAMATIC REVIEW OF THE LOS ANGELES CAPITOL SAYS: “It will be a cruel blow to San Francisco theater people, including the playgoers there, to learn that despite their generous patronage of the Henry Miller company, one Leander Richardson of the New York Telegraph has decided not to let Frohman send out other good companies to San Francisco. Richardson, who speaks as one having authority, and also access to the box office statements of the Columbia Theater, says that the receipts of the Miller engagements have averaged only about $6,000 a week, with a repertory of plays, any one of which would be good for a season’s run in New York. It is to be hoped that San Francisco people will feel properly crushed under this arrangement, and promptly negotiate for rooms on some other planet. I cannot believe that Richard’s Son will be satisfied with anything less than such a step.”

WM. ARCHER, who shares honors only with Clement Scott in England as the leading reviewer of the drama, is contributing leading articles on America for the Pall Mall Magazine. In speaking of things other than theatrical, he gives his view of the big country that he has visited as follows: “One thing we cannot too clearly realize, and that is that the true American is not a man who is Americanized by another nation.”

The status of an American citizen is to him the proudest on earth, and that although he may, clearly enough recognize the abuses of American political life, and the dangers which the republic has to encounter, this feeling (which is not to be confounded with an ignorant chauvinism, though in some cases it may take that form) is the fundamental feeling of the whole nation; and no emotion which threatened to encroach upon it, or compete with it in any way, would have the least chance of taking a permanent place in the American mind.”

An Eccentric Duval.

PHIL GRENICK, who has played the troublesome lad in “Peck’s Bad Boy” more times than he can count, is authority for the following story: A Milwaukee stock company was billed for “Cavalcade.” And soorn of the day of the performance, the man cast as Duval, pere, became seriously ill. The Stage Manager was frantic—there was positively no one he could call on to fill the part, and in his despair he telephoned a Chicago theatrical agency.

The reply was reassuring, and read: “Have sent good man, letter perfect. Played part many times.”

The actor arrived at four-thirty. He weighed about two hundred and fifty pounds, and was unkept and unshaven, with blood-shot eyes and whisky breath, clad in a shiny Prince-Albert coat, baggy trousers, a bad hat and a wrong pair of eyes. A hurried rehearsal showed him to be up in the part and not a half-bad performer. By the time he was fed, washed and shaved, it was time to make up, and he was assigned to a dressing room. The orchestra had been run in, and in response to the call-boy’s warning, he appeared on the stage. Mr. Stage-Manager, in the excitement of the day, had entirely forgotten the matter of clothes for his new actor, and when he showed up in the same disgraceful garments before mentioned—the shock was terrible.

Where is your costume?” shouted the stage manager.

“But you can’t play the part in those clothes. Don’t you know old-man Duval is wealthy?”

“Yes, yes; I know he is a rich man, but he is also very eccentric, my dear sir—extremely eccentric.”

There were no coats available that fitted Mr. New Actor, so he played the wealthy Duval with a tramp make-up for one performance only, and played the part so well, the audience forgot all about his costume.

Theatrical System.

J. Lou Hallett, manager of Hallett's Agency, gave a Dramatic Review representative the following interview which will deeply interest the managers of the coast. Speaking of conditions, organization, etc., he said:

"That conditions theatrical on the Pacific Coast are advancing, or that growing conditions are creating new demands, is strongly evidenced by the move in both dramatic and vaudeville lines toward organization and systematization. The leading vaudeville houses of the coast are being organized into a vaudeville circuit, and the dramatic houses are rapidly being listed under a general bond for protection and advancement of interests. There has never been a Pacific Coast medium of exchange between the vaudeville performer and the manager of the vaudeville house, or between the manager of the dramatic company and the proprietor of the country theater.

"In the dramatic line, the country show business of the Pacific Coast has been almost ruined by the fake and fly-by-night proposition. With a medium of exchange, this condition may be remedied. To illustrate: It is the aim of theatrical agencies to know the merits of every attraction that attempts to play the coast, and the bookings given and the movements of every show on the road or that is securing dates. The agencies are also the sole booking agents of a large number of country theaters. With this data at hand, it will be seen that a manager desiring to take out a company can, by calling at these offices, immediately route and book his show, whereas, heretofore, he would be obliged to write hundreds of letters, wait weeks for replies before he could route, and then after routing, take more time, go to trouble and expense to close contacts of booking. Besides, if a new company, the country manager is shy—as well he need be—about booking at all. There is also a corresponding benefit to the manager of the country theater. He is assured of more and better attractions, relieved of fear and the too frequent experience of giving time to the fake show at the expense of the good one. This medium of exchange between the manager of companies and interior theaters is rapidly doing away with the fake show, and every-body concerned is being benefited—everyone an 'angel.'

"The day is about past on the coast when the schemer and bill-beater can get a hand full of amateurs together and impose upon the country manager and the public. He will soon come to grief. On the other hand, there is money in the business for the enterprising manager who goes at it in the right way, heralds his coming through the legitimate channels, gives a clean, good show, and does his business straight in the square.

"In the vaudeville line, both performers and managers suffer great loss from lack of systematic effort in booking attractions for the western country. San Francisco is usually the objective point for performers coming from the east, and they come promiscuously over the northern, southern and central routes, and as a result, there is always a great surplus of performers in this city. It is not an unusual thing for performers in the east to come to the coast, either under promise or an assurance of continuous dates, and find, upon their arrival, that only a date or so can be secured, and they are obliged to return east, or work anywhere, and for anything they can get. In either case they have anything but a good word for San Francisco and the Pacific Coast. As a result of these conditions, managers find difficulty in securing attractions, and salaries are much higher than they would be under other circumstances. With the purposeful plan in operation, eastern attractions will be booked over the Pacific Coast and back east. This will insure a better line of acts, at a lower salary, and at the same time the performer, by having continuous dates and more bookings, will be making more money.

"This endeavor—or rather fact, for both the dramatic and vaudeville propositions are in operation—is by no means a new idea. All the vaudeville houses in the east are organized into circuits, with general heads, and the dramatic houses are booked through the various agencies in the large cities. In a short time the Pacific Coast will enjoy the benefits of organized action in theatricals, the same as the east."

Ralph Pincus, Press Agent of the Columbia has taken the opportunity made possible by the temporary closing of that house to visit Los Angeles for a few days.

The Union trade organizations of the city are boycotting the owners of the Panorama battle of Manila at Central Park because non-union labor was employed in the construction of the panorama.

The members of the Harmonic Kladderadatsch had a three-day outing at Congress Springs last week. They gave a "Edward and Kathi- gunde," a performance of song comprising comedy, tragedy and opera. There was a ballet extraordinary and firework. The cast of the piece included Sam Levit, Louis Roesch, Hans Veroni, Charles D'Acosta, Richard Stodman, Johannas Plagemann, R. Loreutz, Ch. S. Leesch, Geo. Schafer, Chas. Rehn, Phil. Kiefer, F. Franz, Wm. Loewe, S. Blum.

F. R. Porter has secured an option on the lease of the Mac endorsed theater, and, with Louis Morgan-ter and C. E. Cook intends to open it with bookings of the California theater and later to run it with stock productions. We shall have some late news regarding the lease next week.

Word has just reached here that the Waldorf Company, now touring the Orient, recently received an invitation to appear before the Emperor and Empress of Japan. The performance was reviewed from both ends by their Majesties who afterwards presented Miss Waldorf with a decoration.

The Sterett Show Printing Co., does the printing for every theater in San Francisco and for nearly all of the companies en route to the coast. Promptness and superiority are the chief characteristics of this up-to-date firm. Agents are always welcome and find every accommodation there.

The farewell concert given by Denis O'Sullivan at Sherman & Clay's hall last Tuesday night was a great success. He sang in German, Italian, Scotch, English, and his inimitable Irish. On the whole it was one of the most interesting concerts ever heard in the city.

Stage Carpenter Lang of the Burbank Theater, Los Angeles, is in hot water for violating some rule of the Stage Mechanics' Union, and the Union has demanded that Manager Ollie Moroco discharge him. A strike of the orchestra was threatened.

The Conrado's American Concert Band, under the management of H. J. Seegelken is playing at the Eureka Fair this week. The band consists of forty pieces and is composed of picked musicians of this city.
Tivoli Opera House

Lohengrin is undoubtedly a try on opera on singers and orchestra. With its double choruses and heavy instrumentation it taxes the strongest organizations who have ample time in which to master its intricacies. Despite these difficulties, the rendition by the Tivoli Company this week has been most acceptable. This is especially true of the principal singers. A Lohengrin who is a complete embodiment of the part is found in Baron Berthold. Every action and facial expression portrayed the very poetry of the character, and rarely has the music of the part been sung so well in this city. Intelligence and artistic taste characterized his performance from beginning to end. Will Frosnitz sang Elsa better than any part she has yet done in this house, and her interpretation was after the accepted style. Schuster as King Henry appeared to good advantage, Mary Linke's Ottrod was conscientiously done. Wm. Mertens as Telramund appeared thoroughly at home, and sang the heavy music of the part exceptionally well. Zani was only fair as the Herald and the chorus was as good as could be expected with short rehearsals. The ladies of the chorus sang better than usual. Of course the orchestra is a very important adjunct to all Wagnerian Operas, and Mr. Hirschfield and his band of musicians ably interpreted the noble score.

During the past and present Grand Opera Season the Tivoli has given some notable productions, but never anything that equalled in finesse and brilliancy last Tuesday night's performance of "Othello." Verdi's Opera, like the tragedy, is a two star affair with even parts for the tenor and baritone. Both Salassa and Avedano scored triumphs. Their beautiful duet, "Vengeance is Mine," at the close of the second act, simply excited the audience with enthusiastic approval. Cheer after cheer sounded through the modest little opera house. Three, four, five times was the curtain raised and lowered. Thrice was the duet repeated by the good natured artists. It is not often that one can hear Salassa—he doesn't always sing, but when he does he is made to do double duty. His singing it is unnecessary to attempt to criticise and his acting is not far behind his singing. Avedano, too, is a good actor, thus making the opera doubly interesting. Miss Lichter's Desdemona was well sung and acted. Her singing of the beautiful "Willow" song, shading so delicately into the "Ave Maria" won for her repeated applause. Miss Beckwith made an acceptable Emilia Sig. Fornov as Casside, with Messrs. Perron, Zani and Fogarty completed the cast. The ensemble work was notably good and Mr. Hirschfield deserves more than a word of praise for the way he handles his orchestra.

The Alcazar.

The drama, Wages of Sin, was given a most finished presentation at the Alcazar this week. Too much cannot be said in favor of the careful manner in which each player carried out the character allotted, and, as usual, the stage settings were all that could be desired. Eugene Ormonde, as Rev. George Brand, was exceptionally clever. He portrayed the part of the wronged minister with unusual skill, demonstrating his fitness for almost any role that might be assigned him. He is fast becoming a great favorite. Miss Forrest, as Ruth Hope, was cast for the severest character of the piece, yet she showed no weakness in its interpretation. Miss Foster shared the honors with Miss Mae Keane, as Barbara Dale and Miss Juliet Crosby as Juliana Bloggs, both of whom were great successes. Miss Helen Henry filled the character of Rose Deane in a most fascinating manner, and she is "just as cute as she can be" as the sweetheart of Harry Wentworth, the part portrayed by Frank Denithorne. Miss Howe, as Mrs. Bloggs was particularly good. Of course, George Webster was the villain, Stephen Marley, and a most acceptable interpretation he gave of the character. Charles King, Carlyle Moore, Clarence F. Montaine, William Morris and Herbert Carlon were each very acceptable, showing much study and attention in their work. The performance is a good one throughout, and has been playing to a well filled house all week. The Alcazar has one of the best orchestras in the city. Under the direction of Mr. Lada an unusually good musical program was rendered.

Morosco's Grand.

The long and well-attended series of operas already produced by the always reliable and entertaining company of singers holding forth at the Grand Opera House was followed on Monday night by Von Suppe's entertaining opera, Fatinitza. The impression left on one's mind after the last act of music had sounded was that it was really Woolley's night, although, of course, Wolf and Persie, Edward Mason and Hattie Bell Ladd were exceptionally placed and were altogether pleasing. As Stepaum, the squire, Arthur Woolley was exceedingly droll, and at his most amusing self. With a chance to overdo many situations, and to extend his mirth provoking opportunities into tiresome lengths, it was certainly pleasing to see that he steered clear of all buffoonery and gave a performance that showed his genuine worth as a comedian. William Wolf had in the part of the Russian General Kantschikoff a chance that well suited his vigorous and forceful personality. Thomas Persey took care of the part of the adventurous American newspaper correspondent, Julian Hardy, and minus knee-breeches, wig, spangled coat and dainty apparel of Gertrude Foster, as any kind that generally go to make up the hero of comic opera, he was a distinct and refreshing success. I say "refreshing success," for I never before realized how much there was to the sweet, manly tones of his tenor voice until he appeared in ordinary citizen's clothes, and so I have concluded that in Julian Hardy characters I like him best. Edward Mason's clear soprano is certainly far ahead of the general run of the singers appearing in comic opera, and if Miss Mason would, as my neighbor on my left whispered to me, "leave less of that reposé," what an exceptional singer she would be. For we cannot help admiring the ease to which she sings and the purity of her tones, if one cannot altogether commend her manner of using them. Hattie Bell Ladd, with a certain air of good fellowship that reminded one of May Irwin, made a handsome and dashing Vladimir, and although being somewhat uncertain in her lines the first night and undecided whether to be "obliged to fly," or "obliged to flee," she certainly always is charming to look at in top boots, and can be depended upon to take good care of her part. The excellent management of the stage and the music that we have grown accustomed to at the Grand were both features of Monday night's very entertaining opera.

The Columbia

Though not officially announced it is probable that the first week of the Modjeska engagement at the Columbia will be devoted entirely to the new play of "Marie Antoinette" written for her by Clinton Stuart. It is going through its trial performances in the southern part of the State, and on reaching here it promises to be a smooth and artistic production. It will be given with, it is said, some very elaborate and artistic scenic effects. Another novelty which this engagement promises is a new adaptation of the well-known French comedy "Le Battaille des Dames" or the "Ladies' Battle." It will probably be seen on the opening night of the second week. The play is not long enough for a full evening's entertainment, and will, it is said, be preceded by "Gringoire," with Mr. John R. Kellerd in the title role.

The Concert Season.

This concert season was opened last Thursday afternoon at Sherman & Clay Hall, by Harry Samuels, violinist, and metall Asher, pianist and was a brilliant success. Mr. Samuel's playing was the main feature of the evening. He showed himself a finished artist. The attendance was large.

Florence Roberts

Some of the most pleasant recollections held by theater-goers of San Francisco are associated with the season just closed by Lewis Morrison and his charming wife, Florence Roberts, at the Alcazar. Miss Roberts has made an impression that will long linger in the memory of all who enjoyed her performances. In a round of parts, from Shakespeare to modern comedy, she has shown her versatility in a manner that places her high in the ranks of skilled artists, and it is with pleasant anticipation that San Francisco looks forward to the time for her next season.

Read the 'Dramatic Review.'
THE Orpheum

A genuine novelty heads the bill at the Orpheum this week. It consists of a quartette who can act as well as sing. The quartette is presented under the title of "The Bachelor's Club," and what happened to it between 11:30 p.m. and 1:30 a.m.

The lines are bright and produce many laughs, while the singing was excellent and was enthusiastically received. Messrs. Robert Pollard, George Brengle, John Connelly and Bergh Morrison make up the clever quartette, and they are assisted by W. B. Mortimer as Richards the servant. Charley Case tells different stories of his last week's offering in his own inimitable way. While Charley's stories are not new, they are original with himself and never fail to please. White and Harris is the name of another team of newcomers. They are billed as a singing and dancing duo. Mr. White is a knockout artist who has very little regard for his bones. Their efforts were well received, especially the illustrated recitation of "Casey at the Bat." Miss Harris read the piece, and White gave a graphic reproduction of the mighty Casey. The Hungarian Boys' Military Band continues in high favor as do also Arnold Grazer and La Petite Hazel. Montrell, the dextrous juggler, does his act with the confidence of long experience; and the Crawford sisters--two pretty young ladies--made hit with their refined singing and dancing specialty. The American Biograph, with a new set of views, closes a fine evening's entertainment. Too much praise cannot be given this remarkable machine which is rapidly being brought to a point that approaches perfection in the moving picture line.

The crooked houses which nightly greet the performance at the Orpheum are not to be wondered at when the nature of the shows given at this house are taken into consideration. Through the medium of the Orpheum Circuit, owned in Chicago and Los Angeles, they are enabled to present the best talent the world produces in vaudeville.

THE Olympia

Zoe MATTHEWS, the comic-song singer, is making a hit at the popular Olympia this week in the latest success, "You Got to Play Rag Time," under the management of the Grotesque contentionists and acrobats, are proving a good drawing card. Ed. Dolan, the man from the Land of Erin, is also getting his share of the applause, as are also Carlson and Royce in the gaited dances; Snowie Maybelle, songs and dances; Josie Gordon, soubrette; Dora Mervin, operatic soprano; the Keesings and Dolly Mitchell, songs and dances, all continue in popularity. A leading feature of the Olympia's very interesting bill is the Hungarian Orchestra under the direction of Isidore Feinster, the noted violinist. This is one of the best orchestras in the city.

The Orpheum

Three wee pickaninnies and Ruth Nelna, a singer of lively coon songs, made a great hit at the popular Chutes this week. The novelty is a great drawing card, but there are other very interesting features of the bill. Waldo and Elliot, comedy acrobats, were new on the program, and they proved themselves good fun-makers. Adgie and her lions continue the same daring performance. The moving pictures are better than ever before. A most daring high dive is given by Harman and Seabury.

The Oberon

The success of the Prof. Ritzaun's Ladies' Orchestra continues at the Oberon. Irene Wellington and M. Tunison are as popular as ever. The boy violinist, Henry Fakker, has proven a good drawing card. The new features are Miss Annette George, a superb soprano, and Senorita Guerita Carenson, an operatic singer from Milan. They are very good.

Amusements *

Next Week

The Orpheum

Four new teams, all of them first-class, will be seen at the Orpheum next week, and the bill will be the strongest that has been put on in many weeks. That is saying a good deal, especially for a house that never fails in having up-to-date attractions. Hallen and Fuller, a clever comedy sketch team seen here once before, will return with some new features that will please. Another comedy sketch couple will be Stinson and Merton, who are said to be exceptionally clever. Bright Bros., marquels in acrobatics, will make their appearance, and Terry and Lambert will present a lively song-and-dance act. These make eight new performers to be seen next week, but they are not the whole show. The Bachelor Club Quartette, the Crawford Sisters, Charley Case, and the ever popular Boys' Band will be the holders.

The Alcazar

Messrs. Thall and Belasco announce that they will revive "Too Much Johnson" next Monday night, with a full cast by the Alcazar Stock Company. This is a happy move on the part of the popular managers, for the play ran several weeks under the same management two years ago, and it was a money-maker. "Too Much Johnson" will be put on in a better manner than ever, and the ship scene—a representation of a well-known vessel now in the harbor—will be particularly fine. The comedy is by Gillette, and the theme too well known to bear repetition, but it is one of those kinds of comedies that grow better the oftener they are seen. The Review predicts a big success for the piece.

Tivoli Opera House

Owing to the enormous success of Verdi's grand opera, "Otello," at the Tivoli Opera House, the management in order to accommodate the rush for seats, has decided to repeat the great work next week, and it will alternate with Verdi's equally famous opera, "La Traviata." "Traviata" will be sung on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings, and the cast will include Barron Berthold, Anna Lichter, William Mertens, William Schuster, Arthur Mesmer, Hannah Davis, Charlotte Beckwith in the principal roles. This well-known opera needs no introduction, for it is one of the greatest favorites with muscians, and its delightful lyrics are in the veteran composer's best style. "Lohengrin" will be played for the last time this Saturday evening, and "Otello" is the bill on the following night. Owing to Miss Lichter singing in "Traviata" next week, the role of "Desdemona" will be sung by Ella Prosonitz; and this great artist having made one of her triumphs in this character in Europe, the performances of "Otello" next week will be truly remarkable in every detail.

Morosco's Grand

Manager HARRY MOROSCO and Director Jones of the Grand Opera House have arranged a big production of Offenbach's tuneful operetta, "The Drum Major's Daughter," for the coming week. It is indeed a pretty piece, and its presentation will no doubt draw a crowded house every night in the week.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW
ETHEL BARRYMORE

If this young lady had as much of her mother's talent as she has of her father's good looks, what an immensely clever actress she would be.

GLADYS WALLIS

Here is a little beauty, a popular actress that was—at present, a young person of domestic tastes. She lives in Chicago, having lately married a millionaire.

MARY MANNERING

One of the sweetest women ever sent over by our British cousins for appreciation. She and her husband, James K. Hackett make a striking couple.

ANNIE IRISH

One of the most reliable actresses on the American stage. Some people call her beautiful and some don't.
LOS ANGELES.
Special Correspondence.

Los Angeles, Sept. 12th.—With the week commencing September 11th, the Los Angeles season is stayed. This week has been ushered in with crowded houses at all the theaters, and, unless "all signs fail in dry weather," this season will be a good one. With Modjeska at the Los Angeles theater, the Frawley company at Monroe's Burbank theater and a good class of vaudeville at the Orpheum, theater-goers are enabled to choose from a variety that should suit the most fastidious.

Los Angeles can again boast of being the home of infant prodigies, for two new ones have made their appearance here within the past week. Baby Gard, a four-year-old boy, was given a try-out last week by a number of local musicians and several professional people who were unanimous in their verdict that as singer of the popular "Coon" songs he is certainly a wonder and has a great future before him. The little fellow will make his first appearance before the public at the Orpheum benefit for "Battery" on the 14th. T. S. V., 14th inst. The other is Gounod Romandy, the six-year-old son of the late Dion Romandy, who for years was the leader of the orchestra at the Orpheum in this city.

The little boy first began to play the violin when but a year and a half old and has kept up his practice since then. He will lead the orchestra, using his father's old violin in one number at the benefit.

The Los Angeles theater has Modjeska billed for this week, assisted by Mr. John E. Kellerd and a strong company. A magnificently furnished theater on Monday, Ring and "Out of the Window," and crowded houses will be the rule for the remainder of her stay. Her repertoire for the Los Angeles in cludes "Marie Antoinette," "Macbeth," "Mary Stuart" and "Much Ado About Nothing."

At Monroes Burbank theater, the Frawley company is playing to crowded houses each night—bigger houses than it was ever before seen there. Monday night was in "Ma Is Autiste," and crowded houses will be the rule for the remainder of her stay. Her repertoire for the Los Angeles in cludes "Marie Antoinette," "Macbeth," "Mary Stuart" and "Much Ado About Nothing."

The Orpheum is going up to its high standard and has a full bill of good acts this week, including Felix Morris and his company in their sketch "Behind the Scenes," Moeller Biters, Osmon and Herbert Hall and Stayley, Apollo, Freeze Brothers and McMahon and King.

The Orpheum's benefit for Battery 'D,' U. S. V., is about completed and will be a great success. All the principals of the profusion here, as well as good local talent, will assist the regular Orpheum people in making it a performance long to be remembered. All the boxes have been sold and the S. R. O. sign will probably play a prominent part that day.

HERBERT L. CORNISH.

RIVERSIDE.
Special Correspondence.

Riverside, Sept. 12.—The presentation on the Loring boards by Madame Modjeska and her capable company on Admission Day, was one long to be remembered by our audiences. The house was packed from the orchestra rail to the seat where the gallery god leaves the print of his hat on the frescoed Ceiling. The distinguished tragedienne furnished a royal reception, for when she came to reside in this sunny clime she became one of us and in consequence she is dear to every heart. Modjeska's conception of Lady Macbeth is unlike that of any other, and enriched by long years of service on the stage. John K. Brillard's portrayal of Macbeth, while a slight departure from the generally accepted conception of the character is a powerful portrayal until he reached the final scene, the combat with Macduff, when his blade broke close to the hill, but so adventurously did he make his exit that the audience noticed it. In the character of Macduff, Frederick Mosley gave his readings intelligent treatment, and gave evidence of the sterling actor that he is. Others are entitled to much praise for painting taking work; indeed the company is the most evenly balanced of any that has graced our boards for a long time. The new scenery painted during the summer by Win. C. San Diego by Moses of Chicago, includes some beautiful settings.

HANFORD.
Special Correspondence.

Hanford, Calif., Sept. 12.—Frank Dep Curn and wife have been here a week rehearsing with Hanford's best local talent in preparation for "The Man That Found Gold" which is to be presented at the Hanford Opera House Thursday evening, the 14th inst.

This is the home of Mrs. Dep Curn, Frank having won her heart and hand on the occasion of her visit here with Sam Shaw's Company. Mrs. Dep Curn's clever acting here in her amateur days always attracted large audiences, and the big role of "Mrs. Dep Curn" always on Hanford theater-goers haven't forgotten her.

Engagements at the Hanford Opera House with its guaranteed list of patrons, large seating capacity, immense stage and modern attachments have always been looked forward to by the players, but for some unaccountable reason the go-by is to be its lot this season. While the Fresno boards are always well-managed, it is safe to say that the traveling companies refuse to visit Hanford. Well, they don't know what they are missing, as there's money to throw at the boards here. This week.

SACRAMENTO.
Special Correspondence.

Sacramento, Sept. 12.—The State Fair Board have presented a local talent program in the theatrical line about all there is of interest in the bit made by the Willards and the bandwagons. They have given an immense amount of satisfaction.

HONOLULU.
Special Correspondence.

Honolulu, H. I., Sept. 5.—The Maggie Moore H. R. Roberts Co., now playing at the Opera House, extend their season here for five more performances which will conclude September 14, sailing on the S. S. Mariposa for San Francisco the 15th. Part of the repertoire will be repeated with the exception of one or two new pieces such as "The Shugbraun," a burlesque on Trinidad and the "Colleen Bawn." They are playing their first full week of any real length in the Islands in the nineteen years they have been here. A leading man does his parts well, and a good future is predicted for him in the States. His David Garrick and the Deus in the Silence of Dean Maitland are especially commendable. In Irish and German character parts, his work is clear cut and his articulation perfect. Miss Moore, with an Australian reputation which might well be the envy of all, is also clever in character work and songs. As a whole, the company is extremely clever, and it is no reflection to say that extra efforts are required that the show may go with a rush. Honolulans are always at times very hard to warm up and critical in the extreme in many instances overlooking the fact that a company may be handicapped for the first night or so. Everything depends on the verdict of the first night. Jan. 31st. Frank R. Applegate, representing the company, leaves on the Australia to-day for San Francisco.

San Diego by Moses of Chicago, includes some beautiful settings.

OAKLAND.
Special Correspondence.

Oakland, Sept. 13.—Chas. E. Blaney's successful tour of act drama comedy, "The Electrician," has been presented for the first time in Oakland at the Dewey Theater this week and has met with the approval of all its patrons and the public and by the more severe of all critics, "the gallery gods" can be taken as a criterion, the piece has been received success. The play is being presented by the Grand Stock Co., assisted by two members of the Clay Clement Co., Wm. B. Hands and T. J. for his house and some very clever funny. Fanny Gillette, Maud Miller, Gracie Plaisted, Landers Stevens, wagon, the audience. Walter L. Main's Circus will be here Sept. 20 for two days. Dietz Opera House is dark.

HERBERT C. CLARK.

SALT LAKE CITY.
Special Correspondence.

Salt Lake City, Sept. 12th.—Wardle and Sackett's comedians in "A Bachelor's Honeyymoon" played a three-nights' engagement at the Salt Lake theater, September 7th, 8th and 9th to very poor patronage. The company was not up to the average seen at the theater, while the play was a poor attempt at comedy. 'A Bachelor's Honeyymoon" was not considered the opening attraction of the season of 1899-1900. Regular season at the Salt Lake theater will open October 2d with "Hotel Toppy Turvy." In the meantime the building is undergoing a thorough renovation and very important alterations are being made which will add materially to the comfort of both players and patrons.

The Grand theater will commence its season next Monday, September 18th, when Ben Hendricks will appear in "A Yankee Ventilator." Manager Mulvey of the Grand refuses to announce in advance a list of engagements here, and the company will only advertise an organization one week in advance of its appearance. Mr. Mulvey states that he has first choice of attractions for his circuit which includes the Grand theater, Salt Lake; Thatcher Opera House, Logan; Ogden Opera House, Ogden; Dewey theater, Park City, and Provo Opera House, Provo.

With the absence of attractions at the theater the Palace is doing a splendid business.

JOHN K. HARVEY.
Sisson and Wallace, refined sketch artists, are heading this way.

Walter Oro, Frank Pollard and Al Hazard are the latest arrivals from Honolulu.

James F. Post and May Ashley have severed their connection with the Honolulu Orpheum.

The McKenzie Musical Society gave one of its Musicales on Thursday evening, the 21st.

Georgia McDermott, Mabel Parnell and Dick Mack are in the stock at the Trilby Theater, Victoria, B. C.

Dale and Dalton, Hues and Alton, and Maybelle Bowman and Wm. Harvard are new faces at the Chutes this coming week.

Dave Marion came in from Honolulu this week. He intends to double up with Chris Linton, late of the Tivoli, in a refined singing specialty.

Chin Ling Foo, the Chinese Magician, who is creating such a sensation East, is at Keith's Union Square. His hit has been phenomenal.

W. B. Wheeler has joined the Western Mr. Plater of Paris Company to play comedy parts and do his specialty. The play comes to the Coast.

Lewis and Lake, and Kelley and Burgess, after successful seasons, are at Galveston Beach, Texas, enjoying a month's vacation and rehearsing their new acts. Both teams will open their seasons in San Francisco.

The three Banwards have returned from the Sacramento Fair where they received some excellent press notices for their work. They will rest in this city for two weeks, then opening at the Spokane Falls Fair. From that time they are booked solid until November 20th. They intend cutting out the aerial portion of the act and replacing it with some startling ground and lobby tumbling which is now in rehearsal.

Alice Shaw, so report has it, will retire from the stage.

Violet Dale plays the 'Castle Circuit,' opening in Chicago, Sept. 18.

Snowie Maybelle is underlined for the Casino Theater, Sacramento, the 18th.

The Keensings open at the Fredericksburg Music Hall, Portland, Or., Oct. 9.

The three De Bolieu Bros. are on route with the Great Exposition Circus.

Cross and Alden are on their way to Europe. They return to this country in August, 1900.

Edwin Latell, the musical comedian has just returned from Europe. He will shortly be seen in this city.

The Florence troupe, six in number, play the Portland Exposition, with the Orpheum circuit to follow.

A letter from Fred Titus, husband of Lydia Yeaman Titus from London, advises us that she is booked solid into 1901.

Johnny Williams' ten and twenty tent circus Vaudeville show is at Sacramento this week, playing to fair business.

La Juss & Cunningham, contortionists, will work single, La Juss this week is going to Republic, Wash. Mr. Cunningham does one of the most artistic contortion acts ever seen here.

Bragg & Ashton who recently came here via the Texas circuit and who are among the cleverest comedy sketch teams that has been in the city for some time, will work the coast before returning East.

Herman C. Fisher, Chairman of the special attractions at the State Fair, Sacramento, gives the Musical Willards the following complimentary recommendation: 'This is to certify that the Musical Willards have drawn immense audiences at our State Fair this week, and we cannot too highly recommend their act, as we have had the best attendance in the history of the Association. Our State Fair this year is so far ahead of anything ever held that we cannot but believe that the attraction has contributed its share toward its success.'

The Best in the Field

Opinions of the Review All-Flattering and Encouraging.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 17th.

EDITOR DRAMATIC REVIEW—I wish to congratulate you and the DRAMATIC REVIEW. It is the best "first born" I have ever seen. It ought to be, and will be, a great success. Don't let any one discourage you by assuring you that the field is overcrowded. There is always room at the top, all hail, and "more power to ye."

Sincerely,

FRANK MURRAY
MGR. THE FRAWLEY COMPANY.

Dramatic Review: First number of the new Dramatic Review reached me this morning, and I have stolen a little time from business to-day to peruse it.

You have certainly done yourselves proud. The paper is bright, snappy, and well illustrated. It is particularly good for a first number, and I am certain that the best dramatic paper ever published on the Pacific Coast.

Sincerely yours,

CLEMENT WILDER.

San Francisco DRAMATIC REVIEW, gentlemen—I desire to compliment you on your first issue of your publication. In our opinion it is the best of its kind ever published on this coast and it deserves future success. With kind wishes, we are, Yours very truly,

SIEBE & GREEN

From Los Angeles—Our correspondent writes from Los Angeles that the managers there have taken very kindly to the DRAMATIC REVIEW, and are very enthusiastic in their praise. Mr. Bronson of the Orpheum says it is his favorite of all the dramatic papers.

What the San Francisco News Company says—"No weekly published in San Francisco ever met with such a ready sale on its first issue."

Mr. John Morrissey says: "I like your paper. It is certainly in competent hands and ably edited. Count me in as a friend of the new publication."

Mr. Melville Marx says—"Your paper is bright and clean. Keep up the present standard and you have a sure winner."

The Contest Is Booming

Votes are Already Coming in for the Most Beautiful Chorus Girl

So far the following votes have been received:

Hannah Davis—Tivoli 7
Lilian Raymond—Grand 7
Blanche Woodworth—Tivoli 4
Eva Stockbarger—Grand 8
Jeannette Frederick—Grand 3
Christie Stockmayer—Tivoli 5

: Cues:

The Friedlander Bros., musical team, and Frank S. Benton, the double-voiced vocalist, work at the Dewey Opera House next week.

Another San Francisco musical genius, who made a name in the East, is Mr. Ralph, leader of the American Roof Garden Orchestra. Among New York orchestra leaders, he is ranked high. He is the son of H. G. Prince, of the Code-Portwood Canning Co., of this city.

The Webster Vaudeville Co., who gave a successful performance a few weeks ago, are shortly to present a stirring melodrama, "The Mountain Waif." The piece is under the management of Henry Spru, and the cast will be made up of a picked company of amateurs.

It does not seem to be generally known, even to the fraternity, that Ingomar, the Barbarian, was written by Maria Anne Lowell, and first produced at Dury Lane in 1851. It was a translation from the German. Those who had the pleasure of seeing Miss Florence Roberts in the character of Parthenia, can readily understand why the play is such a great favorite.

Lizzie B. Raymond opened at the Tivoli in London, on August Bank Holiday, for six weeks, and scored an immense hit. She has booked up her time until June, 1900, and will return to America in September, 1900, to join Robert Fulgori's company. Miss Raymond writes that all of the American artists now in London are doing splendidly.

MELODRAMA I think best adapted to amateur presentation, both as schooling for the players and in the light of the greatest probable success in presentation. In melodramas it is less difficult to arrive at some degree of success because its effects are produced by methods more artificial than must be employed in comedy and tragedy—Julia Marlowe.

What promises to be quite a novel amateur production in Oakland in the near future is the presentation of Shakespeare's "Othello," by Mr. Josh Bell, a colored gentleman, who is to be supported by a white company of players. Mr. Bell will portray the role of "Othello," the Moor of Venice.

SPOKANE Special Correspondence

SPOKANE, Wash., Sept. 11.—On the 6th, preceding the opening of the regular season at the Auditorium, L. R. Stockwell, the popular San Francisco comedian and one of his "Midnight Bell" company, to fair business. An amusing incident which was not billed, occurred during the bush when the house watched the minister start to call the officers to arrest his rival, the hero, while paring from the heroine; the silence was broken by an audible "Oh! the nasty thing!" in a feminine voice from the orchestra seats, and the audience laughed.

The regular season opens to-night with the Boston Lyric Opera Co., in "Said Pasha," beginning a week of repertoire.

DODD

FRESNO Special Correspondence

FRESNO, Sept. 13.—The Elfford's drew crowded houses here every night last week in fact, some nights standing room was at a premium.

Next Monday night Modjeska will be here, and will produce "Nichts." The people of this city have been informed that the famous actress, always a favorite here, is supported this year by a stronger company than usual, and are looking forward to going into captures over the performance.

During rare week the Vroom-Addison Company, with its popular prices will occupy the boards, and later will appear the following plays: "Yesaline Yentlemans," "A Milk White Flag," "Hotel Toby Thirty," and on October 30 the Daily Company will begin a four-night engagement. Manager R. G. Barton has been suffering from a severe attack of tonsillitis this week, but is able to be out. He extends to the Dramatic Review his congratulations, and I join him in this.

BENJAMIN C. JORDAN.

Clever Amateurs

A NUMBER of clever amateurs of The Colonials presented the farce, "A Scheme That Failed," at the entertainment and dance of that club given a week ago Wednesday at Golden Gate Hall. The cast was as follows: Paul Jennings, Chris Buckley; Victor Craven, Walter C. Hanke; Edith Jen-nings, Miss Ethel A. Homer; Fanny, Miss Juliet Turpin; Mrs. Craven, Miss T. Kathryn Smith; Bridget, Miss Bessie Merigan.

In the specialties, Baby Caakley was very clever in a coon song and cake walk. The other features were: Miss J. Turpin, fancy dance; Miss M. Higgins, piano solo; Otto Wanek, sleight-of-hand; Edw. Lowery, bass solo; V. Kennedy, cake walk; musical selections, N. Loeckann, J. Loeckann, accompanied by Miss Ada Loeckann, W. C. Hanke, stage manager.

Dancing followed. The committees were as follows: Committee of Arrangements—Vincent Kennedy, W. C. McMahon, John Lalanne, W. C. Hanke, Sylvan Selig, Milton Hagen, Miss Stella Baccus, Miss Juliet Turpin, Miss Lizzie Walsh, Miss Josie Beasley. Floor Manager—W. G. McMahon; Assistant Floor Manager, J. Downing. In the second committee—John Lalanne, Chris Buckley, Sylvan Selig, James Gruehn, W. C. Hanke, Miss Stella Baccus, Miss Elsie Rodenberg, Miss Catherine Smith, Miss Juliet Turpin, Miss Mamie McKeon.

MUSICAL NOTES

"God Save the King," in the guise of "America," may be sung by all patriotic Americans without feeling that John Bull—the man, not the composer—had anything whatever to do with its genesis. The hymn may have had earlier origin than Jean baptiste Lully, in the time of Louis the Great at the royal convent of St. Cyre in the diocese of Chartus, for, as the editor of the Saturday Review points out, Helary, Bishop of Poitiers, and St. Ambrose were the first to compose hymns and anthems in the fourth century. Here is a trail of great interest for musical antiquarians to follow, and one on which they may dig and delve forever. Is there anything new, musically, under the sun?

—Exchange.

Good and bad are terms so relative, so elastic, so subject to so many variations and restrictions, above all, when applied to art or to an artist's interpretation, that it is impossible to employ them; and yet the public and the critics use them assiduously. This is the principal reason of the reign of mediocrity, and the cause that so many talents are not appreciated at their real value.

According to the Matin, of Paris, an American millionaire has made a proposition to Adeline Patti to give her $100,000 for her throat, but there is a special arrangement made between them in this contract that she is not to deliver her throat until she is dead.

Miss Anna Miller Wood is spending the summer with Mrs. March at the latter's farm in Simonsville, Vt., where rest all day long is the sum of existence. Miss Wood will return to Boston about the first of October.

We certainly agree with the Berlin Courier that the New York Musical Courier is the most important musical professional paper in the United States.

Charles Coghill has accepted and will shortly produce a new play by Mrs. Elizabeth Campbell Winter, and Madame Modjeska has accepted for early production a new version by Mrs. Winter of the old German play of Deborah. In speaking of this work, Madame Modjeska says that Mrs. Winter's is, by far, the best English piece that has yet been made on this subject.

Daisy Alice Bishop, the sweet-voiced San Francisco singer who replaced Lily Post in "The Spider and the Fly," when that lady was stricken, will open a new career in the vaudeville ranks. She closed with the company in Denver to return to the Coast, as she says San Francisco is good enough for her.

Miss Marie Allister made her debut with the Clay Clement Company, at the Columbia. Miss Allister's charming personality is greatly enhanced by her sweet face. We predict for her a bright future and as an ingenue, and before long she will shine in the galaxy of San Francisco stage beauties and successes.

Isabel Underwood has been engaged for the principal part in The Spider and the Fly, which will tour through the United States and Mexico during this season. She has arranged to introduce in the second act of the spectacle Walter F. Phillips' latest dramatic song, "The King of the Plane.

A talented California girl, who has been with Augustin Daly's musical comedy company the past three seasons, and made a fine impression, is Miss Hilda A. Henning. This young lady is a resident of San Francisco, and is a sister of E. P. Henning, of the well-known firm of Henning & Levy.

Mr. G. L. Campbell, the popular and efficient press agent of the Orpheum, was united in marriage to Miss Lilian A. Nash, Tuesday afternoon last, at St. Paul's, Oakland. We wish the couple a long life and a happy one.

Baby Buskirk the clever child performer with Modjeska this season, is a Los Angeles girl, the daughter of the stage carpenter at Moroso's Burbank Theater.

Hortense Neilson has been engaged by T. Daniel Frawley for juvenile ingenue roles. She is a sister of Alice Neilson.

Nat Goodwin continues with "An American Citizen" in London. He will open in Cincinnati in November.

Miss Ada Rehan's arrival in New York was particularly noticed by the New York writers. The chief items of interest were her maid and bull dog Beauty, the only dog that ever was honored with a special pass from the late Augustin Daly.

Miss Rehan will not star with Mr. Mansfield, but under the management of Richard Donely. In her repertoire are nine plays, not mentioning two new ones. The nine include six Shakespearean plays, two old comedies and one modern comedy.

Frank Turner writes from London that he has Pauline Moran under contract, and that she has no intention of returning to the United States at present. She and her little "picks" have made a decided hit in London.

Burnhardt declares that a decolle-tte dress in front "quand on montre la pointe," is immode, but wears one decolle-tte in the back down to her waist. The reason of her idea can easily be conjectured.

Miss Helen Wilson is in Peckskill, New York, rehearsing with the Lewis Morrison company for the winter season. She is the last California amateur to win recognition in a leading company.

A letter from Harry Corson Clarke at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York, requests a copy of the first issue of the Review. New York has evidently heard of us.

Richard Mansfield's company has begun rehearsals of Cyrano de Bergerac, in which Mr. Mansfield will open this season at the Grand Opera House, Chicago.

It's a pity that pretty Crosby is not seen oftener in Alcazar productions. She is certainly one of the most popular actresses that has appeared in this city.

Marie Borroughs will create the part of Gemma in "The Gadfly," which will ask for New York favor at Wallack's next Monday night.

Ernest Hastings, well remembered as one of the most popular actors ever seen in San Francisco, is in the cast of Roohan's "Gadfly.

Frank Bacon is meeting with great success on the road in "The Girl from Chili." Good business everywhere is the news from the Company.

Percy Winter, one of the best stage directors in this country, has been engaged by Madame Modjeska for the coming season.

Jessie Bartlett Davis, whose withdrawal from The Bostonians was announced recently, will head her own company this season. She will be heard in a repertoire comprising a new opera, now being written, and several standard works, such as Carmen and Il Trovatore. Miss Davis, it is said, has had the tour in contemplation for the past three years. She left the Bostonians, not because of any disagreement, but because her plans had matured. She has been supervising the vocal training of her niece, Belle Bartlett, who is said to possess a fine soprano voice, and, it is said, deferred her tour until Miss Bartlett's education was completed.

Maud Northam, a promising young lady of Southern California who has a fancy for theatrical triumphs and who through force of a strong determination is aided and abetted by a millionaire father, is playing small parts with the Frawley Co., in Los Angeles.

Prof. Nolton, the pioneer educationist of San Francisco, is receiving congratulations over the success of his daughter Maud in "Brown's in Town." Miss Nolton is leading lady and is much praised by the press in every town she has appeared.

Nellie O'Sullivan to his old friends—Denis O'Sullivan to the theater going public—will soon leave for Europe. Neeley has been one of the biggest successes ever sent out from San Francisco.

F. M. Carrillo, Manager of the Standard theater, Bakersfield, is in the city with his wife for a short visit. The Standard opens the season September 30, with an unusually strong bill.

Among the well-known Ex-Frawleys, well remembered in San Francisco, who will be in the cast of the "Children of the Ghetto," besides Blanche Bates, are Frank Wortling and Wilton Lackay.

Our chorus girl contest has brought out the statement that the Tivoli has a beauty in the person of Miss Blanche Woodworth. Her friends are gathering up the Review coupons for her.

Baby Lillian Dolliver is making a wonderful hit in child parts with the Elletford Co. For a little mite not over six, she is surprising everyone by her talent.

Fannie Rice will appear next season as Nell Gwynne in the King's Player, a comedy by Dramatic Editor Phister, of the Enquirer of Cincinnati.

When Sol Smith Russell appears at the Columbia this season, he will have as leading lady, Minnie Radcliffe.

Maud Courtnev has posed for the statues of "Peace," that will ornament the Dewey arch in New York.

Matthews and Bulger are planning a tour of the coast in their latest comedy success.

One of the novelties of the Modjeska repertoire will be a new adaptation of the well-known French comedy, "Les Battaille de Dames," or "The Ladies' Battle." The play is not long enough for a full evening's entertainment, and will, it is said, be preceded by "Gringoire," with John E. Kellard in the title role.

Eddie Foy, at the head of Dunn and Ryely's company, presenting "Hotel Topsy Turvy," has started west for the inauguration of an extended Pacific Coast tour. The attraction is to appear at the Columbia.

Miss Marie Keane has resigned from the California comedy company, and has accepted a position with the Alcazar stock company. She appeared the past week as Barbara Dale in "The Wages of Sin."

The London cast of "Why Smith Left Home" has returned to New York after its English triumph, and is again pleasing large audiences.

The advance sale of seats for Modjeska's first week will begin at the box office of the Columbia theater, next Thursday morning.

Nellie Bergen will sing leading roles with De Wolf Hopper during the season. She has been quite a hit in "The Christian."

Wadsworth Harris has made quite a hit in Modjeska's production of "Marie Antoinette." He plays the part of Mirabeau.

The Modjeska company, after leaving this state, will travel in a special train for the rest of its tour.

Willie Collier has produced his new play, "Mr. Smooth," at New York. It has made a hit.
Our artist's dream of the most beautiful chorus girl:
below one of our poets has penciled an effusion.

I.
A versatile maid is the dear chorus girl,
The star of the cast one may say.
The manager does not believe in the chorus!
At least not on salary day.

II.
At all other times he's aware that her art
Is broader than all charity;
She fits as though moulded "to any old part"— She's never confounded—not she!

III.
She exits a trooper with knapsack and gun,
With swagger and step militaire.
When Presto! re-enter—the trooper's a nun
Who soulfully chanteth a prayer.

IV.
With a turn of the heel she's a premiere danseuse
So nimble and graceful is she—Adored of the whole bald-headed row.

V.
The oft-quoted phrase, "she is good in her line,"
To her has no meaning, for she's However she can she's expected to shine
As a firefly glows in the dark.

VI.
She's sailor with hornpipe—she's gipsy or Turk—
She's "peroxide Mag" at a pinch;
Indeed you'll agree she's a maid
Of all work, and who says her job is a cinch?

VII.
She's milkmaid so smiling, she's Quaker demure
In the Amazon march she is "slick;"
Is she anything else? Why of course, to be sure
She was all round responsible brick.

VIII.
Now fill up a bumper and drink to her health,
Let glasses be clinked—let them ring,
She might be a size and be rolling in wealth
But alas—oh alack—she CAN SING!!! —F. C.
London Special Correspondence

London, Aug. 26—The Adelphi Theater was re-opened on the evening of Saturday last, and, as the man in the street might say, "Now we shan't be long" before we have another theatrical season in full swing. The Adelphi, of course, has a new drama. It is in five acts, boasts the breezy title "With Flying Colors," and is the outcome of the collaboration of Messrs. Seymour Hicks and Fred G. Latham. It is decidedly old-fashioned. There is a bit of this and a bit of that; pickings and stealings—inexcusably enough, no doubt; as they come from the stock-pot which is regarded as common property by the makers of melodra "a," but always remarkable and bound to set the play-goer wondering when he has met them before.

I am saying nothing in disparagement of the play as it is built on Adelphi lines and bound to please Adelphi audiences. Mr. W. L. Abangdon, Mr. Robert Pateman, Mr. Julius Knight and Mrs. Cecil Raleigh carried off the honors.

"One of the Best," recently revived at the Princess Theater, has run its course, and has been withdrawn. It was succeeded by a drama called "Going the Pace." The once favorite actress here, Miss Marie Tillington, made her reappearance.

Quite a record will be established when "The Ghetto" is brought out at the Comedy on September 7. There will be twelve companies appearing in the play at the same time. Three of these will be performing in America, one in London, two in the English provinces, two in Holland, two in Germany, one in France, and one in Belgium.

Some changes have been made by your Mr. Fernald, author of the Comedy version, but the main features are the same as in the original.

Complaints are made by provincial managers of poor audiences at the theaters owing to the bright weather which tempts visitors to prefer out-of-door recreations.

Sir Henry Irving intends to produce an historical play next year with an exciting representation of the massacre of St. Bartholomew.

Mr. and Mrs. Kendall sail for New York on Sept. 20. Their American tour will last until May 31st.

Mr. Wilson Barrett opens his Lyceum season Sept. 2, with "The Silver King," and later on he will produce a new play in which he will be seen in a character of a different kind to any in which he has recently appeared.

Mr. Arthur Roberts has quite recovered from his recent operation, and has been visiting the Isle of Man with great advantage to his health.

Mr. E. S. Willard has never been quite himself since the illness which seized him in Chicago two years ago, and has gone to Aix-les-Bains under medical advice.

A NEW YORKER.

Musical Notes

The greatest musical box ever conceived will be exhibited for the first time at the Paris Exposition in 1900. Its inventor and builder, Antonio Zibordi, an Italian, devoted fifteen years of his life to constructing it.

He has bestowed upon his masterpiece the imposing name of "Auroelektronopoly." In it are concealed 40,000 pieces of musical apparatus, which required an outlay of 60,000 francs.

Dr. Barth of Koslin, has written a pamphlet to show that singing has not only an artistic value, but is a promoter of health. It deepens the respiration, exercises the capacity of the lungs, and strengthens the muscles. The appetite and thirst are increased, the movements of the diaphragm and abdominal muscles aid digestion, the larynx and nasal passages are benefited, the hearing becomes more acute. In short, singing is a prophylactic against chronic lung troubles, heart complaints and anemia.

On June 25, the memorial to Hans von Bülow was unveiled in the Adelphi Cemetery in the presence of Frau von Bülow and numerous friends. The stone bears a relief portrait of von Bülow by Hildebrandt, of Florence, and reproduces admirably the spiritual energy and the will power and the poise of the head. Von Bülow stands lifelike before the spectator as the lord of his orchestra, his infallible ear listens to the finest nuances of the powerful orchestral body, and from the seemingly closed eye a glance is directed to the thoughtless ones who have betrayed themselves by a false note. Beneath the bronze relief is a bronze urn in which the ashes of the master repose.

Mascagni, the famous composer of "Cavalleria Rusticana," a few years ago was asked to entertain the royal court in Rome. He did so, and delighted his audience. When he had finished playing he started a conversation with a little princess who had stood near the piano during the recital and had shown every sign of deep interest. As a matter of fact, she had been instructed by her mother to say, if any question should be asked, "That Mascagni was the greatest musician in Italy."

The composer asked her which of the great living masters she liked best, and the proud mother turned toward the child to hear the pretty little speech which had been taught to her. Instead of the compliments came the withering remark:

"There are no great masters living. They are all dead."

The musician gave a little start and then said:

"Your Excellency, permit me to congratulate you. You are the most truthful critic in Europe."—Musical Courier Sousa's popularity may be gauged by the following incidents: When Marc A. Blumenberg, editor-in-chief of The Musical Courier, stepped off at Gibraltar last month he heard a Sousa march played by the Coldstream Guards band, stationed there. The other story Sousa relates himself. He was in Paris one day last summer, and, wishing to look over some new scores, went into a music store on the Boulevard. He is, as all know, a very unassuming man. He asked for an English-speaking clerk. An old man appeared and to him a request was made for certain music. "All right, Mr. Sousa," said the man. Astonished, the American composer asked: "How do you know my name?" For answer The Musical Courier, with his portrait, was shown him. Then he understood.

Mark Hambourg, the celebrated Russian pianist, who is to tour the United States the coming season under the management of Victor Thorne, will sail from Liverpool October 15, on the steamship Teutonic, arriving here in time to fill a number of engagements in the Western cities, and will make his first New York appearance with the New York Philharmonic Society, on December 8 and 9.

Emperor William is desirous of giving every year at Berlin a series of grand concerts directed by celebrated conductors. For the coming season he has already engaged Mascagni, Lompe, Lamoureux, Hans Klicker and Malher. This shows that the Emperor is willing to encourage talent in whatever nation he finds. He has honored Mascagni in asking him to open the series.

Mme. Patti has just given two concerts at Swanes, Wales, for the benefit of several charitable institutions of that city. In spite of the hackesque list of numbers on the program, the diva realized $7,000 for her charities. It is almost superfluous to add that she was frantically applauded, and that at the conclusion of the program, she sang "Home, Sweet Home."

"Songs without words" is an excellent title for compositions which one might as well call "songs that speak." Often, however, we see songs with words that might more exactly be denominated "words without song."

—Austen Robertstein

The news that Felix Draeseke has just finished a big choral and orchestral work, "Christus," recalls to us the singular neglect pianists manifest to this composer's fine piano sonata in F sharp minor.

Siegfried Wagner's activity at Bayreuth has, we hear, reached the pernicious notch. It is rumored that the name of Bayreuth is to be changed to Beartown, in honor of the young man's opera.

The London opera season closed with a performance of Romeo and Juliet. Madame Melba impersonating the heroine.

It is said that Melba has been paid a million dollars in the six seasons she has been playing. Only one-half made abroad.

The Princess of Wales enjoys Wagner very much. He is the only composer she can hear—on account of her deafness.

The handsomest woman in Bayreuth this year is, by all odds, Miss Marion Weed, an American, by the way.

Mary Anderson is devoting herself to singing. Her friends swear that she is wonderful.

Madame Paderewski will not accompany her husband this season to America.
No Black Eyed Susans

Charles Bryant, the well known stage manager of the Alcazar, in moments not devoted to hard work, is very fond of making calls on his friends, remembering the feminine members of the households with flowers. The other day, preparatory to a visit, he strolled into Frank Shibley’s place on Sutter street, and asked the genial Frank if he had any “black-eyed Susans.” Shibley, who is something of a wag, replied that he had no “black-eyed Susans,” but he did have a “black-eyed Sarah.” Charlie smiled and “black-eyed Sarah” blusteringly assisted him to select some fine American beauties as a sort of atonement.

Grant and the Singer

It is generally supposed that prima donnas are impressed with their own importance. If that be true, there was one who was an exception to the rule, to judge by an incident related in Short Stories.

The English singer, Parepa Rosa, came to America to sing, and among her audience one occasion was President Grant. With his daughter Nellie he had come to hear the renowned singer, or, at any rate, Nellie had come for that purpose. She sat erect and sedate, but her father lounged comfortably in the background and talked to a friend.

Soon the prima donna’s portly figure appeared upon the stage. All eyes were turned upon her, but she saw only one man, the warrior whose deeds had stirred the world. His attitude was not flattering. He was still lounging in the background and talking to his companion.

Then the rich, deep voice of the singer rang out, but the President talked on. “Papa, Parepa is singing,” whispered his daughter.

And she did sing; but the best part of the story is that the prima donna heard of that answer, and being as jolly as she was portly, thoroughly appreciated it. She had a good laugh at her own expense, and admired Grant more than ever.

Past Days of Minstrelsy
REMINISCENCES OF THE OLD ALHAMBRA THEATER.

During the progress of a recent performance the writer's mind took a retrospective turn and wandered back to the days of 1872. Probably the greatest minstrel tour ever organized in the State was then performing at the Alhambra (now the New Comedy theater). Thomas Maguire was then a rich man and was about that time in the zenith of his power and glory—known all over America as the Napoleon of the stage, he used to say that money was no ice with him so long as he got performers that could catch the public taste.

In those days Sam Wetherhill was Maguire's manager, and when Sam was on deck and prepared to attend to business his "make-up" was a study. All the boy-and-girl population of San Francisco used to regard him with an amount of admiration and awe that seems now almost impossible. A long sealskin overcoat, said to have cost $6,000, a large diamond cross in his shirtbosom worth $1,500, a single-stone ring which cost $2,500, were among the trifles Sam used to adorn himself with. Eight shows a week, day and year round, excepting in Christmas, New Years and Fourth-of-July weeks, when the number of performances would reach nine and ten. Houses were all packed to the door and seats $1.00 and $1.50, the choice and expensive seats being in the gallery. This big business was kept up for four successive years, and there appears to be good grounds for the story that during the year and a half that Billy Emseron was in partnership with Maguire they divided between them the snag sum of $100,000. What a show they gave in those days to be sure! The orchestra was composed of sixteen of the very best players in the city under the baton of George Evins, one of the most accomplished musicians ever on the coast. A good pianist, a splendid organist and a man who has never been equalled in the business as a writer for the orchestra. A chorus of eight male voices, backed up by four solo singers: Messrs. James Russell, W. F. Baker, Beij, Clark and Aysnes Scott made up the musical portion of the first part. The end was: Emerson, Willis, Swain,...

Western Critics

Eastern newspapers are very fond of "calling down" big theatrical criticism of the "wild and woolly West" when the latter soars skyward in describing the "first night" of some possibly original production that has gone on the road and worked its way toward the setting sun and the land of superlative adjectives. But the fellow out West is apt to hit back by quoting some sky-rocket criticisms clipped from Eastern papers. At the Lamb's Club in New York the other night a little knot of actors were discussing this topic, when one of the party said that he could nearly always locate the source of a press notice of a play by the style in which it was written. The party who disputed this took from his pocket a newspaper clipping and defied any one of the company to say what part of the country it came from. The clipping referred to a performance of "The Nightingale" on one of its reviews.

The party who disputed this took from his pocket a newspaper clipping and defied any one of the company to say what part of the country it came from. The clipping referred to a performance of "The Nightingale" on one of its reviews.

The play surprises 'Monte Cristo' in intensity of action, subtlety of plot, in cause and effect. There are no cheap tricks, no devices that must be bridged by the imagination. It steps immediately upon a high, artistic level of intense active interest, and keeps that level up to the terrific, emotional climax which is the sub- sequent discovery, his killing her in the arms of her lover and lathing his hands in her warm heart's blood was the best piece of acting by far that we have witnessed for many a day. It was superb.

After a roar of laughter, guessing commenced. One said the criticism came from Oshkosh; another, "somewhere back of Denver," and a third suggested "a one-night stand on the road between Chicago and Dead Man's Gulch." The fact is that the criticism appeared as a serious review in a dignified Eastern paper, one of the most prominent dailies of Bos- ton. After that, would it not be well for the funny men of the East to sing small in referring to dramatic criticism in the "wild and woolly West." —N. Y. Herald.

Sousa's Ragtime Pun

Here is the story they are now telling about Sousa—it's something terrible:—The shocking tale is to the effect that Mr. Sousa, accompanied by Bob Hunter, of Manhattan Beach, strolled into Reiman's on Friday and handed his handsome gold watch to a clerk with the request that he fix it. The expert at the window examined the works, which showed no evidence of disorder and said:—"Why, Mr. Sousa, I don't see any- thing wrong; what's the trouble?"—"No trouble, no trouble at all," replied the March King. "I only want repair."—"Does it gain or lose?" asked the watchmaker.—"Neither, sir," was the reply.—"Then why do you want it regulated?"—"Not regulated; I said regulated," answered Mr. Sousa with some asper- sity. —"I wish to have it regulated, so that it will keep time while I'm writing a wedding march in that measure for Cissie Lofftus."—

MUSICAL NOTES

"I am well aware that some of you are ready to make the claim that there are other things of more importance than the ability to read music at sight. You will, perhaps, tell me that expression and a sweet, sympathetic voice is of more value, and that the time is too short to get both, or all three. I invite your attention to a moment's consideration of this matter. There is no disposition to quarrel, or even differ with those who insist upon a sweet, sympathetic voice and the ability to give artistic rendering, yet I question whether they are right when they insist that this is the foundation of the matter. You have a gilded spire which is its artistic cap- sheaf; it also has a cornerstone. Which was first attended to, and what was the last act of the artist? They didn't gild the spire before they leveled the cornerstone, and the cornerstone does not rest upon the gilded spire; just the reverse is the natural order of things. Let us im- agine that we have developed a race of artistic singers, but have left out the ability to read the signs that con- vey the thought of the composer, and in time we will have a race whose knowledge will be handed down as a thing a woman can do, just as we do writing and printing. We will have artists as dumb as oysters unless they can be privileged to hear the music from the lips of another. Really, this argument for building the artist at the expense of the ability to read music is as absurd as most of the stock arguments advanced against individual singing in the school room. But the condition confronts us and something everybody must work hard at once, for thousands upon thousands of boys and girls are leaving the public schools every year never having learned to read music—Sterrie A. Weaver in Musical Courier.

The Bright Side

"I think that the life of an actress is one of the most exciting and most profitable of any occupation. I have had them all very well to say that very few suc-ceed. Very few rise in any calling. How many journalists succeed? How many novelists succeed? Success is not as natural to the stage as it is elsewhere. I speak and always shall speak most gratefully of it. I have been before the public now twelve years. And I am happier to-day than I have ever been. I work hard— everybody must work hard—and the results are charming."—In London they treat theatrical people like heroes and heroines. Society quarrels over them. Society handkerers to entertain them. If they have once succeeded you are taken up and petted. They can't do enough for you. And it seems to me that this is the right spirit. Actors and ac- tresses are people of talent. Brains should be the key that opens drawing- rooms. Brains is a finer commodity than money any day. The successful actor, novelist and journalist have the entire everywhere in London. No drawing-room is considered complete with them. In New York they are looked down upon."—Mrs. Potter
A scene like this shows the actress—likewise makes her name. Mrs. Leslie Carter will never thrill her audiences more in any other play than she does in "Zaza." San Francisco will see them some day.

ANNIE RUSSELL

BESSIE BONEHILL

Shows out in this cut with one of the best likenesses ever taken of her. She is almost more popular in England than in America. She has just made another hit as the man hater in "Miss Hubble," the latest Gotham production slated for a run.

—The stunning—was not long ago the thing when it came to male impersonations. Now she finds the enthusiasm just a little less each succeeding year.

SEPTEMBER 23RD, 1899

THE COMMERCIAL VALUE OF A NAME

The actor's training is such that he is prone, unconscious perhaps, to think too much of effect and too little of the cause that produces it.

This may account for his apparent indifference to one important cause of the much discussed discrepancy between the salaries paid to actors and the amounts commanded by various performers. When the whole subject is carefully considered, it will be found that the commercial value of a name is the primary factor.

Good, bad or mediocre, the variety performer's identity is maintained so long as he continues active. His name is on the posters and in the newspaper advertisements, and his lithographs are in the shop windows.

Consequently his existence becomes known, even to those who never visit the vaudevilles.

The average actor on the other hand figures only in the programs, and he must do something to distinguish himself—creditably or the reverse—to attract attention beyond that.

It may not be generally known, but the fact that more than a few managers have for seasons past been systematically avoiding mention in their advance press notices of the actors they employ. Their object is obvious. They wish no names but their own to come to your attention with their productions.

To be sure, this reticence frequently is meant to hide, until the opening night, the inferiority of the cast, but not always. Instances could be cited of managers who had engaged competent and popular players, refraining from announcing them, simply because they wished to be at liberty to replace them by other and perhaps cheaper people whenever they might feel disposed.

One man who controls several modorate productions never mentions the members of the cast while he is on the road. A man who is extensively engaged in furnishing attractions for the month, believing his houses is just as strenuous in his endeavors to hide the identity of his numerous actors in all the press matter sent out. Others could be cited, but this will suffice to show that there is a well-defined movement in certain quarters to reduce the importance of the players as far as practicable.

The actor himself is largely responsible for this. Too often he has taken advantage of a manager who has exploitationed him and demanded unjust, if not unreasonable, increase of salary, because he had been fortunate in securing a fat part, and through the manager's liberality in booming him, had become in a measure indispensable.

In the long run, the practice of using lithographs of members of a combination was long since abandoned. Then many managers stopped the use of any but star names in their programs. If an actor who is being cut out of the press notices.

An actor's name is his fortune. It represents his record. It epitomizes the difference between Joseph Jefferson and John B. Small.

The more widely and favorably it is known, the more money its owner receives. It is natural, therefore, that the tendency to say as little as possible about the members of a cast should be accompanied by a tendency to pay the average actor as little as possible for his service.

The new system of suppression accounts largely for the decline in remuneration for dramatic endeavor, while vaudeville salaries have remained steady.

It is worthy the attention of the player now, before it becomes more serious. —Dramatic News.

HOYT'S EXPERIENCES

When "The Tin Soldier" was done in Chicago for the first time, I played the principal role, and was present and seemed to enjoy the performance immensely. Next day he gave the piece a very flattering criticism, and said that all the people played their parts well with a single exception. The actor who played the plumber seemed to have no conception of what the author intended. I had to good naturedly take the general laugh at my expense and foot up the bill of fare. The success of the combined frequency was to make a very respectable laugh. I determined to get back at Field. He was as well known and as familiar a figure in Chicago as I was in New York. On the following evening I had him occupy a box at the theater. In one of my scenes I took a copy of the News, and, advancing to the front, pretended to read salaried 'Gen. Field's Shards and Flats,' I said, as if just coming to the column of his bright exploitations. Then, with a broad smile, I apparently continued reading. After awhile the smile was replaced by something exceeded by an expression of positive pain. The paper was thrown to the floor, and, with a very tired expression, I threw back the lapel of my coat and rang a chestnut bell. The chestnut bell is something new in Chicago then, and the little piece of business went tremendously. Field's box was so situated that he could not withdraw from the view of the house, and he had to take his laugh like a good fellow. "The Tin Soldier" has been made for years an average of $2,000 a season.—Charles H. Hoyt.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

September 23rd, 1899

MILDRED HOLLAND, the well-known actress who played for several seasons in "Two Little Vagrants," has started a diamond-back turtle farm on Long Island.

MAUD CASWELL had her bathing costume photo in the Sunday Telegraph of New York on the rooth. Needless to say, Maudie was pictured with bare legs, a straw hat and a smile.

HARRY WOODRUFF and Charles A. Bigelow have been engaged for Anna Held's production of "Papa's Wife," the new musical comedy by Harry B. Smith and Reginald De Koven. Herman Perlet will be the musical director.

FRANK J. Nugent, professionally known as Wm. Redmond, a member of Primmrose and Dockstader's minstrels, eloped from Derby, Ct., August 18th, with Margaret Murray, a non-professional, and was married in New York.

THE JESSIE BARTLETT Davis opera company will include William Philip, William Broderick, William Pruette and Harry Brown. Several operas will be sung weekly.

MISS MAUD ODELL, who will play "Miladi" with James O'Neil in "The Musketeers" this season has been leading lady of the Castle Square Theater Stock Company in Boston for the past year, making special hits by her clever acting in several productions.

MISS ELISABETH GUEST, last season prima donna with the Bositonians, has been engaged for the part of Rozalie, in "Davy Jones," and will make her first appearance with the Boston Ster- enaders in that opera at the Park theater to-morrow night.

"MANAGER W. J. ELLEFORD writes that he is recovering from an attack of malaria. He spent sometime at Dun- can springs. He says that his business is doubly that of any previous season. He has a better company than ever before and is deserving of all success.

W. A. BELASCO of this city is playing with "The Heart of Mary- land" in the East.

ANNE MEYERS, last year's Tivoli soubrette, is appearing in a big bur- lesque production in Washington. Ida Mulla and several people well known in San Francisco are in the cast.

A LUTHER from New York says that Ernest Hastings and Gretchen Lyons were seen strolling down a Broadway street with an unacquainted man. Hastings has signed with Stuart Rob- son for the season.

MARCIAL PETERSON of the Tivoli recalls many incidents of the early career of Sibyl Sanderson. His father is the stage manager for her first production in the city of Brussels, he himself being one of the cast.

On his return from his present tour, L. R. Stockwell will organize a company to make a tour of Australia, playing the "Midnight Bell," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Joseph R. G. Grange," and a comedy now being pre- pared for him.

ANNE MEYERS, who used to smile on Tivoli bald heads, would hardly be suspected of having a daughter bigger than she is. She has, however, and the young lady is appearing with con- siderable success in Baltimore in benefi- t performances.

FRIENDS of Leslie Morosco will be pleased to hear that he has struck a good place as light comedian in "When Smith Met Jones," now play- ing to successful houses in the East. Burt Morrison, another San Francis- can, has signed with the "Telephone Girl."

MISS LAURA CREWS, ingénue of Stockwell's "Midnight Bell" Co., is doing particularly well, and one of the few company members who has made a hit in every town where the company appeared. Miss Crews is a very tal- ented actress and her success is well deserved.

SAN FRANCISCO dramatic talent is in great demand in the East. Among the people from this city engaged to play in Lewis Morrison's companies are Frank Fanning and Margaret Kane and Miss Adams, "Faust" company No. 2; and Howard Scott, Fredric the Great."

HARRY CUMMINS CLARK still has faith in "What Happened to Jones" and will soon be seen out West with a new company of players. He has engaged Jno. Fraser Crosby, Jr., to plan the role of Richard Heatherly. Clarke has added "What Did Simkins Do?" to his repertory.

GEORGE O'BOURNE, a San Francisco favorite, is in the cast of "A Stranger in Strange Land," which is to be seen at the Manhattan Beach theater, New York, every Monday. Mr. O'bourne is conducting rehearsals. The comic complications arise from the adventures of an American Indian taken to Eng- land in the advertising interests of a patent medicine.
The Tivoli

The ever popular Tivoli Opera House is this week repeating its success of last week by again presenting the lyric masterpieces, "Othello" and "Lohengrin." Crowded houses have been the rule. "Traviata" had been announced to take the place of "Lohengrin," but it was a wise thing on Manager Leary’s part to continue both pieces, since their success the previous week had been phenomenal. Barron Berthald, as Lohengrin, is indeed romantic, admirable and perfect. Miss Prossnitz, Mr. Mertens, Mr. Schuster and the others were all good, and it can be said that both presentations were better than last week. "Lohengrin" will be given Saturday matinee and Sunday evening.

Morosco’s Grand

A most delightful performance of that most delightful opera, "The Drum Major’s Daughter" was given at the Grand Opera House this week. As is usual with the Grand, there was a crowded house. Offenhach’s bright and catchy music was well rendered, and too much praise cannot be given Edith Mason, Hattie Belle Ladd, William Wolff and Thomas Persse. There was a disposition on the part of some of the critics of the daily newspapers to censure Mr. Wolff for his interpretation of the character of Moulthrop, and the reviewer of the Examiner was especially unjust. To anyone who had studied the character it was easily seen that Mr. Wolff had the severest work of the piece and that he acquitted himself exceptionally well—never, as was said by some one who should, but doesn’t know, overlooking the part but bringing out every interesting feature of it. He was particularly creditable in the guise of a holy friar. Mr. Wooley was perhaps a trifle too ridiculous as the Duke Delia Volta, though he gave an otherwise wise good performance. Wisnfeld Goff was the dandy Marquis Bambani, and about all that can be said for him is that he dressed the part well. Others whose roles were unimportant were: Adrie Arnold, as Lady Superior; Georgie Cooper, as a Vivandiere; A. E. Arnold, as the Sergeant; Nace Bonville, as the gardener and innkeeper; Arnold and Joseph Witt, as the notaries, and Id A. St. Aulon, Ethel Strachan and Irene Du Voll as the Convent Pupils. Miss Mason, as the Drum Major’s Daughter, Stella, was in fine voice and her song "I am a Little Jew" was encored several times. Hattie Belle Ladd was Griole, the drummer boy, and while a trifle large for the ordinary drummer "boy" in the French army, she was particularly happy and entertaining in both her acting and singing. She always seems to fit well in most anything for which she is cast. Georgie Cooper was as pretty as a picture as Claudine, the Vivandiere, and she sang well. Miss Besie Fairhands had the very trying role of the Duchess Delia Volta and her interpretation was unusually good. As the gay and gallant Captain Robert, Thomas Persse made a very handsome appearance and his singing was like it always is—good. Too much cannot be said of the chorus, and one of the prettiest marches ever seen in the city was given by the pretty and shapely girls who comprise the participants who never figure on the printed program. The march was arranged beautifully and most artistically. The splendid orchestra was up to its usual high standard.

The Alhambra

A. P. Ellinghouse sends word to the Review that he will open the Alhambra the latter part of October, playing combinations only at proper prices, and that he has booked solid until the last of May.

We call attention to the new and artistic studio of Mr. Louis Thoms, 545 Market St., Phelan Building.

Read the Dramatic Review.

The Alcazar

WILLIAM GILLETTE’S funniest farce, "Too Much Johnson" has been the attraction at the Alcazar this week, and has proved to be a big drawing card. The trials and tribulations of the consummate liar, August Billings, were portrayed by Eugene Ormonde in a manner which would have been most pleasing had the gentleman modulated his voice to a trifle higher pitch. As it was, many of his speeches were inaudible in the center of the house. George Webster was cast as Johnson, and a most acceptable performance he gave. His make-up was grotesque, and did not even betray a suggestion of Webster. Charles King was good as Mr. Faddish, and Clarence Montaine did one of his best impersonations as the excitable Frenchman. Miss Foster looked charming, and had little else to do as Mrs. Billings, but did that little well. Miss Howe as the mother-in-law gave a strong delineation of that strong-minded personage. Miss Helen Henry and Frank Denihan portrayed a good deal of mirth in the characters of Miss Faddish and her boy lover. The minor characters were all well played, especially by Daniel Halifax and Carlyle Moore, and the stage settings were excellent. The performance went with the right vim to make it a comedy success, and outside of the impossibility to catch all of Billings’ speeches left little to be desired.

The Columbia

The advent of Madame Modjeska is always regarded in San Francisco as of more than ordinary importance by local play-goers, and it is to be hoped for the good of the stage as an institution, the same rule holds elsewhere. She is the only remaining representative of the great players that have put the American stage on a par with that of other countries. She has been so long familiar to play-goers on the Coast that she seems to have a friendly relation to even the individual, and as the feeling grows of the possibility of each opportunity of seeing her being the last, so does the following become more loyal and more numerous. Interest in her engagement, which opens at the Columbia Theater on Monday night, is, of course, greatly enhanced by the new play, "Marie Antoinette," which is to hold the boards for the first week. The play is attributed to Mr. Clinton Stuart, who, it is claimed, has had nothing to do with other playwrights who have written on the subject, but has gone straight to history and the various memories for his facts. In the light even of history, the many and closely connected incidents in the career of Antoinette read almost like melodrama and it is hard to overestimate the opportunities that the subject presents to both star and dramatist. With the acquisition of Mr. John E. Kellerd as leading man, and other talented people in the supporting company, Modjeska, it seems, will be better surrounded on this occasion, than for some years past. Much credit is said to be due to her manager, Mr. John C. Fisher, for the beautiful and elaborate scenic productions which he has provided for each play in the repertoire. For the second week a number of classic plays will be offered. They will include "Much Ado About Nothing," "Macbeth," "Mary Stuart," and possibly a new version of the well-known French comedy, "The Ladies’ Battle." During the Modjeska engagement it is announced that the curtain will be raised at 8 o’clock at every evening performance.

"The Ghetto"

The "Children of the Ghetto" was presented at the National theater, Washington, September 18th in a packed house. The play was well received, and the curtain calls followed each act. The scenery was elaborate. Mr. Zangwill’s stage story deals somewhat from the book, though retaining the most interesting characters. The leading parts were played by Miss Blanche Bates, Willton Lackaye, Frank Worthing, William Norris and Adolphe Lestena.

Harry Woodbury, who was once engaged to marry Anna Gould, will support Anna Held this season.

JAMES M. NIXON, once well known as proprietor of a traveling circus, died in New York Monday, aged 80 years.

"I Forgive You"
The Macdonough

The Macdonough theater in Oakland, well known as a joy town, has just announced that the management will offer a week of entertainment that will be a treat to the eye and ear. The麦克唐纳公司，人们都称之为欢乐镇，刚刚宣布将提供一周的娱乐，这将是一个视觉和听觉的享受。

The Chutes

At the Chutes this week the feature has been Adgie and the lions. In addition, Mabelle Bowman, a singing soubrette, well known in this city and an old Alcazar favorite, made her first appearance on the vaudeville stage. Her voice, rich and full, harmonizing well with the orchestra, has made her a hit. And Dale and Dalton, known for their comic songs, also made their appearance. The moving pictures included many startling scenes.

NOTES FROM NEW YORK
Special Correspondence

More than half of the theaters of this city are running this week, and nearly every roof garden is closed for the season. Although there have been several new plays launched this week, last week kept first nights on the jump. John Drew opened at the Empire on Monday night, and the New York Times reported that Miss Maddie Fiske came out on Tuesday at the Fifth Avenue in "Becky Sharp," E. H. Sothern and Miss Virginia Harten in "The King's Musketeer" marked Daniel Frohman's re-opening of Daly's Theater on Wednesday night; Miss Grace Atkins and Joseph Hay worth opened the Broadway on Friday night in "The Ghetto" under the management of Jacob Litt; and on Saturday night of that same week Henry Miller, who has been sojourning out West this summer, opened the Herald Square Theater in "The Only Way." The same night Koster & Bial's Music Hall re-opened for the season by bringing its vaudeville show down from the road. It looks as though later in the season we will be lucky to get one mid-week opening. Here in New York where a successful play always runs several months and frequently a whole season, the first-nighter does not have to like so much theatrical food for thought crowded into one week. There is in fact too much new for literary digestion when everything comes in such a rush. The reviewer who has the first-nighter does not, the first-nighter always has to visit them several times a week to appreciate them fully.

Californians and Pacific Coasters in general, will be glad to know that John Drew, one of their favorite comedians, has fallen into another very happy role in "The Tyranny of Tears." "The Tyranny of Tears." The movie does not, the first-nighter always has to visit them several times a week to appreciate them fully.

future promises to follow a tearful past, but before that happy ending the husband is ruled absolutely (and humorously to one but himself) by his wife's crocodile tears. The play promises to be as successful in America as it was in London."

Mrs. Minnie Maddie Fiske is scoring an artistic success in "Becky Sharp." Lauglen Mitchell's characterization of Thackeray's "Vanity Fair." Whether the play will prove a financial success remains to be seen. Maurice Barrymore as Rawdon Crawley appears to grow in advantage to what he has been seen for many years. Thackeray would probably take exception to the manner in which the bad behavior of Becky Sharp has been accentuated by the dramatist because, as played, her conduct greatly resembles that of an adventuress in the back yard of the Fiske has a good following, and her aud- dences are always friendly. She frequently gets curtain calls after the shocking and rousing act where the husband, after transplanting her lecherous old sounder of a victim, goes off with the money which she received under false pretenses.

Whenever the proprietor of a New York Theater dashes a bucket of whitewash over the brick walls behind the scenes and puts on a fresh coat of varnish on the drop curtain, he usually announces that he has expended $600 in new decorations of the interior. It was therefore with great satisfaction that the friends at Weber & Fields noticed this week, an ad in the Sunday Mercury announcing a real new ornamental refitting of the interior. The new color scheme is of old rose, cream and gold. The new drees was no doubt due largely to the kings of the stage, Lillia Russel, the queen of comic operas, to join their forces in "The Whirligig."

Like the familiar phrase "stock company," the "roof-garden" may some day be a thing of the past. Originally a stock company, as applied to theatrical companies meant a company in which ussly, if not all, of the members had an interest financially; but of late years managers apply the term to a company which remains at one house nearly all the season, producing dif- ferent plays. Now, if a roof-garden means anything, as applied to a theatrical amuse- ment, it means that the entertainment is on the roof where the audience may get the benefit of every cooling breeze in the summer. But frequently the rain spoiled a night's receipts, and so when Oscar Ham- merton built the Olympia, he covered the top floor over with a glass roof, which would protect the spectators from the rain and put up sides to keep out the wind when it blew too hard. It really is not a roof-garden at all. It is merely a sky auditorium, but it has been successful and its manager has frequently had the laugh on his rivals this summer when it rained hard. Now he threatens to keep his roof-garden running all winter as a winter-garden, because on account of its protection it may be kept warm. If that sort of thing should keep up, the roof garden would in a few years be a roof-garden in name only, but in many respects the enclosed attic theater would be an improvement on the genuine roof-gardens which for many nights each season are uncomfortably cold, city from wind or rain.

When Sothern, under Daniel Frohman's management opened Daly's theater this season nearly everything was bound in fact that Daly left the house. As a personal favor to Miss Ada Rehan all of her pictures were removed from the foyer and that made things look a little queer. Then there were white instead of negro ushers. But nearly all the employees of the theater were retained and to anyone but a frequent visitor of Daly's theater there was little to remind him of the death of one of America's greatest managers.

Mrs. Langtry will be first seen in this city at the Garden, January 13th, in Sydney Grundy's, "The Degenerate," in which she is now acting at the Haymarket in London. After staying five weeks in this city she will visit the principal cities of the country. As the Jersey Lily (or had) a farm in Lake County, California, she will no doubt visit California to see how her property is improv- ing out there.

In these days when plays are made with scissors, paste and a novel, one reads with no surprise that "Quo Vadis" is to be dramatized. Stanford Stange is the car- penter, and F. C. Whitney the confident manager.

Sam T. Jack's widow refuses to marry his brother as requested in the will, but instead will manage Jack's female minstrel company. In vaudeville she was Emma Ward before she married Jack.

Marie Burroughs, who was brought up as a little girl on Myrtle street near Tenth, in Oakland, Cal., threatened to leave Stuart Robson's production of "The Gaddy" at Wallack's this week, unless certain blas- phemous lines were cut. The lines were therefore eliminated. When we re- reflect that there are unh- well-known actresses in New York who would not have hesitated to speak any lines, however blas-phemous, the California coloney here feel proud to know that Miss Burroughs is doing her share to elevate the stage.

open the second week. At the Orpheum, at the matinee and night performances, people were turned away. At the Auditorium, "The Three Musketeers," by the Woodward Stock Company for this week opened to good business. The Grand has "Dear Old Canada," with Geo. Bonfield, Jr., Geo. Ober and Katheryn Osterman as the stars. It is a bright comedy with funny situations.

Coming, Sept. 14, for three nights at the Coates, Eddie Foy in "Hotel Toppy Turvy," "Arizona" follows Eddie Foy. Grand next week, "Piney Ridge"; Auditorium next week, "The Open Gate and Capt. Kackett"; next week at the Orpheum the Cardiceps, Theodore Thomas, Mansfield and Wilber, Valmore, Bob Alden and Strap Hill, Ritta Butler, Tina, the Rossinos, the Kinderrum.

By the Cardinal of the Priests of Palma commences here September 24, and continues for ten days, during which time there will also be a street fair. Business, theistically, will undoubtedly be good during that time. Mr. Thos. Myers, former manager of the Orpheum at Los Angeles, is here and proffering a worthy assistant to Mr. Martin Lehman. Many friends made on previous visits here are glad Mr. Meyers is here. The Orpheum Company is soon to have a Theater in Denver.

Musical Notes...

The Portland Symphony Orchestra, which was organized in the early part of summer, is being put on a solid financial basis, and the prospect is good for a successful series of concerts the coming season. Director C. L. Brown is getting his musicians in line, and expects to have a full chord of strings, at least thirty, and the other instruments will be equally strong.

If the fail of the elite in engaging the finest musical artists to sing and play for their private musicals, at such fabulous prices, does not soon subside there is eminent danger of the less wealthy devotees being robbed of this rare music, as the amount expended in procuring such artists has in most instances far exceeded the price paid at the theaters. Last year Melba sang thirteen times at $1,500, an engagement. Calve and Eames received $1,000, each, while Padreowski received something like $5,000 whenever he was gracious enough to play at private homes.

Fritz Scheel, now leader of the Philadelphia Symphony, received the following flattering notice from the Philadelphia Times: "Fritz Scheel certainly possesses one quality that was conspicuous in two of the greatest leaders we have ever had here—Anton Seidl and Theodore Thomas. That quality is magnetism. Thomas, almost lethargic in manner, can always draw out of his men the tone, the phrasing that he wants. Seidl, whose method was very impressioned, produced even a greater effect. Scheel has adopted a wise conservatism both in bearing and interpretation and has always a complete mastery of his material, both as to form and spirit."

Trouble for May Yohe.

The Duke of Newcastle and other relatives of Lord Francis Hope have induced him to separate from Lady Hope. Ever since his marriage to the fetching American burlesque actress, who was formerly May Yohe, his family have been uccessing in their efforts to separate them. It is said they once offered him $1,000,000 to leave her. According to Burke's Peerage, the couple were married November 27, 1894.

Miss Yohe was born in Bethlehem, Pa., about thirty-three years ago. Her father was an ironmaster and her mother a dressmaker. May manifested talent at an early age and was sent to Europe to study singing and languages. She sang first in New York in the fall of 1886, at the old Standard. She had an unimportant part in the burlesque of "Aladdin," and attracted no attention until the last act, when she sang a serenade from Aurina's opera. Her voice was an unusually deep contralto, with a not unpleasanthuskiness. She sang with such depth and fullness of tone that her ears wondered where the slender girl dressed in grey silk tights managed to keep to much voice. In the year following she returned to New York again in burlesque. Afterward Miss Yohe appeared in "Natural Gas," and whether or not the title was responsible for the effect, the actress' temperament acquired an exuberance which was the principal characteristic of her American career. After she had sung "The Mottoes on the Wall" for several months in "Natural Gas," she joined another fare-comedy company and continued in this line of work as long as she stayed in America. Nine years ago she was said to be married to Jack Mason, the actor, then with the Boston Museum, but shortly after this announcement was made she started for San Francisco and made a triumphal progress across the country.

Her escapades here and in Honolulu with a couple of high-fliers were the talk of the Coast for a long time.

Lizzie Raymond, the bonny, noisy and magnificent American who married Sam Bernhard once upon a time and then said vivaciously, "Forgit it, forgot it," which Mr. Bernhard promptly did, has been making a great hit abroad. She caught the Londoners with her brusque wit and hearty nonsense, and she found the way to the heart of Vienna and has enjoyed her success as well as made her American visitors enjoy it.

Harrison Grey Fiske gives this information as to the Actor's Fund: "The Actor's Fund has 735 annual members and 121 life members. The last year its receipts were $23,165. The previous year the receipts were $27,340. In June, 1894, the Fund's assets were $181,865. This year they are $182,278."

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

September 23rd, 1899

W. R. Dailey’s Stock Company is receiving very flattering notices from the interior press. At Sacramento, they were enthusiastically welcomed and was recalled three or four times; and while he was out the last time he was engaged in San Francisco for the patronage bestowed and to announce coming events. Dailey adds that he has no apparent presumptions for the last season upon his contract to endeavor to present “Hamlet” at New York, but he said he felt satisfied that his company would fill it all right, and he declared the theater-goers would be surprised and pleased when they see the Hamlet of Darrel Vinton, and they were.

Leon Cooper gave the first of his summer seasons in the new Opera House on Thursday afternoon. “The Merchant of Venice” was the subject, and Mr. Cooper had a splendid cast of actors for the different scenes with instructive remarks. There was a large audience. Mr. Cooper is not in the least bit too well known to require comment.

Last Wednesday evening at Los Angeles, the first of the benevolent lodges of Elks in California assembled and conducted dedicatory services at the new Elks’ Hall in that city.

Frescoes are at work putting a bright new dress on the Columbia entrance this week.

“TURNED UP”

The Western Addition Literary and Dramatic Association continued their performance at Native Sons’ Hall, Wednesday night to an audience that filled every corner of the place. Wm. M. Ogilvie, stage director, was forced in front of the curtain at the end of act II, and President A. B. Black presided over the meeting with a watch-60 on behalf of the Club.

Lack of space this week prevents a lengthy review of the performance, but that will be given next week. Suffice to say the comedy was well played. Following the cast:

General Riche, on foreign service, Mr. L. Crampton, Miss Clancy, Mr. P. C. B., the Petri, Dr. W. H. Siebert, George Melway, his son, Mr. Thomas W. Hickley, Neil Nold, dan, a Barister, Mr. George Hammershmit; Carraway Barnes, the undertaker, Ms Wm. M. Ogilvie; Policeman, Mr. Harry Graham, Mary Medway, Medway’s widow, Miss May Sullivan; Sabina Melway, her daughter, Miss Artie Hynes; Ada Balic, the General’s daughter-in-law; Mrs. Fanall, George Melway’s housekeeper, Miss Lennie Jane; Ceplata, Captain Mel- way’s second wife, Miss Rose Brown, Ceplata’s niece, Master William Carlson.

HARRY COURTAIN

Just recovered from temporary blindness, and who is now in two surgical operations. Harry Courtaine, the veteran baritone singer and actor will appear in his first performance at the Queen’s Theater on Blackwell’s Island, New York, to fill an engagement he has in view.

Courtaine is in his seventieth year. While on the stage in Tulli, in London, in 1856, he was engaged by Tom Maguire, on the stage of the Queen’s Hall in Maguire’s Theater in San Francisco. Courtaine sang and played in California for twenty years, and in one time managed the Metropolitan Theater in San Francisco.

THEATRE REVIEW

OAKLAND

Coast Correspondence.

OAKLAND, Sept. 20.—Negroes are now under way which promise to result in the Macdonough Theatre, Oakland's hand someat, playhouse being kept upon almost constantly. Mr. R. P. Porter has secured until October 1st, an option from Messrs. Gottlob, Marx & Co. to have the lease transferred. He has engaged a housekeeper and a bookkeeper, and Mr. Porter will associate with him in the con- duct of the enterprise Louis A. Morgernsen, and Charles B. Duffield. The company will play bookings of the Columbia, California and Alhambra Theaters for the regular season. The opening will occur the last week of this month, and when the season closes, run the theater as a first-class stock house with popular prices, until the opening of the next regular season. He has already received substantial pledges of support from prom- inent business men of Oakland, and also from society folks, who want the Macdon- ought to be available for frequent patron- age. The theater is now dark.

At the Dewey Theater the Grand Stock Company has been giving an excellent production of Duni Sully’s successful play, “Dixter.” It was found during the act that the company would produce “The Three Guardsmen,” but on account of the fact that the play was not ready in time to produce “Daddy Nora.” The produc- tion has been excellent in every respect and the audience that attended the opening process was said Wm. Mack as Daddy Nora does some ex- cellent work. The balance of the cast is in capable hands, and the scenic effects are good. The box office will be “Ten Nights in a Barroom,” to be fol- lowed the week after by “The Three Guardsmen.”

The specialty people at Oakland Park last Sunday were: Mid Thrushill, Alges Har- dwick, who was accompanied by Everett Badger, Rade and Dalton, and Prof. Mag- nure. The attendance was very large.

The Palace Theaer will be enlarged and a Circle added to the building in this city Wednesday and Thursday, and it is sure to do a large business.

Drouin’s House on the 29th, a company of amateurs will produce the comedy “Don Caesar de Bazan.” The atten- dance is expected to be very large, as a number of Oakland’s society folk take part in the production.

OAKLAND MECHANICAL NOTES.

If popularity counts for anything in the question of attendance, the new theater and its openings, so far as we can judge, should be a large one, as both young ladies are very popular with Oakland audien- ces. Miss Carroll goes to study for the stage, and Miss Newnan will go to New- ton to complete her musical course.

The coming concert of both the Hughes and Olympic Clubs, in the near future, are being looked forward to with great interest. A piano and vocal concert in Oakland is under consideration by Herrman Georg, whose name has been prominently mentioned with respect to the management of the San Francisco Opera Symphony Concerts.

The Columbia Orchestra gave a delightful concert at the Auditorium last Friday evening, and was enjoyed by a large and fashion- able audience. HERBERT E. CLARK.

The attempt of a Sunday paper to create the impression that there was trouble between Leader Simonson and his chorus at the Grand was very vigorously revected by the members of the chorus. It is well known that they have been stating that they are an extremely happy family on Mission street.

HARRY COURTAIN

Just recovered from temporary blindness, and who is now in two surgical operations. Harry Courtaine, the veteran baritone singer and actor will appear in his first performance at the Queen’s Theater on Blackwell’s Island, New York, to fill an engagement he has in view.

Courtaine is in his seventieth year. While on the stage in Tulli, in London, in 1856, he was engaged by Tom Maguire, on the stage of the Queen’s Hall in Maguire’s Theater in San Francisco. Courtaine sang and played in California for twenty years, and in one time managed the Metropolitan Theater in San Francisco.
Conchita is at the Peoples Theater, Seattle, Wash.
Camille D'Arville's time in vaudeville is solidly booked for one year.
The Williams, and Hallett and Carroll are booked at Honolulu for four weeks.
Manager Meyerfeld has taken a trip East, overlooking the field and booking attractions.
Vernona Jarbeau returns to the stage and will play vaudeville. Miss Jarbeau has a new act.
The Filipino actors, now performing at the Mechanics' Fair, have asked to be made American citizens.
The Sisters Waterman leave for Portland, Or., this week, where they are to play "The Fredericksburg.
Wright Hunting became the season in vaudeville last Monday with "A Stolen Kiss," on the Keith circuit.
The Pearson Bros., knock-abouts, left for Sacramento this week to join Johnny Williams Tent Vaudeville show.
Manager L. W. Buckley has been secured by the Mechanics' Institute to manage the entertainment portion of the Mechanics' Fair.
There are so many Johnsons in the vaudeville business that they have by common consent taken to billing themselves as the Musical Johnsons, the Bicycle Johnsons, the Juggling Johnsons and the and the Acrobat Johnsons.
The De Filippis have arrived in Paris and have met with a fine reception at the Parisiana theater, where they gave their first performance. Business in Paris is booming. The preparations for the great fair are immense.
The Geralds, Pete and Edith, for the past three years prominently connected with Vaudeville houses in the North, are here on a visit to Mrs. Gerald, a daughter of Ned Buckley, a vaudeville manager of the old school.
The Hawthorne Sisters, who sang themselves into public favor at the Orpheum a few months ago, signed a contract for an engagement at Cleveland for four dollars a week. Last month, that time the strikers applied dynamite to the railways that carried patrons to the door of the theater and the manager was justified in shutting his house temporarily. To be sure, the justification doesn't give the Hawthorne Sisters back their four hundred dollars. But after all, it may be slightly better to lose one week's salary than to be perniciously waited home to glory in the smoke and dust of a dynamite explosion.

Vaudeville Echoes

Walter Talbot, the California tenor, will play this city January 1000.
Margie Wade, the vocalist, opens at D'Altonico Music Hall, Victoria, B. C.
Fred Nibleo has a new monolouge, written for him by Will M. Creasy, which he is studying with a view of presenting it in the near future.
Junie McCree and Matt Trayers will be at the head of their own company the coming season under the management of J. Laurence Welker.
Mabel Bowman, a well-known and pleasing San Francisco soubrette, made her vaudeville debut to a large audience at the Chutes theater Monday evening.
The DeForest Sisters, Morrissey and Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Evans, Matthews Duo, Guilmette, and Talbot and Mlle. Lara are at the Harmonia Theater, Minneapolis.
Lozell Bros. aerialists, Chas. St. Clair trapeze performer, Mme. and Prof. Schell and lions, and the Jenny Oriental Troupe returned from the Eureka Fair this week.
The Sisters Waterman were the hit of the Eureka Fair last week. Their high-class negro melodies caught the town, and Eureka folks are still whistling the refrain "Rasamanse," the Sisters' trade-mark.

Vaudeville artists, one and all, are more than pleased with the Dramatic Review. It is a move in the right direction. A well-known vaudeville artist says: "Keep the pace you are going your success is assured." Thanks, more.
Press Eldridge has returned to New York from Europe this week. He appeared for one week while in London, and made a pronounced hit. He was offered strong inducements to continue for an indefinite period, but preferred to return to America.

Coles and Johnson started their season at the Bijou in Pittsburg last week. Ed. H. Lester, formerly at Koster and Bial's, is their assistant manager, and travels with the company while Ed. W. Cooke, the manager, goes in advance.

Milton and Dolly Nobles have very few open weeks between now and May 1900. They began their season in Worcester, Mass., going thence to Hyde and Rehanon's, Brooklyn, and Sept. 18 they opened in Chicago, playing the circuit. "Why Walker Reformed," which appears to be more in demand than ever before, will be played exclusively until the opening in New York when they will give the first Eastern production of "A Blue Grass Widow." They will reach San Francisco late in January.

Jennifer Veaman is headed for San Francisco.

Harry Monroe of the Monte Carlo Theater, Kensington, is in town.

Irene Franklin, cornetist, met with a flattering reception at the Clusters.
Weston and Herbert's Vaudeville report a big business down the line.

Mlle. Lira, sensational dancer—now at Minneapolis—will play in this city during the holidays.

Helen Braddock, a promising young actress, has just returned from a successful tour in New York this is resting in this city.

Prof. and Mme. Walther play the "Vienna Buffet" in Los Angeles for a short engagement before returning to this city.

The Healy Sisters, native daughters, are meeting with much success with their "shilling" Two Married Men" Company.

W. G. Stevenson of Victoria is in town. He has booked quite a number of acts. Archie Levy's Agency is his headquarters.

Emma Bell, Barton & Cortaine, Lillian Arnold and the McNeill are these new faces at the Orpheum, Randburg next week.

Honolulu is to have another vaudeville theater. A syndicate is now being formed. James F. Post will be at the managerial head.

Dame rumor says: A new theater will be erected in Sacramento to be devoted entirely to vaudeville. Oakland contemplates a similar move.

Work has been begun upon the construction of Sullivan and Krause's new Schley Theater on Thirty-fourth street near Broadway, New York. It is expected that the house will be opened in December.

The Savoy at Victoria, B. C., will have two Franco favorites on next week's bill—A. Vargas and Mattie Nichols. Lillian Ralston opens an engagement at the Delmonico in the same city Monday night.

Kitty Loftus, who was brought over from Europe with a great flourish of trumpets and opened on the New York roof did not succeed. Miss Loftus is a clever little soubrette and properly placed will do well. But she is of class in this country as a singing soubrette.

Harry Howard writes from Chicago that he will open here October 8th, with the entire Orpheum circuit to follow. He says: "Returning East I opened at the Pleasure Palace, New York City, December 4th, with the Proctor circuit to follow. I have added to my act two riding dogs and a riding baboon."

Alicia Saunders goes to Australia under a twenty-six week contract.

Irene Wellington opens at the Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, the 25th. Josephine Gasman and her picnincs play "Australia" in the near future.

Manager Bem of the Louvre, Juneau, Alaska, is in town combining business with pleasure.

The Howard Bros., banjoists and native sons, are meeting with much success on their Eastern tour.

May Carlton, formerly of the Carlton Street Theater, has been appointed in the profession, died at Bakersfield Aug. 19.

Daruns and Breen, the California Club Jugglers, are playing the Keith Circuit. They go to Europe in the spring.

Jim Richmond, "the man with the green gloves," has bookings for California, but as usual the bug hit East.

Ola Hayden, Hayden and Hetherington, Billie Dobson, the Morrells, and Baker and Doyle are all playing the "Savoy Circuit."

Archie Levy has booked the four Silvias, the Winters, Muma, Company, Geo. Lee, Kenton and Ryan, Seymour and Moll, Phil Sherman and John Ryan with Main's Circus for the balance of the season.

LONDON BUDGET

Special Correspondence

LONDON, Sept. 10th.—"The Ghetto" was given its initial production at the Comedy theater last night and the universal opinion seems to be that it is "not so good nor so bad." The "ghetto" protests most vigorously against wrongs to the Jewish classes, and in some respects this feature might have been "tuned down" to advantage, since many of the injustices delineated have been corrected years ago. However, the immense audience seemed to approve of the play, so it might be called a success here.

Arrangements had all been made to give the initial performance on Friday night, but it was postponed to Saturday, at the request of the Prince of Wales, who, with the Princess, was present, as was also Prince Charles and other notables.

Mrs. Potter received praise of a most enthusiastic kind, and her difficult part was cleverly handled. The general impression of the critics is that she was never seen to better advantage. Charles Fernald was not in the cast, neither was Helen Macbeth. Mr. Bellew had a role that was of minor importance and gave him little acting, but a long speech or two.

A NEW YORKER.

LONDON NOTES

May Buckley, whose success in the "First Born" at the Alcazar is well remembered, has been engaged by George Edwards for the production of "San Toy," and will probably remain in London the entire season. All her friends are delighted at her success.

Edna Aug, who went to London under a contract with the late Mr. Daly, after making a failure on the vaudeville stage, had a narrow escape from death a few days ago. She was suffering with neuralgia, and, searching for something to relieve her, took a dose of cocaine by mistake. Her error was discovered in time to save her life, but the physicians summoned found it exceedingly difficult to restore her to consciousness.

The Tallipians have made a decided hit with the London public, although they have been scored wassailingly by the critics. The pit and gallery, however, like them and are playing to big houses.

Williamson and Mangrove, the Australian managers, who also have theatrical interests in London, have dissolved all partnerships. What will be done with their business has not been announced.

Miss Dorothy Morton, who recently abandoned John R. Rogers and accepted another manager in the person of Mr. Winderfield, has now parted with that gentleman. Winderfield has sailed for America and Miss Morton remains in London.

The royalties paid by the various stock companies for old plays like "The Wife," "The Charity Ball," "Men and Women," and "Too Much A Lady," totalled to over $25,000 this season. David Belasco, whose plays are much in demand, is said to have a revenue of over $15,000 a year, a tidy bit for plays that have served their regular course. A stock company in Philadelphia paid $750 for one week's use of "A Enemy to the King," and nearly $1,200 for the use of "The Prisoner of Zenda" for one week.

As Things Appear

Geo. Webster doing villain's on the Alcazar stage—playing probably three weeks out of five—Billy Brady, headquarters in New York, flying around almost anywhere, citizen of the world, rich and getting richer, and one of the shrewdest theatrical managers in America. This brief recital tells of the changed conditions and the standing of one-time partners.

After Brady graduated from Senator Fair's narrow gauge coast line as all-around hustler, he and Webster struck up a partnership, formed a company, and toured the Pacific Coast, winding up by playing a most successful engagement in Los Angeles at the big barn of a Pavilion. They crowded the house with "Rosedale," "Streets of New York," "She," "Under the Gas Light," and other like productions. Webster did the villains until he got tired of them, then he took a turn at the hero parts. Brady did "any old part," his versatility coming in handy on many occasions. Laura Bigger and Brady's first wife were popular and hard-worked members of the company. The great success of this and a following engagement in Los Angeles gave Brady a little money and more confidence in himself. (I must say, though, that he never lacked very much of that quality) and he plunged and speculated, and had one success after another, until to-day he is one of the six or seven big men of the business. What became of Webster's share of this "start" money I do not know, but in all likelihood it was a case of one man bound to succeed and another not—Brady won out while Webster missed his chance.

The Dailey Company at Sacramento last week played "Hamlet"; rather a surprising thing at first sight when one considers that it was produced at the same prices the company has been charging in its tour of the interior towns of the coast. Darrel Vinton was the Hamlet. The writer well remembers several years ago, Vinton's first attempt at this character in the Burbank Theater, Los Angeles. Old theater-goers were amazed at the grasp and the intelligent purpose of this daring young man's characterization. It is not saying too much to declare that Vinton's Hamlet was for two acts one of the most intelligent and interesting presentations that could be asked for. The promise of his first two acts unfortunately did not develop in the rest of the play, but it is safe to assert that genius out of the ordinary is somewhat latent in the make-up of Darrel Vinton.

"My Son Dan" is the title of a new rural drama which will go on the road this season under the management of Jos. C. Briel, of Briel & Falk. The play will be given an elaborate production, with good scenic effects.

Henry Irving's Genius

The stronger and more distinct his personality, whether agreeably so or not, the more certain is an actor's success. Much of Henry Irving's progress is unquestionably due to his remarkable individuality, writes J. Forbes Robertson. I would not by this be understood to depreciate his talent, for I recognize in him something even greater than talent—a real genius.

But genius alone would not have placed him where he is to-day, foremost in the ranks of English actors. His magnetic personality and artistic temperament have been powerful allies.

Coming at the time when the English stage most needed him, when Puepl's glory was on the wane, Irving has done more for it than many realize. With his advent in the dramatic world the stage was raised to a standard it had never before attained.

I grant that we had excellent actors before him—Barry Sullivan, Charles Keen, Vandenhoff, Brook, and I could name a score. It remained for Irving, whose artistic nature demanded artistic surroundings, to give a thoroughly harmonious production, one in which the star did not predominate and in which the acting of minor roles was not synonymous with mediocrity. His is a thoroughly artistic temperament and one which, while its individuality is never lost, merges itself completely in the character impersonated.

Some argue that in his acting Irving is always Irving. True, his strong personality is never lost sight of; but that very personality is one of the greatest charms of his work.

Irving's position on the stage, not in England alone, but everywhere, is absolutely unique.

I do not say he is the greatest actor living—that is a statement too general to make of any man; I do contend, however, that in certain roles Irving cannot be approached. As Charles I, Louis XI, Matthias in "The Bells," and as the villain in "The Lyons Mail," Irving surpasses everyone. His impersonations of these characters are marvelous.

As a man Irving ranks equally high. He is a generous paymaster, an excellent manager, and, above all, a true, noble friend.

James R's Son

Old-time theatrical managers and pioneers of San Francisco well remember James R. Keene, the greatest plunger and speculator ever known in the United States. He won and lost half a dozen fortunes of several millions each, and is now enjoying his last one. His reputation first started in California, likewise his first fortune. Like many rich and indolent fathers, he has a son, and that son, Foxhall, is well known throughout the East and England as polo expert, amateur steeple-chaser, yachtling man and amateur actor. Since the millionaire colony of Newporters have become enthused over dramatic presentations as a result of the advent of his highness Lord Yarmouth, lately much advertised in England as about to adopt the stage, Foxhall Keene has been one of the most enthusiastic supporters of the idea. The other day, however, he lost several degrees of his enthusiasm and came very near giving the noble lord a touch of heroic treatment that he probably learned from the land that first placed his father on the road to wealth.

It appears that Yarmouth, who is a strict disciplinarian and whose brusque manners in conducting rehearsals have led to several resignations in the cast and considerable feeling, found on Monday night, when the rehearsal began, that several cottagers were in the theater. The Earl was annoyed by their presence. He first approached the governor of the Casino, requesting him to leave. The governor refused with some heat. Soon afterward Foxhall Keene entered with two ladies. The Earl strode up to him and peremptorily commanded that he leave the place with his companions. Keene lost his temper and inquiry who the Earl was that he should put on such airs. Both grew much excited and blows were imminent when the male members of the cast interfered and the incident closed by Keene withdrawing.
American Actors in London

BY EDWARD E. MORTON of the London Referee

It may seem, as the English adage is, like "carrying coals to Newcastle"—or pork to Chicago, as you might say—to write in an American journal of American actors in London. But although the actor, outside of his own country, remains unhomely, his experiences before whom he appears are no longer the same. To begin with, they are free from the prepossessions which favor an actor among his own people. For it is not with the player, as it is with the prophet, who is "not without honor, save in his own country."

The judgment pronounced upon Madame Sarah Bernhardt and Signora Duse by their compatriots has been universally confirmed. In the case of less distinguished performers, the judgment has sometimes been reversed, so to say, upon appeal to another court. For example, Monsieur Monnet Sully, the famous tragedian of the Comédie Francaise, holds a more elevated position in public esteem in France than in England.

Monsieur Franciscus Sarcey, the eminent French critic, once wasted not a little time in trying to persuade me of my misconception of the genius of that most accomplished, most unspoiled actor, who has all the best qualities that an actor can acquire, but has not that one touch of nature which makes the whole world kina with the two great actors Sarcey had been taught by, Mr. J. L. Tooie was not a success when he visited America. Why? The question is as easy to answer as it is to ask. Mr. Tooie was not a success because the talent of the first cock-eyed comedian of his day was purely local—not extensive, but peculiar. On the other hand, Mr. E. S. Willard, who has a larger talent than any one of his contemporaries, is certainly not less appreciated in America than in his native country. More so, perhaps; for Mr. Willard has always neglected those social arts so assiduously cultivated by some of our leading actors, who mistake advertisement for fame. Mr. Beelholn Tree, who is one of our rising managers—and leading actor in his own theater—failed to please the American critics because he gives more attention to the little details in the composition of a part than he does to the grand effects. The truth is that our managers have lost the sense of artistic proportion.

The performances by the several American companies now in London are remarkable, above everything else, for the perfection of ensemble. In some instances they are remarkable for nothing else in particular; but that is something. I have no desire to underrate the talents of the American actors now in London, but I make bold to say that, given the same opportunities, our actors could render just as good an account of themselves. An indifferent American play performed by a mediocre American company—with that sense of coöperation which is the least impressive of stage effects—may be more entertaining than a better piece given by a company of more talented actors playing every one for his own hand.

At the height of writing, Mr. Charles Frohman, who is already as well known in this country as he is in America, is making preparations for an experiment which will be watched with deep interest by every English actor interested in the drama. Mr. Frohman has become manager of the Duke of York's theater, and it is his intention to form a stock company recruited from the best theaters in London. With a company of this excellence actors can do under a more rigorous system than that which obtains at theaters under the direction of our leading actors. Mr. Frohman has already shown us what he and his companies are capable of doing, for he has the controlling power of not a few of the theatrical enterprises which have filled our theaters—to the exclusion of native talent—during the past season. Nothing—nothing short of the failure of the experiment at the Duke of York's theater—will convince me that the English actor, properly used, is less accomplished than the American who has the advantage for the moment of being better prepared for his work than our own young people who are simply left to pick up their business as best they can.

Our own managers, I believe, are mistaken in looking constantly to the American stage for new talent. At our leading theater Sir Henry Irving has introduced two or three Americans into his company; at the S. vv. we have two American actors in leading parts, and it is significant that the only actress who has established a reputation in London of late years is the American, Miss Fay Davis, who has now been promoted to the position of leading actress at the St. James' Theatre. I am confident that we do not want for native talent; the dire necessity of our stage is managers to direct and perfect that talent. Strange that a theatrical manager should come from America to demonstrate that fact!

The American dramatist who works as I have indicated under conditions more favorable to his art than ours, is also beginning to assert himself on the London stage. Of the trumpery pieces which American used to send us in return for our best, we do not get so much as we did. "Miss Francis of Yale," by Michael Morton, and "What Happened to Jones," by Mr. George Broderhurst, are perhaps the best of the bunch we have had this year, though it is true too that Jones, Mr. Charles Hoyt's "Stranger in New York" has been promptly dismissed, though the piece, which is no worse, if not better, than many of our native productions of the same character, was in the spirit of the acting, and it introduced to the London stage some performers who would have made their mark in a less stupid piece. The reckless gaiety of the company, I believe, would have carried it off if we had not already been satisfied with plays of the kind. That the talent of an individual performer is not likely to be overlooked when all are working well; several is not required of our actors and actresses, yet Mr. Harry Conover, without overdoing it, was promptly singled out by the audience as an original with a real comic talent. Whistling is an accomplishment which finds favor on our stage, and cannot, I think, be said of ours. Although the whistler in "A Stranger in New York" perhaps excelled all others we have ever heard in this humble art, he had a formidable rival who had the advantage of being heard first in "The Belle of New York," a musical comedy" presented at the Shaftesbury Theatre in London in the form and style in which it had been played at the New York Casino.

The success of "The Belle of New York" is again a success of ensemble. It is the manner in which it is played rather than the matter of it that has made it the success of the London season. No American company has been more fortunate in its choice of comedies, and the New York audience, especially Miss Edna May, who has not only pleased the public, and the critics as well, but has also received the compliments of an insane personage which the company has discovered for the petit theatre. But it is not the principals who have made the fortune of "The Belle of New York" for the unknown members of the company have contributed not a little to the general efficiency of the performance. The intelligence, the animation of the chorus—these things have helped as much as anything else. A pretty face and a good figure are as much as we expect from a chorus girl, but the Casino girls have other charms. They have the double du corps, and that spyle of devilry is one thing wanting in our English chorus girls. The chief performers, too, have a way of addressing themselves, not to the audience, but to their work, which is a very agreeable change for us. The intimacy which exists nowadays between a popular performer and the public is something that gives me a little air of "Take it for-granted-you-will-be glad-to-see-me" about our favorites when they appear on the stage.

The best acting that we have seen by an American company; the best acting we have had in London since Mr. Augustin Daly's company of comedians were here in their prime—is the performance of "Sue" by the pick of the actors and actresses drafted from the companies engaged in "The Heart of Maryland" and "The Right of Richard Johnson." The play, in the authorship of which Mr. Bret Harte is associated with Mr. Edward Pembleton, is but a poor thing, and I hope I may not be doing injustice to the authors by taking part in "Sue" was somewhat of a surprise. Here we have actors who are not themselves but the characters they represent. Our public, however, has become accustomed to look for the excellence of acting in the management of her voice—over which she has had no control—a musician has over his instrument—and her grace of what the Germans call plastik. The scene in which the lonely young wife is overcome by the charms of the Adonis of the stage was a piece of acting which will linger inefaceably in the mind of the playgoer.

Maybe, Some Day

Oh, will the "cook" song ever die? How tired we are of hearing the husky "honey's" who are now on every hand appearing, each wafting lines of melody. The songs that are popular are the buxom "Shady." Who dyes are and "Shady."—Amusing through with "rag-time" songs, such as "Who's handsome girl, but they have the double du corps, and that spyle of devilry is one thing wanting in our English chorus girls. The chief performers, too, have a way of addressing themselves, not to the audience, but to their work, which is a very agreeable change for us. The intimacy which exists nowadays between a popular performer and the public is something that gives me a little air of "Take it for-granted-you-will-be glad-to-see-me" about our favorites when they appear on the stage. THE MISSING CUE

The play goes bravely on, and all so smoothly fine; The comments are "superb," "Immensely" and "quite divine." At length a contretemps, and there is much ado, Because, oh, hapless fate! There is a missing cue.

Ah! well, how oft in life The play goes bravely on, And Fortune smiles supreme. All gloomy thoughts are gone: Bright pleasures lead the way, And visions ope anew, When, with a sudden flood, Atlas: a missing cue!

"You see you broker sad, Bereft of all his joy; Where now the rainful fine, Where now the jolly boy? No explanations smooth To anxious friends are due. For everybody knows There was a missing cue!"

—Mark Sheridan.

Making Actors.

A ccording to the thinking of the great bard, "Some are born great; some achieve greatness; some have greatness thrust upon them." It is much the same way with actors, but there is no royal road to greatness on the stage. When Edwin Booth in his youth and beauty burst upon the stage of New York with an undoubted talent and bearing a great name and appearing to be a full-fledged actor, no one thought or cared for the drudgery he had been through when a boy as a hailer to a father of bad habits, and as a young man trying to live as a stock actor in California, playing in mining camps and doing his own washing, and doing badly as an actor. Joseph Jefferson was brought on the stage as a little child in a sack by old Jim Crow Rice and drugged for thirty years before he could accumulate wealth. It was not so very long ago that he was in a stock company and the elder Soberan, then an almost unknown actor, in the same company so overshadowed Mr. Jefferson in "Our American Cousin" that he had to become a star and quit stock acting, and his fortune came through "Rip Van Winkle," his matchless masterpiece later on. Upon the paint frames of the present St. Charles theater there is an old stone— or was it the great corned beef played in that house last—with which Mr. Jefferson used to pulverize paint when he was a youth and used to help paint scenery to add to his eight dollars per week salary as an actor. Mr. J. H. McVicker, who afterward became rich and built theaters in Chicago, was a member of the same old Sol Smith company at the same salary, and when he was here on a visit a few years ago, shortly before he died, he told a Graphic writer that he used to set type in the Picayune office at odd hours in the day time to earn a little more money than he could earn as an actor. The great Edwin Forrest had a rough road as a boy, and used to tumble in a circus, black up or do anything, and when he got a chance to play young Norval at a theater in New York City he thought he was an actor years afterwards the puppy though, so. Men on the stage to-day, the few who really know what acting is, like James O'Neill, Louis James, John Drew, Frederick Warde, Otis Skinner, E. M. Holland, E. H. Sothern. Richard Mansfield, Nat Goodwin and a few others who can be called actors, began at the bottom and have worked hard for their places. In a talk with Thos. J. Keogh, a comedian of versatility and genuine merit, with whom the St. Charles Theater Company, he told how he became an actor. He was always fond of music and when a boy he joined a show. It was the "Little Nugget" destined to launch storm in the west. He could tell some, and was engaged to play second violin in the orchestra and an alto horn in the band on parade. He was also made property man, which is not an easy task with companies that played in halls and all sorts of places and had to hunt stuff quick to use on the stage. Then he became an actor and played the part of the Chinaman. With this promotion was thrust upon him the care of the donkey that was used in the play. Sometimes the halls would be a mile or two away from the depots. It was his business to get the donkey to the theater while other actors would ride in the bus. The donkey hesitated about wetting his feet and when the roads were muddy there was trouble. "Many a time," says Keogh, "that blamed jackass would sit down at the edge of a mud puddle and none of my coaxing, pulling or beating would make him walk. I used to cry like a baby at this and the jackass would braze. I was seventeen years old, and I acted and jackassed with "The Little Nugget" company for two years and got five dollars per week." Mr. Keogh also remembers that he had more money at the end of the season than he has sometimes had after a season in which he received three times as much for single performances as he did then for one week's work. But it was the experience and subsequent engagements that made him the fine and useful actor that he is now. Genius is helpful; but in acting as in music and painting and sculpture, it is hard work that makes the perfect artist. This is how actors are made: Western Graphic.

Lillian’s New Gowns.

Miss Russell at Weber & Field’s will wear four, possibly five, gowns, and the first one I will describe. It is of milk-white crepe de chine, cut in the long, straight lines that are so becoming, finished at the foot with fringe and trimmed with heavy appliqués of white lace. Especially chic and fetching is the bodice garniture of the lace, which has a lovely and quite indescribable plastron effect. Miss Russell’s beautiful arms will be artfully shown through long transparent sleeves of the rich lace, which will fall a la Leslie Carter, almost to her finger tips. A knot of baby blue velvet will nestle against Miss Russell’s shoulder, for, of course, the public would resent a Lillian Russell gown that didn’t have a touch of blue.

A red picture hat will complete the costume, and Miss Russell confided to me in a nervous whisper, the fact that she will wear it over an array of starting red undergarments.

At the question the prima donna’s little dog, who had been quietly dozing in my lap, barked reprovingly and made a snap at my aqualine nose, and Miss Russell’s only reply was a reproachful glance.

In the second act, Miss Russell, as Queen of Night, will wear a gauzy white gown, all starred with tiny silver spangles. In this glittering costume she will serenade her sweetheart. A girl serenader is bound to be an interesting novelty, and the setting which the Weber-Fields have provided for the act is entrancingly lovely. Miss Russell will sing a specially written serenade, which she declares, is as fine musically and as catchy as any solo she has ever had. She stands in the curve of a crescent moon, accompanying herself upon a white and gold mandolin, while the handsomest of the chorus are grouped around, dressed as stars.

I won’t describe the Diana costume in which she will go bear hunting in the next act nor the opera dress she wears at the finale. They are both all that taste could devise and money buy, and you’re sure to be charmed when you see them.—A Woman of the World in Sunday Telegraph.

“That’s the best I can do for you,” said the theatrical manager. “You’ve been idle all season so far; now will you stay idle the rest of the season, or take this small part?” “I’ll take it,” said Lowe Comedy; “in this case a small role is better than a whole loaf.”

GERTRUDE FOSTER
Maggie Moore Home Again.

Maggie Moore is once more among the scenes of her early childhood and she will be seen again in the play which brought her fame and fortune twenty years ago at the old California Theater in this city. "Struck Oil" was perhaps the best money maker in Maggie's repertoire and hundreds of San Franciscans will remember her success here as a young and vivacious actress. She is not yet fifty and could easily be taken for thirty, so well has she preserved her health.

Miss Moore and her company, which is managed by H. R. Roberts, probably the best liked actor in Australia, arrived here last week from the colonies, after a three years' tour of Australia and New Zealand. Her present company was organized more than three years ago, and its repertory embraced the following: Hans the Boatman, Struck Oil, Silence of Dean Maitland, The Prodigal Father, Mrs. Quinn's Twins, Forty-Nine, Golden Giant, David Garrick, Brand of Cain and about twenty other pieces. The personnel of the company is as follows: H. R. Roberts, leading man and manager; Maggie Moore, leading lady; Percy Ward, treasurer; Herbert Ashton, H. J. Townsend, Alex Cochrane, Fred Emerson, Clarence Lyndon, Joseph Finney, Fred Thompson, Miss Madge Cochrane, Miss Osgood Moore, Miss Lily Branscomb, Miss Ethel Bathford, little Gladys Bathford and Miss Gracie Reihm.

Miss Reihm is a San Francisco girl. She went to Australia a few years ago, and could not resist the many qualities and charms of Mr. Fred Emerson, so she married him. Miss Reihm will be seen to advantage in some of the company's plays. Manager Roberts says the company had great success throughout Australia, especially with the American play, The Prodigal Father, and the new piece, The Silence of Dean Maitland, dramatized from the novel by Louis Scott. From Melbourne the company played to Adelaide, thence to Western Australia, Coolgardie mining regions, Sydney, Brisbane, Charter's Tower and thence to New Zealand, where eight months were spent in playing to all the principal towns. On the way to this city a four weeks' engagement was played at the Opera House in Honolulu, and crowded houses were the rule. Manager Roberts has every reason to believe that his excellent company will repeat its Australian successes on this coast. He is now arranging his tour. After playing the coast cities, he will go East, thence to England and thence to South Africa, thence to Australia. The tour will last about two years.

Maggie Moore is as young looking and as sprightly as ever, and the Australian press declares that her performances are better now than ever before. She has been slightly indisposed since her arrival, on account of contracting a severe cold on the voyage from Honolulu.

Tragedy on the Stage

Julia Morrison, leading lady of the "Mr. Plaster of Paris" farce comedy company, shot and killed Frank Ledien, stage manager and leading man of the company at Chattanooga, Tenn., September 22, on the stage at the City Opera-house. Trouble had existed between Leiden and Miss Morrison, and she shopped him. They quarreled over the former's alleged bad acting. Leideu accusing her of being an amateur. The woman claims that Leiden repeatedly insulted her, that he had made improper proposals to her, and in self-defense she shot him. The verdict of the Coroner's jury was to the effect that the murder was premeditated and wholly unjustifiable. The woman claims to be from New Orleans, and a man with the company, named James, she claims as her husband. James has been arrested as the instigator of the crime.

Mrs. Laughton will begin her American tour January 15, at the Garden theater, New York, in Sydney Grundy's "The Degenerates," now being played at the Haymarket in London. She will then go to Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Cincinnati, etc.

New Laws as to Theaters

The new building code, as provided by the terms of the New York charter, establishes some regulations as to theaters which will make more difficult hereafter the construction of all places of amusement in New York, though it does not directly affect buildings now in use for theatrical purposes. What is known as the theatrical clause is Section 109, and it will certainly stimulate the curiosity and arouse the repudiation of the promoters and theater-builders who arise in New York from time to time and give their views, plans and projects the advantage of an enlarged publicity which does not always culminate in the construction of a theater as proposed.

The provisions of the new theater clause of the building code will make more difficult hereafter and also very much more expensive the construction of theaters, and the regulations prescribed for safety do not stop at the structure of the building itself, but include changes in the interior arrangements of the various houses, some of them involving additional expense. The foot-lights—so important in the construction of a play-house—must, in addition to the wire network, be protected with a wire guard and chain, placed not less than two feet distant from the foot-lights, and the trough containing the foot-lights shall be formed of and surrounded by fire-proof materials, and all stage lights must have wire guards or screens of not less than ten inches in diameter, so constructed that any material in contact therewith shall be out of reach of the flames, and must be soldered to the fixtures in all cases.

Theater fires, never frequent in New York, have been rarer than ever recently, in consequence of the improvements in the rule of theater building, and the Fire Department regulations which provide for detail of one fireman to each theater during the whole period of the performance. This detailed fireman is constantly on the spot, and an alarm of fire, (such alarm coming usually from the stage) can be met therefore promptly by a uniformed member of the force trained in the extinguishment of fires. As a further measure of security to theater patrons in New York, the building code continues in force the provision requiring a diagram or plan of each tier, gallery or floor showing distinctly the exits and the regulations occupying a space not less than fifteen square inches to be printed in black lines in a legible manner on the program of the performance, and every theater must have every letter on each side of the word "Exit" in legible letters, not less than eight inches high.—New York Sun.

We call attention to the new and artistic studio of Mr. Louis Thore, 865 Market St., Phelan Building.

Mark you, then, aumereline
Who passeth thro' the crowd;
Gaze on the parper, be whom care
Has clothed as with a shroud!
Grim poverty for one, and gold
And splendor of rank untold;
A private box for him behold,
A back seat 'tischer knows!
Ah, soon the curtain's shadowy fall,
The mimic scene is o'er;
A quick departure for us all,
To laugh, to sigh, no more!
And yet one solace comes to cheer,
In spite of Life's hard knocks;
There needs must be another sphere
To equalize Fate's difference here:
Heav'n has no private box!

“General Gamma” is the title decided upon for De Wolf Hopper’s new opera. The music is by John Philip Sousa, the book by Charles Klein, and the lyrics by Grant Stewart.

Australian Split-up

It is now understood that the well-known firm of theatrical man-agers, Williamson & Musgrove, who have for many years controlled the amusement situation in Australia, have settled their relations. Mr. Williamson retains the Australian end of the business, and Mr. Mougrive is operating by himself in London.

Just what were the differences which led to the separation is not known. But it is a fact that all intents and purposes the severance has been in operation for considerably more than a year.

Indeed, as far back as the time of producing “The Belle of New York” in England, Mr. Musgrove is alleged to have received a communication from Williamson directing him not to use the firm name, and particularly not to employ it when incurring obligations.

The split between Jimmy Williamson and George Musgrove is a really very important matter in theatrical life. The combination was known as one of the most responsible, daring and energetic managements in the world.

Both men have grown rich by their Australian operations, and there was some surprise expressed when Musgrove came to America and then went on to London to transact business on his own account. There was no suspicion at that period, however, of anything like a rupture in the relations of the old partners.

Gustavo Salvini, the son of the eminent Italian tragedian, Tomasso Salvini, will, according to present plans, make a starring tour of America next year. It will begin early in the autumn and will cover only the principal cities. The repertory will include “Othello,” “The Outlaw,” and “Saul.” Tomasso Salvini is considering a proposition to accompany his son, but has not determined whether he will do so or not. Young Salvini is about thirty years old and has appeared with the elder Salvini in several starring tours of his native country. His greatest asset is considered to be Jago, which he has acted to his father’s Othello.

Emperor William last week, anent the recent singing tournament at Cassel and German singing generally, said it was too artificial and too little melodious. He added that the German-American singing societies did this better, and that the “Volklied” (national hymn) ought to be more cultivated.

Short Stories

Walter Campbell, the well-known church choir leader and singer, once had a narrow escape from becoming a negro minstrel. During the old days, when minstrelsy held sway in San Francisco, and Billy Birch was one of the King pins of black face, he and Campbell were bosom friends, the latter having a pretty taste for blacking up and doing a turn with the bones.

At one time he was so enthusiastic over the subject that Birch had almost completed arrangements for launching him into public notice. Birch always deplored the fact that Campbell backed out at the last minute and thus was left to the stage an undoubtedly clever entertainer.

Mrs. Horace Ewing sustained an almost irreparable loss in the Baldwin fire. Her brother, Bob Eberle, manager of “Secret Service,” brought from New York a case of manuscripts and “character rags” belonging to the lady and they were destroyed by the flames. A peculiar incident was the finding in the debris a few days ago of a photo of Mr. Eberle, only slightly burned around the edges. The picture was in his room on the second floor, and the marvel is that it was not entirely consumed.

From mountain, beach and countryside,
From o'er the raging main,
In long procession freely comes
The actor's varied train.
Their summer o'er, they wait at will,
Prepared to do their part.
To bring a smile to sorrow's face,
A sight from Feeling's heart.

Content to give one in their turn,
They only ask a show.
They stand all life's epitome,
A world in embryos.
No better moral taught than theirs.
That, while he has his day
The prudent man will always mix
With work a little play.

There has been little in the way of thrilling situations, where these could be brought about by mechanical effects, that has not been already utilized by writers of melodrama, but it would seem the possibilities in such directions are not yet entirely exhausted. A news item the other day told of a man who was cleaning a beer vat in a big Jersey brewery, when through some inadvertence the big knives which formed part of the tub's melting machinery began to move, and started a death race, it being impossible for the cleaner to get out while the murderous blades were in motion. Fortunately his cries at last brought help, and he was rescued more dead than alive.

The situation is rich in applications, and might somehow be especially worked into a modernized edition of some temperance play, say "Ten Nights in a Bar Room." • • •

A Washington paper tries to take composers and brass bands to task by asserting that it is impudent charlatanism for them to attempt to realize by any combination of horns, drums, etc., what the programs announce as "descriptive" pieces, storms, battles or races, for instance, and that the public should be assumed to know better than to be capable of being taken in by like pretenses. While no blame is likely to be brought about in the habits of program-makers by discussion of the subject, acceptance of the "descriptive" musical piece certainly does not require a greater stretch of imagination than do many dramatic compositions. To what extent has the sense of congruity been shocked at times by six miserable supers being passed off for an immense army, a couple of wooden goblets doing duty for a magnificent bouquet or a woman weighing possibly two hundred pounds wanting to pass muster as a fairy? These are only a few cases out of many where if the composer or bandmaster desires to keep his "descriptive" compositions in countenance, he has not far to seek.

That Shakespeare was a complete student of the human heart almost every line in his work shows. Thus when he put it on record that we know what we are but know not what we may be, he was merely indulging, in one of those reflections that universal every-day experience corroborates. Making the matter personal, however, and bringing an illustration of the truth, he himself has recently given in Chicago a Yiddish version of "Hamlet" in which the usual melancholy Dane is a young rabbi, who comes home to find his father has been murdered. The scene is cast in Poland in modern times. There is a fight fistic between Hamlet and his uncle, and the play scene is taken out. Hamlet is married to Ophelia by the mystic "black marriage" of the ancient Jews when he is dead and about to be buried. Then Hamlet goes mad, jumps into the grave and dies.

Paul Potter, known as a dramatist more because of the success of his stage version of Triby than from any of his other contributions to the stage, is reported to have decided to give up all stage work, finding it far from remunerative. After the great success of Triby, Potter tried the Conquerors on the New York public, but its salacious details failed to bring it success. Later on, various other plays were launched, but met with poor success.

Now Mr. Potter is going to be the foreign news editor of the New York Herald, and will devote himself exclusively to the duties of that post in the future. His action will cause many who are already rather skeptical on the subject of the royal road open to playwrights, to be still more skeptical as to the possibility of a life to writing plays, and as one scribbler says, "if there is one of the fortunate men who has mastered the trick of producing the sort of material the public apparently wishes to procure, a cheap extra contribution to the stage, and made the stupendous profits that he was popularly credited with on that far play, decides he can do better in another place it is not to be wondered that it would give pause to the rising generation of dramatists." • • •

The Hoyt-McKee Company that went to Australia with "A Stranger in New York" and a "Trip to Chinatown" has made a big hit in every town in the Colonies where the company played. A letter from a member says that they played to packed houses everywhere in Melbourne, prices ranging from one to five shillings. The engagement in Melbourne lasted eight weeks, alternating with the Stranger and a Trip. Helen Merrill, a Tivoli favorite, is a member of the company. Her success has been complete. The managers released Madeline Lack and Robert Dunbar and they are coming home.

Modjeska's First American Appearance.

It is not news that Modjeska made her first American appearance in this city at the old California Theater, but now that she is appearing here, it may be interesting to recall the incident of her debut. It was through Barton Hill and John McCullough that the great Polish actress made her first appearance here. Barton Hill tells the story himself:

"It was about twenty years ago when John said to me: 'I am going to Menlo Park to stay with some friends, for I am sick. Yet I have made an appointment with Lady to see her act this afternoon. I can't do it; I'm sick. Now, I wish you would go to her, make my apologies, hear her recite and give me your opinion.' I protested that I must go to see it. Bobby could hear her if he thought so, and he replied: 'Oh, if it's necessary I'll give you a physician's certificate that I'm ill.' The lady came that afternoon, accompanied by a friend who was teaching English, and she and I were in the last scene from 'Ariodice Lecouvreur.' I listened attentively and praised her earnestly when she had finished. I did not tell her just what I thought of her, for fear I would raise her hopes too high. John came home that night and said in his brusque way: 'Well, did you see her?' 'Yes,' I answered. 'What did you think of her?' Then I was enthusiastic. 'She is a revelation, a wonder. I am more than surprised, I am astonished.' Then John was interested. 'Eh!' he said. 'Sorry I didn't hear her. Suppose she would come again?' 'If she did,' I replied jestingly, 'you probably would be sick.'

"They were both deeply interested in each other. McCullough was even more pleased than I. He grabbed her by the hand and said: 'You may have an engagement for as long as you wish.' "Every one knows the rest. Mme. Helen Modjeska had her debut, and I have always claimed the honor of being her first American audience." • • •

Here is a copy of the letter written by Modjeska begging for the opportunity which McCullough gave her.

Mr. John McCullough—Dear Sir—Par don the liberty I take in addressing you, but being a stranger here, I know of no other way of approaching you.

I have been introduced to you, but do not know whether you remember me or not. I come from Europe this year, and have just met you at the Occidental Hotel. You were so kind as to offer to play Hamlet with me, but I could not decide to appear in a foreign language and determined to learn English. Now I am ready to go on the American stage and knowing you to be so obliging and be ing quite alone in this wide foreign world I turn to you for advice. Please let me know when and where I can meet you.

I know you are very much engaged, but perhaps you can find some time give to me, an artist and a stranger.

Yours very truly,
Helen ROZENTZ,
335 [illegible]. (Modjeska.)

Of a Personal Nature

John F. Harley is now a partner of R. B. Mays in the management of the Lyceum at Denver.

President Morris Meyerfeld, Jr., of the Orpheum circuit and Charles Schimpf of the local Orpheum have been in the East and on a visit.

The Earl of Yarmouth has concluded to become a professional, and Charles Frohman has "arranged" for his New York debut, which will take place presently.

Robert White will be treasurer of the California Theater this season, and a more successful man could not have been secured. Management as usual is to be congratulated on securing his services.

Edgar Stillman Kelly whose first musical importance dates from his successful incidental music for Macbeth, years ago in this city, is composing the choral music for the dramatic setting of "Ben Hur" and he promises to excel all his previous efforts.

"The Ghetto" does not seem to have pleased London, and Mrs. Potter and Mr. Belclow are re-writing the last act. Chester Bailey Fernahl, who adapted it has been disclaiming responsibility for the failure, saying the piece was altered by Mr. Belclow.

Miss Charlotte Thompson, the clever author of that exceptionally clever hit, "Only the Master Shall Blame," is in receipt of a letter from Florence Roberts stating that the story of the little play has already drifted East, and as a writer to an Eastern magazine has written, it is regarded in many minds as the finest thing of the kind yet produced.

J. Frazer Crosby has just signed a contract with Harry Corson Clarke, by the terms of which he will play Richard Heatherly in "What Happened to Jones," and late in the season will originate the leading juvenile role in Mr. Clarke's new comedy, "What Did Tompkin's Do?" The stage has known Mr. Crosby for but one season that of 1898-99, during which he appeared in vaudeville. Prior to that he devoted his entire time and energy to the manifold duties that the "smart set" imposes upon its members. He became noted as a huskman in the Long Island Hunting set; won a reputation as a golf player with the Oakland Golf Club, and as a typical Richard-Harding Davis young man he is very popular in the principal New York clubs.

While Salvini and his son, Gustavo, may make a joint starring tour in this country next season the genial Tom Sterling is now taking the pasteboard for Manager Harry Morosco at the Grand.

Treasurer Harry Campbell of the Grand is assisted by J. S. Smith, an adept at the business. This is a popular team.

Impresario Simonson will give up the baton at the Grand after this week, and will leave for Philadelphia where he will open a studio.

The Mirror says that Colonel Fay Butler left for San Francisco last week. He will spend a week in Chicago, St. Louis, and Omaha.

Sanford B. Ricaby, last season manager for Harry Corson Clarke, has been engaged to boom "A High-Toned Burglar" for the first two weeks of its tour.

Mr. Robinson, the new musical director of the Grand Opera House, has arrived, and is conducting the rehearsals of "Rip Van Winkle" which will be put on next week.

Harry Jacob is spending much money in improving the Union Theater at Oroville, and it will soon be one of the best amusement houses of the interior. Mr. Jacob is in the market in search of good attractions for his place.

Frances Wilson performed his opera on "Cyrano de Bergerac" in Montreal the past week, and it made a favorable impression. The opera follows the lines of the play closely, not excepting bits of pathetic which the comedian gave with effect. The music is by Victor Herbert.

Gertrude Elliott, Maxim's talented sister, who has made such a favorable impression in London, leaves Goodwin's company and joins the Court Theater for the production of Captain Robert Marshall's new play, "A Royal Family," which will have its first London production in the middle of October.

The Mirror has this to say of Charley Schimpf: "Charles Schimpf, secretary of the Walter Orpheum Company, accompanied by his wife and Miss Anita Fuller, arrived in New York on Sunday last. Mr. Schimpf is here on a pleasure trip, and will remain long enough to see the latest novelties in the theaters and to take in the Dewey Jubilee."
Local Theaters

The Columbia

Madame Modjeska's new drama, "Marie Antoinette," is an ambitious tragedy "in a prologue and five acts," as the bills describe it, and, while it has been produced to good houses at the Columbia this week, the audiences have been due to the magic of Modjeska's name—not to the drama itself. The author of Marie Antoinette, Mr. Clinton Stuart, thought evidently in his prologue to emphasize the luxurious and extravagant frivolity of the French court that led ultimately to the revolution; to contrast the light-heartedness of the Queen of 1777 with her bitter grief and loneliness in 1793. But contrast without juxtaposition is not effective—it is hardly contrast, and as between the prologue and the final curtain there are three and a half long, dragging hours, the dramatic possibilities are lost and what should be a strong, virile drama becomes a series of stage pictures. There is no life, no action, in these stage pictures, to be sure, for the scenic effects are striking, but they are stage pictures none the less, and the result is that one of the most vivid stories of history appears stagey and ture.

The prologue should be cut out unhesitatingly and the drama should open with the onslaught of the Bread-Rivers on Versailles, October 5, 1789. The second act is without motive in connection with the story, and should share the fate of the prologue. The third act is as it should be. The fourth act, now divided into two long scenes, might be abbreviated gracefully by cutting out the opening remarks of Antoine Simon, the Jacobin shoemaker. With the second scene of the act the tragedy should close. We should then have a four-act drama with a well-defined story—first, the Bread Riot, showing the poverty of the people contrasted with the wealth of the royal family; next, the storming of the Tuileries, showing what the people had been driven to by their poverty and foreseeing the tragedy to come; third, the parting of the Royal Family on the eve of the execution of Louis XVI: fourth, death of Louis XVI. Then bring the part of the Dauphin less to the fore. Of course, this arrangement would make Louis XVI, the hero, but any critic will agree that in this "Marie Antoinette" tragedy by Mr. Stuart, the amiable, ignorant and hen-pecked Bourbon of history has undergone an apophasis and is the real center of the story, any way you read it.

There was some complaint on the opening night that Madame Modjeska's voice was inaudible in many passages, but this was remedied as soon as she became familiar with the acoustic requirements of the Columbia, and there could be no adverse criticism on this score during the rest of the week. Modjeska is still the brilliant actress of former years. True, she lacks the fire of youth, but she still possesses the finish of the artist and the power that belongs to genius to move her audiences, as she demonstrates in the strong scenes of the first, second and fourth acts. Her support is good and shows the effort of her own careful supervision. As Louis XVI. John E. Kellerd is satisfactory, though the part of the first magnitude, and he has a clear conception of the part as written for him, but a little attention to make-up would be pardoned. Where are the low forehead, sunken eyes and beef-like nose of the flour-bon race? The costumes are perfect in every detail, but there has been no attempt, except on the part of Modjeska, to "make up" the different roles so as to bring up before the audience characters as pictorially familiar as those in Marie Antoinette? The Queen is dressed by little girl, page-kirk, and while there is considerably too much of a speaking part to the role, yet the little girl does well. Crossing Quinlan as Sarterre and Miss Mary Hall as "Queen" Aud, the fisherwoman, are realistic, and win deserved applause, but quite the most refined and pleasing bits of acting in these minor parts is that of Miss Mary Gardiner as Louise Chaly in the first act. She is the tempting, half-famished woman of the people driven by starvation to make a desperate appeal in the very presence of royalty and yet still feeling the deepest awe of those at whom she and her companions and their ancestors for generations have scarcely dared to look. It is certainly very cleverly played.

The Alcazar

After seeing "The Idler" at the Alcazar, one is in a humor to say a great many pleasant things about the players presenting Haddon Chambers' well-known drama. Eugene Ormond, in a different character from that he has just appeared in, was well placed. Mr. Ormond, always easy and graceful, intelligent and sympathetic, fits in admirably in roles requiring strong acting. His Mark Cross, the Idler, was as good a bit of acting as the part has known, and it has won distinct recognition during the week. Chas. King, a San Francisco favorite from the days of Frawley's first company here, gives the strongest characterization we remember having seen him in for several years, in the part of Sir John Harding. In a great many parts King is very often King, but no fault can be found in his presentation of the ambitious member of Parliament who is doing his best to outlive certain memories of his unbridled young manhood. Clarence Montaine as Mr. Merryweather, intent on getting married for a third time, once more demonstrated what a reliable man he is for a stock company. The same reliability is found in Marie Howe who is always good in a wide range of parts, and distinctly clever where there is any character ability. Her Mrs. Cross was very acceptable. Gertrude Foster, until the Idler strolled on the Alcazar stage, has really had no show to demonstrate her ability. The part of the wife of Sir John Harding gives her the opportunity to disclose the possession of great emotional talent, used with fine discrimination. Her gowns, too, are certainly the most stunning things we have yet viewed this season. Helen Henry, as the Kate Merryweather, does better work and appears to better advantage than in any part she has taken. She has a bright winning-soness that is creating many new friends and admirers. Charles Bryant, who not only directs the productions of the stock company, but takes his share of parts, furnished a clear-cut, intelligent Simeon Strong. It was forceful and not overdone, and won a big share of the favor accorded the production.

Morosco's Grand

A crowded house greeted the "Drum Major's Daughter" at the Morosco Grand Opera House this week. This was the second week of the piece, and it was even more popular than the first week. Hattie Belle Ladd always received an encore on the singing of her song. Edith Mason, Persee and Wolf were also encouraged for their superb singing. The stage settings were particularly appropriate and pleasing.

The Tivoli

The opening performance of "Martha" at the Tivoli—though played to an audience that, when contrasted with the crowded houses of last week, gave evidence of the growing partiality of San Francisco opera-goers to the more intricate and not necessarily received with a well-deserved enthusiasm. The opera, a favorite with music-lovers for its sparkling brilliancy and no less sweet strength and dramatic force in emotional crises, was well rendered throughout by both principals and chorus, the latter entering with vivacity into the spirit of the fun, and doing vigorous work that showed them more at home than when confronting the perilous realms of Wagnerian intensity. Ada Palmer-Walker gave a sprightly interpretation of Lady Harriet, entering completely into the "personnel" of the high-born little lady, piquant and charming in refinement, in spite of her daring escapade. Miss Palmer's vocalization in frequent phrasing was both dainty and asthetic, and though her voice is lacking in roundness of tone even to an occasional unpleasant shrillness, it has a carrying power adequate for exacting ensemble work. Mary Linck, as usual, displayed her marked vocal ability in the singing of her role, culminating in a solo in the fourth act and gaining an enthusiastic encore. But her characterization of the Lady was hardly so happy—more pronounced than the role calls for in detail of gesture and facial play, but more, too uniformly, prominent. A dramatic interpretation is as exacting as the composition of a picture, and demands modulated halftones to render effective its concentrated lights. Miss Linck is capable of more discriminating work, as her masterly impersonation of Ortrud in Lohengrin gave evidence of. Thos. Green, the new tenor from New York, made a decided hit, and was greeted with enthusiastic applause from first to last. He has a sweet, pure tone, and sings with delicacy of phrasing, clear enunciation and dramatic force. His interpretation of Lionel was forceful and picturesque. The role of Plunkett was admirably adapted to Schuster's vigorous, lusty voice, and Lord Tristan and the Sheriff, though subordinate parts, were not marred in the hands of Richards and Fogarty. The performance as a whole was admirably and adequately abetted by the work of the orchestra under Mr. Hirschfeld's capable leadership. "Martha" was alternated during the week with Othello, which was presented in the most perfect manner to crowded houses.
The Orpheum

Manager John Morrisey advertised this week's bill at the Orpheum as the best ever presented here. And he was right. There is not a dull act on the whole list. During the week many were unable to get more than standing room. And on account of an equally good bill next week a repetition of the crowded houses is looked for. The Chinese impersonator, O. G. Seymour, and Miss Dupree, a very clever dancer, opened the performance in an "original idea" which consisted of some unexcelled high jumping and good dancing and singing. Their excellence as well as the novelty of the act had the effect of winning an encore. Then came Jennie Yeaman, the "daughter of her mother." "Who put me in the business?" Jennie asked. "Why, mother, and she knows a thing or two herself." Miss Yeaman is certainly a most clever character comedienne. She does a coon step with grace and ease; sings well and talks nonsense in a very amusing manner and manages to be recalled two or three times. But the biggest hit was made by Frank Cushman, the minstrel. He bills himself the "progressive minstrel," probably because he is so far ahead of all other single-handed burnt cork artists. His songs are good; likewise his jokes. He was so pleased on receiving such a warm reception that he made a speech. The last of last week's bill consisted of Terry and Lambert, the Boy's Band, Haller and Fuller, Stinton and Merton and the Bright Brothers were retained. Ever, team received an encore. The Boys' Band is more popular than ever.

The Chutes

This popular amusement place continues to give the largest ten cents worth of amusement of any place in town. Adgie and her ladies are easily the leading feature in the theater. Dale and Dalton, Hallett and Carroll, Adgie and her friends, and the Harris and Franklin contribute their share to good entertainment. Harmon and Seabury do their marvelous high diving at the close of every performance.

The Olympia

Maud Mullery, vocalist, and J. D. Du Bell the swinging wonder, are the new faces at the Olympia this week. Ed Dolan in his monologue, and Zoe Matthews and Ruth Nelta incoon songs are the other headliners. The other boolders—Dora Mervin, Carlton and Royce. The Keesings, Dollie Mitchell, Rose Wellington and Dot Stanley are the boolders.

Amusement * Next Week

The Orpheum

Beginning next week the Hawaiian Queens will be one of the principal features of the Orpheum's bill. The names of the dusky maidens are Oriska Worden, Adell Archer and Vira Rial. They will present a lyric novelty, "Kingmore's Wedding Day." The other new attractions will be Forest and King, foreign celebrities, and Felix Morris and his company in the one act character study, "The Vagabond." The best of this week's bill will be retained.

The Columbia

The second and last week of the Modjeska engagement which opens at the Columbia on Monday night will be devoted to a varied and essentially popular repertoire. "Much Ado About Nothing" will be given on Monday night. "Mary Stuart," which it is probable will be playfully repeated by Modjeska as in infinitum, will be seen on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday nights, and "Macbeth" is announced for Wednesday and Saturday evenings. "Much Ado About Nothing" will be repeated at the Saturday matinee. All three plays are to be given a complete scenic production, especially in the case of "Mary Stuart" and "Macbeth," for which it is said Manager John C. Fisher has provided a scenic equipment fully equal to that of "Marie Antoinette."

The Tivoli

Next week's bill at the Tivoli Opera House, will consist of comic and grand opera, which will be given on alternate nights. On Monday, Thursday, Sunday, evenings and Saturday matinees, the bill will be the ever famous, "Mikado," which is to have an elaborate revival. The cast will be a capable one, and will include Alc C. Wheelan, the Tivoli's new comedian, who is to sing "Ko Ko." Mr. Wheelan was the extremely funny "hoot mon" Scotchman of the Frank Daniels opera company, when it presented, "The Idol's Eye" and all who saw him in that laughable character, will realize that in the comical role of "Ko Ko" he should make a remarkable hit. The balance of the cast will present Tom Greene, the Tivoli's new tenor, who made an immediate success this week in "Maritza"; Phil Branson, who makes his reappearance, William Schuster, Harry Richards, Ada Palmer, Walter, Julie Cote, a recent addition to the Tivoli, Ethel Jewett and Yuez Dean.

Grand opera will be given four nights next week, the bill being, Tuesday, "Aida"; Wednesday, "Cavalier," and Thursday, "Paganella." Friday and Saturday evenings, "Carmen." In the grand opera the principal roles will be taken by Signors Avedano, Salassa, Fonari, Zani, Anna Lichter, Mary Linck, Charlotte Beckwith, etc., and the repetition of the great successes of the present season, together with the revival of the "Mikado" will surely attract large audiences for this week. This evening and Sunday night, "Ohello" with the famous cast will be sung for positively the last time.

"I, A Moroccan in active preparation by the grand opera singers, and on Oct. 6th, the 87th celebration of the birthday of the famous composer, Verdi, who is now writing another and will be celebrated as being mainly by a program made of selections of Verdi's most popular operas and will be a gala night in every respect.

The Chutes

Paul and Francisco De Guzzo, musical comedians from the Rentz Circus, Germany, will be among the new attractions at the Chutes next week, also Baby Ruth Roland, singer and dancer; Albert Lane, soprano; The Rousselle, novelty aerialists; Aerial Horizontal Bar Jugglers, etc.; Frances A. Mervin, lightning sketch artist, from the Alhambra Theatre, London; Adgie and her Lions; Harmon and Seabury, high diver and New Moving Pictures.

Morosco's Grand

"Rip Van Winkle," by Pirquet, will be put on by Manager Harry Morosco at the Grand Opera House next week. The rehearsals show that the piece has been given careful attention, and all the principals of the superb Opera Company are given good parts. A most notable production is promised.

The California

The California, recently refurbished by Manager Friedlander, will be re-opened for the fall and winter season-to-morrow night, when Ben Hendricks will appear in "A Manager Yeulnet," there has been a large sale of seats.

The Alcazar

A week of comedy at the popular Alcazar will begin on Monday night, with that laughable piece, "Robert Reed's "Ironclad as a Lamb," will be presented. The full company is in the cast.

NOTES FROM NEW YORK
Special Correspondence.

Notwithstanding the rush of new plays into Gotham this season they have not quite overwhelmed the older ones. This week’s round of pleasure contains Mrs. Carter in “Faa” at the Garrick, and Mr. Sobel and Miss Harned in “The King’s Musket” at Daly’s, and they are competing stoutly with such recent productions as “The Only Way” with Mr. Miller at the Herald Square; “The Tyranny of Tears,” with Mr. Drew at the Empire; “Becky Sharp” with Mrs. Fiske at the Fifth Avenue; “The Gadfly,” with Mr. Robson at Wallac’s; “Cyrano de Bergerac” with Francis Wilson at the Knickerbocker; “The Ghetto” at the Broadway; and “The Lost of the Rhodas” with Andrew Mack at the Academy of Music. There are many more important productions to come in the near future, but the season may now be said to be fairly well under way. Four continu- ous shows are in full blast, and that recalls the comment made by some of the Eastern managers upon the opinions expressed in the first issue of the DIAMETRIC REVIEW that there is nothing new in Fort Worth. Back from that soil, 40,000 can support only four continuous shows, San Francisco with less than half a million cannot support one continuous show. But then it must be remembered that several years ago it was regarded as risky to start the first continuous show in this city, then the center of a population of more than 3,000,000.

Willie Collier, after a month at the Man- hattan in “Mr. Smooth” (which was all the time he could get in the preliminary season) left last week for New York, where he is the first comedian to leave town. He ex- pects to reach San Francisco the last week in March, and if he keeps all the members of the original cast, he will give satisfaction to his old admirers on the Pacific Coast. He has no pretty women with this sea- son, but he has several very clever comedi- ans.

Mme. Marcello Sembich is the first of the Metropolitan Grand Opera singers to arrive from Europe this season. She came ahead of the other members of the company to take part in the Winter and Spring mu- sical festivals. She is without doubt the most artistic Wagner singer in the world today, and her success ought to be encouraging to women who do not begin their vocal educa- tion until late in life, and Mme. Sem- bich, although a successful Violinist before, did not begin to study singing seriously until she was thirty-five years old.

Throughout the summer Franz Kalten- born, under the able management of his tal- ented wife, has conducted orchestral concerts every evening in St. Nicholas Garden which is the winter time is used for social meet- ing rank. The success of the enterprise has so been pronounced that Kaltenborn’s or- chestra will hereafter be one of the features of the summer season here. Mr. Kalten- born, besides having been a protege of the late Carl Reinecke, is an acknowledged marked ability. He bought and now uses the violin on which Edward Remenyi was playing when he died suddenly on the stage in San Francisco. Among the vocalists who have appeared with him this season was Miss Adrienne Remenyi, daughter of the dead violinist. The most pronounced success made by any singer with the Kaltenborn Orchestra this season was that achieved by Miss Alma Yolo, a California girl, with a rich voice and charming personality, studying for open here under the direction of Tom Litt, the Berlin-born composer now living in the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

Eunil Faure, who has been abroad listening to the festivals performances at Hayreuth, played a Madame de la Warte at the Metropolitan Opera House this sea- son. He will conduct one concert of the Philharmonic Orchestra before joining the open company at the opening of the compa- ny in Chicago.

“The Ghetto” by Herman Hyereman, Jr. a Dutch author, now being played at the Broadway is already being confounded with “The Children of the Ghetto” by Zangwill, the novelist, which is to be produced a little later at the Herald Square with Blanche Bates, the California actress, as the leading lady. Many persons went to see “The Ghetto” thinking they were going to “The Children of the Ghetto.” That shows that the German producers have grown so wealthy that Broadway is adept in the art of getting there first. But George T. Tyler, manager for the forthcoming production of “The Children of the Ghetto,” promises to eclipse the success of the play of similar name, al- though that play ran good nights in Amster- dam. According to the accounts which come from Washington where Israel Zangwill’s play opened last week, it will be a success after that skillful stage manager James A. Horne cuts out much of the novelist’s super- fluous material. Owing to the money which has been made out of the dramatized novels like “Trilby,” “The Prisoner of Zenda,” “Under the Red Robe,” and “The Little Minister” authors are beginning to write novels in the hope that there will be a de- mand for a play of the same name and story. But when such a novel has a chance, un- less he is already a playwright, he had bet- ter hire some able stage hand to make the dramatization for him. The back may spot the novel—he generally does—but he is far more apt to make a hit with a play than the brilliant novelist who is unused to the work of building plays. De Mille, the minister, would never have succeeded with “The Charity Ball” and other moneymakers if he had not let an experienced stage carpenter like David Selasco put his plays together. So much of the success of “The Chi- ldren of the Ghetto” will be due to the clever work of Horne, the actor, manager, author and assistent supporter of those broad princip- ies of human affection laid down by the late Henry George—that one man has as much right to life, liberty and property as any other, and no more. By the way, Horne and George spent much of their early life together, and beheld the same meeting beraed by graduates of Oakland public schools as one of those irrepressible rectors on Fri- day afternoon. Belasco was learning his profession as a stage manager while spell- ing in the grammar schools of Oakland.

Critics here are unanimous in declaring that both Stuart Robson in “The Gadfly” and Francis Wilson in the musical version of “Cyrano de Bergerac” have made a mis- take in trying to be too serious. When the public learns to appreciate an actor as a clown, it is generally disappointed when he attempts another side. But sometimes the clowns get too ambitious, and not until im- pelled to by diminishing returns from the public do they return to the foolish again. De Wolfe Hopper had to return to infamy in “The Chatterian” after the first week, and Miss Robinson and Wilson will probably have to stop being so serious.

A Stranger in a Strange Land at the Manhattan Theater this week contains Jane Corcoran, recently graduated from a New Jersey convent, but a San Francisco girl by birth. She is a daughter of Ratcha Williams, the actress, who is the wife of Arthur C. Alston, one of William A. Brady’s partners.

Ott Harris, so long identified with Hoyt’s farce comedies, will be seen next week at the Garrick in “My Innocent.” He tried it on the dog in Pongekapoe, and reports say that it was greatly appreciated, but by whom does not appear. As the story deals with the “innocent boy” of old Commodore, Mr. Harris has nothing dallying to the Vassar girls.

The Rogers Brothers seem to be making as great a hit in “In Wall Street” as they did last season in “A Reign of Error.” As in the German version, the actor is to succeed the title, he exclaims, “It is very droll to- day.” “Why?” asks his brother, “Because Richard Croker has been accused of noth- ing new.”

The Tummany boys who sat in a box at the Victoria on the opening night was greatly pleased at this joke because he had just gotten off from the split at the Maat Committee which had been roasted him a beautiful brown.

GRAND OPERA BEGINS
Special Correspondence.

NEW YORK, Sept. 29.—Maurice Grau and the principal members of the Maurice Grau Opera Company arrived to-day from France on the French liner La Normandie. With Mr. Grau are Mme. Calve, who returns to America after an absence of three years, Suzanne Adams and Rose Orlika, Mlle. Bauermeister, Mme. Salignac, De Vries, Pin-Cord and the members of the chorus and ballet. Luigi Macaciel, the musical director, arrived to-day on the Campania; Andrea Dopol, the German tenor, left Bremen Sept. 27 on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grose. Edward de Reske sails to-morrow on the St. Paul. Zelie de Lussan sails the same day on the Umbria, and Claude Bouillard sails on La Champagne, which leaves Havre to-morrow.

Pol Plancon sails from Cherbourg Oct. 6, on the Pireus Fastnet.

The season of the Maurice Grau Opera Company begins Oct. 10, at New Haven, Conn.

DETROIT
Special Correspondence.

DETROIT, Sept. 28.—The opening of the season of 1899-1900 at the Detroit Opera House occurred last Monday evening, when the people of the city gathered about to see Miss Dicy Rynaye in “A Romance of Allthone.” It is a genuine Irish comedy, and is a sort of a fairy tale, with some intimate knowledge of the possibilities, limitations and tricks of the stage, set with fine traditional cleverly “bespattered.” Mr. Olcott and his company give a highly- pleasing performance, and they were re- ceived with enthusiasm favor by an audience that was noticeably representative. Con- spicuous in the support are the Sir Philip of Daniel Gilffether, the Lady Rynaye of Rita Maker Martin, the Francis Rynaye of Quarter Farnum, an artist of exceptional equip- ment for heavy’s: the Bessie of Little Tottie Carr, whose precocity is modest and other- wise: without offense, and who doesn’t give one any uncomfortable hint of chronic eterly; the Dick O’Brien of Lake Martin, a mellow and reposeful actor; the Major Manning of Paul Everton, the Rose Manning of Olive White, the Melville of Miss Wright, the Standish Flattsmouth, the Richard Malchien, the O’Grady of George Brennan, the Ann Shea of Mrs. Lizzie Wash- burn, the Robert McBeath of Charles E. Gilber, and the Mary of Marguerite Den- mond.

Ort Skinner and a good company opened tonight at the Detroit Opera House in “The Liars,” which is new here. The piece will run a week.

ST. LOUIS
Special Correspondence.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 18—The curtains have been run down on all the summer theaters and the last one of the theater, the Century, ushered in the season last night with “Hotel Topay Turvy,” which is as far as it goes and is like a comic opera and yet it is entirely different and it is like a vaudeville show at your Orpheum and yet it is really the best and most successful villain “Hotel Topay Turvy” is clever. Eddie Fox who has walked the cockney route on Market street many times when he was with Dave Henderson in “Sinbad,” “Cry- stal Sliper” and other extravaganzas, is the comedian. He still has that same cattish mouth expression and he is as funny as ever. In the same company is Amelia Glover who was better known as the Little Fawn when she was with Russell’s Comedians. She is the same little winsome woman, though her about and Oliphant are run down by the good causes has caused her to be almost forgotten. Well. It is the old adage, “Out of sight, out of mind.”

Gus Thomas’ play “Arius” is with us.

MCKENZIE CONCERT

About 500 people gathered in Odd Fellows Hall last week to hear the concert of the McKenzie Musical Society of one hundred voices. All amateurs are lured by the social advantages of membership to who has little of that talent or application to retard the progress of the society as a body. This should not be and the writer who is a friend of the boys and girls even if she does scold them a little hopes that when every applicant for membership will be entertained. The program was very well rendered taken as a whole: Overture, Orchestra; Winter Lullaby, McKenzie Musical Society; Melba Waltz: Priscilla Davies, Over the Waves, [Sobre Las Ollas] arranged by McKenzie, Ladies quartet, Freda Nipgen, first soprano, Margie Wheeler, second soprano, Lillian Ewing, first alto, Eugenia Breitengross, second alto. "Bella Italia" arranged by Hugh N. Callender, (a) Our Brave Volunteers first time, Mrs. C. M. Perkins, dedicated to First California Volunteers; (b) "Vacant Chair" in Memoriam, McKenzie Musical Society, In dammatus [Stabat Mater] Margo Wheeler and McKenzie Musical Society; Male Quartet H. M. Callender, first tenor, C. M. Winchester, second tenor, J. P. Fayire, first bass, Emyre C. Coates, second bass; "Sweet Peace of My Mother" Master tenor, Kroger; "Home to Our Mountains" Trouvatore, Lillian Ewing and H. N. Callender; "Pensacola Pickanniny" first time McKenzie Musical Society; (a) Hawaiian Song "Aloha Oe," (b) flag of Liberty, by general query arranged by McKenzie from Gummie's celebrated Pete La Victoria March, McKenzie Musical Society. The audience had looked forward to hearing Miss Margie Wheeler who is rated by the Philharmonic Club and made her debut as a soloist but a severe cold prevented her appearance in the "Inflammatus" although she was to have enough to sing in the quartet. No doubt she would have shared the laurels with Lillian Ewing, who made her first hit appearance in solo work. Her mezzo-soprano voice is really the sweetest the writer has had the pleasure of hearing among these young people and her song with 'Amoroso' and grace confirmed a short period of study, and seemed to possess real musical feeling. I heard the other day that I was spoken of as having a weakness for looking for modesty in women. This I shall and I think I may own it to in saying that this young lady with her pretty voice, auburn hair and brown eyes was quite a delight in that respect. My collection of such specimens is agreeable company; one of my little favorites may continue to amuse me in this last concert Miss Priscilla Davies received a little hint about want of soul and like a brave little girl she has begun her search for that Heaven-born quality and is going to improve, I fear. Master George Kroger has also profited by a request to pay a wee bit more respect to his audience and not to know too much of the songs that he gave them all with that pretty voice sounded well and his manner was much better. Mr. Hugh Cal lendler set a good example in doing his best with his songs, when in reality his cold was a terrible drawback and he became painfully breathless at times but every one knows how well he can sing under favorable circumstances and he was applauded to the echo and compelled to give encore numbers. An improvement was noticeable in the Male Quartet and they sang very pleasingly, being frequently recalled. The voices being better balanced than the last quartet. We want more volume and better expression in the choruses and much more interest in the parts played indeed. "Vacant Chair" and "Our Brave Volunteers" being pretty. Miss Nipgen's voice was finer than in the last concert. Many of our boys in blue were guests of the evening.

LORING CLUB CONCERTS

On Tuesday evening the Loring Club gave its first reconstructed concert in Odd Fellows Hall before a large and appreciative audience, the Minetti Quartet being one of the chief attractions upon this occasion. Much enthusiasm was being created in the rendering of the "Dvořák Quartet in F major." The artistic work of Mr. Minetti is too well known to require compliment, and the concerts given by him this season will be musical treats. The solos of Mr. Frank Cohm were most enjoyable, and it is to be hoped that this popular singer may make his stay in Europe as short as possible. Mr. D. Loring is an acknowledged success as a leader, and his deep interest in the Loring Club is most grateful. The excellent young male quartet of well-trained voices was the recipient of the warmest appreciation. The songs rendered were: "Rhone Wine Song" [List]; "Ave Maria" [Albi]; "After the Battle" [Liebe]; "The Haunted Mill" [Strong]; "Drinking Song" [Mendelssohn]. The Minetti Quartet played: Quartet F, major, op. 96 A [Dvorak]; quartet from Quartet B minor [B. S. Coleman]; Faust Quartet No. 3, op. 76 A [Jazzini].

SPANISH-AMERICAN CONCERT

Last Saturday evening the Spanish-American Circle gave a concert in Golden Gate Hall in aid of the Spanish School. The program was a success from first to last and was entirely under the direction of the evening. Following was the program: Pianino Duet, "Rigoleto" Signor S. Martinez and Muse. Beatrice Di Bernardi; Address in Spanish by Prof. A. P. Alvarez; Address in English by Miss Anna T. Everitt; Overture to "The Damn." J. L. Bernardino's String Quintet; Jewel Song; "Faust," Elizabeth Regina Mowry, Mr. Emilio Crucis, Accompanist; Bandurria and Guitar Duet, J. L. Bernardino and Miss M. Sierria; Musica Latina, by Signor Filippi; Miss Margaret C. W. S. W. W. J. G. Warren; Recitation, "Our Folks," Mr. Walter R. Brittan; 24 Canatina de pasaje, "Huiguenos," Miss Elena Rockel, Mr. Joseph Rockeck, Accompanist; (a) Spanish Dance, (b) La Gitanilla, by Miss Alice J. W. A. J. S. Warren; Miss Grace Horner, Mrs. Sadie E. Elliott, Miss Lucy M. Wade, Miss Emma Beede, Mr. G. C. Cantilstein; Late: Mr. George Levy; Spanish Song, "La Despedida," Signor C. W. W. J. G. Warren created quite a sensation and the hall fairly rang with applause, as he was frequently recalled, responding most generously to the demand. His voice is probably one of the most perfect and most magnificently strong and dramatic in the world and sings with charming ease and expression. Elizabeth Regina Mowry was also a great favorite of the evening, and like Mr. Warren, kind and indulgent.

KALISHER RECITAL

Miss Clara Kalisher, contralto, made her first appearance in San Francisco since her return from her studies abroad at a reception recital given in Sherman Clay Hall on the occasion of the recent death of her mother. Miss Kalisher received the hearty encouragement of her numerous friends who tended to overcome as she progressed a little pardonable shyness--a very good fault by the way in young aspirants to fame, as modestly is the golden key that very often opens the door to hard, faithful work, and confidence grows gracefully with experience. Miss Kalisher removed from: [J. Fant; "Liebestraum" [Harms]; "Auszehr" [Shubert]; "Der Lieder Alten" [Altmann]; "The Peacock and the Butterfly," [Chadwick]; "Allah Givts Light in Darkness" [Chirman]; "When the World Ends" [words by Shakespeare] [Solitico]; from "Sanctus" and "Dalia" [Saint-Saens]; Aria from "The Prophet" [Meyerbeer]; "Les Divines des Vents" [Glyck]; "Tosca" [Tosti]; "Parni Les Moreles" [Holmes]; "L.Amourette" [J. Granier]. Her voice is a far, clear contralto, and she possesses the virtue of good enunciation, each number being sung with increased con- sernitude and ease, and a good impression being made. Frank Cohm, the accompanist, and H. E. W. A. J. S. Warren, was received with the usual warmth that attends his appearance, rendering "Birds Song," "The Woods are Scar" [words by Tenneyou] and "Land we are to J. Granier. While speaking of Frank Cohm, a prominent musician, once said: "It is a pleasure to play for him, for he is in the rarest sense a patron, and an interpretation is always perfect." Mr. Cohm will soon go to Europe. The recital was a success, and the audience, well known when he is in reality the staff upon which all must lean and a word of sincere praise is due to Dr. H. J. Stewart, who played for the singers giving them admirable support.
ORLANDO
Special Correspondence
ORLANDO, Sept. 26.—The regular season at the MacAlmonon Theatre will open Thursday evening, Sept. 26, when Clay Clement and his talented wife will appear in the clever comedy, "The New Dominion." This successful play practically belongs to Oakland, as Clay Clement does in a measure. It is now over five years ago that he came to this city and gave the initial production of his own play, "The New Dominion." At that time it was predicted that Mr. Clement would soon have a reputation that was world-wide, which by hard work he has won. The engagement is for two nights only, and the advance sale of seats so far has been very heavy.

Madame Modjeska, supported by an excellent company, opens a new engagement at the MacAlmonon on Monday evening, Oct. 9. The first week at the Theater one of the oldest stock pla's 5 on the boards, "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" has been presented in good shape by the Grand Stock Company. Landers Stevens does some excellent work as Sol Morgan the drunkard. The rest of the cast is in capable hands, and the scenic effects are up to the standard. The business has been very large all the week. Week commencing Nov. 2, the Grand Stock Company will give an elaborate production of "The Three Guardsmen." The Theater has been re-painted, and the entrance painted, which makes a great improvement.

Last Sunday the Acme Athletic Club took a benefit at Oakland Park. The following well-known specialty people besides members of the club appeared: Rand, Brook and Rond, Agnes Harding, the Three Flying Bobs, Burdick, Mendel and Mack. The attendance was the largest this season.

OAKLAND MUSICAL NOTES.
The Concert of the Orpheus Club last evening was largely attended by Oakland's swell set. It was the second of this organization's sixth season, and the second concert under the direction of its present leader, Robert C. Nerahill. The solists were Miss Eliza Berveridge soprano, and Miss Jean Mary Hinch violinist.

Friends of Alfred Wilkie, the well-known tenor who has just recovered from an almost fatal illness, are arranging to give him a benefit concert some time next month.

Quite a number of Oakland's leading musicians attended the first annual dinner of the Musicians' Club of San Francisco last Monday evening. The Newell piano recital will take place Wednesday evening, Oct.

TACOMA
Special Correspondence.
TACOMA, Sept. 29—Tacom is noted all over the Northwest as a music loving town, and high class operas and musical attractions of all kinds are always assured of fine houses. The coming season will be the best Tacoma has had for years, as regards number of good attractions, a full and complete list of which Manager Wing promises to give your correspondent soon.

Since the season closed the Tacoma theater has been renovated and many new scenes added to the house list. The Lyceum theater also has a new advertising curtain put in.

The "Girl from Chili," played in the Tacoma last Saturday night, to a good house. Col. Thompson's Boston Lyric Opera company will play next Saturday afternoon and evening at the Tacoma. Wm. H. Hoyt.

OGEN
Special Correspondence
OGEN, Sept. 23.—Ogen Grand Opera House Sept. 20, Hoyt's "A Midnight Bell" played to a very large house, and was well received, although it is not equal to Hoyt's other plays.

Sept. 22. "A Venuine Yeuntleman" played to a fairly good house. This piece was very good, much better than was expected.

Nothing is billed for the coming week, the metropolitan Opera Company coming next on Oct. 2, 4, 7.

Our theater is the prettiest play house between Denver and the Coast, but being the only one in town it runs all kinds of attractions, and not always the best. I am sorry to say, although all the fine plays pay us visit. RUGOS M. BAKEDON.

CARMON CITY
Special Correspondence
CARMON, Sept. 26.—The Elledford Company opened here last night for a week's engagement at the Elledford. They have the first piece, "The Flag of Truce," was rendered in excellent style. This company has improved wonderfully since its last visit to this place, about two years ago. Mr. Elledford has proven himself a good manager, and deserves much credit for the selection of such a good class of play.

Hansome Tommy Bates, Elledford's advance agent is, as jolly a boy as ever; he wishes to be remembered to his California friends.

The Venuine Yeuntleman Company played Virginia City the 25th, and play Bruns the 26th.

R. B. MEIDER.

STOCKTON
Special Correspondence
STOCKTON, Sept. 27.—Vivom-Addison company closed the week here Sunday evening in the five act drama, "Love and War." Monday evening Clay Clement opened a three nights' engagement in "The New Dominion." While a very large audience did not greet him, still the reception he received from those who were present was very flattering.

Tuesday evening "The Belle" was presented.

past week, good houses being in attendance at every performance. Mr. Malvay’s theater has opened under favorable conditions and with a good list of attractions he can draw, the coming winter, a full share of Salt Lake theater-goers. “The Midnight Bell” was a very strong attraction.

The company could easily have filled an entire week to good business. Metropolitan Opera Company opened tonight in “Fin Dallavo” at Grand with good attendance. The company fills the entire week with change of bill for each performance. The o re to be presented at Oakland, Chimes of Normandy, Bohemian Girl, Mascotte, Victor the Blue Stocking, Fantine and Olivette.

Mr. Malvay, who has been on the circuit, got in greedily by Salt Lakers, and, judging from the splendid business done by the Grau and Calhoun Opera companies the past two seasons, at the Grand, the Metropolitan Opera company will put in a profitable week.

Blanche Aldrich, prima donna of the organization, is a former Salt Lake girl. She made her first appearance in opera in this city with the Salt Lake Opera company, at which time she made a favorable impression. She is a pupil of Professor H. S. Goddard of this city. “Brownie in Town” follows the opera company at the Grand Oct. 21.

Salt Lake theater opens its doors Oct. 22 with Eddie Pay in “Hotel Toppy Turvy.” This attraction will be followed by the Salt Lake Opera company in “Madeline, or the Magic Klee” with Louise Savage in the leading role.

The pretty little California girls, the Healy Sisters, are one of the features with Schilling’s “Two Married Men” company.

And now they are saying in the East that Dagmar, the imposing, is a Pacific Coast actress. Score one more for California.

Colby and Way, the ventriloquist and Dancing Doll, are at the Empire Theater, London, Eng. They return to America in 1901.

Forrest Searby who is doing the high diving at the Chutes with Harry Harmon is the son of the well-known scenic artist of the same name.

The Bright Bros., the strong men at the Orpheum, once upon a time earned three meals a day by keeping a peanut and soda water stand on Market Street.

Georgia McDermott, well known in this city, who has just concluded a protracted engagement over the northern circuit, is home again. She arrived on the 27th.

Frank M. Carrillo, the popular Bakersfield manager, left this city on the 27th with the following people for his vaudeville theater: Dampiere and Shelbon, Fred and Amy Gottlob, Miruna, Lucile Alden, Nud Thornhill, Zoda Sisters, Ethel Primrose, Lilian Stehenson, Frankie La Fund, Joe Vale, Alice Fields, Jessy Kyun and J. J. Brown.

The Weston & Herbert Vaudeville Show is doing an immense business. Manager A. S. Thomson passed through this city this week en route to Seattle, where the company will play a return engagement October 2 and 3. Crowded houses were the rule in every town.

The company will go down the Coast to San Diego, then direct to Oregon and Washington, then will double back to this State, playing return engagements in all towns. The people of the company are all artists.

The Standard Theater, Bakersfield, opens tonight.

Pope and Weld, sketch team, are now arranging a coast tour.

Daily and Tate are playing at the Howard, Boston, this week.

Van Bros. are doing well with Beach and Bowers Minstrels.

Prof. Dante is drawing crowds houses at Adelaide, South Australia.

Queenie Myle, a popular little soubrette, is due at Portland, Or., Oct. 16.

Derenda and Breen have signed with McIntyre and Heath’s Show for the season.

The Valdare, trick bicyclists, were at the Sydney Tivoli, then, after the last season left.

Glorione, the electrical transformation dancer, will be a feature of the Portland Exposition.

The Brighton trio—Tina and Edith Arnold, and Edward Adams, play in this city, with “Australia” to follow.

Harris and White open at the Orpheum, Omaha, Oct. 9, with Kansas City and the Castle Square Circuit to follow.

Junie McCree and Matt Trayers are big hits with Weber’s Burlesque Co. Their success has been phenomenal.

The Willards are arranging for a new addition to their entertaining music act. They’ve got more than the usual progressiveness.

The New York girls, the Sisters McCoy, are dancing in Australia under the direction of Sam Marion, well known in local vaudeville circles.

Mattie Nichols, the clever little singing and dancing soubrette, arrived in this city on the 27th. She opens at the Chutes Oct. 9, with the Circuit to follow.

John Queen, formerly of Queen, Stowe and Ryder, died at Sydney, N. S. W., a few weeks ago. His funeral was largely attended by the entire theatrical profession in Sydney.

The New Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, has changed hands. Joe Petrich, at one time manager of the Orpheum, Los Angeles, is now sole manager. Paul Kerckow, the former manager, goes into retirement.

Billy Rafferty, the comedian, arrived from the North a few days ago.

Weston & Herbert’s Vaudeville, send us word that return dates have been solicited from Vallejo. They played there only two weeks ago.

Max Asher, whose clever work in magic has been one of the hits of the Gaiety & Herbert’s Vaudeville, has closed with the company and is back in San Francisco.

Mabel Lambert of Terry and Lambert, at the Orpheum this week, is an Oakland girl and she has won considerable success as an impersonator of Bowery types.

Wright Huntington, an old Aleazar favorite, will be seen at the Orpheum soon in a vaudeville sketch called “A Stolen Kiss.” Huntington has made a success of it in the East.

Andrew Thompson, manager of Weston & Herbert’s, was a caller at the REVIEW office this week. Mrs. Andrew Thompson, wife of the popular manager, is ill in this city.

Charley Case, in speaking of his coast tour, told a REVIEW man that his recent engagement at the Orpheum had been extremely pleasing. Modest Charley, has been one of the Orpheum’s big hits.

Mr. L. F. Stone, who has recently come to San Francisco, looking for good people for the Honolulu Orpheum is one of the stockholders in that popular theater. He has opened upper permanent headquarters at the Langham Hotel.

Mendel & Mack, two of the brightest jest artists in the vaudeville profession and Frank and Hansler Bros., the clever musical artists have been appearing with great success in the production of “Ten Nights in a Bar Room” at the Deywee Theatre, this week.

GERTRUDE FOSTER

For a second season Miss Foster has been engaged to enact leading roles at the Alcazar. Her first season quickly established her as a great favorite, and during this engagement she has been renewing her popularity. In emotional roles she is decidedly strong and more than competent in parts calling for the lighter emotions. Her acting always has the charm of earnestness, and sincerity, and discriminating intelligence that creates a most favorable impression.

A well-deserved reputation for pleasing and for low prices is enjoyed by the Grove House, Cor. Market and O’Farrell streets.

PERSONAL

Oscar Fest's latest curtain at the Tivoli is getting favorable notices from all who see it.

Matthews and Bulger are coming West shortly and will introduce some new funnies to local fare lovers.

In "Hotel Topsy Turvy," Eddie Foy, than whom there is no more popular comedian, assumes the role of a clown clown, afterwards disguised as a French count.

Jessie Bartlett Davis, the popular prima donna contralto, who will hereafter be her own impresario and manage a company, will have a brand new comic opera, "The Little Bandit," which is being prepared for her special benefit, in which she will appear with artists selected by herself. The new opera will come to San Francisco.

The extraordinary success of Nance O'Neill's engagement at Corday's theater set the people of Portland talking in a theatrical way as they never did before. For the first time in the history of Corday's the orchestra of the theater was, last week removed to the stage to make room for the audience. Not only was this done on the opening night, but it was also done five times during the week, which is something out of the common anywhere.

OBITUARY

The funeral of Mrs. Warren McDonald, formerly of the Clayton Sisters, took place in this city last week. Mrs. McDonald died at Bakersfield. She was 25 years of age and a very clever performer. Her sister is one of the attractions at the Olympia.

R. T. McClannan, a well-known actor at Hartford, Conn., fell dead at the supper-table of a hotel last week, aged 65 years. He was a member of the James K. Hackett "Rapunzel of Hentzian" Company, and formerly supported Maggie Mitchell.

Marcus Lewitt died in New York Sept. 8 of paralysis. He was born in Posen, Prussia, in 1812, and came to America in youth and made his home in Boston. He is survived by four sons and three daughters, Mrs. H. Abe, and Ben Lewitt—the three last named having attained prominence in theatrical management.
Horse on Byrne

The Los Angeles Herald tells the following story on Frank Byrne, a handsome young actor of the Frawley Company, and Frank Murray, the manager of the company:

Monday night Byrne and Frank Murray were given a supper by Wm. H. Greer, and of course there was wine interspersed with the viands. Byrne is not any too familiar with the cup that both cheers and inebriates, and when the supper was over he was ready to go home and to bed. He did so. Slumber soon seized him for its own. It was too early for such early birds as Greer and Murray to retire, and they started out to tread the primrose path of dalliance.

At about 3 o'clock in the morning Byrne was awakened by some one rapping on his door.

"Who's there?" called out the actor, half asleep.

"Messenger boy," was the response.

"What do you want?"

"I want Mr. Byrne."

"I am Byrne. What's the matter?" asked the actor, from beneath the counterpane.

"I've got a horse for you."

"A what?"

"A horse."

"Look here," called out Byrne, trying to collect his senses, "do you mean to say you've got a horse for me?"

"Yes," called back the messenger boy.

"Where is it?"

"I've got it with me, and I want you to sign for it."

Byrne got out of bed. Things began to grow serious. He pinched himself to see if he was awake. He knocked his toe against the wardrobe and it hurt. Yes, he was awake. It was not a nightmare. He had been talking to a boy who was out in the hall, and who said he had a horse for him. Then the thought seized him that perhaps the wine he had drank had disarranged his mind. He had heard of the "D. T.," but he had always understood they took the form of snakes. He had never heard of their appearing in the shape of messenger boys or horses. He stood in the center of the room as these thoughts flashed through his brain, and the cold perspiration streamed down his face.

"I guess it was all a fantasy," he said to himself, by way of encouragement; "all is still now, I will go back to bed." Then there was a loud rap on the door.

The actor started. "My God! Then it was not a dream!" He rushed forward, unlocked and opened the door.

There stood a measly looking messenger boy with a plaster of Paris horse about a foot high in one hand, and a receipt book in the other. Byron beamed a great sigh of relief, signed the book and took the image. He turned on the lights in his room and found written on one side of the horse the following:

A HORSE ON YOU.

GREER AND MURRAY.

Betrayed by her Tears

"Yes," said the stranded tragedian.

"I am a member of a good family. Appearances are against me, I admit; but it has not always been with me as it is now. I am a victim of circumstances. I have been deceived—robbed—by those whom I trusted. Far away in the east there is a sweet little woman who waits and watches, and night before they go to bed two little tender children kneel at her side and pray for their absent papa."

The lady in the doorway used her handkerchief vigorously. When she had finished Juins Brooks McCracken, famous over two continents and in want of a sandwich, continued:

"O, now you weep, and I perceive you feel the dint of pity! These are gracious drops! Kind soul—"

Just then, however, she emptied over his head the basinful of dishwater that the hired girl had passed along, and as he, sputtering, turned to go, she called after him:

"I'd advise you not to let a few tears, more or less, encourage you too much at this time of the year. The hay season is now upon us."

—Chicago Times Herald.

It would seem that the Jefferson boys, sons of the actor, along with Edward Shuttle, Al Wilson and Andrew Mack, were camping some ten odd miles from the Jefferson mansion at Buzzard's Bay. One day Joseph Jefferson had his driving horse hitched up for the purpose of visiting the campers. The road leading to the camp-ground is through a rough country. At one point, upon the side of a hill, it is impossible for wagons to pass each other. It was at this particular spot that Mr. Jefferson, in his buggy, met Al Wilson and Andrew Mack in their buggy. The Wilson-Mack horse refused to back up hill, so the Jefferson nag, which had no objection to such an operation was backed down the hill. When Mr. Jefferson reached the caup, he called his sons and the other campers about him, and with solemn manner said: "Boys, things have come to a pretty pass, when an old legitimate comedian has to back down for a couple of variety performers."

—The Stage Carpenter.—Is the man who builds the set pieces, makes frames for the flats, wings, etc., and directs and assists in the setting of the stage under the general direction of the stage manager. He is the practical man about the stage and his distinguishing marks are a well-worn pair of overalls, in the hip pocket of which is inserted a folded rule, and he usually has a wounded thumb or finger tied up in a rag. He must be a member of the C. M. A. (Theatrical Mechanics' Association) in order to work in a union house, and ingenuity and a knowledge of the capabilities of the stage for which he builds scenery are essential.

—The Stage Hands.—The men under him are called stage hands, familiarly known as "Grips," but whether this cognomen was bestowed on account of their propensity to strongly grip almost anything they handle, depending sayeth not. They take great pride in their business, and generally know it. The average "Grip" is a little swifter than the tortoise in his movements, considers himself a hard worked individual, and thinks the success of the show depends on him alone. The older members of the craft are full of reminiscences of the stage, and in almost every theater in the land you will find a "Grip" who, according to his story, has "worked for Kir.ly."

Coloring Coon Songs

There is a little lady up town in New York who is working her way to fame and fortune by illustrating "coon" songs. It may not be what is known as high art, but it requires a large amount of skill to do it satisfactorily. It is a business in which there is not much competition, and it is profitable.

The "coon" songs that are being illustrated are those seen on the vaudeville stage. First is the cover of a book, in bright colors, giving the name of the publisher and author, and the name of the singer who made the song famous.

Then follows a series of scenes, illustrating the song as it is sung. "If You Ain't Got No Money You Needn't Come Around," is one of the songs that figure in colors. "A Hot Time in the Old Town," "In the Green Fields of Virginia," "The Moth and the Flame," and many others show the colorist's ingenuity, for the matter of colors is usually left to the artist.—New York Times.

—The Stage Manager.—Is the man who has charge of the company at stage rehearsals and during performances. His chief duties are to teach the people the "business" of the piece; action, positions, entrances and exits, and to see that each one in the cast is in the theater and ready to appear. He also arranges for the costumes and wigs to be worn, and gives orders for the scenery and properties to be used. He also has other duties too manifold to mention, such as "jacking up," a chorister, or roasting a copy-phee. It is only fair to say that no man in the world knows as much as a stage manager is supposed to know. A statement of the mental attainments requisite to fill the post would comprise everything from the judgment of a particular shade of cap ribbon, to a knowledge of Sanskrit or a thorough acquaintance with the manners and customs of the ancient Phoenicians. His patience must rival that of Job's, his judgment be equal to that of Confucius, and his tact to that of a woman. To be a stage director, one should have the power of life and death over the people on the stage, for a more trying position is not to be found in the whole theatrical gamut. He is by turns the best hated or the best loved man in the company, according to his mood or the length or shortness of rehearsals. Behind the scenes reigns supreme; can be as cruel as Nero and as relentless as fate, while outside he may be the prince of good fellows. J. P. Wilson.

Side Lights

Frank Daniel's new comic opera, "The Ameer," has been put in rehearsal. Mr. Daniel's season will commence at Scranton on Oct. 9.

Notes from San Francisco Misters:

"We are in our fourth week out, and business is more than we expected. Edward Grizzard, bass and tuba, joined Aug. 23. He made a jump of fifteen hundred miles from Columbus, Ga. J. H. Hall is doing some good work ahead of the company. Our band now numbers eighteen musicians, and our parade is attractive with new uniforms."

Leibler & Co.'s special company presenting "The Christian" will be in no sense a "No. 2" organization, as every effort has been made to secure as strong a cast as that which will support Viola Allen in this play. Frank Watson will be the Horatio Drake in the special company. He is well remembered for his excellent work in support of Effie Ellsler in the past, and his appearance with her in "The Christian" will be welcomed by their many admirers.
How Fame Found Him

WALTER A. PHILLIPS, the composer of several well-known songs, was a student at the Paris Conservatory of Music in the days of the second empire, those days of show and splendor, puff and flattery, magnificence of worship, but filled with the portents of impending disaster. He was a young fellow then, and, like the French empire, living for those days only, with no thought of the morrow.

They were days of a little study, some banqueting, and much semi-starvation—for the maxims of the student was to spend his allowance as soon after he received it as possible, and then borrow if he could. His nights were nights of roystering with a crowd of good fellows, students in art and music. There were excursions to St. Cloud or Versailles, when they spent the remnant of the night in jail for the crime of singing in the streets that forbidden air, that byun of liberty, the “Marseillaise.”

When brought before the Judge in the morning, the prisoners had as spokesman a blonde youth of 19 who looked like a German but spoke French like a Parisian. He would plead to the Judge in broken French assumed for the occasion, making profuse apologies for the foreign students.

They did not know. It was impossible they could tell. Would the good Judge let them off this time? And they were generally released with a warning and a reprimand. No Judge could fine a student of the Quarter Latin and expect the state to realize any cash.

The apologists roomed with Phillips, and one day they were in their attic together, both broke and both hungry. An inspection of the community cupboard revealed one onion—not much for two hungry students with no money, no credit, and friends in the same state of impecuniosity. While eating the onion in deep dejection and preparing some tears, there was a rap at the door, and in came Monsieur M—, a celebrated piano teacher with whom they were acquainted. The young men hailed him as their deliverer, told him their tale of woe, and their sufferings were presently relieved by a square meal. Then the professor made known his errand. He was going to Nice for a few weeks, and would Phillips’ room-mate take some of his pupils while he was away.

Would he eat? Would he draw his breath? Of course he would take the pupils, and his dear friend M— could stay away for a year. So the impecunious student found employment, and for a time Phillips saw but little of him. Offenbach’s “Orpheus” was running at the Comedia, and Walter was worshipping at the shrine of a piroquetting goddess in the ballet.

Among the pupils left in care of the blonde young man were two daughters of Baron Rothschild, and after the lessons were over the young teacher would sit at the grand piano for a few minutes and improvise waltzes. His soul was attuned to three-four time.

One day while engaged in his usual after-dinner diversion the Baron, a musician himself, entered the room and silently listened while the young man played. Upon inquiring the name of the composer he was informed that it was simply an improvisation.

“Can you play it again?” asked the Baron.

“Certainly, sir,” and it was done.

“Can you arrange it for an orchestra?”

“Do so and call at my office next Monday at ten A.M.”

The substitute teacher hurried home, told his room-mate that something was up—he didn’t know what—and went to work on his orchestration. At the time appointed the chumps presented themselves at the big establishment in the Boulevard Haussmann, and were promptly admitted to the banker’s private office. The great financier, after greeting the young student, said:

“I have engaged the Theater Francaise and an orchestra of fifty musicians which you will conduct.”

The young man listened in open-eyed astonishment while the banker continued: “I do this on one condition—that you promise to compose something every month for a year.”

The youth who thus was offered the chance of a lifetime, under such magnificent patronage, did what a less highly-strung, less sensitive nature would never have done—fainted.

Of course the offer was accepted with profuse thanks, and the next day was appointed for rehearsal. The fifty musicians were in their chairs when Rothschild, accompanied by his protege and Phillips arrived, and curious were their looks of wonderment when they saw that their conductor was a headless boy. One ancient ‘celist laid down his instrument and refused to play under so young a conductor, but was “persuaded” by Rothschild to go ahead.

The parts were distributed, and the splendid orchestra played the composition through, having for their sole audience the great banker and the bewildered Phillips.

At its conclusion, with one accord, the players of the brass instruments gave the “fau-fare” the highest compliment one musician can pay to another. In less than a week mercantile Paris was wild over the new waltz, and the composer’s name was in every mouth.

Like Byron, he awoke one morning and found himself famous—a made man at 19. The waltz performed that day by the fifty, before the audience of two, was the celebrated “Les Sirènes,” and the youthful composer’s name—Waldteufel.—J. P. Wilson.

Only Too True

THE Matinee Girl in the Dramatic Mirror bits the nail on the head in the manner:

"The critics all seem to have begun the season with axes sharpened to a keen edge. They've been chopping unmercifully at everything in sight since the curtain first went up.

"I know that lots of papers demand that those who fill the office of critics should 'roast' unmercifully on the principle that an attack upon a play, an actor or a book makes the strongest kind of selling.

"But on reading over many of the theatrical reviews in the dailies, it would seem that the post of critic is gradually becoming that of the court jester who puts on cap and bells when a new play is produced and starts in to be funny.

"And all the time he dances himself into the view of the reader crying aloud, 'I'm writing this. Observe my cold cynical disregard for the feelings of this little actress who is trying to earn her living just as I tried to earn mine before I grew famous, funny and rich!"

"Watch me jump on this old actress who has grown stout and lost her charm. Give me time to think of some screamingly insulting thing to write about her. Notice my style. Don't I do it neatly?"

"Perhaps this is all necessary for the growth of the stage. Mayhap it improves actors in their work. I don't pretend to know anything about those deep problems."

"It seems to me just as disagreeable, silly and untrue as the over-facile praises that come from the press agents on carbon-copied type written paper.

"It's cheap, like a great many other things that have nothing to distinguish them except the flagrant disregard of the rule to live and let live, and do as you would be done by."

She Was Deeply Moved

IT was at the close of one of Padrewski's concerts. The pianist had held his audience spellbound for over two hours. Women had sobbed as that divine "Nocturne," with its tender sadness and inexorable pathos, thrrobbed its way into their very souls. Chopin's wonderful music, with its world of feeling, had wrung my heart-strings, and every one about me seemed moved out of himself and strung up to an intense nervous pitch. Then it was all over at last.

Suddenly, in the crowd surging out of the theater, I caught sight of a face which appealed to me irresistibly, so full was it of intense yearning, hamstrung hopes, unrealized ideals. It was a girl's face, sweet, tender, sad, with an intensity and nervous force that was accentuated by her musical temperament now evidently moved to its utmost by the exquisite music she had just heard. There was soul behind those great brown eyes, intellectual power in the broad brow, and a wonderful play of feeling around that tender, sensitive mouth. I could not hear what she was saying to her companion, but her gestures and the different expressions that played over her mobile face fascinated me.

As we reached the last exit the crowd moved me close to her. Her voice was worthy of her face. It was low, soft, and full of feeling, but I strained my ears to hear what she was saying. Something about the music I was sure, she was so earnest over it. I got closer to her. We were almost out now. A moment more and it would be too late, and I was so curious, so anxious, to hear just a little of what she was saying. I did. I heard one sentence, just one.

The words came clearly and with much emphasis, "Well, his hair gives me a swift pain."—Chicago News Record.

Still at it

MRS. HOWARD GOULD—on the stage Catherine Clemenons—the former California actress, has recently with her husband being created very much of a furor in European yachting circles. Besides entertain the Emperor William and the Empress on board, they have captivated His Imperial Highness Grand Duke Alexius and other distinguished Russians who have pronounced the Gould yacht Niagara superior in comfort and luxury to even the imperial yacht Tsar. The Niagara has cruised off the coast of Norway on the voyage to Russia. The visit of Emperor William was totally unexpected. He being perfectly delighted with everything he saw on board, even the electric curling-irons in the dressing-rooms of the ladies, William and his officers most carefully scrutinized every part of the vessel. When the Czar came up the Neva last week in a small yacht, the Niagara was anchored just below the bridges opposite the imperial landing stage. Mr. Gould had the rigging decked with the flags of all American States.

That there are five thousand theaters in America, and that 1,500,000 people attend them each week-day night, spending $50,000,000 a year on theater-going are the surprising facts with which Franklin Fyles, the dramatic editor of the New York Sun will open an important series in the next issue of the Ladies' Home Journal. The series will be called "The Theater and Its People," and will run through seven numbers of the magazine, lavishly illustrated with pictures made by twelve different artists.
HOTEL TOPSY TURVY

AT THE COLUMBIA
How Funny!

The Woman of the World, writing in the Sunday Telegraph, says: “The long comedian, Edwin Stevens, who has recently returned from California, was hailed on Broadway the other morning by Harry Corson Clarke—the San Francisco pet—who slapped him on the back with a hearty ‘Glad to see you, old man; how does San Francisco look these days?’ ‘With the air of a man who is happy over an ended exile, Mr. Stevens illumined his features with a glowing cigarette and replied, ‘It looks mighty nice from Broadway.’”

“Any profession in which all of us who have gazed over the sad blue waves of the Pacific and longed for a glimpse of the Statue of Liberty and the Brooklyn Bridge will agree with the faintest shadow of argument.”

Snap Shots

MORRIS MEYERFELD, JR.

As well up in matters of dress as in song, Mr. Meyerfeld is perhaps the most musical of the gentlemen who take up the profession of a singer for the purpose of making the American life pleasant.

She’s Getting On

Anna Suits is another of the Tivoli girls who has done well in the East. A reviewer in the New York Telegraph has the following to say of her appearance in Lawrence Webber’s The Parisian Widows: “Another act that was well received was that of Anna Suits. She has been so ill as to be unable to fill dates at the continuous houses this summer, and the public has been left its traces upon her voice, but this fact was not noticed by the audience, and the act is a very pretty one. Two special settings are used to carry three songs, and as a novelty act it is as well staged as any offering in this line. Three persons are used in two of the songs, and there is a cakewalk in addition to the singing. Miss Suits is a good looking girl, whose method conceals much of her breath, and bringing a shrill-ness of tone her voice is good even now. When she has more fully recovered from her illness, the act will be a crackajack, for Miss Suits is clever and the scenic part of it is all first-class, and not this silly trunk stuff that is dingy before it is used and worse afterward. There should be more acts like this in vaudeville, for picture acts are needed badly, and there are few with energy enough to fill the demand.”

Anna and the Tars

L ORIS is what Leander Richardson of New York said last week of the French dancers: “Anna Held hasn’t taken out naturalization papers or done any of the flam-bouyantly patriotic things by which foreign stars are wont to win American favor; but she is very much a national institution, even if she doesn’t have recourse to the naturalization scheme of advertising.”

“This soft-eyed French charmer—French charmer is what Maggie Chire calls her—has been chosen to head the bill of entertainment at the smoker to be given the Dewey sailors at the Waldorf-Astoria. I am sorry for the noble crew of the Olympia. There isn’t the ghost of a chance that one of those tars will escape from that smoker without a broken heart, for Anna’s gown is sure to complete the devastation begun by Anna’s eyes and Anna’s new songs.

“The dress which is to dazzle that conquering crew is the most heart-thrilling creation ever came from Paris. It is of palest lemon-colored satin, embroidered in orchids, that stand out from the fabric in such richness and truth of coloring that the fortunate seaman will be the first to see it are sure to want a climb over the footlights and pick them off the pretty gown they decorate.”

COAST MUSICIANS’ UNION

The Pacific Coast Musicians’ Union was organized Friday night of last week at Native Sons’ Hall as an assembly of the Knights of Labor, with a membership of 50. The following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing term: Master workman, R. B. Barton; worthy foreman, I. C. Levey; worthy inspector, L. R. Heitler; almoner, R. A. Silvas; recording secretary, George Ethman, Jr.; financial secretary, W. C. Swavel; treasurer, H. J. Seegelen; statistician, F. R. Garett; unknown knight, George Hilderbrand; inside esquire, Victor Anderson; outside esquire, A. B. Gauze. The union being a bona fide labor union will ask for its share of patronage from the people of San Francisco and also the state of California.

Clarke’s Ingenuity

The Mirror has the following to say of Harry Corson Clarke’s new company:

Harry Corson Clarke is a natural collector. He has made collections of everything from coins and postage stamps up to prayer-rugs and Indian baskets. Occasionally a fire robs him of his treasures. Then he begins all over again. His latest fad seems to be in collecting people with unusual careers—not “pasts”—for his company. He has already secured a member of the 400 for his leading juvenile. Word comes from Honolulu that he has engaged Allan Dunn for characters. Dunn studied art in the Quartier Latin in Paris. Then he traveled over South America, painting pictures. He edited a magazine once in Colorado. Then he went out in Shakespearean repertoire companies. He traveled last Winter to the Hawaiian Islands as a member of Janet Waldo’s company, and after that organization divided he went into journalism in Honolulu.

Mr. Clarke has secured Stewart Allen, late of E. S. Willard’s and Nat Goodwin’s companies, for stage director. He has engaged a soldier of the First Iowa Regiment for property man. The property man is now homeward bound from Manila, where he fought with distinction. He was in Mr. Clarke’s company two seasons ago. Mr. Clarke thinks that his experience in the army will tend to make him a better property man than he was before—especially in one night stands.

Mr. Clarke opened negotiations with a minor poet whom he wanted for advance agent. The minor poet, however, learned that an advance agent is obliged to leave New York. He told Mr. Clarke that he preferred a bench in Union Square to the best bed in all the provinces. Mr. Clarke made remarks and left him to his bench.

The Columbia season started off with a fine first week. The business has been immense and if the response of theater-goers to the present offering be any criterion, the outlook for the season is exceedingly bright, as the list of attractions is such as to warrant a similar response on many occasions.

The Passion Play

The villagers of Oberammergau are now discussing the merits of the candidates for the parts in next year’s Passion Play. A new playhouse of iron is being erected and will be roofed over, not open to the sky like the old wooden one. The new house will accommodate 6,000 spectators. In 1890 the receipts were $175,000, while $60,000 was expended on the players, the principal actors receiving $500, while even the little children in the chorus were given $10 apiece. The coming event is expected to be still more prosperous.

The success of the Dramatic Review has set the theatrical folk talking. There have long needed such just a page.}

So many women of age and experience are going to play Hamlet this fall it might be asked, "Will the ghost walk regularly with them all?"

It is gravely published that Dramatic Review has fared fitter actors from old tombs. This is hardly so bad as getting plots and dialogue from dead writers.

The Broadways is running a serial story called In Pursuit of Virtue. Judging from some of the naughty pictures in the magazine, it is only right to warn the author of the story that he is on the wrong track.

There are at least a dozen Dewey theaters in as many cities. This taking advantage of the popular current is an old idea in amusement. When Louis Philippe was King of the French a menagerie there announced the 'royal Bengal tiger.' When Napoleon III was made President it became the 'republican Bengal tiger.'

No doubt many reasons exist why a "burlesque show" in its commonest acceptance has become almost synonymous with much that is flashy and indecently suggestive. But how wrong it would be to advance a principal's publicity by a liberal use of imagination and fake stories not yet quoted? At the same time it cannot be denied that for a country which stands at the head of the world's procession of newspaper writers for general inventiveness and freshness, these little tales concerning actors and actress are show an astonishing lack of color and variety. In fact, they are commencing to take on the monotonous aspect that used to distinguish the works of those professional joke who never got beyond such topics as the usual jest, the common punch line, the mother-in-law. Still when the modern press agent does turn his talents in an apparently unexplored direction something always creeps in to stamp the thing as a fraud. Thus in the statement that a New York actress the other day had a snake sent to her by some presumably jealous rival, every inducement was held out to the credulous to believe it by not insisting either on the serpent's ex- ceptional size or pious character. So the inference was suggested that it was sent only to scare her. Here, however, the weakness of the assumption comes out. If scaring her had really been the object they would have sent her a mouse.

What has become of the organization that was formed to weld the stage and the pulpit for united religious effort? The only noticeable effect it had in New York was the turning of serious-minded Lady Burt into a more pious way, and some of her stage friends is foolish enough to poke fun at her efforts. One of the writers said that Miss Burt, as a foilower before the footlights, was a shoe to see much is to what comes to a question of piety, she is about as convincing as a carpet-tack in a plum-pudding. Why not let her alone? She isn't hurting anybody.

Already the first touches of a blighting frost have struck the early growth of the season's "great" productions. Stuart Robson has discovered there were flies upon The Gadfly, the new play which was to boost him into fame as a serious actor, and it will be laid upon the shelf, with the probability of the door being locked and the key thrown away. He has not been taken in by any means as serious-minded as public as black as to see himself, and his short flight into the higher regions of the drama is doubted at an end. Francis Wilson also has not been encouraged in his attempt to make Cyro de Bergerac subservient to his original designs, and the book will be reconstructed on the lines of a regular comic opera of the conventional brand.

The rage for realism that has attacked all stage performances has appeared in London of late, and its limit appears the subterfuges by means of which they become actors. In other words, when the audience is given a view of a dressing room, with all its incidental of make-up and make-shift. This is not necessarily to say that theater is or rather true to art, but it has a depressing effect not alone upon the spectators, but upon the work of the players themselves. Reversing the situation of seeing themselves as others would that three miles across the world a peep in o that holy of holies which, while novel to the eyes before the footlights, tears down the last barrier of illusion which the theater-going public is a probably the most notable achievement of recent years ago. Fred Cooper was running the Pavilion in Los Angeles doing fairly well with stock productions, at 10, 20 and 30 cents. One week he discovered that he had no play for the week following. At the time of the discovery, Fitz Murphy was in the Pavilion. He told Cooper he had one that needed only a little touching up—its name was Killarney. Cooper told him to get it in shape. Fitz went home, took up his pencil and wrote a melodrama in seven acts and in three days he handed over the manuscript to Cooper. And it wasn't such a bad thing, either, as melodramas go. And do the work justice, Fitz took care of the leading role, and entertained his auditors with not only high flown Irish sentiments, but with song and dance.

Glancing over the bill at Koster & Bial's of last week and seeing the big name above Laura Hope Harring that gifted woman's last appearance in San Francisco, at the Orpheum. En- dowed with a really marvelous violin skill and a charming personality, not the least dimmed by a severely plain face, she has always been a great favorite with public audiences. Her visit to San Francisco last summer was the occasion of her first appearance in this city in vaudeville, and she con- fided to the writer that in con- cession she had dreaded most fearfully; she did not know how she would be received by a vaudeville audience or what brusqueness she might be subject to while on the stage. The or- dwell, her radiant face and en- thusiasm told me that, as I had expected, her fears had all been unfounded. Her pleasure was very great and she never tires of telling of the courteous, generous consideration shown her at the Manager Morrison's popular play house, and she has always declared that her engagement at the Orpheum was really the most delightful one she ever filled.

Between Acts

Francis Powers' new piece, Mother Earth, which will have a production at the Alalexar about Nov. 1st, is described as a play of Mexican life with a tendency to tragedy. It will require an elaborate mounting with special scenery for every act and a good deal of local coloring to get the effect. A fandango will be introduced and Mr. Bruegare has composed incidental music as well as selections for the entire acts.

Hotel Toppy Turvy, one of the important musical comedies of the theatrical year, will be seen at the Columbia Theater, commencing Monday, Oct. 9th, and running for two weeks.
Personal Mention

Laura Burt is replacing Marie Dresser in The Man in the Moon in the New York run, owing to the latter's illness.

George Fawcett will retire from William H. Crane's Company on Oct. 21 to resume his original part in Miss Adams Company in The Little Minister.

George W. Floyd, for many years a well-known theatrical manager, is to open a handsome cafe at the corner of Broadway and Thirty-first street, New York.

Madeline McKissick, a handsome and well-known society amateur, is now playing professionally with Modjeska. She has lately been married, but found the marriage bond irksome.

Franklin Fyles, the dramatic editor of the New York Sun and a playwright who has achieved some reputation in the past few years, is a pretty sick man, and his friends fear that his condition is serious.

William J. Lemoyne has been engaged to support Miss Marlowe in the coming production of Barbara Freitchie. He is to play the part that was intended for the use of Joseph Brennan, who was for the moment put into the cast of The Only Way.

San Francisco will be glad to learn that Edwin Stevens in His Excellency has made an immediate and pronounced success, punctuated with eleven curtain calls. Ethel Barrymore is of the company, and there is talk of a long run in Boston and New York.

Minna Titul is playing with Frederick Warde.

Virginia Drew was offered a place with Miss Gae for the season, but could not accept.

Marjorie Kane of Lewis Morrison's First Road Company has been quite ill. She is now recovering.

Ernest Hastings, so the report has reached the Review, has left Stuart Robson and his unsuccessful Gals.

A REMNANT of the Lombardi Opera Company that had a disastrous season in this city is traveling eastward. They have been showing in Denver.

Frank Murray writes us from Los Angeles that T. Daniel Frawley and his company will return Thanksgiving and play a long engagement at the California.

Jessie Bateman, who is remembered here with A Brute of Partridges, is credited with one of the successes in The Last Chapter in London. Thomas A. Wise also scored a hit in the part he played at the Garden Theatre, New York.

The rehearsals of Peter Stuyvesant, Governor of New Amsterdam, William H. Crane's new play, are now under way, and are in charge of Bronson Howard, who with Brander Matthews is responsible for the work. The cast is a large one, and there is a number of supernumeraries. In fact, the production is such a large one, both in the number of its people and the quantity of its scenery and properties that Mr. Crane does not intend to present it in any but the large cities. Nearly three months of his season will be spent in New York city.

Theodore Bromley, business manager for Frederick Warde, has been obliged to retire from that position because of ill health. His place with the company was taken by E. D. Shaw on Sept. 25.

The little differences between the star and diplomatic T. Daniel Frawley and handsome Mary Hampton seems to have been adjusted, for the latter is now playing leading roles with the Frawley Company in Los Angeles.

Joe Rosenthal, well known on the coast as an outdoor advertiser for anything from a circus up, has arrived in the city to take charge of the Alhambra's hill-posting and lithographing. He has been with the Grand at Kansas City for the past five seasons.

The Dramatic News of New York says: "Miss Mary Hampton left New York on Saturday en route to Los Angeles, where she is to join T. Daniel Frawley's Company next week. Her first appearance with the company will be as Drusilla Ives in the Dancing Girl, the role originated at the Lyceum Theater by Virginia Harned. Miss Hampton has always had a fondness for this character, and her friends have told her that she is eminently suited to it. Mr. Frawley, I believe, is to play the opposite part, which was first acted by Mr. Sothern. After playing three weeks in Los Angeles, the company will go to San Francisco for several weeks, and then proceed to Honolulu. It is the Honolulu trip that appears most of all to Miss Hampton, as she has several times been to the Golden Gate, but has never yet pressed onward to the picturesque islands recently acquired by Uncle Sam."

Harry Brown, the well known vocal teacher, has several promising promising pupils who will be heard in concert and in comic opera.

Ambrose Fitzallen who used to coo with Ernest Hastings at the Alcazar is doing the part of Rosco in Puddin' Head Wilson this season.

Ynez Diaz, the statuesque contralto now singing at the Tivoli, is the mother of Dorothy Creede, adopted by the rich miner a few years before his death. Little Dorothy, as soon as peeling difficulties over the settlement of the Creede estate are settled, will come in for a large share of the late millionaire's money.

The Mirror says: Mr. Meyerfeld, President of the Walter Orpheum Company, arrived in New York on Sunday last. His object is mainly recreation, and when he and Mr. and Mrs. Schimpf have seen the Dewey festivities they will return to the coast. Mr. Meyerfeld will visit all the New York theaters during his stay.

Ada Colley, the singer with the phenomenal voice, now appearing at Koster & Bial's, is receiving the congratulations of her friends on the start of her career. It is with Sydney Colman, a wealthy American, who met her in London. The contract is for life, and when the wedding bells shall have rung for the happy pair Miss Colley's high notes may possibly be heard only in the precincts of her own home.

Mrs. Mary Linck says she is to leave for New York Sunday night, and has only a three days' rest after her long overland trip before she opens with the Castle Square Company in Asia at the American Theater. The Castle Square Company is divided into grand and comic opera divisions, and will alternate the entire season between the Shubert Theater, Chicago, and the American at New York.
The Columbia
For the opening night of the second week the Modjeska Company presented Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing. In such comedy roles as Beatrice, the intelligent art of Madame Modjeska never fails of a winsome interpretation, but it cannot be said that her presentation attains to the height of her more dramatic interpretations. Miss Kate Dalgis was a picturesque and lovable Hero, and her rendition was admirable in every way. To the men of the company must be given the honors of the evening John Kellett, he of the nameless presence and rich, round voice, was a very entertaining Iden-dick. It was a characterization so indescribable, so individualistic, that it is almost a hermaphrodite. H. A. German, his character of the young, tinctly handsome, and his voice, is effective to the last. Miss Ada Ladd sang a new patriotic song and it took so well that she was compelled to repeat it three times. Her make-up as a captain was so good that even the ladies fell in love with her. Miss Sullivan, in her usual grey suit, was as fine as usual. Miss Willy Mason was cast as Grencha, a role that gave ample opportunity for her voice, and Miss Willa Wakefield as Van Winkle, and it is only justice to say that the part was never in better hands. His interpretation was unusually good. Thomas Perse, Arthur Woolley and Winfred Goff as the phan-tom crew and Nace Bonville as Peter Stein and Wooley as the innkeeper were all that could have been desired. While Perse was singing, his roles took fire from his long pipe without missing a note he snuffed it out, or he thought he had. He threw the rove over his shoulder, when the fire began blazing again, Woolley and Goff quickly extinguished it, preventing probable serious injury to Persoe, whose coolness was most commendable. Miss Bessee Fairbairn was Katrina, the innkeeper's daughter, and she looked, sung and acted the part in a most satisfactory manner. A novel feature of the performance was the Swedish Shoe Dance by Katherine Gay, Jeanette Fredericks, Irene Du Voil, Ida St Aubin, Alice Gray, Zora Irwin, Katrina Witt and Ethel Strachan.

The Alcazar
Roland Reed's successful comedy, Innocent as a Lamb, is the attraction at The Alcazar this week, and is playing to crowded houses. The part of the "deceiving husband" Tobias Pilkington, "who gets injured in a railroad accident going to Boston," etc., is very creditably portrayed by Eugene O'monde, who kept the audience in a constant roar of laughter. Miss Mary Howe as the trusting wife, Mrs. Pil- kington, was as usual up to her standard. Geo. P. Webster, cast as William Bouncer M. D., an artist in black eyes, was indeed a credit, and his laugh and makeup were exceedingly "tough." Mr. Frank Deninrothe, as Jack Summerville of the firm of "Summerville & Frost" of the "Harlem Truth," in search of news for his paper, was very good. Miss Gertrude Foster as Kitty Farnhoro has very little to do, but what little she did do, it was very quiet and nicely done. The minor characters were all well played, especially Carlyle Moore, as Mr. Hammerschlagcr, the German, who looked quite a good deal of laughter.

Grand Opera House
Rip Van Winkle drew as large an audience at the Grand Opera House this week as did The Drum Major's Daughter last week, and the opera was equally well rendered. With only one song and very little else to do, Hattie Belle Ladd made a decided "hit." She was the dashing captain of grenadiers, a part far better suited to a good drummerboy in last week's production, Miss Ladd sang a new patriotic song and it took so well that she was compelled to repeat it three times. Her make-up as a captain was so good that even the ladies fell in love with her. Miss Sullivan, in her usual grey suit, was as fine as usual. Miss S. W. Mason was cast as Grencha, a role that gave ample opportunity for her voice, and Miss A. W. Wakefield as Van Winkle, and it is only justice to say that the part was never in better hands. His interpretation was unusually good. Thomas Perse, Arthur Woolley and Winfred Goff as the phantom crew and Nace Bonville as Peter Stein and Wooley as the innkeeper were all that could have been desired. While Perse was singing, his roles took fire from his long pipe without missing a note he snuffed it out, or he thought he had. He threw the rove over his shoulder, when the fire began blazing again, Woolley and Goff quickly extinguished it, preventing probable serious injury to Persoe, whose coolness was most commendable. Miss Bessee Fairbairn was Katrina, the innkeeper's daughter, and she looked, sung and acted the part in a most satisfactory manner. A novel feature of the performance was the Swedish Shoe Dance by Katherine Gay, Jeanette Fredericks, Irene Du Voil, Ida St Aubin, Alice Gray, Zora Irwin, Katrina Witt and Ethel Strachan.
The Orpheum

The Orpheum presents another all-star bill this week and crowned houses attest their approval of the acts presented. Felix Morris and company are back for one more week and play repertoire. Behind the Scenes has already been reviewed in these columns and The Old Musician was played here on a former visit. In the new piece The Old Vagabond, Mr. Morris appears to better advantage than in any of his three plays. The pathetic lines are read with that carefull disciplining which his prose is the front rank of American character actors. Miss Mary Townley is also cast in a congenial role as Ruth Ashton and her work gives great promise. Mr. Lardner was efficient as the artist. Musical acts gave the audience a number of the little details of stage direction which makes every move of his clever company a pretty stage picture. The Misses Oriska Worden, Adele Archer, and Vira Kidd who are billed as the Hawaiian Queens sing an operetta entitled The Queen’s Fan very acceptably. The young ladies are all possessed of good voices and dress the piece in a handsome manner. Their stage setting is also very elaborate and beautiful. If there is any fault to be found with their act it would be in the fact that their enunciation was not very clear at times. Frank Cushman still occupies the place of honor on the bill and tells a new lot of stories in his own original way. Forrest and King, the other newcomers, do a grotesque dance-turn which is more or less a repetition of others that have been seen on the same stage but they do it well. All of the holdovers, Jennie Yeaman, Stinson and Merton, Terry and Lambert, and O. G. Seymour and Miss Dupree continue to amuse the large audiences.

The Chutes

Baby Ryan, the child singer and dancer, is the best of the new features at the Chutes this week. The pretty little girl has a sweet voice and does some steps which evoked great applause. Friedlander Bros. come next in popularity with their comedy musical act. They play a number of unique instruments. The R GROUPS, aerial acrobats, are the other newcomers. Adgie continues to put the ladies in a tremor with her daring in the lions’ den. Roberto Lane, Irene Franklin and the animascope complete the bill. Harmon and Seabury do their high dives at the close of every performance.

The Olympia

The new feature at the Olympia this week is Maurice Montague, a baritone singer of repert. Ruth Velta is making her usual weekly hit and introduces a real Filipino baby in the chorus of one of her songs. Maud Mulley’s deep contralto voice and J. Halliday’s graceful tenor are so much alike that it is a little hard to please the many patrons. The old features are Zoe Matthews, Carlton & Royce, Dora Mervin, Rose Wellington, Dolly Mitchell Dot Stanley and Ed Dolan.

The Oreron

Miss Marie Wilbur made her debut before San Francisco audience at the Oreron Monday. She has a wonderfully good voice which she uses with rare effect, thrilling her audiences and eliciting much applause. Her singing of “Il Bacio” and “The Last Rose” has remained unusually good. Miss Annette George the balladist and Miss Agnes Castro, the mezzo-soprano, repeated their success of the previous week and were rewarded with flattering applause. Miss Reynolds the trombonist of the American Ladies’ Orchestra, performed a solo and had to respond to an encore. The orchestral program was new and select and the moving pictures highly amusing.

Vaudeville Notes

Lizzie B. Raymond has visited Ireland and the Lakes of Killarney. Henry E. Doxxey goes into vaudeville again. This time with success. Breaking up Housekeeping, John Hansons and Mabel Drew’s sketch, is going very well indeed. Stuart Roson was offered a twenty week vaudeville engagement last week at an enormous salary. Baldwin and Daly put out a vaudeville and pantomime company. Geo. Bonag is to be the manager. Wood and Sheppard are on the continent and have made such a hit they declare they will never leave it.

A new vaudeville sketch is called A Grave of Woodock. It is played by Leslie Palmer and the Bigelow Twins. Diana heads a company next season of vaudeville and high class repertoire. She will be managed by R. K. Kirk.

Elvia Croix Seabrooke and William H. West have a musical sketch by George Totten Smith which they expect to do in the vaudeville houses.

M. C. Anderson’s new vaudeville sketch is on the scene at the Olympia Square in Cincinnati will open Oct. 15. The house now has an entrance from Walnut street.

Violet Dale is playing the Castle circuit. The Keessings open at the Delmonico, B. C., on the 9th. Burt and Whitman are at the Park Theater, Chicago, Illinois.

Queenie Myrtle is underlined for the Trilby, Victoria, October 16th. Morgan and Morgan are features at the People’s Theater, Seattle, Washington.

Mr. Royle and his wife will spend five weeks at the Orpheum during the coming season.

Scribner’s Magazine for October contains an article on modern vaudeville by Edwin Milton Royle.

Cod Wilson is under contract to appear at the Chutes and Olympia, commencing November 20th.

White and Harris open at the Orpheum, Omaha, October 9th, with Kansas and Denver and Chicago to follow.

Harry De Lain, now playing Keith’s New York, appears in this city November 25th, at the Chutes, with Olympia to follow.

The Fredericksburg Music Hall, Portland, Oregon, has changed hands. Brown and Grant are now the proprietors. Louis Dammash, the former manager, retires to private life.

Trixie Coleman, well known in vaudeville, has won great favor in Honolulu. Last Saturday night admirers threw a shower of silver on the stage at the conclusion of her act. Good girl, Trixie.

The Arch Street Theater, Philadelphia, is to be made a vaudeville house. At present there are three vaudeville theaters in Philadelphia, and the population is quite large enough to stand another, or even three more.

International Music Hall, Rossbud, B. C., Oct. 2—Conlin & Ryder, Sue Blanchard, Leonie Mendel, Floris Du Bois, Bohemian Troubadours, Perry Sisters, Pearl and Cassoly, Plo Patterson, Amelia, Rice Sisters and Emma Whitney.

Rose Melville, who deserted vaudeville for legitimate, won good opinion for her work as star, but her play is declared not up to the mark, and in need of rewriting. By the time Miss Melville arrives New York everything will be in shape.

Some of the American actors abroad are making tremendous hits. Those that are the stars of the bills are Stanley and Birbeck, Morris Cronin, Robinobo-Baker trio, Daisy Meyer and her son, Hengler sisters, Sparrow, the juggler, Nelson T. dawn, the coin juggler, and Kiltytrick and Barber.

One night last week an enthusiastic audience in the Olympia was so pleased with Ruth Nelta’s Filipino baby that he threw a handful of small silver coins. It was the cue for a general hail of dimes, quarters and and nickels and the little tot must have reaped a harvest of at least ten dollars.

Sid Baxter will be in this city Oct. 23.

Lou Adler opens at the Midway the 9th.

Tone Berydorf and Mollie Mason are at Oxnard, Cal.

The Gem, Missoula, is doing a phenomenal business.

Starr & Dearin, the sketch team, are due in this city during the holidays.

Zoyarr, the Globe Artist, is at Skagway, Alaska, to follow.

Henry Dixey tries vaudeville again. Henry doesn’t stay away very long at a time.

Irene Vinton is on the high road to recovery. She opens at the Chutes the 13th.

Archie Levy’s International cake-walkers take the road early in November.

Smith O’Brien is a newcomer from Ireland. He is a monologist and is said to be good.

Julia Lynon and Mattie Nichols met with much success at The Buffet, Los Angeles, California.

St. Clair and Wilson arrive in this city October 17th and depart for Sydney, N. W., on the 18th.

Ister Price, a Los Angeles girl, goes East in a few days to join Two Married Men Company.

Querin Vincent, Frank Labor and Johnny Dyllyn, all Frisco people, are with Johnny Ray’s A Hot Old Time. Helen Warner of the team Mollen and Warle, was married to Michael Casey, the famous ex-jockey, Oct. 2d.

Reports came in announcing the successful re-opening of the Orpheus, Randsburg, and the Standard Theater, Bakersfield, Calif.

Marshall P. Wilder made a tremendous hit in Columbus. The local papers gave him columns and the society people there feted him. Wilder is one of the solid cards of vaudeville.

Pauline Hall contemplates starring again, but her salaries constantly offered by her vaudeville magnates are very tempting, and the only Remorse may remain doing two a day.

A new vaudeville couple with a new sketch appeared at Keith’s Philadelphia house last week with success. They are Anna Maitland and Charles Murray and they played Our Honeymoon.

The Columbia Theater, St. Louis, has been made a “ten-twenty-thirty” vaudeville house, under the management of Middleton and Tate. Mme. Herrmann was the headline last week.

The Nourse O’Neill’s engagement at Corday’s Portland Theater was one of the most successful engagements ever played by a theatrical company in Portland. Manager Corday and Miss Rankin, Miss O’Neill’s manager, will, it is said, be about $20,000 better off in consequence of it. This is a record-breaker for Portland.

Correspondence and Comments

October 7th, 1899

Col. Hopkins' excellent stock company playing The Broken's daughter, with Josephine Gunawan and her pickpockets, Al Blanchard and the Biograph, with Admiral Dewey on board the Olympia, as entertainers between the acts, is packing Hopkins Imperial Theater. At the Standard Ford Rider's Mountain Range Extravagansa Company is giving Manager Butler's patrons a show that radiates with spiciness. To be slung, "it's a warm baby." It has not been mentioned by New York, where he organized an excellent stock company. They have been engaged by Mr. Vava, Mizzoura, and Tack for the season at the Grand Opera House. The management of the Grand had intended to only look good traveling companies, but they discovered that it was impossible to give their patrons all first class performances and they cancelled their bookings and engaged Larry Plagiarus, who is well known on the coast, is ahead of Mathews & Bulger. He will be with you in a few weeks. Larry is a brilliant writer and a genial Bohemian.

Elliot Tovy, who is the star with Hotel Topey Tury, anticipates with much pleasure his visit to the coast. Tovy will join the cocktail brigade on Stock Company, in which he will be one of the main attractions. He has already been in the show for several weeks.

Among the pretty faces in Francis Wilson's Company is noticeable that of Miss Edith de Muth who, before she came East to study under Tom Karl, the toster, studied with Francis Stuart of San Francisco.

In the play Lu Mizzoura at the Murray Hill and the last week was an Illustration of how quickly time can change the apparent meaning of words. A man is shot in a barroom. Some one asks where, and the reply is, "In the neck." This answer now always causes laughter, yet when the line was written seven years ago it was intended to be serious and was taken by the audiences.

ROB ROY

ST. LOUIS Special Correspondent.

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 28.—Comedy reigns supreme with us this week. The Empire Stock Company, headed by that versatile actor, William Faversham, is playing before the patrons of the Century Theater an excellent performance of Lord and Lady Aglay. Mathews and Bulger are at the Olympia by the St. Louis Waves, a ragtime opera. The boys are very funny and have an excellent company. They are westward bound and the theater patrons of Frisco will have an opportunity to see them again during October. Mathews and Bulger's old farce, At Gay Coney Island, essayed by a number 2 company, is pleasing the patrons at Frisco. Martin's Uncle Tom's Cabin is at the Grand Opera House. Neil Burgess in a condensation of The County Fair is the featured vaudeville piece at the Columbia.

The Castle Square Opera Company, which has been a half and a half at the American Theater, will open its third New York season to-morrow evening with The Master Builder (by Ibsen). This is the first time Wagner's opera has been produced in English in America. There are several changes in the company this season. By the company lost Little Macmillan, the mezzo-costratto, who was its greatest favorite; and by resignation its principal comedian, Robert Hackett, who has gone to join The Three Little Lamb's Company. But Miss Grace Goldin, the soprano star, and Osbourne is the Italian. This in Europe for a year, has returned to the cast, and there will be some other entirely new members who may merit recognition as the season progresses.

Ida Van Sickel, one of the prettiest girls of the Opera House, is married. Keith's continuous show last week in a new comedy sketch Sus Todd of Yale, in which Harry Lacy was the principal comedian. Miss Van Sickel made a decided impression in her dainty pajamas.

Stuart Robson's production of The Gadfly at the Wadsworth was not a success. After a two weeks' run, Robson closed his engagement last night and gave way to his old partner, Wm. H. Crane, in his new play of Peter Stuyvesant, Governor of New Amsterdam, which will begin to-morrow night. Robson slept in The Gadfly or else make it more of a comedy.

A Stranger in a Strange Land, the only important play at present, is at the Manhattan. Sidney Wintner and Walter Vincent are the authors; and Jos. E. Grisor is the one responsible for the production. It was only natural that Grisor should have picked out George Osborne for the main acting of the part. Osborne had been engaged in the part for some time but his appearance in the play was last week, and he had been warned that he would not get out of the way of the principal star. He has since returned to the stage and to his old place. The play has been running for some time and now this is its last week. Osborne is one of the most promising young actors in the city and his appearance in the play will be a great asset to the company.

The Garden Theater last week opened with Rupert of Hentzau, which had been prematurely stopped at the Lyceum last season to permit James R. Hackett to support it with a fine team in Romeo and Juliet at the Grand Lyceum. Rupert of Hentzau is the sequel to Anthony Hope's The Prisoner of Zenda.

Francis Wilson, with the aid of Harry Smith, a pair of acrobats and a derrick, is loading up his original seriously version of Cynaro de Bergasre with jokelets such as his friends like to see. He has a very good program and hopes to have a very good audience every night and before the clever little comedian is ready to go on the road, his revised and up-to-date Cy-
MUSIC IN GENERAL

Weimar is to have a List orchestra which will cost $6,000.

Ernst Von Dohnanyi, a young Hungarian pianist, comes to this country in the spring.

Mascagni announces a tour of Europe next season, with an orchestra of ninety Italian musicians.

Ten thousand dollars has been subscribed for a Schumann monument at Zwickau, and Hartmann has been commissioned to execute it.

Theodor Bjorksten has organized what he calls The Bach singers of New York, and announces that he will give concerts in Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Boston as New York.

The report is again going the rounds that the Royal Opera Company, Berlin, with its orchestra, costumes and scenery, will give a season of opera at the Drury Lane Theatre, London, next summer.

Melba is very popular in London for dramatic entertainments and is filling a large number of them. She makes an operatic tour as Griest this season in many Russian, Austrian and German cities.

At Buenos Ayres, both Die Walküre and Falstaff were held recently. They were given in Italian and the former opera was literally hissed off the stage, while Mascagni's Iris was received with wild applause.

The Philadelphia Symphony Society held its first rehearsal under Fritz Scherel, Saturday September 30. An unprecedented number of applications for active membership have been received by the board.

Great interest is being taken in the coming Tabernacle choir tour of the Eastern states, which will commence early in January. The tour will be under control of Director Higbee, who is at present in New York arranging the dates. This will be the first concert tour the choir has made since its visit to California a few years ago, and will occupy from six weeks to two months. The tour will extend as far East as New York, where the choir is billed for an entire week. All the principal cities between San Francisco and New York will be visited. Six rehearsals are held weekly and conductor Evan Stephens has the forty-five selections, to be used on the trip, well under way.

LOCAL NOTES

Miss Leonora Jackson, daughter of a well known California pioneer, recently was accorded the honor of appearing before Queen Victoria.

The San Francisco Conservatory of Music has added to its faculty Mr. Rodger, who assists Prof. Bonelli in the piano department. At the next concert Mr. Newton's pupils will take a prominent part.

Metropolitan Temple was crowded last Friday night at the entertainment of the Young Ladies' Institute. Hynes' Orchestra, the Knickerbocker Quartette, Cyrus Browne; Newton, Mrs. Eva Tenney, William Ogilvie, May Steen, H. Todd, L. Burris, W. J. Hynes, and the child wonder, Cecil Cowles, from the Orpheuma, participating.

Madame Jeanette Webster Crawford, formerly director of the Agnes Zimmermann Quartette so successful in Boston and now director of the California Ladies' Quartette, organized by her in Los Angeles last spring, has arranged for a long concert tour, beginning in early October, comprising sixteen cities, San Francisco being among the fortunate ones.

Armand Solomon, violinist, and Miss Meta Asher, pianist, gave a successful recital by invitation of Dr. and Mrs. Jordan at the University Chapel last week when the following program was rendered: Sonata op. 13, Piano and violin (Greig); Piano, variations in C minor (Beethoven); Arabesque and Vogel als Prophet [Schumann] Ballade G minor [Chopin] Etudecelles, [Mozzokowski] Violin, Introduction et Ronde Capriccioso [Saint Saens].

On Sunday, the regular five o'clock service of the Unitarian Church, Alameda—Rev. G. R. Dodson—was held, the services being most interesting. Miss Elizabeth Westgate was organist and director, and the musical numbers being: Pastorale, Alfonso Redondo; Prelude, Wagner, Organ; The King of Love My Shepherd is, [Gounod] Baritone solo, Mr. Winfred Goff; Reading; The Palais, [Poupe]; Lute solo, Mr. Samuel Adelstein; Come Unto Me, [Conen], Mr. Golf; Overture; (a) Lost Chord, Lute, [Sullivan]; (b) Romance, [Wagner], Mr. Adelstein; Benediction; Triumphal March, [Verdi], Organ.

David Manlloyd, Sig Martinez, S. J. Sandy and Miss Annie Rooney contributed to a concert given by the Orpheum Club last week in Mission Parlor Hall.

Mrs. Streitz-Davis, now in New York, remembers his bright pupil, Miss Georgie Cousins, who was always an attraction at his recitals. She is now Mrs. Wm. Taaffe, and has resumed her studies under Mr. Stark, and the same voice was heard lately in the special services of the Temple Emmanuel.

Mrs. Fairweather's Lecture.

An interesting hour was enjoyed on Monday morning at the Von Meyerinck School of Music when Mrs. Mary Fairweather delivered the first of a series of lectures "From Scale to Symphony." Mrs. Fairweather gave an analysis with illustrations of the modern major scale and the scale as applied to the melodies of the Scotch, Chinese, Japanese, Hindoo and Siamess, and applauded the broad spirit of Americans in their unceasing ambition for the progress of music. A feature of the morning was the quartet, Misses Maud Fay, Cecelia Decker, Lulu Feldstein and Stella Friedlander rendered Psalm 23 [Schubert]. Several of Mrs. Von Meyerinck's pupils gave a Bach program at the S. F. Music Club on Thursday at the residence of Miss Maud Smith.

Mr. Genss' Recital

Hermann Genss was greeted by a large audience Thursday evening of last week in Sherman & Clay Hall. His pupils, Miss Margaret Bruntsch and Mrs. Streitz-Davis assisted, with Arthur Fickenscher as accompanist. As a composer and pianist Mr. Genss holds an exalted place and is a musician of whom the community may be justly proud, but vocally his success is in the shade of his other talents, for while he shows the true spirit of a musician, his voice is not of great compass or sustaining power, although his lower tones are round and sweet. His selections were gems of German melody, but the program was rather too long. There was want of warmth in his first efforts but in the last songs of C. Loe., "Archibald Doglass" and "Hochseitslied" he gained in force and style. Mr. Genss' pupil, Miss Bruntsch made an excellent impression. Her voice a mezzo-soprano, being of good quality and sweetness. Her best numbers were Bobin's Calm as the Night and a group of songs by Mr. Geuss. Mrs. Streitz-Davis, who has recently studied with Mr. Geuss, showed wonderful improvement as a pianist, having gained a most artistic finish, tone and character in her work. Her numbers, Tarentella (Leschetitsky) a Mendelssohn's op. 52 No. 1; and Ballade, by Mr. Geuss, won her the approbation of her audience.

Miss Blinkley's Recital.

A vocal concert will be given by Miss Lilian R. Blinkley on Monday evening October 16th, in Sherman & Clay's Hall.

Miss Blinkley will be assisted by Miss Marion Bear, pianist, and the following trio, Mr. Hother Wisner, violinist, Dr. Arthur Regensburger, cellist and Mr. Fred Maurer, pianist.

STUDIO ECHOES

David Manlloyd will soon give a concert.

Roscoe Warren Lucy has planned a long concert tour and will go as far south as San Diego.

Mrs. Mary Fairweather, head of the dramatic department of the Von Meyrinck School, will begin a course of lectures from "Scale to Symphony" which will be illustrated by pupils of the school.

It is to be hoped that Sig. Abraham will give a concert this season. His pupil, Miss Sundelin, would be a great attraction, her lovely, well-trained voice having already won her much praise.

Miss Heymanson, pianist and vocalist and a graduate of the Royal Academy of London and the Berlin Conservatory, has arrived in San Francisco, where she will be known in concert and as a teacher. Miss Heymanson is most enthusiastic in her art and has already found friends.

Joseph Greven has plans for a concert in the near future when Miss Lilly Roeder will sing. She has already appeared with success and Mr. Greven looks forward to a bright career for her.

Los Angeles

Special Correspondence.

Los Angeles, Oct. 3.—The theaters are now doing a good business, and from the bookings already made it appears that this is to be an exceptionally attractive season for lovers of the drama. The Los Angeles Theater has a list that is hard to beat. The Burbank is booked full to the end of the season. The Opera House, with its management by Mathieu, has a series of plays already offered. The Orpheum, the place where every one goes, will continue to give the patrons the good attractions it always has. Aside from this, the city will be favored with several musical celebrities this season.

Irene Everett has left the Frawley Company to keep an engagement made some time ago with Dave Hayman and play Leading Lady in Life's Drama, with the lovely Hayman in the role of husband. Congratulations are in order.

The Orpheum orchestra has been engaged to play at Levy's Cafe nightly for the performances.

Mary Hampton of the Frawley Company has been nicknamed "Watermelon Mary" by the other ladies of the company, owing to the assortment of wardrobe she brought with her, and the variegated colors of the same. From which we draw the conclusion that the bodies of the stage are not unlike the others of the sex the other side of the footlights.

The Los Angeles Theater will be closed till Oct, 9, when a Yennine Tentlemen will make its initial appearance to a Los Angeles audience.

At Moreno's Burbank Theater, the Frawley Company are playing The Dancing Girl to full house capacity. Under the able management of Mr. Oliver Moreno, this playhouse is fast regaining the laurels it has lost the past few seasons. For next week The Head of the Family is underscored. In the Dancing Girl Mary Hampton made her initial bow to a Los Angeles audience. Her part Drossilla Ives is well played, and she made a strong impression on her audience. Frawley, as the Duke of Gibley, had a part to which he is admirably adapted, and it goes without saying that he brought out all there is in the character. Mary Van Buren, in the impersonation of Sibyl Crake, has a chance to bring out the force, beauty and lovable traits of that unfortunate girl, and she does it to perfection. Harrington Reynolds, as David Ives, carries his audience with him through the performance. This sterling actor is a pronounced favorite in Los Angeles, and his conscientious work in his different roles is fully appreciated. Francis Byrne, Harry Deffield and Frank Mathieu give very good interpretations of their respective parts, and the minor roles are all well filled.

At the Orpheum an excellent bill holds the boards, and the regular crowds enjoy a good performance, headed by the Hungarian Boys' Band, closely followed by Bright Suna, Hallen & Fuller, in their pleasing skating by George M. Cohen, His Wife's Hero, Charley Case, Bachelors' Club Quartet, Arnold Grazer, and the Crawford Sisters, Manager Bronson, not to be outdone by Manager Moreno, gave a Dewey Night that was a complete success. The theater was decorated with "Old Glory," and some additional features added to the program.

Oakland

Special Correspondence.

Oakland, Cal., October 3d, 90.—After being closed for over four months, the MacDeneough Theatre re-opened last Tuesday evening. The attraction was Mr. Clay Clement, supported by an excellent company, presenting The New Dominion and the Bells. Both plays were well played and the audiences were large and fashionable. The next attraction will be Eddie Foy, the well known comedian, who, having been with a first class company in the comedy Hot-To-Topsy Turvey. The engagement is for one night only, Saturday evening Oct. 10th. Commencing Monday evening Oct. 9th, Miss Modjeska opens a four night engagement presenting Mary Stuart, Macbeth and The Ladi's. The advance sale of seats has been very large. At the Dewey Opera House the Grand Stock Co. have been giving an excellent production of Alexander Dumas' successful drama, The Three Guardsmen. Landers Stevens has made a decided hit in his interpretation of the soldierly D'Artagnan. Mr. Stevens support is excellent throughout, with the exception of a Mr. Whipple an amateur, who has a voice of go to San Francisco and tour the states. Special mention should be made of Fannie Gillette, Maude Miller, Alice Sanders, Matrice Blake and Carl Back, who all gave exceptionally clever work. The scenic effect are up to the standard and the costumes are very handsome. Taking it in all, the production of The Three Guardsmen is the finest Mr. Stevens has yet presented to the patrons of this popular house. Week of October 9th, The Two Orphans.

Honolulu

Special Correspondence.

Honolulu, H. I., Sept. 19.—Hamilton Hill, baritone singer, arrived from Sidney last week and is filing an engagement at the Orpheum. Hill has a good clear voice, and his execution is perfect. He leaves for San Francisco after fulfilling his engagement here.

Renee's native Maori orator, late from New Zealand, is to deliver a series of lectures here upon his own people. He most likely will go to San Francisco and return after fulfilling his engagements here.

Trice Coleman, back and wing dancer at the Orpheum, has become quite a favorite to the theater-going people. The same was demonstrated last Saturday night, when the Trice Triplet was the "receipt" of all kinds of silver coin which was tossed to her while doing her turn.

Stockton, Cal., Oct. 3.—The Weston & Herbert Vanauville Co. opened here Monday evening to a crowded house. The company is stronger than it was on its former appearance here. Among the performers who especially pleased were Hugh J. Emmett, masked monologist and ventriloquist. He kept the people in roars of laughter. Weston & Herbert themselves were compelled to respond to several encores. The company is billed for three nights but owing to crowded houses decided to remain four. On Friday evening, Eddie Foy & Co. will be seen here in Hotel Toppy Turvey.

Hanford, Oct. 3.—Wrote you three weeks ago that the Hanford Opera House was doomed for an all season go by, that Manager Kauntz had pulled down the blinds and discharged the janitor, and you publish the fact. Result, letters came pouring in at such a lively rate that the manager not only reinstated the janitor, but hired a corresponding secretary, and thus far the following announcements appear on the boards:

October 3rd and 4th the Twentieth Century players, with Peck's Bad Boy and other funny things.

October 14th, the farce comedy Vanity Fair.

November 6th, Daily Stock Company, week's engagements.

November 17th, the great farce comedy of Buelner & Hennessy, entitled Brown's Town.

December 5th, Tisal & Kenneth's Yon Youson.

December 7th, Richard & Pringle Georgia Minstrels.

Jan. 22d, Ellerfoot Stock Company, one week's engagement.

Other companies intervening. Who says the Review isn't read by the show people? Kauntz says it is an all right paper.

Walter Malin's big circus will be here on October 17th.

Clay Clement and his company returned for two months Oct. 2-3, presenting A New Dominion and a Scrap of Paper. Business was good for a return engagement. The company leave for Australia and Honolulu Oct. 4.

Predictions point to a big house for Thursday night when Eddie Foy in Hotel Toppy Turvey opens. He has a company of fifty people and has been here for three years. He arrived here with A Midnight Bell paper, which is to be given Oct. 7-8, with our favorite, L. R. Stockwell, in the leading character.

On the 13th we are to have Modjeska in Marie Antoinette.

Manager Geo. W. Ficks of the Clunie has a long list of attractions for the coming season; in fact everything that is booked for San Francisco will appear in this city.

Since Manager Ficks and his very capable assistant, Geo. A. Boyer, have taken hold of affairs at the Clunie, the attractions have been stronger and the attendance much better.

Clay Clement Settles

Just before the Honolulu boat that was to take the Clay Clement Company to Honolulu departed, it looked for a few minutes as though the company would tarry awhile longer in San Francisco. T. F. O'Malley, a one-time actor in Clement's Company, had a claim up for $245 for taking care of a child of Clement by a former wife. Rather than lose the trip, the claim was settled at the last moment.

The San Francisco Dramatic Review is the name of a new weekly paper which has just made its appearance in the Bay City. It consists of sixteen pages handsomely printed, liberally illustrated, and well filled with matter pertaining to the stage and its people. An illustrated supplement also forms an attractive feature of the first number. It is published by the Dramatic Review Publishing Company. —Los Angeles Times.

Tellula Evans, once upon a time a well-established San Francisco favorite in comic opera, is now singing at the Chutes in Denver, and may soon be seen here in vaudeville.
Hotel Topsy Turvy at the Columbia.

The Columbia will have an attraction of unusual interest opening Sunday October 8th. It is Hotel Topsy Turvy, which has been delighting New York play-goers at the Herald Square Theatre for months, and has now sent on tour to the principal cities.

Hotel Topsy Turvy also enjoyed a prolonged season at the Folies Dramatiques in Paris and is now creating incessant laughter and attracting large audiences at the Comedy Theatre, London, Eng. It is a production that has everything possible in its make up to amuse. Its dialogue is entirely a variety of dreams. It is an entirely unconventional. In music it smacks of that gay Parisian atmosphere which scintillates and keeps one humming the different numbers. Being the work of such prominent writers as Maurice Ravel, the Arrangeres and Edgar Smith, who are responsible for the libretto; Victor Roger and Edmond Lecointe, who have composed the music, it could not help being at least interesting. It is said to be the happiest of musical comedies that have been seen for some time, and is as much an individual as, or in joint work, Hotel Topsy Turvy is not only an amusing comedy, but a production complete, with elaborate scenic pictures and staged with all the lavishness that is characteristic in the Herald Square DeWitt, Octavius Barrie, Bertie Fowler, Pauline Duffield, Louise Ross, and Amelia Clover.

There is a chorus impersonating circus riders, acrobats, peasants, fruit sellers, villagers, etc., and all that组成 a peculiarly musical and humorous production made up of the most attractive ladies of the Herald Square Theatre forces. Many people here in New York have seen it and have said so many pleasant things of it that its reception will be, not only a musical, but an enthusiastic as well as in other cities.

A Great Improvement

A reception to the press and friends of Manager Friedlander was given at the California theater last Friday night, in the absence of Mr. Friedlander, who is in the East, L. C. Oppenheim and Phil Hastings directed the artists for the program that went to see how artistic the theater had been made. The dress circle has been considerably lowered, the lower floor into an orchestra and giving room for a hundred more seats. Many more electric lights have been added, the boxes refitted, a new drop curtain and new scenery added, and not the least noticeable are the improvements in the costumes and portiers. There is a much brighter aspect to the whole house, an improvement that will, no doubt, be highly appreciated by the patrons of the California. This theater is now one of the cosiest and most gorgeously fitted of any in the city.

George Osborne is winning great praise for his work in a play that is a new York Company, in presenting A Stranger in a Strange Land.

Coming Attractions

The theater goers of San Francisco have much in store for them. Every manager has made bookings for the winter season that surpasss the attractions of any former season. The following managers already booked are as follows:

J. Stewart and Clay Greene. Preparations are being made for the Christmas entertainment, Vaudeville—The Orpheum, Chutes and Olympia have made arrangements for good attractions for the winter season. Manager Morissey promises some European nobilities for the Orpheum parlor.

PERSONAL

Opheman Stevens, the well known Los Angeles dramatic critic, was a caller at the review office this afternoon.

Miss Mary Townley, who has made a hit this season with Felix Morris, is the daughter of a respected and wealthy Chicago business man.

Mrs. Kreiling, proprietor of the Tivoli, gave a reception on Wednesday evening in honor of the patrons of the Tivoli Grand Opera Co. and to Musical Director Hirschfeld.

Anna Laughlin, a clever San Francisco girl who has been keeping soubrette roles and giving invitations of celebrities with the Willbar Opera Co. in New York will soon appear in San Francisco, to spend her summer vacation.

Mr. William Robinson, the new musical manager of the Grand Opera Co., has taken up the work of Director Simonson in a most satisfactory manner. He has already become a favorite with all the singers and attractions of the Grand.

The Maggie Moore-Roberts Company, failing to secure one of the first-class theaters here at present, will begin their American engagement at Portland, and will play in the California cities later in the season. The company will leave the city on Tuesday.

Harry Caray, as vaudevillians in the Tivoli’s production of Sattunela, is a brother of the late Oscar Girard who recently died in Australia. Mr. Girard has been engaged in church work and vocal teaching in New York, and is a first-class musician, possessed of a fine baritone voice.

London

London, Sept. 16—The Ghetto an adaptation in three acts of the drama by Herman Heyerman, the younger, produced at the Comedy. The play is neither serious nor sentimental, but may be described as commendably decent but definitely dull. Therefore there can be little choice of its finding favor among the considerable body of playgoers. Dalton with it is the one sin that is unpardonable. Mr. Freeman was a disappointing, ungrateful, and ultimately, repudiates the ending of the play, but it is open to question whether the one he contrived would have proved more direct and effective. Really, though it does not matter, for as we have said, The Ghetto is so deadly dull that its chances for a prolonged life are poor indeed.

Mr. Kyle Bellew as Ralph and Mrs. Potter as Kosa, made the most of their opportunities which are not many. The play opened on Saturday evening and the presence of a crowded house proved that The Runaway Girls is one of its attractions.

The silver of Youth, brought out at the Vaudeville last week will soon be seen by all who love to laugh. The performance of Saturday night went with a roar from start to finish, the chief contributor to the success being the pinch-faced as old Malays—spiritedly comical, Mr. Fred Easman as a furiously jealous Italian upholsterer, desperately in love with Suzette, a French ladies maid, Miss Juliet Nevell as that maid, and Miss Elsie Jeffrey as Corn Carringou. About the end of the present month there will be a second season of considerable importance at the Criterion Theater. A version of Ma Brava recently played at the Odgen's will be produced under the name of My Son's Wife. Mr. Seymour Hicks and Miss Elialett Terriss representing the son and daughter-in-law of the cantankerous mother-in-law, a part to be supported by Miss Pannie Brough.

Murray Carson on Monday commenced his much talked of season at the Kemmelng Theater with Richard the Third. Mr. Carson's Richard is good but not great.

A New Yorker.

London Notes.

The divers in the company known here as the Iliumians, did not please in London. They were looked upon as freaks. They wrote rather a pathetic letter to the Stage requesting that their talents as well as their aires be taken into consideration. Mrs. Potter and Kyra were two of the Iliumians who crossed the English provinces. Madge Lening will be in the Whirl of the Town soon at a London theater. In the version acted there the burlesque will be localized only in the second act. There London characters will be introduced. Emily Solomone at a charity matinee sang the serenade from Genevieve de Braham, with which her old-time fame used to be so closely associated. Lancelot of the Lake, which Murray Carson is soon to act in London, was written by Louis L. Parker for E. S. Willard, who retain the American rights to it. Mr. Willard did not produce the play earlier as Mr Henry Irving's King Arthur made it impracticable. The Iliumians, in their role as old Malays, The Germany, at the Stratford, which George Sinus called his version of the farce known here as The Proper Caper, and In Paradise, the German, are two of the essences of youth that have been retained. This idea affords good opportunities to the farcical comedian. The play perhaps especially people in London. The Wire Walker is the title selected for The American Beauty when it succeeds The Dilettante last week at the Stratford Theater. But that will not be necessary for another year. It is a theory with London managers that a play which has run for a year can always run for a second twelve months with profit. Letty Lind, who recently thought of going to New York, has changed her mind and will remain in London. Strange news sometimes goes London concerning the vague of American plays and actors here. S. Miller Kent took Mr. Goodwin's place in American Citi during the star's illness, and is said to have pleased London audiences so well that he will remain in the play at another theater after Mr. Goodwin's return to the United States.

Need of Dramatic Training

The condition of American dramatic art is an important status in our country. Improvements in dramatic performances are demanded by the critics, the thinking public and the more conscientious of our actors for the good of young actors and of art in the future.

We have as a rule in our cities good theater buildings, good stage settings, machinery and make-ups, but these are only the frame to the picture. We want more attention to the painting; we want actors and actresses who aim to be artists, who are qualified by education and culture, not only addressed to the eye in dramatic pose and emotion, but in voice and articulation; not the careless, slovenly way of so many of both sexes making up our companies, where one in the audience sits quietly guessing what they are talking about. It is therefore the education of the actor and actress which must develop a higher standard and consequently better class of plays.

In the decade of stock companies through the country, which we are happy to say are again being established, the young actor lost that system of training in dramatic art which was of great assistance to him as to memorizing and the practical technique of the stage. The companies in Europe surrounding a star are much in advance of our companies in this country, each one being finished in the smallest part. I particularly observed this in the company accompanying Wilam Barrett.

The first theater in the world is the Theater Francaise, with its great conservatoire, graduating Rachel, Bernhardt and all the leading artists of the Parisian theaters; Italian schools have graduated Rossi, Salvini, Ristori and the leading artists of Italy. In Germany Shakespeare's productions are played more than in any other country excepting England. We are in America a dramatic race and are capable of great dramatic possibilities. We inherit this from the amalgamation of races, the climate, our ambitions, and our sturdy inheritance from English ancestry, as also our spirit from the French. Our best talent on the stage has come from the West and the South. California has given more talent to the stage than any other state.

We live in a critical and progressive age and we demand education for the stage, moral and athletic training. We want the "modesty of nature" educated and improved by art, until it is nature better understood. We want no "mouthing or sawing the air." In talking with Edwin Booth some years ago he said: "Oh, Madam, teach them how to breathe properly; they will find the benefit will be to them, giving them power of speech and grace of action." We are having schools everywhere imitating our neighbors over the water. By study actors will benefit mentally and physically, and when adopting the profession feel power and fitness for their calling, as "knowledge is power."

Managers are now seeing this necessity and refuse to take into their companies the uneducated and untrained. Thus the profession of the stage is becoming every day more elevated and making places for ladies and gentlemen of refinement and education to seek that profession. They are being better paid than in years past and traveling is a great educator. I have been amused as well as provoked by prominent actors of this day, and even some not prominent, discouraging young artists from adopting the profession. They go to these older actors teeming with ambition and in many cases greatly gifted, and these Solomon talk as many of the older actors did to them before the stage was elevated and improved as now, and advise them to do anything rather than seek the stage. Imagine a girl of talent burying the talents God bestowed on her and wearing her life away. Do these older actors suppose when they "shuffle off this mortal coil" that theaters will cease to exist?

The profession of the stage should be equal to and rank with the profession of the law, ministry, and by education, morally and physically, we will make it so; and actors and actresses will rank with other professionals and parents and guardians will be proud to see their children and relatives on the stage and following a profession of culture, fame and well-paid services.

What a big hole an empty theater is, day time or night! What a difference from the acting of a fine play before a fine audience—and there is as much to interest in the latter as in the former. Indeed, it is a very dull and unobservant person who thinks that when one goes to the theater the "play's the thing" and the only thing of interest. There are plays within plays; little comedies that play themselves out before the footlights as well as behind them, and as a general thing the admission alone is worth the price of admission, to say nothing of the show. At first glance all audiences look pretty much alike—tiers of round, pink discs of faces, interspersed by the bright colors of women's gowns and the dark coats of the men—but to a veteran theater goer it resolves itself into a series of unmistakable types. There is, for instance, the serious audience, that disapproves of the theater except as a means of culture, and which nothing could ever connect with the idea of being amused. It takes a blood-soaked tragedy to fetch it out, and it is as cheerful as a consumer's inquest. It sits up stiff and straight in the chairs and only applauds when it recognizes a familiar quotation. In sharp contrast to this is the easy-going, good-natured audience that takes in the farce comedies, and whose laughter is hung on a hair trigger, ready to explode at the slightest provocation. It comes in, in a solid bastion, of well-fed looking men, with loud colored shirts and diamonds, and with perfect unanimity, as if pulled by the same string, they get up and file out between every act. Among the conspicuous individuals is the loud-voiced man, who insists upon explaining the play to his companions. Apparently he believes himself the only person present of sufficient intelligence to follow the thread of the plot, so he keeps up a running commentary on the situations for their enlightenment. "He's not really a bishop," he says, "he's a drummer and he's playing he's a parson, and that was his bottle of liquor he'd in the piano, and that smart girl is on his game, etc."

He babbles on while the people about him have murder in their hearts, and wonder why the talker wasn't suppressed along with the theater hat. Sometimes the talker has his best grin along and then he is in clover. He not only tells her all about the play, but takes in the whole theatrical profession, and pretends a familiarity with actors and actresses, and behind the scenes, that make him seem just too much a man of the world and knowing anything for her. "My, ain't she just too pretty, and ain't that dress just grand?" the girl gurgles, when the leading woman comes on the stage; but he turns up a blue eye upon it, and answers in a scornful voice: "Oh, I don't know. She's fallen off in her looks, and if you were close to it you would see that dress isn't anything but make believe silk." Other interesting types are the cow-like people, who are never happy unless they are chewing something. They find candy and sometimes peanuts an indispensable part of the enjoyment of the play, and nothing is funnier than to watch them munching along through a whole good, stirring melodrama, punctuating their smiles and tears with chocolate creams and caramels. Of course lovers we have always with us, especially at the theater, where they squeeze each other's hand covertly under the program and gaze into each other's eyes at the soulful passages where the hero offers to go off and die for the heroine. The stage is a great match-maker, and many a bosom swain has gotten his cue from the stage lover. On the other hand when you see a couple in the entrance gazing with a stony glare at the drop curtain, or glaring silently into space, you know they are either married or are brother and sister. Family parties come to see the play and not to talk. It is, however, the people who go but seldom to the theater who perhaps get the most out of it and afford the most to the onlooker. They are not ashamed of honest emotion, and they weep over the sorrows of the persecuted heroine in white muslin and blue ribbon and his the villain and are convulsed with laughter at the simple expedient of the funny man falling down or being kicked out of the door. "Just look at that!" "Now, I say," "Did you ever!" they exclaim, and then when the curtain goes down they go home to tell over for days and days together the dear, delightful old jokes and smile at the work at the happy memories that come to them of their hour at the play. And so the audiences come and go, and the time lights of the theater stream far out into the world and brighten the dark places in many lives.

Press Eldridge Abroad

PRAS ELDRIDGE is telling that it is almost impossible to get a cold drink in London. It is an unknown quantity in sausages. Any place where they do keep it they have a big sign in the window announcing the fact. Go in and ask the bar maid, "Have you any bottled beer?" "Yes, sir." "Is it cold?" "It has been near the ice." In one side of the bar, her the other side, is what they call near. They sell lemon soda lemonade. I went into a place, asked the bar-maid for lemonade, and she set up a bottle of soda. I said, "No, that is not it, it's a mude drink." She asked, "How do you make it?" I answered, "I'll make it myself and show you. Give me a little water and sugar and a lemon." She said she hadn't any lemon; got a potato, will do! Lodging-house keepers great thieves. Lodgers pay so much a week; do their own marketing, and the landlady cooks for them and manages to steal enough to keep her own family. I had been missing my posting when I had only six left I made up my mind to set a trap for her and ordered her to serve all of them the next meal, arguing that I would know what per cent. she was nipping. She tumbled and served them mashed.

A Serious Comedy

The Tyranny of Tears is a great success in New York and John Drew has it in a play that will last the entire season. "The piece," says a well-known critic, "is a comedy without farcical inclinations. It contains a deal of serious sentiment, characterization and social illustration. The principal man in it is a prosperous novelist. One of the important women is his wife and the other is his amanuensis. Nothing further is requisite to tell the kind of trouble that arises. But the manner of it is new and strange. The husband's love of his wife is faithful. She is equally fond and true. The amanuensis is quite correct in behavior. So, you perceive, none of the objectionable conditions arise from the association of these three persons. The husband is ruled tyrannically by his wife, and she holds him in bondage by means of her tears, which she sets flowing, or pretends to, whenever she is opposed. He suffers long and patiently. But when she breaks out with jealousy of the amanuensis, he sets up a rebellion. It is true that appearances justify her suspicion, for she catches the other young woman kissing his portrait and how can she know that pit, not passion, has incited the kiss? She insists that the sympathetic one shall be discharged, and when the suddenly rebellious husband refuses to do it, she herself quits the house. The domestic row is amicably ended through the intervention of a bachelor friend, who wins the love of the maiden and incidentally convinces the wife that she has been mistaken, not only in accusing the husband of perfidy, but as well in all her tyranny of tears. The merits of the play are intellectual. They are in contrast with those of the current stage successes, both serious and comic. With the simplest of phraseology and the plainest of plots, with the introduction of only six characters, one an inconsequential servant, the author has produced an uncommonly interesting entertainment, and one possessing a rare value of unconventionality.

Alice Neilson's Wit

A story good enough to be true concerning Alice Neilson comes from New York. It is related that Miss Neilson, Lilian Russell and several friends were helping to entertain a Russian count who recently arrived in this country with letters of introduction to mutual friends. The count was a supercilious sort of creature who thought nothing good could come from anywhere but Europe. He criticised the customs of this country, sneered at everything American, and finally turned his attention to the food set before him. His boorish conduct had everything American, and finally turned his attention to the food set before him. His boorish conduct had everybody disgusted the other diners, and Miss Neilson was simply aching for a chance to get even. Among other vegetables served were some ears of very fine green corn. The count eyed them askance.

"Is it possible you eat that stuff here?" he asked. "Why, in my country they feed it to the pigs."

Quick as a flash, Miss Neilson pushed the dish toward the nobleman, and, in her breezy, Western way, said: "Help yourself, count."

Dramatized Novels

HOGAN WYNE—Free Quaker, is being used by the play-makers for dramatic purposes and Charles Frohman, always on the alert, has secured the rights for that other Revolutionary times novel, "Richard Carvel." As they are written in the same lines, with similar characters in action except that one fights on land, the other on sea, they might be blended in one very powerful melodrama.

"Becky Sharp," as presented by Mrs. Fiske in New York, is a powerful rendition of a character so difficult and exacting that few artists have heretofore cared to attempt it. Mrs. Fiske seems specially to fit into Becky's remarkable character, and whatever shortcomings there may be in the dramatization, there are none in her rendition of her heart. The climax is reached in the third act, when Becky's husband—played by Maurice Barrymore—founds her in a compromising tête-à-tête with Marquis Blayney. Among those supporting Mrs. Fiske is Miss Olive Hoff, who has been in the company for several years, and has become a decided favorite. She claims Los Angeles as her home.

A Midget's Big Heart

Here is a story that comes from a New York roof garden concerning a "little man," well known in San Francisco. While waiting for my turn in the little room at the extreme end of the garden the other evening I heard two pitiful cries from the stairway. Hurrying there I saw one of the Rosnow Midgets and a small dog tumbling down the steps, rolling over and over each other at a lively rate.

"It seems that little Rosnow was coming upstairs when some one who was backing toward the dog accidentally kicked him down. The dog rolled against the little artist and a tumbling race to the landing ensued. One might imagine that the Midget, like creatures of larger growth, would be angry at the cause of the accident. In fact, I felt that I had been Rosnow at that moment there was just one way in which another I would have found vent—a kick which would have sent the unlucky dog career down another stair.

But the little midget limped over to where the dog had crawled, and taking him up in his tiny arms, said, in the kindest, gentlest manner: "Too little dog-kie! Dit I hee-urr-t you? I am so-o-sor-rr-rrreee"

I am very much obliged for that little story of the little little Midget. It requires more humanity and bravery to do what is right in a case like that than are needed for lots of other things that seem more important.

A weekly school lesson for all of us, on the stage and off. You see little Rosnow didn't know that anyone saw the sad accident, and that is the time that some of us grown-ups, with hearts not so big as the Midget's, would have kicked.

Loderer's Quin-tonics will keep the hair healthy.
The Musical Director—Is the gentleman who occupies an elevated central position in the orchestra, presenting a back view of hyperion locks to the audience, and who describes various geometrical figures, occasionally varying them by inscribing his autograph in the atmosphere with a stick held in his right hand. N. B.—This is supposing him to be right-handed, if left-handed the stick is held in the left mitt.

—These described muscular exertions give the musicians the tempo he desires them to follow and tell them when to begin and quit. It also serves to give the singers on the stage their cue, meaning, that when he points his weapon at a singer, it is his or her time to "set in."

—in orchestras in dramatic and vaudeville houses the director usually manipulates a violin with more or less taste and skill, and at intervals directing with his bow in lieu of a pointed stick. In an opera house he has other duties to perform, the principal one being to teach the company the opera to be given, and he is the "Tom Reed" of the music room, the same as the stage manager is the lord of creation behind the scenes.

—a musical director should have curly hair, as close observation teaches that a musical mind and curly hair usually go shoulder to shoulder. I am told this rule is not without its exceptions but nearly every director wears a curly head of hair, even if it costs him money.

—Another requirement is that he be a good musician, technically at least, and it is imperative that he be an accomplished linguist in order to properly herd his polyglot band, keep them from jumping bars, or making breaks of the musical reservation.

—he should also possess that indescribable thing, a musical temperament, to properly interpret the works of the masters.

—an article recently appeared in an Eastern sheet deriding the so-called descriptive music, and stating that it is absurd to try to describe battle scenes, storms, earthquakes, volcanic eruptions, etc., by means of music, but if the reader could witness a battle royal between orchestra and director on Monday morning in any opera house in the country, he would decide that they were perfectly competent to illustrate any sort of a disturbance, natural or physical.

—a musical director should also possess the same attributes as the stage manager alluded to in these pages, as regards patience, judgment and tact. The same deference is also due his position from the people under his authority. You may address him as Mr. So and So, whatever his name may be, Mr. Leader, Mr. Director, or even "Maestro," but as you value your life never call a self respecting musical director "Professor."

The Elks Entertain

San Francisco Lodge, No. 3, B. P. O. E., gave an entertainment and ladies' night at Elks' Hall, 223 Sutter street, Friday evening of last week. The regular session was first held, after which the guests were received. T. E. Dunn presided during the first part of the program and then resigned in favor of Felix Morris and John Morrissey of the Orpheum. Vocal selections were given by Miss Sandelin, Mrs. W. W. Briggs, F. W. Thompson, Signor Abramo, Harry Girard, B. L. Tarbox and the Corinthian Quartet. Miss Cecil Haas and Miss May Sullivan recited and Miss Cline rendered a violin solo. Members of the various theatrical organizations in the city also contributed to the program. Romer's Hungarian orchestra rendered selections. Refreshments were served.

The nights during the forepart of the week were so warm that the theater-goers suffered greatly. On last Saturday and Sunday nights those who visited the show-houses went home in perspiration. Sunday evening was suffocating. Such weather late in the season is unprecedented.

A Chicago manager is following the custom of theaters in gay Paree by having daintily dressed girls serve refreshments to his patrons during the intervals of the opera. Heretofore New York has always taken the initiative in innovations pertaining to the theater. It looks as though the metropolis were losing enterprise except, perhaps, in presenting plays that would shock a man.

Clement Scott, in preparing to leave London for New York to settle, finds it necessary to explain somewhat effusively as to why he's giving up his native country. Nobody that we know of cares a rap as to why he is coming. The scandalous onslaught of this critic upon the stage and particularly its women last year is sufficient to warrant us in saying that we hope to never hear of him again.

Speaking of theatrical affairs and dramatic criticism, it is particularly discouraging when misleading statements are made by persons who have been conspicuous in this line of work. It is to be expected that writers possessing no special knowledge at all on this subject will scare around ignorantly in the tag end of magazines and cheap publications. Your literary Don Quixote is always ready to tilt any imaginary windmill, and since condemnation is more picturesque than praise, he may be dependent upon damn everything that belongs to existing conditions. Carefully selecting a few examples of impropriety in plays and degeneracy in players, he jumps to the conclusion that the theater is rotten, and this is the rich people are.

Traveling artists strike some queer hotels. Walter Perkins, in My Friend from India, has a unique collection of the odd names of such places. From Minnesota he reports the Hotel Mix and the Buncombe House; from Iowa, the Lawless House and the Hotel Greenwood; from Kansas, the Red Dog Tavern, the Green House and the Sheriff House. Last week in Missouri, he found the Hotel Hurt, and he says it must have been struck by a cyclone.

Bertie Fowler’s intimations are certainly of exceptional merit. The actress is nightly greeted with rounds of applause and is voted one of the biggest hits in Hotel Toppy Turry.

Ruth Neela

Ruth Neela, the singing comedienne, is the subject of our front-page illustration this week. The little lady is not a new-comer in the business, as seven years have passed since she first made her bow to the public as a song and dance artist. Just two years since this, her first trip to the coast, she played the Castle Circuit with great success; and when Tom Nawn took out his comedy drama Shanty Town, she had a prominent part. Her success since she struck Frisco has been phenomenal. Her contract called for three weeks at the Clutes and five at the Olympia, but she has met with so much favor that her stay at the latter house will be extended entirely with her, and is now on the books as indefinite. Coon songs are her particular hobby at present, and she makes them go with that gusto which is so necessary to that class of songs. She is also a remarkably clever vaudeville worker.

Her former stage name was Jennie Curtis.

Ida Wyatt "Back from Dawson

Winsome Ida Wyatt, who used to charm Trotville audiences by her clever dancing and rich pipes, is back from Dawson with her pockets lined with dust, acquired during a three months’ sojourn in the Klondike country. She also possesses some beautiful purse gold souvenirs in the shape of a bracelet of nuggets wired together, a big chunk of virgin metal in which a pin is fixed for holding her lady’s hat on straight, and a ring with the legend “Yukon” inscribed upon it, all gifts from the many admirers in the Dawson audiences.

“I like the country immensely,” said Miss Wyatt to a Review man, “though it is a hard job to get there. I was aboard the first scow that went up the Yukon last season, and we had to break the ice a good deal of the way. Yes, it costs to live there,—one dollar for an egg, and the same for an onion, and I admit a plebian taste for the vegetable. My room rent was one hundred dollars a month, but then you get a good salary if you are worth it, and you soon get used to the advanced scale of prices.”

Miss Wyatt says her dancing, especially her clever sas-sa-sass work, is much improved, though the layman could find but little fault with it when she last appeared in this city. She intends to give a few lessons in stage dancing to advanced pupils while here, and next season is promised a company of thirty people on the Klondike circuit, taking in the new Cape Nome country.

Bellen Brach Yaw, the beautiful California soprano, who is the property of Sir Arthur Sullivan at the Savoy Theatre, London. Miss Yaw is exceedingly popular in the English capital.

Of a Personal Nature

Lisole Leigh, who was once upon a time leading woman at Morooco’s during the reign of melodrama, has been with the McColom Stock Company at Portland, Maine.

Fred Butler, who used to be a great favorite at Morooco’s, has joined the new Pike’s Opera House Stock Company in Cincinnati. Likewise Charley Wingate, who used to be with Manager Frawley.

That clever team of comedians, Mathews & Bulger, supported by thirty-five well-known comedy stars in the latest revision of the big vaudeville opera. By the Sad Sea Waves, is now on its way to the coast. This attraction has been breaking box-office records in the East since the opening of the season.

Laura Crews has returned to town, having closed with the A Midnight Bell Company. Everywhere the company appeared, Miss Crews’ work was received with enthusiastic approval, and in all the reviews of the company’s performance are found frequent mention of her charming and exceptionally talented work.

FREDERICK PAULING is now stage manager of the Tanhauser Stock, Milwaukee. San Francisco theater-goers will remember him for his very laughable performance of Charley’s Aunt. Although Pauling’s fame rests chiefly on more serious performances, there never was a comedian who essayed the part of the Aunt that ever provoked more laughter.

Arrangements have been completed by which De Wolfe Hopper’s American bookings for this season were cancelled. The comedian will, therefore, remain in London probably until spring, enjoying the prosperity which has been his share in the English capital. He is now playing El Capitan in the Lyric Theater, but will remove on October 30, to the Comedy Theater, where he will produce The Charlatan.

Lillian Rubahrt seems to have made the hit of her very successful career with her own comedietta, Her Soldier Boy. She presented it during the week of Sept. 18, at the Grand Opera House, Philadelphia, and the critics of the Quaker City, who make it their business to visit the vaudeville houses, were unanimous in praise of play and player. Miss Borkhardt has now in rehearsal a new one-act play, by Edmund Day, of the Detroit Tribune. It is called A Deal on Change.

Mojiska will give her final performance at the Columbia Theater this evening. Macbeth will be the bill.

The Sydney Times asks who is the “old-fashioned Walker” now appearing at the Tivoli, this city. The Review was under the impression that she was pretty well known in the chief cities of Australia.

LAMING ROWAN, she of the beautiful shoulders and donner figure, who is remembered as one of the former Frawley forces, is with Charley Dickson’s company, presenting Mistakes Will Happen.

Blanche Bates has sent the Dramatic Review some handsome photographs of herself in the character of Hannah in Children of the Ghetto. They will be appropriately framed for the benefit of visitors to the Review office.

In New Orleans, the company preceding this Smith Bros. operation has made a great impression and the papers there declare it is a clever company and a good comedy. Leslie Morooco is mentioned as one of the clever people.

CLAIRA MORRIS, who used to work tears from susceptible hearts and made money for the time when she would have to retire, is now winning distinction as an author. Several magazine short stories from her pen have won considerable recognition.

Jay C. Taylor, the tenor who came to the coast with the ill-fated Andrews Opera Co., is now singing with the Troadocero Stock Co. in Omaha. Clyde Mohler, Leta Forney, Miss Vane and the three Burgess boys are with the same company.

Marie Wilbur, soprano at the Oberon, has had a long experience in light opera. Eight seasons with the Andrews Co., one with the Boston Madrigals and the past season with a partner in vaudeville under the name of the De Forest Sisters. If looks go for anything Miss Wilbur must have commenced her stage career at a very early age.

J. H. Wintou, the clever ventrilou-quist, is angry with Chief Lees because the chief used his name as belonging to one of the suspects in connection with the recent big robbery on the steamer Alameda. It is costing Mr. Wintou much money along the cock-tail route to explain to his friends that Miss Muller got any of the sovereigns stolen by the cook, Lewis.

Charles H. Jones, manager of the Metropolitan Opera House, Portland, Or., a gentleman friend and two lady friends had a narrow escape from being shot by a scomrty at the quarantin-office at angel island, the other night. They tried to take two lieutenant-ants ashore for a little dinner party. Only had aims prevented some of the party from being shot. The lieutenants who conspired to the plan to steal away were arrested. The ladies faints.

Lester Lorreneg, the California boy, will support Charles Coghlan.

Henry Ludlam, the well-known dramatic teacher, is now in Philadelphia.

Charles Frohman will have Peter Dunne dramatic in Dooley stories.

Miss Lillian Slinky’s concert Monday evening will be an enjoyable affair.

Publishers have just gotten out a Richard Mansfield calendar, while we have already a Julia Marlowe book as well as a Zaza book.

Mr. Yeamans has made a great stir with her “cook lady” impersonation in Why Smith Left Home at New York. The press is devoting column to her work.

Manager S. H. Friedlander is having an unusually successful time in New York securing attractions for the California. He will return about the end of the month.

Hoty’s A Milk White Flag, under the direction of Dunne and Ryley, continues to be considered by managers a veritable box-office magnet. It is due on the coast in another week.

Crowded houses ever since the re-opening of the California. “That’s the man” has proved a well-known old-time theatrical manager the other day; “that man Hastings is a genius,” Quite right.

Following Hotel Topsy Thrity at the Columbia will appear in rapid succession, a Milk White Flag, Mathews and Bulger and Why Smith Left Home, all to be presented under the special season scale of prices.

Henry Miller is credited with having really made a sensational success in his production of The Only Way at New York. Charles Frohman has also a new play for another theater for an indefinite run.

Nancy O’Neil’s second week at the California will be on Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday nights, and Saturday matinée, devoted to Mapa, Friday night to Lady Teade, and Saturday night to Oliver Twist.

Mathews & Bulger, who will be seen in their latest version of the big vaudeville opera, By the Sad Sea Waves, are the youngest, nimble comedians on the American stage today. Their rise has been of the mushroom growth, but one of steady recognition.

Aside from the two stars, two of the principal features of Mathews & Bulger’s aggregation of farceurs in By the Sad Sea Waves, are the only and original Sis Hopkins, the Gal of Shadibottom, who is now the talk of the fun-loving world, and a beautiful French woman, Milie. La Seye, direct from the Folies Bergere, Paris, who appears in a series of plastique poses with illuminated, iridescent electrical effects, and is considered a decided novelty.
The Columbia

Edie Foy and his frisky aggregation have one more week in Hotel Topsey Turvey at the Columbia. The bills call the piece a "brilliantly successful Parisian burletta." The bills are right, at least so far as the successful part is concerned. Of course, in a Parisian burletta, no one expects anything but fun of the most complicated sort. No one who knows Edie Foy would expect to see him in anything except such a farce comedy, —nonsensical, absurdly luscious. But Edie is not the whole show by any means. In the second act he remains off the stage fully twenty minutes. And when he is before the footlights he is considerate enough to give the others a chance, which is very different from some comedians—Frank Daniels, for instance. With Foy, Phil Ryley, Josie De Witt and Bertie Fowler and the Florence troupe of acrobats, no particular plot was needed to keep up interest, fun or liveliness. Here again is where the play bill is deceiving, for it says the piece is a story by some Frenchman. It may be by a Frenchman, but it is not a story. After all, "its better so. It really needs no cumbersome plot to produce laughter. No one expects it in a burletta. If anybody did they would probably go disappointed through life. The only object of such a piece — beside a desire to accumulate silver—is to create fun—fun, fast, furiously syllable. That sums up Hotel Topsey Turvey. It is a conglomeration of ludicrous situations, shapely women and lively music. The clever specialities and the ease with which they are interspersed are pleasing to eye and ear. Josie De Witt made things lively in her usual brilliant style and her violin playing is particularly good. Bertie Fowler, in childish imitations, is one of the best specialties in the performance. She tells some dream stories and sings in a most entertaining way. Edie Foy has a song or two, a dance, and the usual funny facial gyrations. Phil Ryley is also a king pin. He doesn't stoop to buffoonery, and his comedy is quick, bright and clean. Octavie Barbe, Pauline Duffield, Pattie Rosa, Jennie Lee, Bessie Bruno and Amelia Glover, the dancer, are very fascinating. George Romain was a good count; in fact, so much better than usual with such characters that it is very refreshing to see him. William F. Carroll is extremely funny; he is a good make-up artist. Gus Mortimer as Moulins, who, with Pauline Duffield as his wife, like peace and tranquility in a hotel, but never get it, are also chief among the satellites, and taking it altogether, Hotel Topsey Turvey is too good to miss.

Grand Opera House

Lucy's sparkling comic opera, "Giraffe Giraffe," packed the Grand Opera House during this week and it has proven one of the most brilliant successes of the season. The opera was given for the especial purpose of presenting Edith Mason as the twins, a role which she created as an orate impression in New York, and the unanimous opinion seems to be that in the present performance she is at her best. The abandon with which she sang the familiar "See How It Sparkles!" could not be surpassed and it won enthusiastic applause. She was splendidly supported by Arthur Woolsey, who, as the father of the twins, was irresistibly funny. Perse's acting was worthy of praise, and as usual he sang with genuine sentiment and feeling. His song "I am the Son of Marsaquin" was properly applauded and encored. William Wolff was Moorzuik, chief of the Moors. He acted and sang the part most satisfactorily. Besie Fairbairn, who has already established herself as a great favorite, displayed her marked ability in the role of Aurore, "the head" of the family, while Hattie Belle Ladd, as Pacquita, and Winifred Goff, as Wa Pedro, were all that could have been desired.

J. P. Sousa, so the story goes, owes the present shape of his name to an odd error on the part of the American Customs House authorities. The popular bandmaster, who is a Portuguese by birth, was originally called J. J. So, and on setting out to seek his fortune in America, he labelled his solitary chest "J. P. So, U. S. A." This the men at the Customs Office read "J. P. Sousa," and the little obstinacy, accepting the name as a good omen, has been content to answer to that name ever since.

Sydney has adopted the high-hat ordinance, and there is much rejoicing in the Australian papers.

Tivoli Opera House

The opening performance of Baile's "Saturnia" this week at the Tivoli was as bright and lively a production as has been given this season, in the way of light opera. With its gay and varied costumés, its surprising phenomena of magic, mysterious disappearances and Beatrice Transylvania, it is the nearest approach to the spectacular that has been upon the boards for some time. Admirably cast throughout, nevertheless the prettiest bit of characterization may well be ascribed to Ada Palmer-Walker, whose Saturnella was worthy of most untinted commendation. But for her bewitching oriental dance, she was a wholly angelic little demon, and as the part developed, more the gentle woman than the wicked imp of darkness. Her vocal work, powerful and vigorous, as well as exquisitely dainty, proved wholly adequate to the dramatic intensity of her role. Julie Cotte as Lelia, a more ambitious part than heretofore, appeared somewhat timid and conscious. Further experience no doubt will bring a more complete identification with her roles. Charlotte de Lasson, who looked the proud Stella to perfection, might be remarked in passing, the abduction of this stately lady and of her young rival, bade fair, all unwittingly in its farcical mildness to eclipse the legitimate element of the structure—audience. Tom Greene's characterization of Count Rupert was less vigorous and confident than heretofore, though charming as ever vocally. Schuster's Arinnae particularly well. Alfr. Wheelan's impersonation of the tutor, admirably subordinated, was characteristically funny in his inevitable exposition of exaggerated fear. The Pirates, both chorus and chief—Harry Girard made a veritable hit in the third act, the ensemble work being notably excellent throughout and enthusiastically encored on every occasion.

Tuesday evening the Tivoli gave a program in honor of the birthday anniversary of Verdi. Musical Director Hirschfeld and his orchestra rendered the overture from Nabucco, selections from Rigoletto and others of the great composer's works. Scenes from Aida, Otello, Trovatore and Attila were given. Wm. Colver played a solo on the euphonium and received an encore. In Aida the entire second act was produced with Salassa, Avedano, Schuster and Lechter in the principal roles. The second act of Otello, the meserene scene from Trovatore and the celebrated trio in Attila were given with great care. In the last scene, Ada Palmer-Walker, Schuster and Greene sang.

E. R. Random given Thursday night, and will be repeated this evening and Sunday evening.

The Alcazar

A' ingenious play, a play full of strong situations, a play which can almost stand by itself, so cleverly are the threads of the story woven, is Jim the Pennan which has been the success of the last week at the Alcazar. There is only one discrepancy, and that possibly a pardonable one, where the conspirators plan an infamous deal in an apartment without doors, and the detective a little later reunites them in a loud tone in the same room. The piece is far and away the best thing the stock company has done this season, and it is no exaggeration to say this is a dollar-and-a-half show produced at popular prices. Charles King played the title role and sunk his individuality completely. The critics who claim he is a one-part actor should see him in this character, for he does it well, yes, very, very well. Eugene Ormonde plays Capt. Redwood, the detective, on much the same lines laid down by E. M. Holand, the originator of the character, and his work does not suffer by comparison with that sterling actor. As Baron Hartford, the suave villain, Clarence Montaine made, perhaps, the hit of the performance. His German dialect was at all times good and his delineation clear-cut and forceful. Mr. Montaine is a character actor of great ability. Mr. Denithorne is a capable and manly Louis Percival, and Charles Bryant made a quiet, gentlemanly Lord Deilnecourt. Gertrude Foster played Mrs. Roskon with a suppressed emotion, which quite won the sympathy of her auditors. Simplicity of manner and treatment was the keynote of her success, and one could not help feeling sorry for Mrs. Roskon and her children. And those children, played by Helen Henry and Daniel Hallfax, were as pleasing a pair of youngsters as one could wish to see. The other parts were all in capable hands. Geo. Webster, Carlyle Moore, Eliza Moore, Caroline Woffington, Marie Howe and Anita Fallon each and all did their bit in a convincing manner. In short, it was as a show as one would expect from any company.

The California

NANCY O'NEILL, a triumph in comedy! For a couple of years or more we have been chronicling Nancy O'Neill a charming little actress—a veritable genius in her grasp of such difficult creations as Magda and the Jewels. Whatever might have been our misgivings before seeing her in this week's production of Peg Woffington, we can say unqualifyingly that she is in pure comedy requirements the same clever, graceful, intelligent impersonator who forces admiration in the most difficult and serious roles more generally associated with her success.

Having youth, enthusiasm and endurance, she has the comprehension for one so young in the actor's art, her Peg Woffington must take rank with the finest portrayals of this type in time. In different reviews held by sundry critics. Her performance of Peg Woffington glows with every bosom and louse and is most interesting and intensely real. Barton Hill in the role of Tripel—a character once beloved of the day—dramatist, but now only a faint memory with the vigorous purveyors of the stage entertainment of to-day, was very good. His conception of the uneasy, despairing poet, painter and dreamer was thoroughly artistic. The Colleen Bawn had a small part well taken, and Messrs. Edwin Mordant, as Sir Charles Po- mane; W. E. Gibson as Lord Smee and Raymond Whitaker as Mr. Soaper, were entirely satisfactory. Virginia Stuart did some quiet and effective acting in the part of Mabel Vane, the almost deserted and forgotten country wife. The rest of the cast filled their small parts with the effect that the play which really achieved the triumph of creating an atmosphere of the time depicted, and with one of the most pleasurable entertainments offered to San Francisco theater-goers in many a day.

Wednesday night Miss O'Neill and her company appeared in Camille, Friday night being given over to the Jewels.

The Comedy

NEXT Sunday night Madam Fabri- Muller will reopen the Comedy Theater with a company of German players. Among the players are Hans Hucklebein, a rollicking comedy, and the players Fraulein Rita di Ross, Emma Meule, Maria Koster and Trumbout, Josephine La Fontaine and Herren Beemo Hirsch, Joseph Greven, and Albert Fischer. It is the intention to produce a play in German every Sunday night. Next week the company will be augmented by several Eastern players, Mr. Hofmann is the manager of the house.

Mrs. A. Duval-Mack has leased the Commerce House and will soon announce production of a musical of the same name, and will offer New York successes and three night a week and Saturday matinees. Miss Maud Hollin has been engaged as managing director and announces opening performance for Oct. 30th. Play and players will be announced next week.

The Orpheum

The new Orpheum at Denver has proved a big success from the start. Fiskey Barnett has taken the management of the Theater Comique, in South Park, and Eva Tanguay, solebrette with Who is Company, is making a big hit with the part of Tilly.

Baby Ruth has been re-engaged for two weeks at the Chutes. This clever little child artist has scored a decided hit.

Junie McCree and Matt Travers have some good offers for Ed Dolan, but will remain with their present manager.

Nettie Maguire, well known in vaudeville, has some new numbers with her Aunt Jerusha Company and reports great success.

The Tivoli Theater, Sydney, N.S.W., has been engaged by F. E. Hopkins, Harry Rickards, the manager, is at present in London with his family.

Charles Leonard Fletcher has re-written a portion of his sketch. W. C. & H. is a Gent. The skit is vastly improved by it and the comedy strengthened.

Montana Concert Hall, Butte, Mont., has changed hands, J. W. Kinney having purchased all of R. E. Sargent's vaudeville interests in Butte. Mr. Kinney will hereafter conduct the house alone.

Antonio Pirri returned this week from the north, where he has been astonishing the people with his heavy weight balancing. One of his feats is balancing a 20-inch four-horse plow on his chin.

Again the rumor crops up that the actor Orpheum is about to re-open on the 26th. But it was as a foregone conclusion and that stock has all been subscribed, James F. Mullen, the manager. Archie Levy is arranging with some well known artists for the opening. Most of them will be brought direct from the East. Contradicting the rumor is the assertion of L. E. Stone of the Honolulu Orpheum, that there is nothing in it.

Walter Shaw, of the acrobatic team of Shaw Brothers, is laying off, the result of injuries received during the performance at the Chicago Opera House Sept. 26. Shaw was working on a ring which his brother was holding in his teeth. He let the ring go and Walter fell a distance of 15 feet. Several women in the audience fainted when the man fell, but the curtain was wound down and quiet was soon restored.

Riel Dixon has taken Honolulu by storm. She has been appearing continuously at the Orpheum there for the past three months. Her engagement is for a couple of weeks. When her name was absent from the bill the audience demanded that she sing. The particular forte is the singing of coon songs but reports say she can do anything and do it well. Her success is all the more remarkable, as this is her first professional engagement.

Hugh Ennett opens at the Chutes the play "Sailor Boy." All the interior rooms holds good business.

The Valdare, bicyclists, are touring Australia. Josie Gaseman contemplates another trip to Europe. Zsa Matthes left for her home, Chicago.

Foroman & Hewlett, the banjists are heading this way.

Herbert Cawthorne and Susie Forrest are back playing dates.

The Rousseau music hall at the Olympia the coming week.

George Cohan's farce, A Wise Guy, is doing a big hit in the East. Dolan & Mijoles at the Tivoli, Stockton, on the 16th.

Edw. F. Reynard, the ventriloquist, is booked for an Australian tour.

A cafe and grill room will soon be added to the Orpheum at Honolulu.

Stewart and Lacroix, a vocal duo will play this city in the near future. McGarrah & Varetti are at the Brooklyn Music Hall, Brooklyn, N. Y., this week.

The Martells, the bicycle riders, are on much demand by Eastern managers.

O'Brien and Collins, a clever sketch team, will play in this city in January 1906.

Alf James, Amelia and Ida Sibday are at the Gem Theater, Missoula, Mont.

Hastings and Hale are due in this city any day. They come direct from Denver City.

Edwin Milton Royle has re-written the first part of Miss Wallet of Wall Street.

Day George is gradually filling his season. He has a lot of good monoc- loguistic stuff.

Du Bell plays the Orpheum Circuit commencing at Los Angeles. He opens Oct. 23.

May Wyatt and Gertrude Thorpe open at the New Vienna Buffet, Los An- geles, Cal., Oct. 16.

Weston and Herbert's Vaudeville Company closes their season on the 2nd of the present month open at the Orpheum.

Edgar Ely is singing in London Williams and Walker's old song, When Miss Marie Johnson Marries Me.

Next Monday Managing Director Brady of Koster and Ball's will try the experiment of putting in a one-act show.

Dan Daly is thinking of doing a vaudeville turn. If he puts together some of his good stuff so comedian in the world can equal him.

Arthur Rigby has been engaged for four weeks to sit on the principal end of a mustard show in Pittsburg. After that he goes to Keith's.

The California Tris, Guy Livinston and Clayton Dryfus, the dancer, will sail for Honolulu on the Australia, Oct. 18, to fill an engagement at the Orpheum.

The Werns at the close of their present season with Main's Circus will play the vaudeville houses. They have arranged an entire act, using four people, who make pretexts there are six in the act.
NEW YORK

Special Correspondence.

New York, Oct. 7.—The yacht races last week, for the time being at least, displaced Dewey in the public mind, and the theaters benefited by the continued presence in the city of large number of visitors who came either to see Dewey and stayed over or who came expressly for the purpose of seeing the yacht races. As the yachts could race only ten or twelve times a day, the public crowded the theaters and music halls at night. For the regular New Yorkers there were the usual night show attractions last week but to the strangers within our gates nearly everything was new. The brand new attention to the public is the movie for dramatic work, and was evidently contrived by Mr. Crane by means of a scene and a long cost merely to be in keeping with the character of the old Dutch Governor of New Amsterdam. The fact that the play deals with the intrigues of the British in 1661, when they were convulsing to take the colonial government away from the Dutch makes the play of timely interest on account of the trouble between the British and the Dutch in the present. In Peter Stuyvesant Mr. Crane has added to his long row of typical American characters.

Although Otis Harlan has been a star in public estimable for several years, especially since he created Hot Stuff in a recent play, he was introduced as a star for the first time at the Garrick last week in my innocent Boy. Mr. Sims calls his conversion a comedy. It is anything but that. As a force it is commendably im-sible. The fun grows out of the fact that the innocent boy has in reality been married, and had a daughter, and become a widower without the knowledge of his father and is now lawmakers wishes him to marry a young woman who had previously been engaged to the innocent boy's best friend, said he had made since the girl engaged to the innocent boy's daughter. But why go on? Those facts, appropriately mixed, are sufficient to beleaguer the brain, and make an audience think it has had lots of fun listening to the unraveling of the tangle.

The Castle Square Opera Company which has been financially successful at the American for a year and a half began its third season last week by attempting Richard Wagner's Die Meistersingerin English. The production in English was the only novelty. From the standpoint of art it can be said emphatically that the Castle Square's production was not creditable. Viewed from the point of a cheap-priced production there was much that was comparatively satisfactory. The orchestra was too small for effectiveness in such a masterpiece, the opera was librettically a thing to be sung, and the chorus precise but too demonstrative in every dramatic situation. But the company showed careful study, as though its performance had been carefully planned. It is not likely that the Castle Square will attempt any thing more as heavy as a Wagner comic opera, but will for the remainder of the season confine itself to English, American and German comic operas, and a few of the lighter grand operas which the company has already attempted successfully.

R. D. McLean and his wife Odette Tyler who last year were in tragedy appeared in comedy last week in Phono—as it reached Harlem. Miss Tyler is certainly more at ease in comedy than she was in tragedy and McLean the hero of Anthony Hope's play had the desirable portions of comedy and tragedy necessary to the make-up of a character. The play is of an island, including princes to marry.

Of the actors now engaged in romantic plays here, E. H. Sothern will close The King's Musketeers at Daly's next Wednesday.

On Thursday he will open a new romantic play The Song of the Sword by Leo Ditrickestein.

Andrew Mack closed last night at the Academy of Music in The Last of the Mohicans and will begin another engagement of The Old Homestead which age cannot with.

Henry Miller in The Only Way will continue indefinitely at the Herald Square Theatre.

The Man in the Moon, Jr., replaced The Man in the Moon at the New York last Monday night. It played until 12 o'clock. The only changes were in a few interpolations. Manager Lederer is having more or less trouble with the foreign artists whom he imports. They generally leave him after trying his methods for a week or two.

Everybody who could not see the Dewey parade or the cup yacht races can see a fair substitute of the same at the vaudeville shows where the picture machines throw moving pictures of the scenes upon the screen. Most of these moving pictures are genuine, but the picture machines do not hesitate to supply a demand whenever it is made, and a striking example of this was in the alleged representation of the Jeffries-Fitzsimmons fight. The pictures of that fight were a complete failure because the artificial light was not strong enough. But two men were engaged fand who resembled Jeffries and Fitzsimmons in general appearance, and they went through the motions of the fight and were taken by the picture machines. It is this fake fight which is being presented all over the county. It coaxed money everywhere, and to the artistic credit of the fakers it must be admitted that the deception was so clever that many persons who saw the real fight were completely deluded by the sham battle.

Talking about delusions, reminds me that playing the late Clemens family romantic superior, was in New York last week and played a profitable engagement at the Grand Opera House. She may get his Spring. Eva Kellar, his charming wife, was with him and assisted in many of his new tricks. He has several ghost of illusions which he thought out in his sanctum on the Hudson last summer. To those who are accustomed to see with a magician only one or two on show at the various times in the course of the performance, it may be surprising to know that Mr. Kellar can give his company of fifteen sadestants. He had ten years ago only four trunks full of tricks. Today he carries without his pincushion or stock in trade. Judging from the appearance of his beautiful home and grounds at Ludlow on the Hudson, he must have been making money like the last in the magic last few years.

It has come at last; Lillian Russell is going to sing croon songs in Webbier & Fields. After that we may get a rent from the neimators.

ST. LOUIS

Special Correspondence.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 4.—This is fiesta week in St. Louis, the local managers expect to reap a financial harvest from the parades.

Those two clever farceurs Ward & Yokes, assisted by Lucy Daley, Margaret Daly Yokes, Hattie Bernard, Willie West, George Sidney, John Early, a bevy of pretty chorus girls are amusing the patrons of the Century Theatre, in The Floor Walker.

Manager Batman is offering Jack Litt's magnificent production of Shenandoah at the Olympic.

Billy Green has a winner for a Fair week in Hanlon's Superba at Havlin's, whilst Larry Hanley and his own company are cleverly doing the Miller's fairy story dramas Lady Clactysha. Mr. Hanley is as-

lung, Landon McCormack, and others. Mr. Hanley is contemplating the playing the coast.

Manager Sam Gempert of Hopkins' Imperial Theatre, offers his patrons the Streets of New York and Pulveram's Stars. Hyde & Behman's Big Show, the Koseow Twins, the Four Cohns, Rosno & Arno, John Camp, Bethesda, the Melevi Sisters, and York & Adams are winning favor at the Columbia; the Bon Ton Burlesquers, a sci-til-lant aggregation of gay soubrettes are packing the "Home of Folly," Manager Jim Butler's popular Standard Theater. The attractions for next week are Captain Swift at Hopkins'; His Excellency the Goveror at the Olympic; A Texas Steer at Havlin's; The Spider and the Fly at the Grand; Rice & Barton's Extravaganzo Co., at the Standard and Roland Reed at the Century.

Buffalo Bill and his Wild West Show is enriching their coffers, in St. Louis this week.

We are to have a stock opera company at the Reproduction Music Hall. The management has booked the Castle Square Opera Company for the season, and they will give good comic operas at fair prices.

The Velvett Propies gave their annual parade Tuesday night and attracted many visitors to the city.

GAT' PEN.

BOSTON

Boston, Oct. 4.—Miss Julia Arthur and her company of fakers last evening put on a to-night a historical spectacle from the French, entitled More Than Queen.

It was a farce in one act, and the dialogue and five acts might have been named Josephine, for all the other characters, even Napoleon, are played with a certain loving light to fall upon the magnificent create whom the Man of Destiny loved, and at whose feet he laid the world he had confquered.

When More Than Queen was produced in Paris, Coquinou and Jane Harding enacted the principal roles. It is undeniable, and probably is unavoidable, that the first part of the play, though splendid in a way, is "slow" compared with the intensity of action which, beginning with Napoleon's return from Egypt, sweeps on crescendo until the end, when the research weeps over his lost happiness and thus brings about what he could not obtain by force—Josephine's signature to the decree of abdication.

Miss Arthur's personality lends itself agreeably to the character which she portrays. In her first meeting with Napoleon, in the garden of the Palais Royal, she is arched and loveliness personified. In the gavottes which took place during her husband's absence in Egypt, her languorous beauty is paramount and the perversion with which she attends the fancy dress ball attired as Cleopatra on the night of his return, thus accomplishing her ultimate ruin by offounding her husband and confirming to his mind the calumnies of his sisters, is an exhibition of withifal womanhood not easily surpassed. Immediately there follows upon her return, the employment of all the artifacts of a woman admired and adored, and the serveress of Rosaparte to the radiant beauty of his wife.

There is a great deal of power in the last two acts, that portion of the play dealing with the growth of the By the way idea in Napoleon's mind; the vain struggles of the deserted wife to save her crown and the culminating act of Napoleon in waging a war the passage between their apartments.

Here Miss Arthur is at her best.

After this final assault, this act of banishment, she throws herself against the door in the endeavor to kill herself. Napoleon hurries in, lifts her breeding form and weeps over it. Moved by this exhibition of sorrows on the part of the Emperor, whom nothing else had moved, Josephine drinks the bitter cup and signs her abdication.

The principal members of the supporting company were William Humphrey, as Napoleon; R.A.A. Baine, as Louis Bonaparte; Wiliam Harris, as Talleyrand; and Frederick Hartley, as Junot; and Bessie Humphrey, Louise Owallord, Alice Niles, Leslie Bingham, and May Helms.

SALT LAKE

Special Correspondence.

SALT LAKE, Oct. 2.— A poor week's business was done at the Grand Sept. 25-30 by the Metropolitan Opera Company. Both Salt Lake Theater and Grand operated, but each attracted but a small big audience. Hotel Topy Turvy proved a splendid card with which to inaugurate the season at the theater, and it was thoroughly played with by the most fashionable audience. The piece is a lively farce comedy with an abundance of catchy music, good acting, and a splendid cast, and all the stage accessories that go to make up a first-class production.

First among these, which, by the way, has received about as much advertising as the average circus goes in this city, is an attraction that is sure to interest many patrons here. The company is one which plays regularly at dollar rates, but in order to get a booking during Conference week, had to appear at the Grand. Conference week is sought by all managers who book Salt Lake, for at that time the city is filled to overflowing with people from outside towns who freely patronize theatrical attractions.

Hoyt's A Milk White Flag comes to the theater the last two nights of the present week. JOHN K. HARDY.

SALT LAKE

Special Correspondence.

SALT LAKE, Oct. 5.— Our Conference week proved highly satisfactory to both Salt Lake Theater and Grand. Hotel Topy Turvy at the Theater October 2-3, put in two good nights, while Hoyt's A Milk White Flag, under the direction of Dunne and Kelsey, played to the entire seating capacity of the house Friday and Saturday nights. Tonight the Salt Lake Opera Company opened in Madeleine, or the Magic Kiss, with a satisfactory attendance. The company plays Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday nights of the present week.

At the Grand, Brown's in Town did all the business that it is possible to do in Melville's Theater, October 2-7. Not a night of the week did the seats of the playgoers turn away in throns. Brown's in Town made a good impression and will be well received by Salt Lakers at any time in the future. Mrs. O'Shaughenessey, Washermother, fills the first three nights of the present week at the Grand and will be followed by Lincoln J. Carter's Heart of Chicago October 14-16. JOHN KAY HARDY.

A Big Business

A letter from Sam T. Shaw, dated at Vancouver, B. C., says that his company has been playing to phenomenally large business. The company comprises 23 people, band of 16 and orchestra of eight. Mr. Shaw says, "Last Friday in Nassaino, B. C., I sent a note to the advance sale office to reserve a couple of seats for friends of mine for Sat-urday night. The enclosed was the reply received a few moments later: S. Shaw, Eqq.

In the Nth—Your inquiry just to hand and we are pleased to inform you that the entire house for Saturday night's performance was sold this Friday afternoon at four o'clock for the firm of E. Purbrook & Co. Truthfully speaking, we put out the Standing Room Only in Nassaino, six nights and Saturday matinees. We returned over $400 to people who were unable to obtain even standing room. Best wishes for the success of the "DRAMATIC REVIEW." SAM T. SHAW.

LONDON

Special Correspondence.

LONDON, Sept. 19— Are Trumps at the Dewey Lane is the principal attraction at the theaters this week. It is as full of interest, novelty and sensation as the over-quoted egg is full of meat. Mr. Cecil Raleigh the author, has aimed at the triumph of realism, and has hit the mark. So exactly that all London is talking of the new play. The moral purpose is presented with those parts of the play which deal with the degrading influences of the crime among certain "smart" society women for gambling and the evils—these crimes even—that may come of the ignorant system of life insurance. The principal honors were fairly divided between Mr. Lionel Brough, Miss Violet Vanbrugh and Miss Beatrice Paton, the last named as Maude St. Trevor of the music hall, supplied most of the "comic relief." The new and beautiful theater at Bath now—The Royal Duchess—was opened on Monday with an enjoyable representation of The Belasco by a traveling company. Mr. Hyden Coiff on this occasion sustaining his original part as Lieutenant Fairfax to the delight of a crowded audience. Mr. Hall Caine's dramatic version of The Christian has been put in rehearsal at the Duke of York's Theatre. Miss Lily Hall Caine, sister of the author as Polly Love, cannot fail to be interesting, remembering the talent displayed in Change Alley. The Wire Walker is to be the successor of The Belle of New York at the Shaftesbury. Meanwhile, eight new bridesmaids are coming from America to take part in the good performance of The Belle on Oct. 9. Florodora, the new musical comedy which is to follow El Capitan at the Lyric, will be produced on or about Lord Mayor's Day. Mr. Henry Arthur Jones is at work on a new play. This popular author has been staying at Oswest. A NEW YORKER.

Between Acts

The Midnight Bell Co. closed in Sacramento Sunday night last. Hart's Twentieth Century players have been rehearsing in this city. They will open at Valley.

The Honorable Mr. Wallace, a new drama by Adolphe Danziger, later dramatic reviewer on the New Letter, will have a production in this city in a few weeks.

Charles Frohman has purchased the American rights of the new Drury Lane drama, Hearts are Trumps. The piece will finish in London and be produced here, and Mr. Frohman will bring over the whole production. The cast for the American production will be made up in this country, and the season will open about the middle of February.

Thall and Kennedy's Von Yvonson is meeting with unprecedented success in the Northwest, and the general verdict of the managers and press is that the company presenting Von Yvonson this season is the best ever seen in that most popular play. Arthur Donaldson is said to be the best Swedish dialect comedian who ever played Von Yvonson. Annie Mack Bulein needs no commendation, and Beatrice Norman is pronounced a success in the role of Grace Jennings. Edith Hall, Grace Hazard, E. J. Mack, E. Guy Spangler, Clinton Maynard, Sidney Craven, Harry Hubbard, Leon Perrott and the Original Lumbermen's (Boston) Quartet, make one of the strongest organizations of its kind in the country.

The following is the American route of Sir Henry Irving: New York, Oct. 30, three weeks; Boston, Nov. 20, three weeks; Philadelphia, Dec. 11, two weeks; Washington, Dec. 25, one week; Baltimore, Jan. 1, one week; Brooklyn, Jan., 8, one week; Pittsburgh, Jan., 15, one week; Cleveland, Jan., 22, three nights; Detroit, Jan. 25, three nights; Toledo, Jan. 29, one night; Columbus, Jan. 31, one night; Dayton, Feb., 1, one night; Indianapolis, Feb., 1, one night; Louisville, Feb., 2, two nights; St. Louis, Feb. 5, one night; Chicago, Feb. 12, three weeks; Toronto, March 5, three nights; Montreal, March 8, three nights; Springfield, March 12, one night; New Haven, March 13, one night; Hartford March 14, one night; Providence, March 15, three nights.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

October 14th, 1899

LOUIS ANGELES

Special Correspondence.

LOUIS ANGELES, Oct. 10.—Plenty of amusement has been within reach the past week in this city. With attractions at all of the theaters, besides numerous minor events, the amateur has had good picking. Notwithstanding the other attractions, the theaters have all done a good business, and the various managers are pinning their faith to the "bunch" that this is to be an exceptionally good season.

Hortense Neilson of the Frawley Company received a telegram from her sister Alice, saying that her new opera, The Singing Girl," had been produced in Montreal with success.

If enough subscriptions can be raised to insure the actual costs of the performance, Mr.
Frawley has offered to pay one of their players, either Hedda Gabler or the Enemy of the People.

On Tuesday, Oct. 11th, the Elks of Los Angeles attended the Burbank in a body.
Mrg. Morose welcomed them with a brilliant display of fireworks in front of the theater.

Bunnie, the pageant in the same theater, is now in its third week.

Frank Curtis, advance man for the Clay Clement Co., arrived last week [27]. He has secured the Opera House for a repertoire of about ten plays. They figure to close their engagement here in about six weeks at the Boston Lyric Opera Co. open.

HONOLULU

Special Correspondence.

It has been the habit of all companies coming to this city to have an advance sale of season tickets of a guarantee but Mr. Curtis has decided to put his cards on sale without asking for such guarantee.

The actual sale of seats for the Lyric Co. will close 9th. Chas. Harkinson, their representative, is in the city with a list before him and that a few of the boxes have been sold for the seas at a handsome price ($400 and up).

The Orpheum has a good drawing card, week fully showing to packed houses.

Lillian Leslie, vocalist, contracted for season of engagement in the State Theatre. The cast is very clever a veteran.

A good turn in Hamilton Hall's, barton late from the colonies. The selection is of high class and rendered with perfect accuracies.

The 'Australia' brought down three new artists, Lily Adams, J. B. O'Neill, and Til Sherman. Their turn is Fun in a Club, in which they do scientific boxes and barling. Armstrong's few minutes at punching the bag is a very notable exhibition.

"Travelle," fantastic and shadowist is here. His shadow work is perfect. The farewell benefit for the Opera House, September 23rd, to Jas. F. Post and his wife (May Ashley) was a financial success.

All of the managers of Post and Ashley have made their residence here, crowded with friends, to depend entirely on local talent, that nevertheless the performance was greatly a success.

Mrs. J. Mathews, of this city, has accepted an engagement on the vaudeville circuit, beginning at San Francisco. Her specialty is classical music.

Owen Foster, a playwright of Los Angeles, had just completed the cast of his new opera, La Finta, and rehearsals will begin in another week.

At the Los Angeles Theater Ben Hendricks and company played A Yenuse Venstienon to fairly good houses on the 9th-10th. The play was not a financial success, the Los Angeles audience, and were not too for the good character part by Mr. Hendricks, it would have failed flat. For the 6th-8th his A Milk
White Flag is underlined.

Morose's Burlesque Theater, with the Frawley Company in the third act comedy,
The Head of the Family, continues to draw due to its large and fashionable audiences, notwithstanding the fact that the inevitable Frawley is out of the cast for this week. The piece is well put on and finds immediate favor with the public. For the first time in this city has had a leading role, does a very clever piece of acting in Prof. Hoblen. The other parts are all well taken with the performance as a whole is very creditable.

Next week Cumberland 61 will be put on. The Littlest Girl is a success.

The Orpheum this week has a bill that is "fit for the gods," and the building is too small to accommodate all "those who would see the sights from within." The hit of the show is Terry and Lambert, the singers, closely followed by Lois Otten, the child mind reader, Stinson and Merton, Jennie Yexman, Hungarian Band, Hallen and Fuller, Bright Bros. and the Biograph.

HERBERT L. CORNISH.

SAN JOSE

Special Correspondence.

SAN JOSE, Oct. 12.—The Bailey Company has just finished a two weeks' engagement, playing to very good houses, with nightly change of program. The company is very kindly regarded by theater-goers, popular prices adding to the good feeling.

Post's A Milk White Flag will be presented on the 11th. This play has always brought out a large attendance and is a favorite. John W. Harman is a native of San Jose, is interested in the management of the theater.

A Yenuse Venstienon is booked for Oct.
11th.

For four nights beginning Oct. 23d, Nasce Robert, in the role of the title character will play at the Olympic. William L. Morton who for the first time in this city has had a leading role, does a very clever piece of acting in Prof. Hoblen. The other parts are all well taken with the performance as a whole is very creditable.

TACOMA

Special Correspondence.

TACOMA, Oct. 7.—Hoyt's A Black Sheep played here during the past week to a noisy and enthusiastic audience. Early in the evening the "Scurvy engagement sign was hung out.
Van Vumon will appear in the Tacoma
Theater the 11th this week.

OAKLAND

Special Correspondence.

OAKLAND, Oct. 10.—Hotel Toppy Turvy packed the McDonough Theater Saturday afternoon and evening Oct. 7 and greatly sustained the large audiences. Eddie Pay and Jone De Witt, great favorites in Oakland, received a hearty welcome. The violin playing of Miss Dewitt was one of the features of the performance. The engagement of Miss Dewitt opened Monday evening.
The Augeles Marie Antoinette was presented in an excellent manner and was splendidly staged in five acts and a prologue. John E. Kelly as Louis XIV, King of France, assumed his reputation as a leading man. Miss Madeline Brogins, a former resident of this city, now a member of the Modjeska Co., attracted considerable attention. The balance of the cast was in capable hands and the costumes and scenic effects were very fine. Last night Mary Stuart was presented in excel-rent style. There will be a mixture of this service.

Nothing will have an elaborate production and the cast is well rounded. About when she will appear in one of the strongest estates of our fair city. In fact, one of the Dewey Opera House the Grand Stock
Co. have been presenting the every popular former, the Two Orphans, and an extraordinary style. The piece is well staged and attractive and the audience has been very large throughout the entire week. Grace Plattet appears this week, much benefited by her rest and does some good work.

The old cast are well up in their parts and in all the production of the Two Orphans is excellent.

Next week an elaborate production of Falstaff-up-to-date.

SILES.

CARSON

Special Correspondence.

CARSON, NEVADA, Oct. 10.—The Milk
White Flag Company played here last night at a good house and gave a second performance. They play Virginia City tonight and reen the 12th.

Brown's in Town plays here the 14th, Virginia 15th and Reno 16th.

I hear Jesse Shirley is heading this way, but dates are unknown as yet.

R. B. MEHL.

ODOEN.

ODEN, UTAH, Oct. 6.—The Opera House here has billed eighteen plays for this month and something over twenty for November.

The engagement of the Metropolitan Grand Opera is on the cards.

We are being treated to a most artistic display of show bits by the Brown's in Town people for October 11th. Their program is certainly a long one. Lincoln J. Carter's Heart of Chicago shows up very well, and their hillbilly act is between the two Odgen is very well shown to be what.

We are to have a new theater called the Wonderland, which will be a mixture of mummies and vaudeville, at popular rates. ROSCOE M. BREEDEN.

SACRAMENTO

Special Correspondence.

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 10.—L. R. Stockwell the company played to 60 houses on the 78th in A Midnight Bell. Nevea Headon, the sister of Thomas Headon of this city, who has some dramatic talent herself. An agreeably surprise in A Midnight Bell was the appearance of Miss Blandine, the well-bred daughter of Manager Ficks of the Clunie Opera House. She appeared in own specialties, and made a big hit, being recalled several times.

James Hartry of this city, formerly property man with Wade and James last season, gone to Honolulu with Clay Clement Co.

Scott Weston, whose portrait appears above, has just closed a long and successful season with Stockwell's A Midnight Bell Company. Mr. Weston, in the role of the clergyman, the Rev.
John Bradbury, made a pronounced success with press and public in every city the company visited. His artistic portrayal of the minister was an exceptionally clever piece of acting and caused a well-known writer of this city to tell him: "He carries himself in a graceful, unpretentious manner and gives the best portrayal of the minister's character yet seen." To a handsome face, manly bearing and well modulated voice, he adds the clever discernment of a student.

Mr. Weston's work the past season has won such distinct recognition that Mr. Stockwell has reengaged him for his new company that will go on tour the latter part of November, presenting a new play, The Old Coast.

That very much alive and up-to--date manager, W. R. Daley, is getting ready an elaborate production of

The last performance of Hotel Topsy Turvy will be given on Saturday night the 21st inst. as a Milk White Flag is booked to open on Sunday the 22d.

Home Again
President Morris Meyerfield, Jr. and Secretary Charles Schimpf of the Orpheum circuit, have returned from a trip to New York. They were treated well by the New York managers and report having had a good time. Both gentlemen are delighted at the prospects in the amusement line, and Mr. Schimpf says the show business is booming in the East. President Meyerfield made arrangements for extending his bookings for at least two years hence, and will go to Europe the first of the year with a view to increasing his European operations and attractions. The news is brought that Martin Beck, the Chicago representative of the Orpheum, has signed, among other first class people, Ada Colley, Camille D'Arville, and the Grazer family. Of course, it must be said that Mr. Meyerfield and Mr. Schimpf saw the big parade in honor of Dewey, and they are quite convinced that it was a success. Both are glad to be home again.

A Vaudeville Show
Stanford Parlor, No. 76, N. S. G. W., will do itself grand on Friday, October 20, when a vaudeville show followed by a dance will be given at Native Sons Hall. Stanford Parlor is one of the most popular parlors in the city and its entertainment is looked forward to with much pleasure. On this occasion they intend to eclipse all previous successes, as they are sparing no expense and giving much hard work to make it the most successful effort so far given. The program will include ten numbers by the favorite and best local talent.

THAT HAIR ON YOUR FACE

ARES OR SNAKE CAN BE REMOVED PERMANENTLY ONLY BY THE ELECTRIC SCISSORS. When you have tried your present means of removing a growth thicker than hair, you will come to the conclusion that only the electric scissors can do the work. A truly hair cut. An electric hair cut permanetly removes any growth that is not wanted. No other hair removes.

LOCAL NOTES.

Mme. Trebelli is reported by the Sydney papers to have just closed a very successful tour of the colonies.

Miss Pauline Heymansohn, pianist and vocalist, appeared at the Relekhah Lodge and also at the Fair last week.

Prof. M. Kolander’s Mandolin, Guitar and Banjo Orchestra were attractions at the Mechanics’ Fair on Saturday evenings.

The Knickerbocker Male Quartet, Cyrus Brownlee Newton and Roscoe Warren Lucy gave a successful concert in Napa last week.

Miss Jennie Long, the reader who has lately taken up her work here, is always a treat to hear, contributed to the enjoyment of the guests of the Elks’ Lodge No. 3, on Friday evening of last week. He was in splendid voice, rendering his solos in a manner that won him rousing applause. He gave us in encore, Jolly Jenkins. His pupil, Miss Paskara Sandelin, a charming young Russian with a musical contralto voice, rendered “Land of Dreams,” and in response to an enthusiastic encore, “Because I Love You, Dear.” Miss Sandelin is a devoted student and worthy of her master’s ambition for her career. Mrs. W. W. Briggs, a pupil of H. J. Steward, also appeared and was well received, but a cold prevented her doing herself full justice on this occasion.

FACULTY RECITAL.

The Pacific Coast Conservatory of Music gave the first Faculty recital of the season in Sherman and Clay Hall Friday afternoon, when Otto Bendix was the soloist. Mr. Homer Tourje is justly proud of his excellent faculty of which Mr. Bendix is a shining light, his work here being as valuable as it was in the New England Conservatory of Boston for fifteen years. Technically speaking, Bendix is a giant; he makes one think of an oak in his strength and ability to meet any strain put upon him, for he is brilliant, scholarly, appealing more to the intellect than to the spirit, for he is not a poetical player—rather a masterful one. Mr. Bendix was the recipient of most enthusiastic applause, each number increasing the admiration for his splendid work. The program was: Chromatic Fantasia, Rossini [Bach]; Sonata Appassionata, op. 57 [Beethoven]; Prelude [Rachmaninoff]; Barcarolle [Mozkowski]; Ragrudan [Raff]; Ballade, G minor [Chopin]; Valse [Strauss, Tausig]; Midsummer Night’s Dream Music [Mendelssohn-Liszt]; Tremolo [Gottschalk].

STUDIO ECHOES.

Friday evening of last week the V. M. C. A. gave its opening concert of the season in the Association Auditorium which was a very enjoyable affair. The First Presbyterian Church Orchestra conducted by Otto Fleischer, rendered Robin Hood Waltz; Mexican Serenade; Paraphrase, Hymn; Thou Art; The Hungarian Dances; March, The Stars and Stripes Forever; Wedding March; Gavotte; Simplicity; Overture, Lastspiel; Reve Apres le Bal; much applause. Miss Cecilia Decker, contralto, sang contralto solo; Tatters, (Gerald Lane) and Mr. Curt C. Davis played cornet solo, Bravour Arle, (Hasselmann), both being well received.

On Monday morning Mrs. Mary Fairweather gave the second of her course of lectures “From Scale to Symphony” at the Von Meyerinck School of Music which was attended by a refined and intelligent audience. The lectures are under the auspices of Mesdames Lovell White, Selden Wright, G. M. Goewey, Henry Holmes, Garret McEnery, J. W. Odell, Chas. Richards, Frank P. Wilson and others. Miss Mollie Pratt, well known in musical circles, is the accompanist in the vocal numbers by pupils of the school.

The California Ladies’ Quartette under the direction of Madame J. W. Crawford has begun its concert tour through Southern California, appearing last week at the dedication of the New High School Building at Covina and at the Monrovia Opera House under the patronage of the Apollo Club. The program was exceedingly good.

Mrs. Frank Elliott has gone to Sacramento to visit relatives, after which she contemplates going East for a special course of study to return to her vocal classes, later in the season. Her pupil, Alexander George, has accepted a position as bass soloist in the Oliver Presbyterian Church.

The appointment of Theodore Vogt as organist of Grace Church is a matter of sincere congratulation to the congregation. Mr. Vogt is a gifted musician and composer, and one of the founders of the Musicians’ Club.

Little Field, the gifted seven-year-old daughter of Noah Brandt, met with a painful accident lately but has recovered and resumed her studies. She will make her appearance as a concert pianist this season.

Miss Eleanor Joseph, a pupil of Mrs. A. G. Coleman, has progressed marvelously in her vocal studies and will soon be heard in concert.

Cecile von Seiberich has returned from a delightful visit in Los Gatos. She sang at the Corona Club lately and has resumed her classes.

Edward Xavier Rolker has a treat in store for his admirers, as he will give The Second Hour of Song next month.

Samuel Adelson has taken charge of the mandolin and lute department in the Pacific Coast Conservatory of Music.

Otto Bendix was the soloist at the Faculty Recital of the Pacific Coast Conservatory of Music last week.

Mrs. Jesse Dean Moore, one of our most ambitious teachers, reports steady growth in her vocal classes.

Frank Coffin and Robert T. Bien gave a concert at Native Sons’ Hall on the 11th inst.

Mr. and Mrs. Don Pardee Riggs are preparing for a concert tour in the interior.

Cyrus Brownlee Newton, who has been so successful in St. Ignatius College, is making up a fine department of elocution in the San Francisco Conservatory of Music and his pupils are expected to take a prominent part at the next concert.

Charles von Ott, the violinst, has returned to Greeville to give concerts.

Mr. and Mrs. Fitzroy Thobin are making a success in New York.

—Mary Frances Francis.

MUSIC IN GENERAL.

Eudne gives some interesting figures regarding the amount of governmental aid to music in Europe. Berlin gives $125,000, the Kaiser contributing $50,000; at Vienna the Court Opera theater received $125,000; at Paris the Grand Opera gives $160,000, and the Opera Comique $60,000; at Munich the Opera gives $90,000, at Dresden about the same; at Darmstadt the reigning Prince gives $70,000, and at Stuttgart and Carlsruhe the government gives $75,000. Other German cities and states also give liberally to music. With one or two exceptions the American public gives Grand Opera a good, swift kick.

The Strad violin used by Wilhelmi has been sold to Mr. Kap’srnschmidt, of Chicago, for $50,000. It is considered to be one of the greatest instruments in the world. Edward Hunsicker, of Vienna, said of the instrument: “When the G string of that violin is heard, one seems to be not listening to one violin, but to six violoncellos.”

Siegfried Wagner has been so encouraged by the success of his initial opera, Der Barabakanter, that he is now at work on as many as he can consistently grind out.

A new opera entitled Umba, by Geo. Henschel, will be produced at the Vienna Opera House this Fall.

The New York city council has passed an ordinance making illegal for any one selling a ticket on the outside of a theater in that city within ten feet of the playhouse for which the tickets are good for admission. This ordinance, it is thought will do away with the ticket speculators, who have long been a nuisance in metropolitan theatrical circles.

"Working" for Frohman

It is now easy to understand why the actor always says, "I am working for Frohman," instead of saying, "I am playing with the Empire Company," says the New York Herald. Stevedores don't work harder, and you imagine every minute it must be time to blow the 12 o'clock whistle, and expect to see Faversham take out his dinner pail and squat right down in his tracks. That is the way Frohman puts the Lord and Lady Algy people through their paces. The matinee girls would faint with grief if they could see poor "Favvy" with the large head of perspiration clinging to his fevered brow, and—just think of it—"Favvy" minus a collar and coat, begging in pausing breath, the relentless Mr. Frohman for "just a few minutes' rest."

But he doesn't get it, not while C. F., as he is familiarly called, has a leg to stand on, or while Joseph Humphries has a bit of voice left up his sleeve. But when we consider the fact that this company has been actually playing the piece for a whole year—barring a brief summer vacation—our amazement is simply indescribable. This, then, is the secret of the finished and smooth performance of a Frohman piece—Work! Work with a capital W and the whole italicised.

But listen to this. The Frohman Company playing His Excellency the Governor, only closed a couple of months ago, yet to A. M. sees the self-same cast hard at work, with the untried Frohman in command till 11:30. Without a break, like a circle star changing his pace, he jumps in behind Lord and Lady Algy. This company works unceasingly, save one single hour's rest, till 6:30.

But that one single hour! It is for refreshments and in every company undone. Charles Frohman's direction a lunch is served at the nearest hotel or restaurant during rehearsal, at the expense of the management. Nor is this any merry little end man's jest, it being vouchsafed for by Mr. Hayman himself, and the writer saw the real slim pure article furnished the company—no property meat, rest assured—and De Almonico served it.

A Particular Props

Play in the stage has always been more or less of a hobby with Charles Dickson, says the Mercury, but this season he is said to be having a surfeit of it, all through the property man of his company, Mr. Dickson is playing Mistakes Will Happen, in the Northwest. The property man joined in Mistakes, and immediately created a sensation by coming to the theater in a cab and being dressed in in immaculate attire.

Once inside the theater he got into his jigger suit, shoes, and notwithstanding his dudish appearance "made good." He spoke in a dialect that impressed Mr. Dickson as a sort of German jargon. When the props were given to the various people, Mr. Dickson was handed seven five dollar bills for expenses, and some odd change. He asked what the money was for.

"Yell," said props, "'all I haf got is seventy-eight dollars and some change,' you haf got to hit, polt?"

"Yes, but stage money will do. I may lose this," said Mr. Dickson.

"Nearer mind, I got more," was the answer, as props pulled out a wad.

"Great Scott! why are you doing props with such a bunch of money?" cried the connection.

"Dot's my business," was the reply.

When Miss Esonoud glanced at her supposed marriage certificate she found the genuine article, made out for "Thomas Genovia, actor, and Dorothy Mayland, actress," the characters played by Mr. Dickson and herself. Props had gone to the Mayor's office, succeeded in getting the blank, and had filled in the names. Then when Lansing Rowan, who is supposed to have suffered an accident, calls for whiskey, she got two good fingers of the real article and she couldn't imagine what kind of cold tea she was taking.

While in Milwaukee, props hunted in all the book stores to find a volume entitled "Treasures of Thought," which has to be on a table in the third act. As the title is fictitious he left an order to have a number of books made with the right title on the covers. Mr. Dickson, marveling much, finally learned that props is a German count, and had just accepted the position to travel and see the country. He would not say more of his identity nor tell whence he came.

A few days ago the pub dog and the trained rat, both playing important parts in Mistakes Will Happen, had an argument, and the rat will be laid up for some time. A paper-mache rat was used, but the count did not like the idea, and is now hard at work training a newly engaged rat in the business of the play.

Mrs. Langtry

Mrs. Langtry will appear at the Garden Theater, commencing January 15, for a season of five weeks, using her present London play, The Degenerates. After this New York engagement, a tour covering all the Syndicate theaters will be played. Of course, Mrs. Langtry will be managed by Charles Frohman. She will bring her own company and scenic outfit from the Haymarket Theater in London.

A Recognition

An important movement in the history of dramatic education in this country was made on Wednesday last, when the American Academy of Dramatic Arts, conducted for many years by Mr. Franklin H. Sargent, was granted a charter by the Regents of the University of the State of New York. This is the first time that such recognition has been accorded in connection with any dramatic institution in this country.
The Ambitions of Comedians

The singular fascination which the serious drama possesses for those who are designed by nature to express humor has just been illustrated anew by the experiences of Stuart Robson and Francis Wilson. If comedy ever placed its stamp upon any it certainly did so in the case of these sons of Mornas, yet each has just made a disastrous venture into solemnities for which they were not in the least degree suited.

Mr. Robson, whose experience might be measured by half a century of professional labor, selected The Gadfly as the medium of his temporary downfall, and had he scratched the world with a harrow it would have been impossible for him to have written a story and a character more hopelessly unsuited to his purposes. Experience should have taught him that a dismal and offensive story and a gloomy, turgid and displeasing character could not possibly fit his face-comedy methods, but hearing no advice, the costly experiment was made, and resulted in that absolute failure which might have been expected. A bad play and an actor out of his element were obstacles not to be surmounted.

Francis Wilson, whose wits are usually supposed to be equal to determining dramatic values, ventured away from his familiar habitat to undertake a semi-musical setting of Cyrano de Bergerac, some portion of which he essayed in a legitimate manner, thus straying very far from the line of work in which he has gained fame and fortune. But, as often happens in such cases, vauling ambition overleaped itself, and, like Humpty Dumpty, our esteemed "Caddy" suffered a bad fall. Twas ever thus. The tiger cannot change his spots, the Ethiopian his color nor the comedian his amic disposition.

Very many actors have tried the protest mask with no success. Nat Goodwin every now and then elevates the stage at his own expense, but the bait with which he lures fortune and enables himself to live luxuriously abroad is the comedy that frames his own comic personality. It is with an American Citizen that he has conquered London, thus confirming the estimate of his limitations so often expressed in these columns.—Lyman B. Glover in the Chicago Times-Herald.

Goodwin’s Troubles

N. C. Goodwin has gotten out of his London complications by paying a forfeit to the manager of the Comedy Theater, in order to fulfill his engagements in this country. Mr. Goodwin’s idea in making the London contract seems to have been somewhat material as well as expensive, in the outcome. Unless he had previously arranged to cancel his dates in this country he obvously would be compelled to break with the London managers or with those who had contracted with him over here. Evidently, upon mature consideration Mr. Goodwin preferred to pay for a release on the other side rather than get into disfavor with the combination he is aiding in building up in this country.—Mirror.

New on the Stage

The new Savoy operetta by Arthur Sullivan and Basil Hood is to be produced in London in October. Its scenes are laid in a camp of Australian miners, reduced and transformed through the influence of an elderly woman, who promises to marry the worst of them at the end of a certain time. A party of young English girls, a lord mayor of London and his friends, and a secret society of amateur actors are other characters in the operetta, which ends on an island of the Pacific Ocean, with an exploding volcano in the background.

May Irwin’s new play, Sister Mary, was given its first production at New Haven last week. A distinct success is reported. There has been slight difference of opinion as to the selection of the plot for the part of the editor of a country newspaper who goes to New York to earn living under the pen name of Sister Mary. She writes a book on marriage, which brings upon her the condemnation of everybody nearly, except the police, and existence is made anything but happy for her.

The Bostonians will bring out two new operas this season. One of them will be by Herbert and Smith.

OBITUARY

Grace Wagner, a member of The Bostonians’ chorus, was found dead in bed in her room, in Buffalo, on Friday, September 29. She had been stricken with heart disease during the night.

Mrs. Harry Sloan, wife of Harry Sloan, manager of James A. Herne’s Hearts of Oak, died in Philadelphia on Sept. 19. The interment took place at Zanesville, Ohio. Deceased had been connected at different times with the companies of Augustin Daly, Casino, Francis Wilson and E. H. Sothern.

Louis Seibert died at the home of his son, Bayonne, N. J., on Sept. 18. He came to America from Germany in 1851, and had served as a musician with P. T. Barnum, Lander’s orchestra, and Daly’s Theater orchestra.

William Swan, a stage carpenter connected with the number of the principal New York theaters during the past twenty years, died at the Seton Sanitarium on the Hudson, Sept 21, of consumption.

Nance O'Neil Interviewed

Would that the time of curtain rise were not grimly set to bring dressing-room chats to ugly ends! Would that I knew my London poetically! Would that I were a tragedy queen, with a wide white brow and a mass of yellow hair of the pale-leaf hue; with the snap of young years in its twists; with lips that curve and color to love and hope and grief—and the sympathy to ease it; with a head triumphantly set on polished shoulders; with theories and an ambition that reaches out to indefinite summers; with the priceless treasure of enthusiasm untouched by experience!

This is apropos of Nance O'Neil, who has yet to meet her match in more ways than one. She sat before her mirror making up for Peg Woffington—if a dash of rouge and a surface of powder can be called make-up—and after a commonplace or twain (from me) and a question about London, soon had us both over there in the old tap rooms, and inns of court, taverns and roads and turnings—such is the infection of her enthusiasm, such the range and directness of her London intelligence. All this in ten weeks! Never! You and I might be there half a year and know it not at all. We have not dreamed her dreams, or hoped her hopes, or planned her plans. She'd cut lunch any day, or dinner, or society, to hunt up a Dickens' haunt or spots dear to Colley Cibber, to Nance Oldfield, or Peg Woffington.

"The old Cheshire Cheese was my favorite tavern," she said, "with its memories of Johnson and Goldsmith and Dryden and Chaucer—with the old Hogarth prints and its Willow Pattern china, and its air of a wonderful past."

"And The Clown, too, opposite Saddler's Wells, with such a stupid badmaird. She knew positively nothing of the memories of the place. Fancy my finding two pictures of Grimaldi hanging in the kitchen almost ruined with the smoke and heat of years Can you imagine such brutal ignorance?"

She knows her London poetically. Sparklings of something tenderer than mere interest glowed in her eyes as she talked of it. May the finger of Fate stir into her pie many plums of travel.

"O, yes, I am going back next summer and all other summers. I should not otherwise be happy."

"The theaters? I saw everything of interest—Bernhardt in Camille, Tree in The Musketeers, Coquelin in Cyrano, The Only Way and lesser things galore. What opportunities the English actor has—the inspiration of locality, the galleries for character and costume, the general at-handness of everything!"

"O, Nance, Nance, the power of you! No one could talk with you five minutes and not see it. For tragedy America has no one but you. What is the matter with our foremost manager that he does not reach out for you and get you? No, I don't believe in "finders, keepers." Were I that manager, I should get you through I had to bring alive to Peloponnesian boot that was strong and mad. Hercules, my lad, do you hear that?"

CHARLOTTE THOMPSON.

Harry Corson Clarke's Return

"BACK among the old folks once again," said Harry Corson Clarke at the Bohemian Club last Monday morning. "Yes, I'm thin—down to 107 pounds, and all from that stomach of mine. Otherwise I am perfectly well and feel just as strong as ever, and furthermore I am going to get well very soon. Have consulted twenty doctors in the last year and not one of them has done me a bit of good, but I've quitted them all, and am treating myself in my own way. My wife's people live here, you know, and I can at least get a little home cooking, though at present the only thing I can eat or drink is milk."

"Back in New York the boys have been taking me aside and saying confidentially: 'Clarke, you ought to go to Colorado.' I thought about consumption."

"The Review is all right and the best dramatic paper ever published in the West."

"My tour opens November 9th, my lucky day, and my first Frisco appearance will be the twelfth. Will you tell all about my company and plays later?"

WILL NOT STAR

Mrs. Jessie Bartlett Davis is now reported to have said that she is not responsible for the matter which is being so widely circulated through the newspapers since her announced intention of withdrawing from the Bostonians. In a personal letter she further adds that Barsebee and MacDonald are among the best friends she has.

BRADY'S NEW JOB

The not overly successful re-opening of Koster and Bial's Music Hall in New York has prompted the syndicate owning the lease of it to engage William A. Brady as the director general of that house. As a hustler Mr. Brady has few equals, and if anybody can make the place successful he can. Look out for novelties now, for Brady is nothing if not original.

ANNA LICHTER
The Frayley Company

The Los Angeles critics are saying some nice things of the Frayley Company, and particularly of Miss Mary Hampton, who recently came out from New York, and of Miss Van Buren. The Capital's critic talks in this manner:

What Frayley lacked in the way of a superior leading lady, when first his company played last month, has been supplied. Miss Hampton fills the want. And the other defects in the ensemble of the company, which defects have been alluded to fairly and fully in these columns, are pretty nearly counterbalanced by the exceptionally fine plays that Frayley has been able to produce during the past few weeks. So odious comparisons may now be gracefully dispensed with. Taking all things into consideration — plays, stage settings and players, Frayley has equalled any record hitherto made by him in Los Angeles. And that is saying considerable.

I fancy that if Frayley had considered only Los Angeles in the matter of leading ladies, we should not have been given the delight of seeing Mary Hampton in the company. But after Frayley leaves Los Angeles he goes to San Francisco for a season at a prominent theater there, and it is useful that some commanding artist be in the company to make San Franciscans forgetful of Miss Bates' absence. So the far-fetched star, a brilliant light even among the luminaries of the first class, is thus given to Los Angeles eyes to behold, and may the Gods be thanked for the circumstances that made the vision palatable to our sight.

It has been amusing to note the anxieties of the audience to see Mrs. Van Buren that despite Miss Hampton's overbearing abilities and preeminent position, she (Van Buren) is not forgotten nor thought lightly of. Curtain calls for Miss Hampton and Frayley have been made to include Miss Van Buren whether the latter strictly deserved them or not. That is not an unpleasant thing, either — merely interesting as a phase of theatrical life. I venture to predict — though predicting is apt to be unsafe business — that before the season is over, Miss Hampton's grip of her public will be as tight as the most praise-loving, anxious to please actors could wish, and at the same time Miss Van Buren's popularity will be diminished not in the slightest. That combination is easily possible.

In Miss Van Buren's temperament the woman predominates, and "humanity" is her long suit. That is said to be the reason for her care of Frayley when the latter struggled with seasickness coming down from San Francisco. So she wins her hearers and retains their loyal love.

True Comedian Was He

A COMEDIAN in a Paris theater recently made a great hit out of a painful incident. While indulging in a bit of horse play on the stage he struck his head violently, entirely by accident, against one of the pillars of the scene upon the stage. On hearing the thud everyone uttered a cry.

"No great harm done," said the comedian. "Just hand me a napkin, a glass of water and a salt cellar." These were brought, and he sat down, folded the napkin in the form of a bandage, dipped it in the glass, and emptied the salt cellar on the wet part.

Having thus prepared a compress according to prescription and when everyone expected he would apply it to his forehead, he gravely rose and tied it round the pillar.

Lewis Morrison's Big Hit

The Dramatic News says it would be difficult to imagine a greater artistic or popular success than Lewis Morrison achieved at the Empire Theater, Albany, N. Y., a week ago Thursday, when he produced for the first time his new spectacular comedy, Frederick and Great, by George Foster Platt. A "spectacular comedy" is a dined novel, but the author has blended war and peace, humor and heroism into a harmonious and pleasing whole, and has shown Frederick as a warrior and a statesman, as a philosopher, a cynic, a wit, a lover, and occasionally a vain and somewhat foolish believer in the extent of his graces and accomplishments. His many-sidedness makes him a peculiarly fascinating study, and Mr. Morrison has been most happy in capturing and reproducing all these distinguishing traits. He gave as complete and faithful a portrait of a great historical character as many that can be cited among the records of the modern stage. Mephisto, in which he is best known to the majority of theater-goers, showed but one phase of his talents, but Frederick demands a much wider ability and in not one respect did Mr. Morrison's intellect fail to grasp the situation or his art fail to enable him to clearly interpret it.

Florence Roberts made a charming, grave, and most attractive heroine, as La Barberina, the Italian dancer who has the world at her feet and Frederick under her thumb. The other members of the company have been gathered with liberality and discernment, making the cast one of exceptional strength. The play is magnificently mounted and costumed, the production in its entirety being fully up to the highest metropolitan standard. The incidents of the great battle scene of the third act are replete with most effective and thrilling sensational effects. Jules Murry, Mr. Morrison's manager, has spared no expense, and his large outlay is entitled to and will surely bring him a generous reward.

Who They Are

Edith Mason is Mrs. Thos. Persse. Anna Lichter is Mrs. Wm. Schuster. Juliet Crosby is Mrs. Fred Belasco. Belle Archer is Miss Herbert Archer. Mary Anderson is Mrs. Antonio de Navarro. Sarah Bernhardt is Madame Damala. Kitty Blanchard was Mrs. McKee Rankin.

Gladys Rankin, daughter of McKee Rankin is Mrs. Sydney Drew. Bessie Borehill's second husband was Wm. R. Seeley.

Keuhne Bierger is divorced wife No. 2 of Chas. Coghlan.

Ethel Braden was Mrs. L. R. Stockwell.

Lillian Burkhart is Mrs. Chas. Dickson.

Rose Coghlan was Mrs Browne, Mrs. Chilton Ridgery and is now Mrs. John T. Sullivan.

Corinne was the adopted daughter of Jennie Flaherty, now dead.

Helen Dunravy has been the "Californian Diamond," Helen Gibson. Helen Williams, Mrs. Tracey, and Mrs. John M. Ward.

Side Lights

Louis James, the balladist, has recovered his voice and will re-enter vaudeville. He lost his singing voice through cataract two years while doing his turn at Cordays', Portland, Ore.

The Actor's Church Alliance is still growing. A circular letter has just been issued, copies of which has been sent to every city in the country where actors are likely to visit, inviting the clergy to assist in establishing branches of the alliance.

Little Rose Leuchner, who made such a hit at the Masonic festival that was held in this city, and who afterward appeared at the California Theater with the Brownsies, left for Paris Sunday, accompanied by her mother, and will take two years' course in toe dancing at the best Parisian stage dancing schools. After her last appearance in San Francisco, she was offered a very flattering engagement at the Orpheum circuit, but her parents decided that she was then too young for such hard work.
VAUDEVILLE NOTES

Felix Morris and company will appear at the opening of the New Montreal Theater in January next. The contract calls for five weeks in vaudeville repertoire.

Bobert and O’Brien are at present playing the Keith circuit. This team have not lost a week since closing with Haverty’s Minstrels on Feb. 15. They have introduced a few new numbers in their act.

Turner’s Pickanninies and Pauline Moran opened at the Folies Bergeres, Paris, early in September, and have scored a decided hit. The antics of the “pickles” seem to have struck the Europeans as a decided novelty.

Wealth Galore

Here is another Klondike story that will interest the vaudeville stage:

Rose Blumkin left Seattle for Dawson a few days ago. She used to be a well known Eastern vaudeville performer, but is now associated with the management of the Dawson Opera-house. The object of Miss Blumkin’s dash back to the states was the securing of talent for the opera house and the placing of some mining properties.

The story of her enormous winnings at faro and craps has been told in the telegraphic dispatches. She won as high as $5000 in one evening, and several thousand dollars in various evenings.

Miss Blumkin brought back from the Klondike capital a jeweled gold belt that is worth $5000. It is made completely of gold nuggets and molded into an ornamental which would do credit to Tiffany. The buckle is a blaze of diamonds and each one of the oblong square links has a diamond in its center.

Zangwill’s Play

Blanche Bates, who has the part of Hannah in the Children of the Ghetto, writes to the Review as follows from Philadelphia:

"Editor Review: I received the copy of your paper and the extra supplements you were kind enough to send me. Indeed, I appreciate the honor of having been selected for your first issue, and will be pleased to assist in your success."

"This play of Mr. Zangwill’s is certainly a deserved success. He has radically departed from all rules laid down for the ordinary dramatist, certainly—but his very boldness must win, not taking into consideration the novelties he offers, his remarkable character studies and his dramatic situations. He has not given the actor any chance for individual preference, but to the student he has opened a new field of thought. As a psychological study, Hannah is a delight, but as a chance for additional distinction she is nil."

"Wishing the best of all good fortune for the new paper and the same to you, I am sincerely,

Blanche Bates.

EASTERN REPRESENTATIVE.

Last Wednesday, Mr. B. A. Kepich, well known in this city as an exceptionally clever newspaper man, and who was for a long time business manager of the Daily Report under the administration of Wm. H. Keppich, left for New York to specially represent the Dramatic Review in the capacity of Eastern advertising manager. This move of ours in sending Mr. Kepich East is in accordance with the up-to-date, wide-awake policy that will always govern the Review. We propose to dignify and adequately represent the dramatic profession on this coast and to do everything possible to keep the Review to the front.

The likeness between J. Lou Hallett and some of the photographs of Edwin Booth is very striking. Mr. Hallett modestly disclaims the resemblance, and says, "It is simply a question of both of us having a large nose."

The demand for the Dramatic Review is increasing and the sales have been enormous. Our regular subscription list is also increasing rapidly. The Review circulates to a larger extent than any dramatic paper in the United States outside of New York. Our books are open to advertisers.

When Mansfield first produced Cyrano the name of the leading female character, Roxana, seemed quite new. However, Roxana, which may be accepted as the English for Roxane, was the heroine of a popular play so long ago as the days of Pepys. One English actress performed this role with such success that she was until her death known only as Roxana; indeed, her own talent cheated her out of personal glory, for antiquarians have searched in vain to establish the identity of the great Roxana. A curious fact in this connection is that Roxana is several times spoken of in the memoirs of Count Grammont. This nobleman was none other than the Count de Guiche, another leading character in Cyrano de Bergerac. There are few instances of the family name of an actor or actress in England being entirely eclipsed by the name of his or her most popular character, but instances are frequent in the history of the American theater. If we put in the Broadway this fact in his splendid tragedy. The characters Montfieur, Ballrose and Jodelet were real persons. These, however, are not their real names, but the names of characters in which they excelled, in which they were cutaneously demanded to see them and under whose names the public wished to remember them.

Or the dramatization of novels there is seemingly no end, and for this there are too many good reasons, not all of them obvious to the utilitarian, to make discussion of the merits and demerits of this current vogue profitable. One thing is certain: each new announcement of the kind immediately stimulates curiosity and speculation as to the intrinsic warrant for the playwright's onslaught on the novel, among its numerous readers, but it is taken for granted that only a "popular" novel has the charm that appeals to the would-be dramatist's intelligence and to the potential backers' sympathies. There ensue the inevitable rapid speculation as to the probable qualities and essential elements of the tale which seem to warrant or to militate against the possibility of a successful play being made of it. While this speculation is by no means idle, it is here that the critical reader no less than the theatrical critic, reasoning from a priori grounds as they must, are apt to slip up. Take The Little Minister, how many admitted the possibility of its stage success even after its production, and making due allowance for Maude Adams' charming personality. Admit that this proves nothing, did not the Bonnie Brier Bush little play utterly without any skillful management? And does that prove anything? Of course, almost anyone would feel competent to dramatize a novel like The Tale of Two Cities, and the Queen's Necklace; yet how many of the versions of Dickens' and Dumas' masterpieces have achieved actual success? Among the season's productions two may be instanced in vivid contrast without injudicious comparison: The Gadfly, redolent with dramatic possibilities of the most obvious theatrical quality, proved a most egregious failure, while Vanity Fair, of all novels, the very antipode to "dramatic," has in Becky Sharp yielded one of the most emphatic hits.

The youngest successful theatrical manager we know of. You'll see him around at the California most any time.

Associated Managers

Recognizing for a long time the need of an organization that would bring them together to remedy many of the abuses fostered upon the theatrical business, and to devise a systematic plan to govern their benevolent disbursements, the theatrical managers of this city have come together and organized a Managers' Association. They hold weekly meetings and have general discussion of plans tending to further theatrical interests. In a talk with Manager Leahy of the Tivoli, he said that the Association, for a long time a pet idea of his, was rapidly growing into a strong organization, and that by Christmas fully $5,000 would be in the treasury to be used in helping sick and needy members of the profession. For years individual managers have been called upon to assist stranded actors to places where engagements were waiting them, to help the sick and needy and unfortunate, and this plan has been one of the heaviest drafts upon the theatrical purse. In addition to caring for their own, the managers have time and time again cheerfully answered appeals for assistance from every charitable organization that has applied. They have been most liberal with their time and money, and have ever been quick to respond. But the whole thing has grown to such proportions that it has been seen that some system would have to be devised to meet the situation. The Associated Managers, the result. It combines business, benevolence and sociability, and much good is already resulting. It includes the managers of the Columbia, California, Orpheum, Alazar, Alhambra, Tivoli, Stockton Grand Opera House, Olympia and Chutes. The following are the officers: President, Morris Meyerfeld; vice-president, J. J. Gottlob; secretary, Melville Marx; treasurer, William H. Leary.

Anna Lichter

Anna Lichter, whose handsome portrait graces the front page of this week's Review, is no stranger to our readers, but a few lines regarding her stage career will do no prove of interest. She is a native of New York, and a pupil of the Italian Master B. V. Giannini. Her first professional appearance was made four years ago when she assumed the role of Leonora in II Trovatore with the Tavory Company. Since then she has steadily worked her way up to the first rank of American prima donna, excelling both in grand and comic opera. Miss Lichter possesses a rare combination of talents, besides an attractive personality, which have all aided her in her professional career. She is mistress of a pure soprano voice, a practical musician, and has great application. No matter how difficult the part assigned her, she can always be relied upon to give it a perfect rendition. Her work at the Tivoli where she has ably filled the position of prima donna for the past fourteen months, has made her a reigning favorite with the San Francisco public, and all her work, ranging from bar- leque to Wagnerian opera, has been conscientiously performed. Personally, Miss Lichter is a charming woman, modest and unassuming. She is sure of a brilliant future, and the Review wishes her all kinds of good luck, which is richly deserved.

During the engagement of Charley Case at the Los Angeles Orpheum, every lawyer and doctor in the city received a postal card upon which was printed, "There is a Case for you at the Orpheum." When they went and heard Charley talk they laughed so much that they didn't mind the little joke that had been played on them.

"Hiaw!" whispered the villain, creeping stealthily across the stage. "Yes; expected you would, be," rejoined the hero. And a murmur of applause trickled down from the gallery.—Chicago News.

Of a Personal Nature

Rose Simmon and Max Steineh have been engaged by W. R. Dailey for The Electrician.

Harry Corson Clarke is busy re-hearing his new company, which will soon go on tour.

David Belasco will produce his new farce in Washington during the month of December.

Victor Herbert's new opera for the Bostonians will be known as the Viceroy. It is nearing completion.

Eddie Hoy and Maude Adams were once engaged in playing lover's parts, as children in San Francisco years ago.

Wilson Eno and Jane Kennar are playing with the Woodward Stock Company, Kansas City, and are popular members of the company.

Scott Seaton has changed his plans for next season, and will join Harry Corson Clarke's forces. Ida Gertrude Manning is with the same company.

Walter Darnosh, David Bispaw, the baritone, and Gaski, who made a hit here with the Ellis Opera Company, are to tour the country, giving concerts.

Dave Warfield is receiving congratulations over the announcement of his engagement to Miss Marie Bradt, a San Francisco girl, daughter of a well-known real estate agent.

William Curtin, who formerly played at the Alcazar theater, writes that he has signed with the Bern Coe Company for The Battle Scarred Hero. All Frisco boys seem to be doing well in the East.

Howard Scott, with Lewis Morris's Frederick the Great Company, writes from Albany, N. Y., that the company is doing well. The route is 23, Charleston, N. C.; 26, Mobile, Ala.; 29, New Orleans.

Miss Mary Gardner, a talented member of Modjeska's Company, has been ill at St. Luke's Hospital for two weeks. She was stricken with typhoid fever soon after the company came here, but is now convalescing under the care of Dr. E. Evelyn.

Ernest Howell of the Alcazar forces has been giving good satisfaction in character work since he joined the company. Mr. Howell is not only an actor—he is a good business manager, having experience in that line that fits him well for anything he might undertake. He will yet be heard from.

S. H. Friedlander has returned from his successful New York trip.

Olive Oliver will be a member of the new Richard Mansfield Company.

W. R. Dailey came in this week to inaugurate rehearsals for The Electrician.

A rumor that Ethel Barrymore was engaged to Richard Harding Davis' brother-in-law.

Walter Monroe has been in Los Angeles for the past few days, looking over his theatrical interest there.

Willard Wells, of the Ingomar Theater, Eureka, has been in the city the past week, looking up attractions for his house.

Hamlet is in active rehearsal at the Dewey, Oakland. The stock companies are giving the public their money's worth this season.

John Dunn, one of the proprietors of the Milk White Flag Company, Hotel Topsy Turvy Company, and by the Sad Sea Waves Company, in former years lived in San Jose.

James H. Love, manager of the Janet Waldorf Company, has returned from Japan. Some others of the company also returned. Miss Waldorf will continue to India.

Victor Botton, a cattlemen of Nevada, was arrested in this city Wednesday on a charge of cattle stealing. He is a brother of Madeline Botton and has always borne a good reputation.

Theater goers have for the past week or two noticed a young tall, debonair figure about the Columbia. That handsome Tom Riley, who, with John Dunne, is sending such entertaining attractions to San Francisco.

Laura Crews has signed with Harry Corson Clarke to play Cissy in What Happened to Jones. Mr. Clarke is to be congratulated upon securing not only a very talented young actress, but a very beautiful addition to his company.

Frank Thompson, who has been playing with the Dewey Stock Company, says that the Thompson arrested last week was the other fellow. Frank was home at the time and it was a pretty tough bit of carelessness that coupled his good name with the arrest.

Laura Millard, the former Tivoli favorite, has decided to remain in in Definitely in London. She had intended to devote this winter to study in Paris, but her plans have been altered by an offer to appear with De Wolfe Hopper when he produces Wang in London.

In addition to the full strength of the Alcazar Stock Company in The Tinkerers next week the following people have been added to the cast: Misses McNeal, Howard and Reinhold and Messrs. Delilie, Nichols and Blumkell. There will also be an auxiliary force of twenty people.

Ludwig Englander, the composer, having inherited $320,000 by the death of a relative in Austria, has sailed for Austria to make his home in that country. In order to acquire the estate he has sworn allegiance to the Austrian Empire.

A NEW FASHION.

(From the Figaro, Paris.)

A complete change in feminine styles. They are frequent one will say, still not as much so as those who like change would wish.

The latest novelty is "la jupe bon femme!" Good bye to the clinging skirts, tightening the figure to the extent of being often uncomfortable.

This style seems to have reached its full run. It is has been necessary to have the authority of a master of modes to dare change this style and do the contrary. But it is done. Poupin has had that audacity, and the races at Longchamps have shown us yesterday that he has carried his style to be adopted.

The skirt is a la bonne femme is entirely plain in appearance, arranged at the hips with folds and not showing the form at all. But it must be graduated folds and of a particular form, which others will soon try to copy, but without being able to do so perfectly.

All that is plain in style is always more difficult to imitate than that which is complicated, because it is necessary to have a perfect taste.

So consequently is launched for the winter the "skirt is a bonne femme," to be seen only at the City of Paris, in San Francisco.
The California

The stage was raptured and the audience was moved to tears by the story of the Italian brigand of a century ago. The plot of the Tivoli patrons. The part of the bandit was taken by Tom Greene, her first appearance in the play.
Both in makeup and in voice he is suited to the part of the heavy villain, carrying out to the finale with careful portrayal, the jolly lover of the goods belonging to other people. Miss Ada Palmer-Walker was cast for Zerlina, taking the part particularly gracefully and singing with good effect, especially the solo in the chamber scene of the second act.
Arthur Messmer as Lorenzo, the Captain of the Carabiniers, made a bold warrior, but could possibly put more warmth into his love making.
Wm. Schuster and Alf Whelan were a source of constant joy. Whelan is especially apt in his fun producing ideas and the maid in the audience whom he caused to laugh so loud and long added materially to the evening's entertainment. Harry Richards as Matteo the landlord, Zerlina's father, sang with his usual good taste. The quintette of the first act was rendered especially well. The Tivoli chorus is always to be remem-beread for its intelligent work and evident desire to please and carry out the idea of the work in hand.

Tuesdays—Othello was given and it will be repeated Saturday night. On Thursday evening Cavalleria and Pag-liacci were given and will be repeated
Sunday evening.

Grand Opera House

This ever attractive Nanon was given an especially creditable production at the Grand Opera House this week. This great favorite was somewhat improved by the careful company, and there is much novelty in it. It was a very pleasant surprise that Mr. Wolf was given as the Marquis. He was simply "great." Thomas Peske gave a most-finished interpretation of the Marquis, and the waltz song was so well sung that he was compelled to repeat it several times. Edith Mason was Nanon, and in this role she showed much versatility of talent.

The Comedy

Hans Hackett was produced in Germany at the Comedy theater and inaugurated a season of performances which will doubtless be largely patronized by German speaking peoples of this city. A large and enthusiastic house greeted the initial production and the comedy went with great dash. Fritz Remlbach and Rita di
Rovedi had the lead and Benno Hirsch,
Josef Greven, Albert Fischer, Henry
Maret, Max Kruse, Emma Russe, Emma Meier and Josephine La Fontaine completed the cast. Next Sunday Der Strasbromsteller will be given and Bertha Von Hofstetter and Alexander Verena will make their first coast appearance.

The Alcazar

It is quite a leap from serious society drama to French farce at the Alcazar this week and it cannot be said that the change is an entirely satisfactory one, as the stock company is hardly at its best in plays of a farceful nature. However, the individual work of the members of the company was praiseworthy and amusing and the natural complications of the piece written with rays of laughter from the large nightly audiences. It seems that Charles Bryant is always more in evidence when he is not in the cast and this week's performance is no exception. This young man handles the stage with rare discretion and makes the most of every situation.
Miss Foster does a neat bit of acting as Suzanne, especially in her "jolly" scene, and Clarence Montaine increases the good impression which he has made in every production this season.
Eugene Ormeude was good as Paul Blandet and barring a lack of acquaintance with his lines gave a fine interpretation. Marie Howe was a pe-petty. Madam Pouillard and her poor husband (Clarence Montaine) a merry dance. The remainder of the cast,
Frank Denithorne, Chas. McKing,
Daniel Halifax, Anita Pallon and Helen Henry, did their customary good work.

The Orpheum

The instable-theater-going propensity of San Franciscans is showing itself in packed houses at the Orpheum in spite of counter attractions all over the city. This bill this week is one of frolic and fun, plentifully accompanied by much skill and dexterity of individual talent. The show opens with a short farce by Mr. and Mrs. Harold Haskins, Immediately followed by pretty Little Elsie in a number of her dainty character songs and dances. The Hawaiian Queens—though one wonders where Hawaii comes in—give a pretty lyric fantasy of song and dance display, especially attractive for its setting of Watteau gowns and fan back-ground. Is there no limit to the inventiveness of man's genius? One is compelled to ask this question when acrobats manage to introduce a novelty. The Florez troupe seem to find no drawback to their agility in appearing in evening dress, and drew forth uproarious applause for a new somersault twist—most aptly described by suggesting that the acrobat suddenly changes his mind in mid-air—and thinks he won't. These performers bring an innovation to their feats in a facetiousness of manner, in striking and happy contrast to the usual profoundly serious countenance or conventional smirk of the acrobat. The Le Page sisters, jolly, gay little girls, are rightly styled the phenomenal change artists—evolving from quarrelling kids in sun-bonnets to skirt dancers in an astoundingly abrupt fashion, through a metamorphosis entire of Bowery girl, Scotch highlander and district messenger. Mlle. Lotty proves to be a human screen for a pretty play of magic lantern slides of kaleidoscopic variety and hue—gay floral designs and the national colors. Winton's ventriloquist show is, as usual, accompanied by a clever manipulation of puppets with novel accessories, the Captain of the Columbia being the newest feature and best hit of realism in mechanism. Tom Brown, the monologist, follows with a medley of joke and song and dance, and the show closes with Howard's trained animals, whose simulation of human sagacity rather blurs the line usually drawn between them and that other animal, the intelligent biped.

The Olympia

The Roussals with their clever, aerial act, Elsie Bellwood and May Nealon, vocalists, are the new names on this week's program at the Orpheum. Ruth Nelta and J. H. Du Boll are, however, still the most popular of the long list of good specialties. Carlton & Royce, Maude Mullery, Alberta Lane and Dora Mermin get their share of applause. Maurice Montague, Rose Wellington and Dot Stanley have changed their songs. Montague has a particularly fine tenor voice.

The Overon

Don Francis, the cartoonist, is an added attraction to this week's bill at the Oberon. His lightning sketches are a popular feature. Marie Wilbur and Helen Forrest are both operatic sopranos of ability and vie with one another for the lead with the Oberon audiences. Agnes Castro repeats her success of last week. Miss E. Borchert and Mr. F. Wenzel play a duet on the flute and clarinet, and the projectoscope shows some new moving pictures.

Vaudeville Notes

Carl Hertz is playing in Paris.

Marie D. Wood returns to this city the coming month.

Coulon and Ryder are features at Theater Comique, Spokane Wash.

Hal Coullet is credited with a big hit at the People's Theater, Seattle.

One of the Lawrence sisters, of the Milk White Flag Co., dislocated her ankle at Salt Lake.

Casmore and Florence, May Cameron and Harry Devoy are at the Alcazar Theater, Denver.

Paul Kerckow, formerly of the Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, has gone East. On his return, he will open a hand-some new music hall in Los Angeles.

Frank Barton opens at the Olympia Monday next.

The Owl Theater, Tacoma Wash., reports a big business.

Barton and Ashley are at the Howard, Boston, this week.

Marie Wood is still nightingaling it at the Peoples, Seattle.

Sato, the tramp juggler, is meeting with much success in Europe.

The Louvre at Juneau, Alaska, opened on the 2d to a packed house.

Stuart, "the mad Patil," writes to us, telling of great success in Germany.

Fred and Amy Gottlob are meeting with success at the Standard, Bakersfield.

Lewis and Lewis, the handcuff manipulators, will shortly play in this city.

May Irwin's new coon hit is "I Don't Care to Be Your Lady Friend No More."

The Healy Sisters are decided features with Chas. Schilling's Two married Meu Co.

F. W. Baker of the Monte Carlo Theater, Taylor Shasta Co., is, in town on a visit.

Spokane has a Baby Ruth that seems to have made a hit at the New Coeur d'Alene Theater.

The Haydenses, Joe, Ola and Queenie, close their British Columbia engagement on the 22d.

Allice Raymond, the cornetist now playing the Portland Exposition, will soon play the circuit.

Howard and Earle, the fashion plates, will play this city, with coast to follow, early in 1900.

Querita Vincent is singing with much success, Tell It to Me, with Johnny Ray's Hot Old Time Company.

The program of The Standard, Bakersfield, call Alice Raymond, Stella Armstrong, Irene Winters and Pauline Stetson, "our bower of beauty."

Walter Talbot, the San Francisco boy, is singing with Sam Devere's Own Company.

Parker and Kelly, and Hugh Emmett are to be the new faces at the Chutes on the 23d.

Cole and Cole, aerialists, make their first San Francisco appearance on the 20th at the Chutes.

Maud Gage, the California Whistling prima donna, is meeting with much success in the East.

The Willards, with their entertaining musical act, will undoubtedly please Honolulu audiences.

Al Onken, manager of the New Coeur d'Alene Theater, Spokane, will be in San Francisco next month.

Rand, Byron and Mindell Dreyfuss left for Honolulu Wednesday, booked by Hallet's Agency for the Orpheum.

Manager Wells of the Ingram Theater, Oakland, paid this city a hasty visit, combining business with pleasure.

Maud Mullery will rest for the winter after completing her engagement at the Olympia next week. She intends visiting relatives in Montana.

Lady Sholto Douglas, formerly Loretto Addis Money, arrived from England the first of the week, and started at once for Oakland to visit her family.

Billy Flemen, the talking and singing comedian, is singing the new songs "I've got a razor for the coon who threw me down," and "The warmest baby of them all," with considerable success.

Ruth Nelta is singing a new song this week entitled "I thought my gal was warm." It is the work of a San Francisco boy, Lou Eklus and is melodious and catchy. Zeno Mauvais Music Company is the publishers.

The Flying Jordans are reported as restin in Queensland. Mr. Jordan has disbanded his vaudeville company and will organize a three-ring circus for a tour of South, India, South Africa, Japan and Australia. At present he is not in robust health.

The Chutes

Weston and Herbert have come in from their road trip and take the place of the DiGasco Brothers, who were unable to get their act ready for this week's bill at the Chutes. Their musical specialty was a big hit.
NEW YORK

Special Correspondence

NEW YORK, Oct. 15—No new plays were produced here last week except The Song of the Sword by Soother and Miss Harrod at Daly's. But there was a very interesting revival of The Winter's Tale at Grand Opera House by the Shakespearean triumvirate of stars, Louis James, Katharine Kilday and Charles B. Haaford. The Winter's Tale had not been played here, I believe, for about ten years. The audience was enthusiastic and the play, which is one of the great masterpieces of Shakespeare, comes off to the credit of our actors as well as to his. The acting was not only uniformly good but was of a high order. In the 1937 production of the play by the Stratford Festival in Canada, the roles of Perdita and Autolycus were played by William Oldroyd and James Cagney, respectively. Oldroyd, who is not well known in this country, is a very fine actor and his interpretation of Perdita was received with enthusiasm by the audience. Cagney, on the other hand, was not able to capture the charm of the character and his performance was not well received. However, the production as a whole was a success and it is hoped that it will be revived here in the future.

ST. LOUIS

Special Correspondence

St. Louis, Oct. 9—With the end of the season, the Players and the Fair, left the theater and went out into the local patronage this week.

Manager Pat Short is offering his patrons a good play, planned and directed by a man who is sure to make a hit,ie Exceedingly the Governor, at the Olympia. The play is the first work of Capt. Marshall, who is a former army officer, whose long residence in India made him conversant with the situation. The face in very funny in the capable hands of Ethel Barrymore. Grace Killborn, Ide Vernon and Meaux Edwin Stevens, Adolph Jackson, Eddie Red and others.

Manager Short's offering at the Century is a great triumph of the American actress assisted by pretty and winsome Isadora Rush. They are giving us Sidney Roosevelt's new novel entitled His Father's Boy. The comedy is the funniest production, and is sure to be suited to Reed's quiet and quiet taste. Miss Isadora Rush is in everything—such is her personality—but in this her laugh never seemed more infections, and she certainly never wore more charming gown. She is a clever foil for Roland Reed, and almost as often is Reed a full partner to her.

 Hoyt's A Texas Ster, a circuit of popular-priced houses, is playing this week at Manager Green's Harlequin Theater. Of the original cast Will Barley as the Master to Tommey and the words are all left of the original. Katie Putnam is being starred in the production as Bossy Brandy, a part made famous by Hoyt's first wife. Managers Tate and Midtleden offer the ever popular and rejuvenated extravaganza, The Spider and the Fly at the Grand. The production is replete with hussars and startling new scenic effects. It might just as well be called a tanataula as spider—so many legs. Georgie Putnam, a Trico girl who formerly resided on Van Ness avenue, is the featured vaudeville of the performance.

The Grand Opera House management, who also control our continuous house, the Columbia, is programming an elaborate array of vaudeville talent, this week, headed by Beatrice Moreland in a unique force entitled Taming a Husband, and Gus Williams, who is as clever as ever with his Pennsylvania Dutch dialect. John McWade's wife, Ada Somers McWade, is as attractive as ever. The other acts are all good, as the Messers. Tate and Midtleden book the only. Manager Sam Gumpertz of Hopkins' Special Theater is magnificently casting Captain Swift, and it is also being ably enacted by the stock company. The specialities are Mannella and her wonderful birds. Her act is one of the must seen on the

Trolloi Comic Opera

For next week, the Trolloi Opera House will be devoted for the eight performances to Offenbach's mythological comic opera, La Belle Helene, in order that the Italian and opera singers may take a well earned rest and prepare for the regal presentation of Myerbeer's tragic opera, La Africana. The grand opera singers have been singing now for twelve weeks, and in order that they may be in the very best of voice and owing to the arduous rehearsals for L'Africana the management has wisely decided to give them a well earned rest. La Belle Helene, which will be presented each evening next week and at the Saturday matinee, deals with the doings of the gods of the ancient Greeks, and the immortal story written by the blind poet, Homer, has been used by Offenbach in the most pleasing vein. The version of the opera, such as next week at the Trolloi is the one used Lillian Russell at the New Casino last year, and was an enormous success in the Empire City. The cast will include Ada Palmer Walker, Jule Cote, Haasahn Davis, Ella Schultz, Katherine Knowles, a well known character actress from New York, and Cora Harris, the sensation-shy beauty who was Paul Daniels last season, and whose appearance at the Trolloi, is but a preliminary indication of the new people to be seen this season. Among the male singers and fun makers who will be in the cast of La Belle Helene will be Tom Greene, the silver voiced tenor; Alf C. Wheelan, who is now as great a favorite with Trolloi audiences as ever his predecessors were; William Schuster and Phil Brunson who have most amusing roles; Messrs. Fogarty, Wilson Kavanagh and Richards. La Belle Helene will be sumptuously staged, special costumes and scenery being prepared for next week, while the orchestra will be enlarged.

Eugene Fougere, who advertised herself by having it proclaimed that she followed Jim Jeffries to America, has been appearing in the Man in the Moon, Jr, and according to paper reports has been particularly publishin- ing her act.

It is reported that The Three Musketeers will be put on the road shortly, by local people.

ST LOUIS Special Correspondence

ST LOUIS, Oct. 19.—Unusual, unseasonable weather greeted the visiting Thespian in St Louis this week. The atmosphere is very much like that in New Orleans and not conducive to good theatrical business. The piece of resistance of the week is the Lyceum Company, the Olympic, Primrose and Dowdstedt Minstrels at the Century, J. K. Emmett and Lottie Gilson in Manager Pat Short's interesting Palace Light and vaudeville at Hopkins' Imperial. London Life at the Grand, and Misses City Club at the Standard. GAVY PALLAN.

Ogd... Special Correspondence

OGDEN, Utah, Oct. 14.—The best thing we have had so far was the Salt Lake Opera Company in Madelaine, or the Magic Kiss last night. This organization has put on about eight different operas and are now superior to most of the professional companies we see out here. Their production last night was excellent, and was received by a crowded house.

As most of the tropes are members of the Tabernacle Choir they will go with it on its Eastern tour, probably not putting on another opera this winter.

The Heart of Chicago played to rather a small house. This is its third appearance here.

Brown's in Town, on October 11th, was enthusiastically received by a large house, and was pronounced by many as the best comedy they had seen. This is a high class troupe, and a very good play.

Her First Lesson

When Nancy O'Neill first decided upon a professional career she went to a local dramatic company, where she was made a member of a most pretentious road combination, and took one lesson—nor would he give her more. "Oh, my dear misguided young lady," he said, "I can't take your money for nothing—I simply can't. Go home like a sensible girl and do fancy work, for you'll never make an actress—never. You haven't the temperament, and that can never be bought." What if she had taken his advice? He tells the story on himself now as a good joke.

Obituary

Henry Frohman, father of Charles, Daniel and Gustave Frohman, died in New York last Wednesday. He had been suffering for some time with ailments peculiar to old age.

Hallet's Agency is filling the cast for Dailey's new company and for Harry Corson Clarke's company, this week, and reports a great scarcity of good people.

LONDON Special Correspondence

LONDON, Sept. 30.—Mr. Forbes Robertson and Mrs. Patrick Campbell commenced their season at the Prince of Wales' Theater on Sunday night, with the production of The Moonlight Blossom by Chester Bailey Fernald. This work was quickly discovered to be quixot for but for the most part distinctly dull. When came the comic relief to the story of love misunderstood, and tracherey for a time triumphed, the audience tittered over it; but while accepting it as a faithful picture of the max ners and customs of some of those who belong to the land of the almonde eye and chaiysstems, pronounced it eminently ridiculous, and were not slow to perceive that the ability of clever actors was owned in its explication.

Mr. Fernald is greatly discussed in London as a dramatist of established standing and no new appears with the temperament. His plays are evidently in demand and the best theaters are accessible to him. His situation is as good as anywhere to American who know Mr. Fernald as a youthful writer of quixot and original stories of Chinese boys. One of these put on the stage in such undramatic form that he betrayed the possession of no theatrical skill of any kind. The Cat and the Cherbub was a good romantic and interesting, but it was not dramatic.

Under the management of Mr. Charles Hawtrey, the Avenue Theater made a fresh start Saturday evening, the program comprising two new pieces, the first an original comedy called An Old Admiral and the second a light comedy, An Intireted Hourmony. Both were funny and will be enjoyed by the Avenue players learnt to tell them more quickly.

Mr. Bernard Shaw's play, The Devil's Disciple, which had a successful run in America about two years ago, has at last been presented to an English audience. It was "put on" at the Kensington Theater on Saturday evening, securing an audience, and was a marked success. The piece held the interest of the auditors from start to finish, and some fine satirical bits of the inique, quite in the Shaw manner, gave relief to scenes that might have proved tedious and make many a peal of hearty laughter. Messrs. Murray Carson, F. H. Macklin and Luigi Labalme, and Misses Elsie Chester and Grace Warner shared the honors. Mr. Sims Reeves is now in his eighth-second year. It is the veteran tenor's desire to make a provincial tour during the coming winter.

The Rose Brilliants has been selected as the title of the stage version of Lorna Doone, which will be produced here first in London, although it is the work of A. M. Tuckin, an American actor. Not of course the work of A. Tuckin, but a life story of the actor's adaptation of this romance of R. L. Blackmore, its author, was announced, and he has recently given notice that he intends to protect his rights in the work in the event the American-made play may not be seen in England.

Charles Wyndham will act in London The Dilettante, written for and by E. S. Willard's use here. It is a comedy with its scenes laid on the banks of the Rhine. The Thirty Three Weeks! Willard has just completed Sir Roger de Coverley for Mr. Willard, who will act it first on his return to the stage. The piece is divided into two parts which will show the youth and old age of the hero.

A NEW YORKER.
Fresno, Oct. 20.—Although the theatrical season here was supposed to open with Modjeska over a month ago, it was not until this week that audiences had the opportunity of enjoying her in such numerous and sumptuous attractions as she presented. The last week the Westover and Herbert Vaudeville Company commenced with Sunday night and ran all the week, playing to good houses each night. The attendance at the company's first performance was the largest ever seen in the house on a Sunday night. The entertainment furnished by the company was generally satisfactory, being better than was expected. Hugh J. Emmett, Silvini Brothers, and Westover and Herbert became popular favorites before the week was out. Mr. Emmett, with his vaudeville feats being perhaps the best.

On Tuesday evening Ben Heindricks was here with his company presenting the Yvonne Venitement in his own inimitable manner. The attendance was all that could be desired, and in fact, so good, that the real concern was that this season is a particularly good one here. In the Yvonne Venitement the audience found something that appealed generally to the lighter side of life; consequently it was pleasing. Hendricks was quite satisfactory in his delineation of the character of the unsophisticated Swede, but he must share the honors with Miss Maggie LeClair as Miss Cornelia O'Grady, and Miss Bertie Connawy, the Sadie. Tonight Hoyt's Milk White Flag will be given. The sale of seats has been excellent. Hotel Toppy Tury will entertain the theaters-goers, and during the week of Oct. 29th, the Doly Company will hold the box office at the Opera House. So it can be seen that there will be no dearth of attractions this fall, for there are many others of the same sort coming.

The attractions at the Opera House this season will be greatly supplemented by the house orchestra, which is as usual under the leadership of Prof. Theo. Reitz. Mr. Reitz recently made a trip to the city to purchase new music, and this with other improvements in the orchestra will result in all becoming one of the leading attractions of the house.

Mr. Merton Bartlett of the Opera House is much pleased with the Review, and wishes it the best of success.

Events that interest the Pacific coast.

Los Angeles, Oct. 17.—For the balance of this month Los Angeles people will have plenty of entertainment, including three theaters, a week of races, two days of circus, and various musical attractions.

Walter Morosco, of San Francisco, is in the city on a business trip. He expresses himself as being highly pleased with the success of his new venture here. Negotiations are under way to bring his San Francisco productions to the city for a few weeks about the first of the year.

Mary Hampton and Mary Van Buren have returned to the city, where they are expected to play three at the theater Saturday afternoon, the 21st inst.

Mary Hampton has her cousin, Miss Nancie Robertson, as a companion on her Western tour. Miss Robertson recently graduated from Belle Pierre's College at Louisville, Ky.

In all probability recently had the pleasure of taking luncheon with Capt. Reynolds of the Frawley Company, and found him to be a very interesting conversationalist, but a man of extensive travels. He has made a complete circuit of the globe, lived in China, Japan, Honolulu, Australia, and fought as a Capt. in a British regiment in Africa. His experiences are as varied as the many characters he portrays. Although the Capt. has played six seasons in this country, this was his first summer here. He will finish the season with the Frawley Company and then return to London.

Beginning with Nov. 1st, and continuing for ten weeks, the Orpheum management will offer a very successful engagement at the Macdonough last Thursday. The Filipino Circus, after placing out some 300 acrobats in the future windows, opened a four-night engagement at this house on the 11th. The first night found 45 in the box office and the second $15,00. After this the company cancelled the balance of their engagement. Hoyt's ever popular comedy, A Milk White Flag, will be the attraction this Saturday afternoon and evening, and the advance sale has been the largest of the season. The following attractions are booked for the near future: Nance O'Neill, By the Sea Sexes and Brown's in Town. At the Dewey Opera House the Grand Piano Company have been giving a fine production of the comedy, Falstaff. To-day. The comedy is full of bright and brilliant performances. Very well directed. Plaisted, Mani Miller, Fanny Gillette and Carl Birch do exceptionally good work. The settings are up to date and the attendance has been very large. Landers Stevens and Mr. Holden are taking a much needed rest this week, but they will appear in Paust next week. Tonight the Veteran Fireman of this city are to be given a benefit at the Dewey, when the Grand Stock Company will repeat their excellent production of The Three Musketeers. Homer E. Gilbeau has resigned his position as treasurer of the Dewey. His successor is not yet named. Tomorrow evening the Hughes Club will give one of their excellent concerts at the auditorium. The Sunday afternoon vaudeville performances at Oakland Park still attract large crowds. There will be hot four more performances there this season. The park is under the able management of Frank Vanmer and Ed. A. Anderson.

Portland Special Correspondence.

Portland, Oct. 17.—The production of Said Pasha by the Boston Lyric Opera Company at the Manhattan Grand was one of the most noteworthy theatrical events of the season in the city. The spacious theater was filled from pit to dome, while the entire auditorium was drenched with national color. The forces of the Denver Dispatch-Boat, Hugh McCluskey, attended in full naval uniform, and just as they entered the orchestra struck up The Star Spangled Banner and the audience arose and remained standing until the last note of that favorite of the American people was sounded.

The play was the old-time light opera, Said Pasha, with attractive additions. After the play-goes had enjoyed the numerous tunes, strains, artistic acrobats and comical acts, the unanimous verdict was rendered that the players had won new laurels for themselves and company. The company is under the management of Colonel W. A. Thompson, with Josephine Stanton as prima donna.

The same company was greeted by a large and enthusiastic audience in Marquam on Tuesday evening and the effect was most striking; it being possible to presume that the gay and laughable Said Pasha might have been produced designedly, for the purpose of preparing the minds of the theater-goers for the reception of the delightful Mr. Bicknell.

The vivacious farce comedy, Bread of Promise, is now at Corday's Theater, and is pronounced by all as one of the most charming and delightful of the numerous illustrations to the ludicrous to which the public of Portland has been treated.

Mr. John F. Corday, manager of the theater, is noted for his good judgment in selecting something to please all.

Tacoma Special Correspondence.

Tacoma, Oct. 15.—Marie Antoinette, a new play by Clinton Stuart, is to be presented here by the manager himself, Mr. John E. Kellard, as leading man, at the Tacoma Theater next Thursday night.

The last appearance of Hoyt's A Black Sheep was so successful from an artistic as well as financial standpoint, that the management has decided to play a return engagement here next Wednesday evening.

Gorton's Minstrels will be the attraction at the Tacoma Theater next Saturday night.

Mistakes Will Happen, played in the Tacoma Theater last night to a fairly large house.

Honolulu Special Correspondence.

Honolulu, Oct. 7. — The sale of seats for the Clay Clement Company at the Opera House opened the 24th. The sale is very encouraging. By the first of the year Honolulans will be looking for a rest in the way of drama and opera. The Clay Clement Company and Boston Lyric Opera Company will be all that the theater-going people will care to support for four or five months to come.

Frank Roos, stage manager at the Orpheum, has been ill with rheumatism for the last three or four days, being unable to appear upon the stage.

Musical Director W. E. Sharp of the Orpheum, who has accepted a position with a local music firm, handed in his resignation to take effect the 16th inst. A Mr. Marcus of Sega Francisco will be his successor.

Albert Smith, member of the 26th Infantry Band, was given a one-night's trial at the Orpheum as back and wing dancer. Smith is on his way to Manila.

New artists are expected next week to take the places of Etnino Eddie, boundless rope performer; Chandler and McPherson, duettists; Emil Walton, minstrel; and Hamilton Hill, baritone vocalist from Australia. All have had a lengthy engagement, and were good drawing cards. A 100-room round "set-off" is being talked of around town, in which Billy Armstrong, who is on at the Orpheum, and Maria Denby, champion light-weight of Australia, are the principals. Denby has been here about six months. On Sept. 1st she opened up the Oceanic Athletic Club as its manager and instructor. Denby and Armstrong are in the same class, and quite a lively time is looked for should the "circo" come off.

SACRAMENTO

Special Correspondence

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 17.—Hoyt's A Milk White Flag was given to a fine house at the Classic Opera House on the 12th. Modjeska and her fine company gave us Marie Antoinette on the 13th, but only a fair house enjoyed the performance. Kate Dalgliesh, an old favorite with Sacramento audiences, had a leading part with Modjeska.

The bill boards announce that Brown's in Town, but we don't expect to see him until next Friday and Saturday evenings, at the Classic. Next week the Ellendor Company play the whole week, with change of bill nightly.

SAN JOSE

Special Correspondence

SAN JOSE, Oct. 18.—On Saturday evening Hoyt's A Milk White Flag was presented at the Victory. The company is a very good one, and greatly pleased the large audience present.

On Thursday evening Ben Hendricks in A Veneine Venteau was the program. Hendricks was at his best, and kept the house in a continual roar of laughter.

Manager C. P. Hall is industriously occupied in securing attractions for his handsome theater, and so far has booked for early appearance Nance O'Neil and Hotel Toppy Turvy.

A Chat With Eddie Foy

I laid a small wager with myself that, behind the scenes, "Eddie" would be as solemn as a judge—and I lost. So myself, the interviewer, went out and bought myself, the woman, an up-to-date crucat. To be sure, he handles the furniture rationally and speaks a simple direct English, but he is chatty and newy and prime and at an interview! No, I don't mean that he fills up to twenty per cent, (under pressure, this is quite moral—beyond, one reaches the frontiers of gleece.) Although he did say that San Francisco is the finest city in the Union, and that he'd like to bring his family out here to live. O, Eddie, Eddie, how could you?

He has been to school to varied influences in his twenty-seven years, and the stage, but a wide, wide smile has survived them all and are easy dramatic politics that finds getting as far as the Mississippi and being stranded as comfortable to discuss as the freak of fortune that changes two peot po beans into to-morrow's eight-course dinner.

"At home in San Francisco? Well, rather. At twenty-one, I was a song and dance artist here and afterward leading man at the old Adelphi in its palmy days.

"Gracious, when was that?" When I was in New York last week and read the posters "Maude Adams as The Little Minister," I wanted to go right in and tell the manager that thirteen years ago, away out in San Francisco, that little girl was my sweetheart in a play at the Adair. O, yes, she's the woman in our profession, now—her performances are delightful," and his face beamed with satisfaction.

"Applause? The audience make you pay. If they are responsive you can do anything. The more they give, the more they get"

Mark that now, your possible future audiences and don't be too safely conservative. Rouse yourselves.

"Improve? Well sometimes I have to, after playing a thing half a season, the lines will suddenly leave me and then I say whatever happens to fit. Bewildered? O, no, something is sure to pop into my head. Something funnier than the lines, I'll wager, said the interviewer to himself.

And presently he wanted to talk about other people. Now that was very thoughtless of you, Eddie, for you were the copy I was after, but it showed a beautiful lack of one of the twin evils, conceit. And what is the other? Why "nothing to warrant it," and they peck their duds in the same wise.

There are little lessons to be learned even from interviews and this ready-for-anything-at-a-moment's-notice comedian, the one of finding the gold of cheerfulness in paying quantities wherever you chance to dig. It is the creed of my Eddie Foy faith that if a rough hand should waken him from his first night's sleep in seven, he'd kiss it, turn over, and declare with Montaigne "We are disturbed in our slumber, that we may the better and more sensibly relish it."

MISS LILLIAN SLINKEY'S CONCERT.

Miss Lillian Slinkney, who gave her first concert after her studies abroad under Maestro Alberto Leoni of the Royal Conservatory of Music, Milan, Maestro M. Vital and Madame Tornie, was greeted by a large audience in Sherman-Clay Hall Monday night. She was somewhat nervous, as might have been expected, for her ambition in art made her perhaps her own severest critic, and the ordeal of appearing before the public was bravely faced and she was encouraged by her audience from the moment she appeared upon the stage. She looked particularly modest and graceful. Miss Slinkney has rather a light voice, but it is exceedingly sweet, and in all her renderings she showed true musical feeling and sympathy. More artists are lost to the world through lack of encouragement than can be numbered; "cold water" is all very well in its way, and a dash of it is rather invigorating sometimes, but it is not well to drown ambition and hope in those taking their first plunge in professional life. Let us think of the acorn and say of this young artist: "Watch her grow, foster her talents in the warm earth of sympathy and courage and she will doubtless be worthy of our pride." As it is, she has accomplished much in her study and the future will see her advance. Her numbers were: Arietta-Romeo e Giulietta (Gounod); Invocation to the Muse (R. Leoncav-allo), her best rendition being Recit Polonese, Mignon (Ambrose Thomas) for she was more composed and sang with greater confidence, receiving warm applause and encore. Hoffer Wimmer, whose work is always artistic, rendered violin solos, Two Hungarian Dances (Joachim-Brahms) and Glogie (N. W. Ernst). His sweet, symphonic style is always admired, but we could desire that he had learned the broader lessons of life, that a little alloy were mingled with the gold of his nature, so would there be greater depth and passion in his music. Miss Marion Bear, pianist, played sonatas op. 5 (Brahms), On the Wings of Song (Mendelssohn-Heller), Staccato Caprice (Vogrich) and encores. She played gracefully and with good interpretation, and won much applause. Dr. A. T. Regensburger, cellist, who played with Hoffer Wimmer and Fred Maurer in Trio in F. op. 42 (Niels W. Gade) also rendered solo Arlequin (D. Popper) which was much enjoyed. Fred Maurer, the accompanist, was most unselfish and artistic in his work, forgetting himself entirely in the effort to bring out to best advantage Miss Slinkney's voice and the instruments. The concert was a decided success.

MISS JESSIE FOSTER'S RECITAL.

When a stranger takes up professional work among us there should be a warm welcome and a word of encouragement if the artist is worthy to be upheld, and it was pleasant to note that Miss Jessie Foster of St. Louis, who gave her first song recital in Sherman and Clay Hall last week, was cordially greeted and the hand of fellowship extended to her. Miss Foster possesses a voice of unusually high range over which she exercises admirable control, but it is not a voice of particular power or richness of tone. It is her grace and ease in singing and gentle womanly manner that attracts rather than the quality or beauty of her voice. Miss Foster will be an acquisition as a teacher, and will doubtless make a success. Her numbers, nearly all of which contained pretty echo-like effects, were Bell Song—Lakme [Delibes], Summer [Chaminade], Sweetheart [Lynes], Yoyo Mokere—Creole song—Distance (Hemamian), and encore. Arthur Weiss was a valuable addition to the evening, his sweet and artistic renditions upon the cello being a positive delight, and the warm applause well merited and encores demanded. Mrs. Lewis, whom the writer heard for the first time, won her sincere interest for the way in which she acquitted herself as a pianist. She has been carefully taught, and showed much musical taste, playing most of the accompaniments.

FAREWELL CONCERT OF FRANK COFFIN AND ROBERT BIEN.

Native Sons' Hall was crowded to the doors upon the occasion of the farewell concert of Frank Coffin and Robert Bien. The well-chosen program by our best local artists was most enthusiastically received. It was opened with the singing of the Roseland by the California Knickerbocker and Plymouth Quartet, and a pretty waltz song was given as an encore. Robert Bien and Mr. Coffin were applauded until it seemed as if the walls would come down and sundered with praise and flowers. Mr. Bien has a very musical voice that will develop to greater strength as he grows older. He has received good advantages of study under Mr. Pas-more, and sings with expression. His numbers were A Summer Night [A. Goring Thomas], Elegie [Mass-net], Hey Nonny No—an old English lyric—and encores. He was accompanied by Wallace Sabin who also supported Henry Holmes in his violin solos. Mr. Sabin holds an exalted place in the profession and is a most thorough musician. Two little gems of songs composed by him—Sweetbriar and To a Coquette—were sung by Frank Coffin who also rensored Love Me Your Aid [Gounod], and for an encore the ever favorite Somebody Said that She'd Say No, a song that Frank Coffin sings to perfection, and his reception was so heartening that it will always be a happy thought when his thoughts turn to California. Henry Holmes received a perfect ovation, and his exquisitely rendered solos upon the violin stilled the hush in silent admiration that burst forth in rapturous applause at the close. So tenderly sweet was the story the music breathed that it seemed as if angels must stoop to listen, and his gentle, intelligent face and quiet dignity won the deference of his audience who demanded an encore. His numbers were Bacterole [Spohr], Bourre [Jach], Abenied [Schumann], Miss Millie Flynn sang charmingly A Dream [Inntret], Serenade [Meyer-Holmboe] to very warm applause, her voice being so sweet and clear that it in listening to her we thought of a stream with the moonlight falling upon it. She was accompanied by Dr. H. J. Stewart, the Plymouth Quartet closed the program, singing In Sweet September.

ALMA STENCHEL'S RECITAL.

Mr. Hugo Mansfield's face wore a pleased expression as he sat beside his little pupil Alma Stencel, who gave a piano-forte recital in Sherman and Clay Hall Thursday evening of last week. The writer remembers the weemaid's first public appearance two seasons ago, and it was a genuine pleasure to perceive development in her work, the increased power of the child's dainty fingers, and above all, the more intelligent understanding of her studies. Then her baby efforts were greeted with caresses and flowers; to-day we pay her a higher tribute in regarding her as a serious little student of whom something may be expected in the future when the childish mind has had time to expand in the sunlight of maturity, and the sweet-faced little girl is fortunate indeed to have found so able a pilot as Mr. Mansfield to guide her through the water of inexperience and drudgery through which every artist must pass before reaching the shores of success. Little Alma played with a certain poise and grace, and her chords, runs and trills were executed with surprising clearness for one so young. The foundation is being firmly laid to hold the temple of art we will hope. Her last number was Liszt's The Night-igale, and Grieg's Sonata in minor op. 7, portions of which were most creditably performed, in these playing with most expression and musical feeling; some of Schubert, Schumann, Schenetz and Beethoven numbers also being given, including Beethoven's Trio G. major op. 1 No. 3. Armand Solomon, violinist, and Mr. Theodore Mansfield, cellist, playing with little Aluam, whose efforts met with every encouragement. Mr. Armand Solomon has made rapid strides in his profession, especially in the last two years. He is an indefatigable worker and enthusiastic in his art, and his tone and style have broadened wonderfully until he is recognized as one of our leading local performers. Mr. Solomon was warmly applauded, responding to encores, and was happy in his choice of an accompanist, Miss Constance Jordan lending him graceful and firm support in Roulo Capriccioso [Saint-Saens], and Preludel by The Messtringers [Wagner-Wieblingel].

A Company's Troubles

H. O. Barrett, who took the management of Hart's Twentieth Century Players a short time ago, skipped out of Vallojo with the receipts last Sunday and left the company stranded in that town. Barrett was caught in this city and taken back to stand trial on a charge of defrauding a hotel keeper.

The company was left without resources and Mrs. Wilson, who runs the hotel, attached the trunks of the players for the bill. By her orders an expressman attempted to move the aforesaid trunks and a pitched battle ensued in the streets between he and the actors. As a consequence the entire company of six men and two women were arrested, but were speedily released by the Justice. Barrett claims he wrote the landlady saying he would liquidate as soon as he reached his home in Los Angeles.

Between Acts

J. J. Murdock, manager of The Girl with Auburn Hair, recently distributed very pretty souvenir spoons in celebration of the long engagement of the warmhearted maiden who has made such a phenomenal hit at the Masonic Temple Roof Theatres in Chicago.

The Castle Square Opera organization has concluded arrangements for an indefinite run of opera in St. Louis, beginning November 6, at Exposition Hall. The success of this company in Chicago and New York has been marked and this new move virtually means three organizations bearing the name of Castle Square.

The company engaged for this season's production of Hoyt's successful farce A Milk White Flag is a large and capable one. None of Hoyt's other plays give so much opportunity for spectacular effect and magnificent costuming as this and it is needless to say that the costumer and scene painter have been given full scope in providing the stage accessories. A Milk White Flag comes to the Columbus Theater for eight nights and Saturday matinee, beginning Sunday October 22.

MUSIC IN GENERAL

Mr. Lee Johnson is retouching his song, "The Honolulu Man," for Mr. and Mrs. Frank De Camp. They had a big success with his "Honolulu Lady" in the East.

Mme. Melha has bought a house in London and will make her headquarters there next winter when she fills the European engagements with which she comes to this country. She is just now the most popular drawing room singer in London, and her new song is likely to continue long enough to make it worth her while to live permanently in England.

Ada Palmer-Walker of the Tivoli played with Musgrove and Williamson two seasons in the Colonies, and was with Hudson's Surprise Party Company two seasons ago. The latter company made two tours through India while she was a member. Miss Walker added the Palmer, a family name, to her stage sobriquet on her arrival in this country, as there is another Ada Walker here in the profession.

A newcomer to New York's circle of accomplished pianists is Miss Aimee Heleno Cellarius. She is a graduate of the Hugo Mansfield Conservatory, of San Francisco, and in the city of the Golden Gate achieved prominence and high honors as a piano soloist. Going to New York a month or so ago, she was at once engaged by Charles L. Young for one of his combinations, and with it she shortly went on tour.

"The clamor for so-called popular music, says Theodore Thomas, 'makes it impossible to present a good program without the support of this influential minority,' and yet a person who clamors for 'popular music' does not know that he only means familiar music; that Beethoven's symphonies would soon become as popular to him as the 'Star Spangled Banner' if he heard them as often, and that it is only his unfamiliarity with the great classic masterpieces which prevents his enjoyment of them." Truer words were never spoken.

Owing to the strict quarantine regulations at New Orleans no less than fourteen theatrical companies on their way into Texas were obliged to remain all last week in that city.

The Cheaping System

A British actor of strong character who has made his professional home in this country for several years—he may now, in fact, be called an American actor—recently returned from a visit to London during which he made a study of theatrical conditions in Great Britain, and from that study he spoke pessimistically of the prospects of the profession in that country.

"The mercantile or trade idea," said he, "is dominant in English theatricals outside of the few prominent actor-managers who have done so much to maintain and advance the dignity of the English theater. Touring managers, the managers that supply the greater part of the amusements of the English provinces—have fallen into the error of cheapening their productions. There is a veritable army of amateurs—many of them persons who boast high family and social connections—knocking at the doors of the theater, and unfortunately the class of managers I have specified have of late recruited their companies from the ranks of these incapables, to the exclusion of trained actors who heretofore have made up the touring companies.

"The result of this unwise recruiting," continued the actor, "is seen in the unfortunate condition of the capable actors who thus have been crowded out of their legitimate avenues, and who perform must accept employment when they can get it at greatly reduced salaries, because your amateur or novice in many cases is able to and will go with a company for a very small salary or no salary at all, his sole aim being to 'become an actor.'"

"Truly, if this be so, the profession in England is in a bad way, but this system of replacing competent players with incompetents never can succeed, and the very managers who adopt this means of reducing expenses in the hope of increasing profits will in the end be the sorriest sufferers from it. In fact, from the Mirror's reading of the reports of provincial theaters in England in the London dramatic newspapers, it is apparent that outlying towns already have begun to rebuild the system by withholding patronage from companies not vouches for and on their faces competent. Managers in England, America, or elsewhere, that assume that the theater public can easily be imposed upon, sooner or later do discover their own operations that they are forced out of business; and it is much easier for a theatrical manager to begin at the beginning and build up a reputation for reliability than it is for a manager to reestablish himself after he has once broken faith with or imposed upon the public. These business aberrations always provoke their own punishment.—Mirror.

Foreign Critics

Considering his comparative youth and short time on the stage, James K. Hackett, the actor now appearing in "Rupert of Hentzau," is wonderfully informed as to affairs of the drama, and, moreover, he is an unusually close observer. Mr. Hackett takes a hopeful view of the future of the American play, for optimism is one of the strongest traits of his character. Talking on the subject of plays the other day he said: "The stage, I believe, will be greatly helped in the months and years to come if the experience of the drama of the past few seasons will stimulate our American writers to write plays of American life and character upon subjects that lie close to the heart of general humanity. The vast increasing population, actors and theaters and the wide interest on the part of the people in the drama ought to bring about an artistic environment stimulating to American authors.

They do not need to invent new subjects, in spite of the general belief to the contrary, nor unconventional motives. What is required is keen, sympathetic treatment of the old themes of love, self-sacrifice, unobtrusive heroism and fine character drawing, adapted to the feelings of the day, and out of which the noblest lessons in life can be indicated. We need more plays like The Little Minister, The Christian, Secret Service, The Prisoner of Zenda—plays in which human nature at its best is pictured with fidelity and effect. Good critics and good actors make for good plays. By good critics I mean critics who cannot say whether a play is good or bad, but who, if it is bad, can intelligently point out wherein the defect lies and thus help an actor or playwright to develop his art. We want more critics on a line with the critiques of the English and the French weeklies. These criticize even the actors playing the smallest parts in the cast and do so with as great care as the more important roles. One advantage is that it enables managers to get better actors for small parts, because the players know they will be judged as fairly as if they were stars. I realize the single critic in the United States is an easy matter; it requires quick and ready judgment of a play and it often precludes a critic's very best judgment. During my trip abroad this summer I noticed that most of the important openings were on Saturday night. As there are very few Sunday newspapers there this circumstance gives the reviewer ample time to write his matter for Monday's issue. Like most players I feel there is no authority so capable to guide and correct an actor as well as a qualified critic—one who takes the actor's art as seriously as he would take the exponent of other professions."—Telegraph.

As Things Appear

When we learn that Hamlet is to be done by Julia Arthur, that the James Kidder-Hanford combination will include A Winter's Tale and several other Shakespearean plays in its repertoire, and that Mrs. Carter is trying to muster up courage to try Lady Macbeth, when we see how enamored Henry Miller is of Hamlet and what a commendable performance he gives and will frequently repeat, it looks very much as though the bard of Avon would be very much in evidence this season, especially when, in addition to the above enumeration, we add Lewis Morris's performance of Hamlet, after years of intelligent study; Maud Adams in probably another Shakespearean production besides Romeo and Juliet; Frederick Warde, always a stalwart performer of Shakespeare's works, carrying half a dozen of the immortal William's dramas in his repertoire, and last but not least, the various Shakespearean plays given by Madame Modjeska and her company.

Augustus Thomas has gone to Colorado, whence he will send out to Stuart Robson the manuscript of Oliver Goldsmith, act by act, as it is finished. When this play is completed Mr. Thomas will begin a new work, the scene of which will be laid in the locality with which he is now familiarizing himself. Whether he will call this piece Colorado or not remains to be seen. Mr. Thomas has demonstrated the fact that he is a firm believer in State rights, so far as dramatic nomenclature is concerned.

We call attention to the new and artistic studio of Mr. Louis Thors, 826 Market St., Phoebe Building.

"Yes, there is considerable truth in your remark," said the Major, continuing our discussion of plays and player-dolk. "It stands to reason that an actor will do better work to a house jammed to the doors, than he will to empty benches. The majority of actors will, at least."

I had previously remarked that such was my opinion.

"It thrills an actor through and through," he continued, "to look out upon a sea of animated faces as he steps from the flies, when the curtain goes up on the first act. But when he looks at row after row of empty, silent, unappreciative seats he doesn't experience the thrill; he experiences a chill instead." The Major used to be an actor, himself, but has reformed, and is doing well as a journalist.

"However," he resumed, "I can tell you a little experience which will serve to prove that there is always an exception to the rule. Probably you have never heard of Mr. Plankington. He finished before your time, I think. Ah! but he was a clever fellow—a genius, upon my word. And yet he never got very high in the profession. He was a barn-stomper from the beginning to the end of his professional career. And it was all because of an ungovernable desire to be a manager. He might have been a top-notcher under any management except his own. This was partially owing to luck, though, I will have to admit.

"Now, this experience I am going to relate brings out the point I was making—that is, it proves the exception to the rule. Here was an actor who actually required some sort of an emergency to show what he could do, and he was never better than when in front of empty benches.

"I was up in a small town in Wisconsin—this was nearly twenty years ago—and one afternoon I ran across Fales. I wanted to know what he was doing there. 'Why,' says he, 'we give a show in the town tonight; haven't you noticed the bills?' and he handed me a half dozen tickets. 'Come and see us,' he continued, 'I've got a fine company.'

"If he had a fine company, or even a fair company, I was prepared to be greatly surprised, for I had never known him to have anything except a badly assorted aggregation of aspir- ing though misguided thespians, the majority of whom would have done better as farm laborers or as some such calling—waiters in a seaside hotel, for instance, or—well, anything except acting.

"So I asked him particularly about that. 'O, yes,' he replied, 'an excellent company, excellent; a little torn up just now, on account of two or three bad stands on the circuit, but still superb, peerless, unrivaled!'

"And besides," he continued, as he attempted to button the lapels of his bright and shining Prince Albert over his chest, but was obliged to give up the attempt owing to the absence of the button, 'you know what I can do in an emergency; you have seen me in some pretty tight places, and I believe you will say yourself that I am better; that I am, in fact, at my best, in a tight place. An emergency of any kind seems to bring me out, as it were.'

"I admitted that he did seem to have a remarkable faculty for overcoming obstacles, but reminded him that this was expected of managers.

"'Well, just to illustrate it,' he said, seemingly encouraged to know that I had noticed this peculiarity of his, 'let me tell you about the little experience we had last night. We played Doylestown last night, and if I do say it myself, those people haven't seen anything like it in years. And we showed under some difficulty, too. There was a slight difficulty, to start with, when an officer from Milwaukee attempted to attach us in the morning, for a paper bill owing to a printing house in that city.

"'I thought that I was doing a pretty magnificent thing when I offered to let him have the paper back, but when he asked me where it was and I told him it was posted up, in plain sight, on all the fences and barns and bill-boards between Oconomowoc and Baraboo, he decided not to accept the offer—scorned it, in fact, and threatened to attach the costumes. However, when he learned that in order to get actual possession of the costumes it would be necessary for him to wait until we had retired, owing to the fact that we were wearing the principal part of them, he began to see things in a different light, and promised to wait for the box office receipts."

"'I knew, instinctively, that if we were deprived of the box office receipts the man who kept the hotel where we had registered was going to suffer, and so I told my people to remove all of their grips from the hotel immediately after dinner, on the excuse, if any was required, that they contained articles necessary for the afternoon parade. I did this merely to avoid trouble."

"But it didn't work. The hotel keeper was suspicious of us, and held the baggage. However, the parade was a success, notwithstanding the fact that the lead cornet, who is Marks the lawyer in the play, got out of my sight, early in the day, and was too drunk to walk when the parade was ready to start. Of course, it naturally breaks a band up some to lose the lead cornet, especially when the other cornet is only a dummy, but in a small town the people don't pay much attention to the music, anyhow, and we

Miss Butler's Success

Ella Butler, the San Francisco girl who a short time ago made her vaudeville debut, has made an emphatic hit in New York. She has a three-weeks' contract with Proctor, two in New York and one in Albany, and had filled the New York engagements before he once told her why he had decided to quit the business. He should be a clever mimic, should dance, indifferently well at least, and above all things should be gifted with natural, amusing humor. Also, how few comedians possess this rare qualification! A good memory, an aptitude for study, and an ability to dodge missiles hurled from the audience are also essential. He is always a star, or longings to be one; and by a queer perversion of mind, generally considers himself better fitted to play tragedy than comedy.

One qualification that I should mention is this: He should be a good advertiser and never overlook an opportunity to keep his name before the public. Some comedians accomplish this by having their pictures printed in connection with a celly compound or liver medicine advertisement. Others frequent refreshment places after the show, where they meet their friends and brother actors, and tell them how clever they are, or how they "knocked them a twister" in such and such a part.

—From the foregoing the reader will see no doubt the why the old saying that the comedian is very frequently a man who has mistimed his calling, but so long as authors continue to create comic parts, the comedian will continue to be a necessary evil.

A FEW WORDS FROM JOS. MULLER, PREPARED FOR THE DRAMATIC REVIEW.

I consider the DRAMATIC REVIEW a credit to any city, and far superior to anything we have in the West, and with your method of doing business, I see no reason why it should not succeed, being bright, newsworthy and strictly up-to-date in every respect. You certainly have my best wishes. Our business is far better than I anticipated, and as we are getting into better territory every day, it will be much better. The companies are very thick this month entirely here. We have passed a busy time, Grau Opera Company, Boston Lyric Opera Company, Miskates Will Happen, Old Kentucky, Your Vonson and others, and our receipts compare favorably with all of them.

The celebrated soprano was in the middle of her solo when little Johnny said to his mother, referring to the conductor of the orchestra:

"Why does that man hit at the woman with his stick?"

He is not hitting her," replied his mother; "keep quiet.

"Well, then, what is she hollerin' so for?"

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 28, 1899

San Francisco is fast becoming one of the leading show towns of the country. No good company ever goes away with empty coffers. The present season promises to be the best we have in years.

The Elks believe in helping their members in more ways than one. Lodge No. 6 has voted to buy the new dramatic paper. We promise that they shall always have a clear exponent in the Dramatic Review.

The funny season is on. All the theaters seem to be presenting comedy at the same time. It is just as well, for we shall have something heavier a little later. A man always feels more contented in parting with his money if he gets a good hearty laugh out of it.

Orders for copies of the Review are being received from all parts of the country. Our sales have doubled since the first issue. People in the business everywhere want to know what is going on in San Francisco, and they all find it out by reading the Review.

Speaking of the novel-play craze, the dramatic writer of the Chicago Times-Herald says: "The main difficulty in adapting fiction for the stage arises from the license allowed the novelist as compared with the limitations imposed upon the dramatist. The novelist may make his tale long or short, as he chooses; the dramatist must compress it within the limits of time allowed for an evening's enter-ment. The dramatist must be instantly and to a fault capable of taking any novel which the novelist knows that his reader can turn back and re-read what he has not caught at once. The novelist can throw immemorable side lights of description and analysis upon his characters and plot, which will make him reveal themselves through their acts and their speech. The personal presence of the novelist behind the scenes is an added charm; the dramatist must eliminate himself. Further, the playwriting must focus on the action and he must fall into the prevailing mood of the people directly before him; the novelist can appeal to a widely-scattered body of sympathizers. In short, the novelist can hide his time, but the dramatist must strike at once or fail forever. 'To get a true play out of a novel,' said our greatest dramatic authority, Professor Brandreth Matthews, in an article contributed to an English magazine. "The dramatist must translate the essential idea from the terms of narrative into the terms of the drama. He must disentangle the primary action and set this on the stage clearly and simply. To make his characters not only resemble but identify with the popular audiences, he must alter the sequence of scenes, to simplify motifs, to condense, to classify, to heighten. He must contest the temptation to retain all unessential scenes and characters, the drama must excel in itself and even at the risk of offending the more lettered members of his audience who will doubtless look for them. Perhaps the play would even be better if he had never read the novel. Thus Eugene Nune, one of the authors of Miss Mutten, a play obviously founded on East Lynne, and which, indeed, is an English version in the hands of Clara Morris, became the favorite dramatic form for that novel in America. "Nos to all Professor Matthews that neither he nor his collaborator, Adolph Belot, had ever read East Lynne. At a pause during a rehearsal of another play of theirs an off-stage voice had told M. Belot that she had just finished a story which would make an excellent play, and thereupon she gave him the plot of Mrs. Wood's novel. The plot, the primary suggestion, the first nucleus of situation and character, this is all these dramatists need; and in most cases it is all that the dramatist ought to borrow from the novelist."

Manager Friedlander should feel proud of his success with California. His next two attractions are exceptionally good. They are Brown's in Town, beginning Sunday night, and Harry Carson Clarke in What Happened to Jones, opening a week later.

Letter List Members of the theatrical profession may have letters addressed in care of this office. The Chicago Times-Herald is made for advertising such letters in the columns of the Review or for forwarding.

SAN FRANCISCO A GREAT SHOW TOWN

And the truth of the remark was never more convincingly demonstrated than at the present time. Let's enumerate: Nance O'Neil at the California Theater, Miss Frances O'Neill at the Grand Opera House, Misses Murphy and Turvy at the Alcazar, Madame Marcelle Amberson at the Alhambra, and a Miss White at the Coliseum, bringing to a close a remarkably fine season of big business. The last week there was standing room only, the house being sold out as far ahead as Wednesday. The Columbia has done a big two weeks business with Topay Turvey, the comedian, who repeated his success with a Milk White Flag. The Orpheum, as always, is doing an enormous business, while across the street the Alcazar is being crowded nightly, and has been for so over a year. The Tivoli is closing the most successful grand opera season it has ever known—and it has known some big ones—and now with light opera alternating with heavier pieces, the attendance keeps right up. Management of the Morocco, occupying one of the biggest theaters in America, certainly has no fault to find with the appreciation given his singers, for the attendance is uniformly large. The Comedy Theater is giving German drama Sunday nights at $1.00 and $1.25 with packed audiences, and commencing Nov. 6th, a stock company will inaugurate a season of popular-priced plays in English. And still another venture, for on Nov. 5th there a success under the management of Blighhouse and Mott, opens as a popular-priced combination house, and already has booked many first-class attractions. And so we say the theatrical business is flourishing in San Francisco.

Murphy Stories

Fitz Murphy, newspaper man, orator, politician, veteran of the Spanish American war, actor and all-around good fellow now devoting his talents to booming Dume and Kylo's attraction, By the Sad Sea Waves, is in town, and that is the reason for the following:

Fitz one day had just rushed into his hotel, having just arrived from Oskosh or some other town up near the lakes, and was preparing to leave for another trip that afternoon. This was Saturday, 11:45. Three minutes later he called to tell that there was pleasant news for him; that Matthews was ill, and that he was slated for the comedian's part himself for that afternoon's performance. Only 11:45 to 2:30! Great heavens, here was a predicament! In to play the star's part, bad enough, but to play it when he had never seen it, and then, too, at less than three hours' notice. However, he went on at 2:30, and did so well that he missed his second and woke up next morning to find that Minneapolis had concluded that he was a pretty clever actor.

Another incident happened while Murphy was doing newspaper work in Los Angeles. Some favor done Charlie last, the toe merchant, was repaid with two tickets to the Alcazar, which was wrapped in the rear of the store and handed to Fitz who then had a nucleus for a wine supper at his rooms. Not wishing to carry the parcel around, Fitz asked permission to leave it at Bill's Edwards' book store while he went to invite the guests. As soon as Murphy's back was turned, Billy substituted a couple of bottles of cheap Zinfandel. This in itself was made so neatly that when Murphy came back he did not notice it, and marched away with his supposed champagne. His surprise and chagrin was great when the supper came off, and next day he went to last, angered at the trick played on him, and made so strong a talk that the alarmed last was only too glad to secure peace with two more bottles of Pomeroy. To this day Fitz never knew where the leak occurred, and will not until he sees this story.

New Companies

Ghas. Thall, son of the popular manager of the Alcazar, will soon take a trip to Carson City to put on the First Born and Host of a Day with a local company. Young Thall has already shown himself to be a capable manager, and during the run of the First Born at the Alcazar proved himself to be endowed with much histrionic ability. He played Hop Kee. We expect great things of Charles and his company.

Harry A. Wright, manager of the Port Townsend Theater, is organizing a first-class repertoire company for a tour of the coast and the East. He wants about nine good people. He will carry a first-class orchestra, and a standard repertoire of good plays. He will feature specialities between acts, and promises to give the public their money's worth at popular prices. The company starts out about the first of the year.

Elks' Benefit

Golden Gate Lodge, No. 6, B. P. O. E., is preparing to give a monster benefit for its charity fund. Either the Columbia, California or the Alcazar could be the place, and while the benefit will be in the nature of a vaudeville performance, the talent being furnished by the most prominent theatrical people in the city. Harry Dolan is chairman of the committee, having the entertainment in hand, and his hustling qualities insures a great success. The twenty-seven Elks present at the meeting last week subscribed for $115 worth of tickets, and if the remaining 230 Elks do as well, the charity fund will be swelled to a great amount. The same lodge will give a stag social at its hall in the Alcazar building next Friday evening.
HARRY DAVENPORT and Phyllis Rankin will soon return to the London cast of The Belle of New York.

MRS. TILLIE MORRISEY, wife of Manager Morrisey of the Orpheum, is visiting her parents in Philadelphia.

BEERHOUND TREE, the scholarly English actor, is said to be anxious to affix "Sir" to his name. He wants to be in the same class with Sir Henry Irving.

ANITA BRIDGE, whose beautiful face was quite an attraction at local theaters a couple of years ago, is having quite a success East, being one of the Broadway forces.

The dresses of Juliet Crosby in the fine production of The Musketeers now being given by the Alcazar Company, are the most beautiful seen in the city for a long time.

MABEL MERRICK of Mathews and Bulger Company, is an Oakland girl. She attended the Lafayette school there, and left several years ago to adopt the stage as a profession. This is her first visit to the coast since that time.

MISS ANNIE THOMPSON, who is playing with her father, Dennan Thompson, at the Academy of Music, celebrated her birthday the other day. There was a supper for the members of the company on the stage after the performance, and Miss Thompson received a pretty diamond brooch as a souvenir of the occasion.

MISS BELLE CHAMBERLAIN, who sang in Rob Roy at one of the matines given by the Bostonsians here last season, is with M. Broadhurst's comedy, Why Smith Left Home, which will open at the Columbia Theater shortly. Miss Chamberlain was the understudy for Jessie Bartlett Davis for the past two years.

Few in the crowded audience at the California last Saturday night knew that it was not Mrs. Raymond who played the role of Oliver Twist on that occasion, but it was so. The part was taken by Miss Lena Hill, and gave her friends an opportunity to see that she had inherited marked dramatic ability from her father, Barton Hill. She possesses a well-modulated and trained voice, and in her acting was true to the traditions of the part. Miss Hill is a San Francisco by birth, and has spent the greater part of her life here, receiving her education in the public schools of this city.

WHEN Louis James and Hanford as Macbeth and Macduff fought the other night in New York a voice in the lighted gallery called out, "The fat un wins."

LILLIAN RAMSJOHN, who, by common consent, is easily the "Queen of the Johnnies" in New York, is said to be extremely fetching as Bianca in Sonua's Bride Elect, which will be seen here for the first time in a few weeks.

JOHN MORRISEY, manager of the Orpheum, was presented last week by Exalted Ruler H. I. Manning, with a diamond Elks' button on behalf of San Francisco Lodge, No. 3. Morrisey has done a great amount of work toward making the Elks' social a success.

CHARLIE CHARTERS and his wife, Lillian Young, the handsome daughter of Gen. Young, late commandant at the Presidio, are playing with one of the numerous What Happened to Jones companies in the East. They will be remembered as having been with Harry Corson Clarke last year.

J. B. DELCHER, with Brown's in Town, has done some exceedingly clever advance work for his company. Mr. Delcher, though young in years, is a theatrical man of long experience. This is his fourth trip to the coast, and he likes it better each time. He first came out with Emma Abbott's company in 1885.

IT is said that Henry Clay Barnabee is organizing a company which he will take to London next spring after the season of the Bostonsians comes to a close. For the purpose of presenting Robin Hood on the other side, if El Capitan can play a full season out there, there is almost a certainty of Robin Hood scoring a tremendous success.

ALICE NIELSEN reappeared in New York at the Casino Monday night in The Singing Girl. She scored a tremendous success, and the tureen play by Harry Smith and Victor Herbert promises to have a long run. The audience was very large, and Miss Nielsen was given a most encouraging welcome. Eugene Connel, Joe Cawthorn, Joseph Herbert, John Slavin, Miss Saunders and the other principals were also treated generously.

EDITH HALL is with the Yon Yon in San Francisco, headed this way.

FITZGERALD MURPHY, in advance of The Sad Sea Waves, was a captain of an Illinois company during the Spanish-American war.

ARTHUR C. WILLIAMS made a host of new friends here during his stay. He left Saturday night for Portland, to pave the way for Topsy Turvy.

MRS. FRANK KESSK, known on the stage as the Marin Barna, the California singer, now lives since her marriage at 19 East 65th street, New York City, in a fine brown stone front, a particularly handsome residence.

MRS. NANNIE CRANDOCK TYLER is receiving congratulations upon the advent of a little daughter in September. Mrs. Tyler is a popular and successful actress, with a great many friends and admirers on this coast.

HARRY DAVIES, who gained a certain kind of distinction in California as private secretary to Governor Stone man when that official was pardoning convicts at wholesale, is one of the authors of the new London play, The King of Fools. The play has met with a flattering success.

FITZGERALD MURPHY
Actor, playwright, politician, editor, advocate, representative and good fellow.

FRANCIS VALE will find a letter awaiting him at this office.

S. H. FRIEDLANDER's brother, Joseph, died in Spokane last Saturday.

FITZGERALD MURPHY has sold a play to Jake Roseenthal entitled A Legal Jug. The price is reported to be $1,000.

CHARLES HOLT has sued L. R. Stockwell for $2,500.00 damages, though the allegation does not seem very clear. Mr. Stockwell claims that his contract for The Midnight Bell calls for $2,500.00 on the season and that he made his tour, returned to San Francisco and then played a supplementary season, for which Mr. Hoyt wants an additional royalty as sued for.

PHIL HASTINGS will present De Pachman, the pianist, at the California on the afternoon of Thursday, Friday, Dec. 26, 27, 28.

DANIEL HALDAX has resigned from the Alcazar Stock Company to accept a position as leading juvenile with Harry Corson Clarke in What Happened to Jones.

The roster of the Comedy Stock Company as far as known includes Edwin Mordant and wife, Edwin A. Davis and wife, C. W. Curleton, Ray Whitaker, Caroline Carol and Annie Girard.

WRIGHT HUNTINGTON has another sketch by Brandon Hurst entitled Lieutenant Tompkins, 4th Cavalry, U. S. A., which will produce for the first time on any stage at Los Angeles during his engagement at the Orpheum.

EDWIN A. DAVIS, the well known comedian, late of the Wyoming Mall, has been engaged as stage director, and principal comedian for the new Comedy Stock Company. His wife, Pearl Davis, a Frisco girl, will play leads with the same company.

The engagement of Dr. Albert E. Sterne of Indianapolis to Miss Marie Burroughs, leading lady of Stuart Robinson's company, is announced, the marriage to take place in New York city December 8th. Miss Burroughs has resigned her position and will retire from the stage.

Harry Corson Clarke Company

Presenting What Happened to Jones and What Did Tompkins Do?

Season opening California Theater Nov. 15th, then playing the Southern and Texas Circuit; East as far as Winnipeg, west to Portland etc., returning to Frisco in June for a production of the new play.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

October 28th, 1899

AT THE LOCAL THEATERS

Grand Opera House

I n this breezy city of San Francisco, where the resident prophet is not even given the credt of being a second-rate clairvoyant, Dr. H. J. Stewart and Clay M. Greene have performed a miracle. In The Conspirators, the new opera first produced at the Grand Opera House on Monday night, they have created a work that is a success; and successful, too, despite the fact the music is the composition of one who lives here and the libretto was written by the first American born in San Francisco after the admission of California to the Union. The custom heretofore in San Francisco has been to cheer the composer on the opening night and damn him next day, because there seems to be nothing so indisputable to one San Franciscoan as to know that another has done something meritorious for which reward will follow. The humid sea breeze and the fog dampen enthusiasm, and the salty atmosphere seems to produce envy and rank unfairness. But let that pass. The verdict of a magnificent house at the Grand on the first night was warmly favorable to The Conspirators, and the audiences during the week were more enthusiastic, even, than that of Monday was. So The Conspirators, fairly judged by a not too friendly public, may be pronounced a drawing card.

All one has in which to place the Conspirators, Dr. Stewart has said himself: “It is an effort in the direction of something like genuine comic opera as distinguished from mere farce comedy,” but he is too modest. The Conspirators is really comic opera and vastly superior, too, to much of the comic opera that we have seen in this city. As a work it is light, ranking closely with Nanon and The Serenade, although in the style of neither, and the action is smoother than that of Il Ruf King Hal. The music is varied in style from the English ballad to the Spanish brava or (and let it be said regretfully) that the execution of the latter was not good—the one fault to find with this performance at the Grand) while the choruses are particularly strong, harmonious and effective. But there is nothing to whistle over afterwards or hum to one’s self as the Gilbertian airs were whistled and hummed and this may detract from the new opera’s general popularity.

“The house on the opening night sat cold and critical during the first act until the concealed chorus sang an air with a vaguely religious motif, and Don Juanito entered, carrying the theme on in a duet with Don Filippo. This is most effective and on the occasion of the first night it stirred the audience to its depths. Five recols testified to the admiration and satisfaction of the crowded house and henceforth it was as warm and encouraging as the most exciting singer could desire. The principal musical numbers in the opera are as follows: Solo, “An Avalanche of Petichets”; song and ensemble, “The Inevitable Thing”; solo, “When I Am Free”; solo, “The Lady Killer”; solo, quartet and chorus, “Lovin’ Que the Thing to Do”; quartet, “Let Us One and All in Blessful Thrall”; “The Conspirators’ Chorus”; brava or song, “El Castilian’a a la Mode”; solo, “Why Is This World Made Up of Sighing?” song, “I Do Devote My Life to You;” song, “What a Distressing Quandary;” song, “Indiscriminate Love;” the “Kiss Duet;” duet, “A Social Fad;” song, “Why Should Woman’s Heart Go Begging;” duet, “This Is No Life But Love;” recitative and ensemble, “Come to the Altar;” “Quarreling Duet;” “Chorus of Mad Maidens;” “The Savage and the lady’s ever having caught a peep at a petticoat. The burning of the Isabella nunery forces the sisters and their pupils to take possession of an unused convent next door to Alverado’s castle. Filled with consternation Don Umberto seeks to confine his son to his rooms, whence the son indignantly makes his way to the court-yard, to the confusion of his father and a band of comical conspirators—the traditional conspirators of comic opera. Later the girls of the convent school find their way into the castle court-yard and young Don Juanito proceeds to fall in love with Dea Isabella, daughter of Don Filippo Casanova, the chief of the conspirators. Dona Chona Malinar next wins his susceptible heart and ultimately he makes ardent love to each individual señorita in the convent, greatly to the annoyance of the Mother Superior who turns out to be his mother. Then the scene shifts to the court of Spain where the flirtation of the Queen and Don Juanito agitate the King to such an extent that he joins the conspirators and shouts with them, Down with the King. To save herself from the royal wrath the Queen declares that Don Juanito is “me cher, il,” which at once, by an easy course of a priori reasoning, leads Don Umberto, Juanito’s father, to proclaim himself King and insist upon regal honors being paid to him, withdrawing from the conspiracy at the same time. In the last act all the complications, as they should be, are set right. Don Juanito marries Isabella, the Queen’s duplicity is confessed and the real King, finding himself enthroned again forgives the conspirators on the grounds that there could have been no conspiracy, be his being one of the conspirators and it being an utter absurdity for him to conspire against himself. Then there is a grand finale, marred by the provincial habit of hurrying San Franciscans in the audience, hastening to reach the doors of the theater before the curtain falls.

Of the production at the Grand kindly words enough cannot be said and all will join in congratulating stage director, Charles H. Jones on the stage pictures, for it is to Mr. Jones that Dr. Stewart gives this credit. One regrets, however, that a stronger tenor part could not have been written for Perseus. As it is, the hours fall to Edith Mason as Don Juanito. The composer informs us that this part was written for Agnes Huntington. What Miss Huntington would have done with it, of course, is now impossible to say; but there is no desire invidiously to criticize Miss Huntington in asserting that, judging from her other work, it is to be doubted whether she would have entered so heartily and happily into the spirit of the part as has Edith Mason. The composers were fortunate in securing Miss Mason to create a role that will prove a favorite with the prima donnas of this country when it is more widely known. A word of commendation is due to Bessie Fairbairn who, as the Queen, is a comical, rollicking, antiquely arch and knowing flirt. Hattie Bille Ladd as Isabella has not the opportunity to show what we know to be her powers, but this is due to the fact that the opera was composed with the idea that the prima donna alone was to be starred and in the circumstances the conditons could not be altered. For what she does and for the way she does it Miss Ladd wins deserved applause. Georgie Cooper as Chona Malinar is pretty and carries her part intelligently.

William Wolff is Don Filippo, chief of the conspirators, and his voice is heard at times to advantage, but the chief comedy parts are those of Arthur Wooley as Don Umberto, father of Don Juanito, and Winfred Goff as the King. Woolsey has made the most of his role and is particularly good, while Goff never was better and his voice and training have some chance of being noticed. As Don Castaneto there is not enough of Thomas Perree, but what there is could not be bettered. And the chorus! Well, whoever selects that collection of loveliness at the Grand, be it Morose, Wolff or Jones, has a keen and discriminating eye for youth and beauty. Theophile Goutier says something in his Nouvelles, somewhere or other, about the awful anger of a woman “qui a le genue mal tourn.” If the converse of his proposition be as true, then the ladies of the ballet at the Grand must have tempers most angelic, for there is not an ill-turned knee among them all. They have good voices, too, and know how to use them, while the graceful dances in the pretty ballets of The Conspirators demonstrate that, like the singers, they lack neither

OFFBECK'S La Belle Helene, a mythological comic opera, was brought out at the Tivoli this week. While the scenes and personages are well known to the lovers of Homer in the world-famed poem of Helen, the most beautiful man in Greece, the story as wrought out upon the stage is a modern version introduced by the muchly-married Lillian Russell last season, and though possessing little of merit in the way of music or song, is particularly good in amusing, keeping the good-natured audience in a continual roar of laughter (not little ripples that occasionally break the surface), for Alf C. Wheelan, as Captain Lifewell, was bubbling over with funnygimmicks and local hits that pleased the hearers. Wheelan is simply irresistibly funny, with a face so facile as to convey to his every funny thought. Miss Ada Palmer-Moore, the son of Agamemnon, and Hannah Davis as Partheni, each scored a hit in their parts. Caroline Knowles as Clytemnestra, wife of Agamemnon, and Coral Harris as Bacbhs, Helene's maid, are new to the Tivoli, and made a good impression. Tom Greene as Paris, in the disguise of a shepherd, was best in the duo with Helene in the second act. Phil Bronson as Menelaus, King of Sparta, was in good trim, and sang the most agreeable part of the music as Ajax. J. King of Siam, was as ludicrous as the burlesque demanded, and Fred Kavanaugh as Ajax II was irresistibly funny; although the dignified originals would certainly turn in their graves, yet could they behold these wondrous caricatures of themselves.

Next week Meyerbeer's opera, L'Africaine, and Balfe's opera, The Bohemian Girl, will alternate.

The Columbia

LITTLE CHIP is not the whole show of the Milk White Flag Company, but he is mighty near it. He is a wonderful abnegator, and a wonderful actor. He would make a big hit in vaudeville and probably double his present salary in a few weeks, but the company couldn't well afford to lose him. The Laurence Sisters are also among the clever people, and their good dancing and acrobatic turns were especially creditable. John S. Marbles, the undertaker, has been with the company so long that there has been no improvement to the part. Mabel Hite was especially good in songs and dances. The other people were creditable. Next week the attraction will be Mathews and Bulger in a new version of By the Sea Waves.

The Alcazar

The wave of enthusiasm that began in New York has swept across the country and this week San Franciscans have been enjoying a most enterprising stage presentation of Dumas' book, known sometimes in English as The Three Guardsmen and at the present time The Three Musketeers. Eight or ten years ago, this play was regularly produced by Alexander Salvini, that gifted and promising son of the great Italian, Tonasso Salviini, and little did any of us who applauded his dashing performances think that we should be today so enthusiastically welcoming back to stage life the dare-devil D'Artagnan and his three adventuruous companions. The arrangement of this act at the Alcazar Monday night followed closely the story and spirit of the book, and was given a very intelligent interpretation by the stock company, largely augmented for the production. Eugene Ormone was brilliant D'Artagnan and depicted very truly Dumas' hero as he wrote him, rollicking, dashing, and youthful impulsive, seeing only the bright side of life and fighting every opponent with such rollicking spirit from mere overflowing spirits and love of adventure. Mr. Ormone has a physique and presence particularly suited for such characters and when we hear that merry laugh, see that strutting gait, and notice his stately and conscious power, and behold the general insouciant manner that animates this magnificent creature of impulse, we say to ourselves there is the real D'Artagnan. Yes, indeed, Mr. Ormone has the best things done among us and we freely say.

Chas. Bryant, Clarence Montaine and Herbert de Lisle were the three sturdy and intrepid companions of D'Artagnan and were very good—especially is this so of Charles Bryant, who made a very strong and dramatic figure of the character of Athos. Carlyle Moore was an imposing De Treville and Ernest Howell, in the small part of Seadrift, Captain of the True Briton, did well. Juliet Crosby gave a very charming impersonation of the unhappy queen and looked unusually lovely in a number of extremely beautiful gowns.

Gertrude Parke was especially creditable in the dashing, unconventional and adventurous, Lady de Winter very creditably, but with a trifle too much seriousness. Helen Henry showed what a clever little actress she is in her handling of the part. Miss O'Brien, the fencing, and strengthened very materially the favorable impressions of her abilities that have been growing week by week.

Charles King looked the crafty Cardinal Richelieu and acted the part with great success, barring the fact that he gave perhaps to his characterization a little too much physical embodiment, rather than depicting the churchly statesman, dominated by a strong mental drive, which overcame every physical disability.

The remainder of the cast was in good hands, and the performance was in every way strong and entertaining, receiving from a crowded house enthusiastic expression of approval. The play is on for a run of two weeks or more.

The California

The farce, A Brench of Promise, ran all the week at the California to good houses. The first few nights there was not a single unoccupied seat. Of course, one could not expect a plot or anything, except nonsense, in such a piece, so nobody was disappointed. It was really nothing more than a conglomeration of specialties, and good ones, they were, too. Burt Haverly, in his imitation of Miss Davis, was about as funny and clever as it could possibly be made. His song, The Italian Oragn Grinder and his parodies, sung with Joe Harrington, were unusually good. Harrington made a clever Irishman, and though the nimble individual of the company is the acrobatic sobrette, Rosa Cronch. She can sing and dance well. She and Fred Saville were encored for their cat duet. Nelle Sennett, a very vivacious and high strung ingenue, sang a coon song, imitated the new woman, did a cake walk and other things in a very fetching manner; in fact, everybody in the company took time for a specialty act, and about the best of the lot, excepting Haverly's, was Burt Jordan's dancing and Tony Pearl and Memphis Kennedy's musical turn. Brown's in Town is the bill for next week, opening Sunday night.

Columbia Next Week

Tun theatrical-going public will expect much of the farceurs, Mathews and Bulger, when they come to the Columbia Theater on Sunday night, Oct. 29th, with their latest version of By the Sea Waves. Their newest endeavor is described as a vaudeville operaetta put together with rapid accomplishment. As to what the public is to expect, there is no matter what this may be, that it will be the very "limit" in novelty no one will question who knows the resources of this fun-making firm. It is staged in a way to please the masses and the support of clever artists, the better known being Mlle. Le Seye, Mabelle Rothers, Jane Lennox, Bessie Challenger, Miss Hickman, Lizzie Sanger, Agnes Wayburn, Mabel Meredith, Leslie, Marie Wood, Marie Della Fontaine, Lottie Etteniger, Ned Wayburn, W. J. Deming, W. H. MacCart, Tony Hart, Thomas A. Kiernan, Harry Sinclair, George Gelder, and Fred Gregory, together with a dash- ing chorus of sixteen voices.

Between Acts

The verdict over Julia Marlowe's new play, Barbara Friechie, brought out in Philadelphia, is not very favorable.

The Girl from Chili Company had to skip Great Falls, on account of the prevalence of small-pox in that town.

"MY JAPANESE BABY" is said to be one of the musical hits of By the Sea Waves. It is rendered by Jane Lennox and the company.

The Children of the Ghetto hasn't pleased New Yorkers overly much. However, Blanche Bates, Frank Worthingall and Wilton Lackaye have made personal successes.

The Christian is looked for an early appearance in this city. Local theater-goers have been anxiously anticipating the presentation of this much-talked of success.

Pretty girls, witty comedians, dazzling scenery, fetching costumes and graceful dancers go to form a combination hard to equal in Sousa's operatic success, The Bride Elect.

Mathews and Bulger and Why Smith Left Home will be the two final attractions of the Columbia Theater's special fare comedy season. Sousa's opera, The Bride Elect, follows.

The Girl Grand Opera Company opened in New Haven, Conn., last week. Calve was Margarette and Bonnard, who was here with Melba, was the Faust. Edouard de Reszke was Mephisto.

The Forrest Minstrels, which left this city a short time ago, are stranded at Fort Bragg. Manager Forrest has returned to this city, but the others of the show are struggling to get to the next jump. Things look gloomy for the sable artists.

Lillian Burkhart has engaged True S. James as her leading man. He has made hits in big legitimate productions, and ought to prove more efficient than his new position. Miss Burkhart has booked return dates in Chicago, and opens in San Francisco on April 1, for a month, which proves that her success on her last visit was out of the ordinary.

Loderer's Quintetones for falling hair.
New York, Oct. 22—Israel Zangwill's play The Children of the Ghetto was produced at the Herald Square last Monday night. It contained thirty-six Jewish characters of various types. The story was about a marriage in jest which turned out to be serious because the groom was the son of a strict Orthodox Jew. Wilton Lackaye was the Rabbi, Blanche Bates made a charming heroine. The play was untechnical. It was singular, and throughout all could be detected the work of James A. Hearne. It is the effort of an intelligent man, fully performed. Whether or not it will be a permanent success will depend entirely upon public taste. It deals almost exclusively with Jewish characters. It resonates many queer Jewish laws which must be unfamiliar to many modern Jews. Orthodox Jews may take the ground that they do not like to have their religion put on exhibition. But to the student this play is of interest, although many persons who saw the characters sketches on the opening night mistook them for caricatures.

The Dairy Farm, which was produced last Monday night at the Fourteenth Street Theater, is full of milk and dialogues, equally uncondensed. Miss Eleanor Mar- ton, the author, is also the soubrette. The scenes of the play are laid in 1834. There are all the requisite conditions to make the rural play a success, including a new moon bay, plenty of sunshine and a large mortgage which refuses to be lifted until the final curtain is about to drop. It is one of those Old Homestead plays which frequently get produced. Miss Eleanor Marton made such a success as Uncle Josh Whitecomb. By the way, Mr. Thompson and his family, who are now back at the Academy of Music in The Old Homestead, seem to be drawing just as well as their 1,100th performance as in their first. The same play was produced at two different theaters in this city last week. At the Garrick it was in English and was called The Girl in the Barracks. At the Irving Place Theater it was in German and was called The Girl as a Recluse. Both versions are suggestive. Louis Xanu and his wife, Clara Lujan, play the English version. At the Garrick, The Girl in the Barracks is being used as a stop gap until Sheekole-Johnson is ready for production. Some of the critics here think that Miss Lujan is too attractive to be successful in court shoes, as she was in skirts.

Bernice Holmes, who will be remembered as a favorite of the San Francisco Tivoli, alternated last week with Mary Linke in Aida at the Castle Square in the contralto part. The basis of the company this year is Joseph Bernstein, who has made some reputation as a local concert singer, but who when he went upon the stage adopted the name of Oscar Reyes. Why he should have been asked to keep the name of Bernstein is not apparent.

William A. Brady, who seems to have a way of making money from the time he began as call boy at the old California theater, has at last got control of Koster & Bial's music hall. When Brady was not busy managing California champion pugilists he looks about for another play or a new theater. While Jack C. Cusack stopped fighting, Brady took up James J. Jeffries. It seems that Brady goes upon the principle that nothing succeeds like success, and he has been very fortunate. The cast was well selected and the play is a comedy of which he has been the author. Whenever you see it make sure you see the play. In this case, it will not be a comedy. It is a singular, no matter who loses money it will not be Brady.

Changes of bill last week which did not involve new plays brought Charles Frohman's Empire Company to the Knickerbocker. The Maude Adams production last spring of Romeo and Juliet, for which actors were taken from various Frohman companies, stopped runs at the Lyceum and the Empire. Lord and Lady Algry, which was thus interrupted, was brought back to town before the Knickerbocker. The engagement is for only two weeks and was made possible at this time because Francis Wilson withdrew from that theater with his comic opera version of Cynara de Burgeme, two weeks earlier than he had originally expected to stay at the Knickerbocker. Miss O'Leary, who was so well favored with the California Theater in San Francisco, is the manager of the Knickerbocker for Mr. Hayman & Company.

The Castle Square Opera Company last week at the American celebrated its fifth hundred performance of opera in English by a revival of Aida.

In Paradise, with Minnie Seligman and Richard Golden, left the Bijou last night and May Irving, in Sister Mary, is expected to take possession of the theater next Friday evening.

The Casino was closed last week, but will be reopened tomorrow night by Alice Nelson in The Singing Girl. Persons who saw Miss Nelson in the Tivoli in San Francisco several years ago, and later while she was living in Oakland; never dreamed that she had enough voice to head an opera company. For hailing her as a doubtful column of heavy editorial type. Miss Ella Wheeler Wilcox, the poet, has now been turned loose upon the indecent plays. They all seem to forget that there is a simple way of stopping an indecent play in the city. All it is necessary to do is to have the manager arrested. Testimony already given before the Mzet committee in this city shows that every time a bone foul complaint is made by any citizen against the keeper of any respectable place of amusement it costs the proprietor of the place from $50 to $300 to "square" it with the police. It would be possible to make any indecent play too painful for the man- ners of our crowned heads. It would generate the police. But the newspaper has a simpler method if it really desires to stop indecent plays. It is printed in the newspapers that there are indenent plays last night. And the farther they get away from this metropolitan the less chance of success they stand. The possibility of making such productions succeed temporarily, even, here, is based upon the unorganized state of society which is destroying the home in great cities. The only lasting remedy is to be found not in appealing to the moral instincts of the managers, but by giving the managers an opportunity to take the law into their own hands. We are sometimes in too much of a hurry. If we but glance at our unsanitized copies of Shakespeare's plays we will see that we have made some strides in three hundred years. The present license for indecent plays will serve its purpose in the arousing of the people to a social reform which will in time make such plays impossible.

St. Louis, Oct. 29—The musical syndicate is to be complimented on the excellent bookings that it is giving the local theatrical patrons. Messrs. Hayman and Frohman, the impresarios of the theatrical trust, have served the St. Louis theatrical patrons with a mediocre class of attractions during the past several years. Chicago being favored with the nucleus of the best attract- tion. This season Manager Pat Short of the Century and the Olympic Theaters has, through the permission of the theatrical trust, has been in position to program an excellent class of attractions. Last week the piece de resistance was Trelawny of the Wells. This week we have the pleasure of seeing Violette Alford in The Christian at the Olympic. Your readers are thoroughly conversant with both the star and the play, and a review is unnecessary. All one has to say is that it is a great play, capable cast, but not as strong as the novel. Hall Cajicack is the name of the star. Miss Violette Allen was a record-breaker.

Jacoii Litt's magnificent production of Edwin Arden's Zaza is being favorably received at the Century. It is a Roman melodrama worthy of merit.

The latest of farce comedies, Kelly's Kits, 12-12, by Billy Garsen's offering at Hav- ilin's this week. It is a good purveyor of publicity for the New York World and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, as the characters are a reproduction of Outcault's Kids that have been a feature of Mr. Pulitzer's two dailies.

Manager Sam Hampers of Hopkins' Imperial Theater has an excellent bill last night by Harry Campbell's Mr. Partner, with Al Blanchard, Mr. Price Campbell and Evans and the biographer at the vaudeville feature.

George Monroe, of the Aunts Bridge fame, is producing a new play entitled Miss O'Laughlin at the Grand Opera House. The force is funny and full of merit. Managers Middleton and Tate have an excellent bill at the Columbia, headed by Joe Hart being the only name of De Mr, the Roscoes and hosts of others.

The High Rollers, an aggregation of pretty burlesque girls, is under the manage- ment Jim Butler's visitors at the Standard. Their performance requires an asbestos floor and curtain on account of the radiation of warmth caused by the burlesque of the show.

The Opera Company sing four nights next week in St. Louis. This magnificent lyric organization will be followed by Richard Mansfield, Clanchy O'Connell follows Zoroast at the Century. Miss Adel Northwood has been engaged as the prima donna of the Castle Square Opera Company which has been engaged for the Exposition. She is said to be very clever. Charles Ernest and his partner have made a great success of their bohemian theatrical café, The Minstrel. Manager Jim Butler of the Stanford theater has made a great success of his new boating club at the Fourteenth Street Theater. St. Louis is now a wide open town.

City Fallen.

SALT LAKE, Oct. 23—The SALT LAKE, Oct. 23—The SALT LAKE CITY, Oct. 23—Madeleine was repeated Salt Lake by Salt Lake, Oct. 23—Madeleine was repeated Salt Lake at the theater October 18th before one of the largest houses the local company has ever played to. Many were unable to gain ad- missance to the performance and another engagement is being negotiated. Daines & Riles' third attraction to reach Salt Lake this season, Mathews and Bulger in By the Sea Waves, proved fully as entertaining as Hotel Toppy Torry or A Milk White Flag. The piece drew two big audiences to the theater the 19-21st. Only a few seats will be available. Left Home comes to the theater October 30th and just, Grimes' Cellar Door at the Grand, the 16-18, did very poor business, the production has been in use at the theater in many a day. Beach and Bowers Mustel's played to capacity of Grand, 24th-26th. Vanity Fair follows, opening 30th.

John K. Hardy.

Ogdan Special Correspondence.

Ogdan, Oct. 25.—The Diller Com- company has played the entire week to full houses, at fifty cents for the best seats. They put up a pretty good show. They will go on through Wisconsin and Nebraska.

Tonight we have by the Sea Waves Ogdans by Mathews and Bulger. Tuesday and Wed- nesday, Beach and Bowers Mustel's and Saturday, Vanity Fair. Hoyt's A Black Sheep comes a week from Wednesday. Our Wonderland Theater has had a very auspicious opening.
The Orpheum

WRIGT HUNTINGTON and his clever company in The Stolen Kiss has the headline attraction at the Orpheum this week, and to say the sketch is a success would be putting it mildly. It is a bright little conceit by Brandon Hurst, with lines and situations which would evoke many laughs even if interpreted by a less clever company. Mr. Huntington is the same easy, graceful, handsome "Jack" of the old Alcazar days, and plays Lieut. Jack Pynott, U. S. A., up to the limit. Adelie Frances as Hilda the Countess is a beautiful woman, wears handsome gowns and furthermore is an actress of ability. George H. Farren, as Luigi the Count, gave a great character impersonation. The brughs came at least three a minute for twenty minutes and it is a pleasure to chronicle the fact that Mr. Huntington has a winner. Laura Bart made her first vaudeville appearance in San Francisco and was warmly welcomed. Her monologue is good and her singing better and the songs had the novelty of being new. Sada, the sixteen year old violinist, displays a marvelous technique for one so young. It is a difficult thing to hold an Orpheum audience through three pieces of high class music, but this little lady accomplished the feat. Mlle. Erna's dogs and Walton's monkeys do many tricks which show how poorly their intelligence app. to that of man. With cornetist and sometime vocalist, played and sang very acceptably. The holdovers are Tom Brown, Mlle. Lotty and the Florent Troupe.

The Chutes

HUGH EMMETT, ventriloquist, is the only newcomer at the Chutes this week, but the others have made changes in their acts. Mr. Emmett is a ventriloquist without a superior, and the audiences at this popular resort have been greatly pleased by his work. Weston and Herbert are as funny as ever. Baby Ruth Roland has made good to such an extent that her engagement is extended three more weeks. She is the best child singer and dancer we have ever seen. Adgie, Major Mite, Hopper and Starr and the animatronic complete the program. Next week, Cole & Cole acrobats, Parker and Kelly, Irish comedians and Mattie Nichols in song and dance are the newcomers.

The Olympia

FRANK BARTON in his rag-time specialties, caught the Olympia crowds this week, and Ruth Neila does some neat singing and dancing, introducing a new song entitled, "That's how the rag-time dance is done." In fact, she keeps it up they will have to rechristen the place and call it The Rag Time Music Hall, for Dora Mervin contributes her coon song nightly, as do Carlton and Royce and May Neelson. The Rousells get lots of applause with their aerial act. The remainder of the bill consists of Alberta Lane, Rose Wellington, Ave Mullay and Eille Holdwood.

The Oberon

LILLIAN WALThER, lyric prima donna, makes her second bow to Oberon audiences this week, and her work is pronounced good. Marie Wilbur is singing the Ave Maria from Cavalleria Rusticana and is an established favorite. Helen Forrest has also a large following. Messrs. Ritau and Mansfield and Miss Oria Clifton form an excellent trio on violin, cello and piano, and the projectoscope shows new moving pictures.

Vaudeville Notes

Shaw Bros. will play this city soon. Fisher and Wall, sketch team, are en route to this city. McDonald Bros, California boy, are with the Cracker Jacks. Parker and Kelly and Mattie Nichols open at the Chutes 30th. Louise Keesing opens at the People's Theater, Seattle, Wash., 30th. Belle Williams and Jack Alphon are members of the Vanity Fair Co. Baby Ruth Roland will play the Orpheum circuit in the near future. Tony Ryan and Son are headliners at the Olympia, West Superior, Wis. Pearl and wildly are at the International Music Hall, Roseland, B. C. Cad Wilson is doing Chicago. She leaves for this city November 10th. Alice Raymond, the cornetist, is booked to open at Olympia, December 4th. Dampierie and Sheldon and Winona open at the Orpheus, Kandishgul, Cal., 30th. At the conclusion of his Chute engagement, Hugh Emmett goes direct East. Roselle and Rossey, well known in this vicinity, will be featured in this city, January 1900. Eddie Dolan and Dollee Mitchell have become prime Stockton favorites. They are at the Tivoli. The Mohring Bros, acrobats, will play this city and the Northern Circuit to follow in December.

McNeill and Kroll are at Portland. Wainwright and Tiffer, the talented lady dancers, are at West Superior, Wis, heading this way. Chris Whalen, the Clever Frisca vocalist, has made a pronounced hit with Irwin's Big Show. The Standard Theater, Bakersfield, has a strong show while business has been exceptionally good.

Roberts Similax & Co, a new team for vaudeville honors, are at Butte, Mont. They will be seen in this city. Ezra Kendall is now presenting for the entertainment of vaudeville patrons new sketch of rural life. It is a life.

Carl Reiter is still at the Orpheum, Kansas city, Mo. The management is more than pleased with his efforts. The People's Theater program, seatle, reads thusly: "Just plain Marie Wood." What's the matter with the "California Nightingale," Marie? The Laurence Sisters, little Sonora girls, are one of the features with Hoy's Milk White Flag Co, now playing at the Columbia Theater. San Pedro will in all likelihood have a vaudeville house. A well known theatrical manager is on the ground at present, looking over the situation. Manager Wells of the Jorgman Theater, Bureka, left for his home 28th. He has arranged with Archie Levy for a number of strong companies to play his house.

I Forgive You, Frank Melville's new song, is being sung at the Caligee Theater. The Encorium reports a sale of over five hundred copies up to date.

Madame Lillian Walther is singing at the Oberon, a second engagement this season. Madame Walter is a handsome type of blonde beauty and a singer of more than ordinary ability.

Twenty Minutes with Mrs. Kreling

O\5E may choose haphazard now, always, scores of earnest workers, running shoulder to shoulder with men in the mad scramble for bread, dry, battered or jumbled, but, in San Francisco at least, scarcely a more interesting figure than Mrs. Kreling of the Tivoli. Hers is a unique position.

If you fancy a woman with an unshaken battle-front, wearing aggression with a charm on her shoulders, amended your point of view at once. Piness and strength of fibre may and often do go hand in hand. Being in the midst of things sometimes proves but a gentle antidote against undue timidity.

The worst that can be done, a woman can do. The inevitable pause filled in by the men with the well calculated idleness of a cigar and "The Chair Invisable," she has her knitting, dainty and pink and fluffy. The click of the needle in a woman's hand could imagine no holding mighty on her nerves.

"Ready for my inherited task? Well, I seemed to be, and though about me we were so competent and willing and quick to serve." They will always be, Mrs. Kreling. Your little feminine "Isn't that so?" trick of which you are all unconscionable, will attend proper to that. Though had inestimable knowledge of the Tivoli's management, Mr. Kreling and I had always talked things over." That's just it, and it would be well if more could say the same.

"Yes, the Tivoli has been in existence twenty years." And three months," added Mr. Lask. Now do be accurate. There is nothing so convincing to a business man as facts! If a bit of wifely judgment is to be trusted, I should say that he who counts George Lask a friend, is such to be envied, and Mrs. Kreling will back the statement, that I'll wager. And I have been at the helm six years very lustily and will concur in the last sentence. "Interesting? Yes, more than interesting, for most of our happiness comes through our work, after all." "Trouble getting talent? O, no, we have an application for a vacuum. Mr. Lask's desk is heaped now with letters." "Opers? Well, just now we find grand opera more profitable, though to feel the public pulse is a difficult task. It is so wavering." Verify, the ship dramatic sails upon fickle waters.

"Yes, there is always material to choose from; there are so many new operas produced each year in Paris and Berlin. You can always get good operas if you are willing to pay for them, and it pays to pay for them." And I fancied all the managers breathless trying to get the first "go" at things, before they fell into the clutches of competition. I think we should consider it an act of unwisdom to think at all without authority.

"Perhaps my most exacting work," continued Mrs. Kreling, "is done as a librarian. My attic floor at home, is a carefully arranged circulating library of over five hundred operas, including the score, prompt book, orchestration, and vocal and dramatic parts. Each distribution is checked against its receipt, thus insuring its return and the integrity of the library." "And then I have two boys, thirteen and fourteen." The sparkle in her eyes told the rest. Nothing, you may be sure, interferes with their education.

She is at her post of duty early and late and there is an unusual air of devotion centosy about the Tivoli private offices, plainly the result of her quiet influence. When all is done it is not a matter that can be done, a woman can do. She secures a woman with a clear head, a quiet sense of responsibility and the saving grace of courageous humor. She gives herself the drooliest consections. I'd fancy all her tasks to be unflattering but she could imagine nothing tingling on her nerves.

"Ready for my inherited task? Well, I seemed to be, and though about me we were so competent and willing and quick to serve." They will always be, Mrs. Kreling. Your little feminine "Isn't that so?" trick of which you are all unconscious, will attend properly to that.

EVENTS THAT INTEREST THE PUBLIC

LOS ANGELES

Special Correspondence

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 27.—This being next week, all the theaters are doing a good business, notwithstanding numerous counter-attractions in the shape of circus, prize fights, etc. Many of the race courses go out of a kindness of heart, those who lose go to make glad the heart, and those who win their hearts are in the right place and they enjoy the theater. So, all things considered, the managers, actors and actors-managers are well pleased with this week's business.

The Los Angeles theater caught fire the 19th inst. and was damaged to the tune of $15,000. A large force of men was put at work night and day making temporary repairs so the place could be used for Hotel Taggart's, and which it will be dark for weeks while the permanent repairs are being made.

Mr. Fleming, manager of the Frawley Company, has left for New York to join her daughter Blanche. Mrs. Bates became quite a favorite here, and Los Angeles people would be pleased to see her again. Mr. Frawley has decided to present Iaen's Heilda Gabler on the afternoon of Nov. 10. The subscriptions have not, as yet, reached a figure to guarantee actual expenses, but the actor-manager has graciously agreed to present the piece anyway, and give a Los Angeles audience an opportunity, for the first time, of witnessing one of the Norwegian's masterpieces. The last week of the Frawley Company's engagement will be divided between Madame Sans Gene, The Dancing Girl, and Thrills. Mr. Frawley, a little pupil of the Los Angeles School of Dramatic Art, made her debut with the Frawley Company in the Sporting Duchess. The Woodmen of the World had a benefit performance at the Orpheum the 25th inst. A great many Woodmen and their families were present and enjoyed a good performance. Walter L. Main's three ring circus showed here four performances the 29th to the usual large crowds that never miss seeing the circus.

At the Los Angeles Theater Hotel Topsy Turner held the boards the 24th, playing to good houses. Mile. Fifa followed the 27th-29th. This theater has done a pretty fair business this season, and will be handicapped to a certain extent on account of closing for two weeks.

Morocco's Surfam Theater still continues to draw large and fashionable audiences to each performance. For the Sporting Duchess the advance sale was exceptionally large, and the seating capacity of the theater was taxed to its utmost every night. The piece is very well put on, the stage scenery exceptionally good, and the different roles strongly played. Four horses and jockeys add greatly to the realism of the piece, and a very good representation of the finish of the Derby is given, considering the size of the stage. For next week An Enemy to the King is being rehearsed.

The Orpheum has an entire new bill, barring two hold-overs, which is up to the standards of vaudeville lovers. This is a house that never goes out of fashion, and itself.

The management, standing with both feet in the grave, the Orpheum will still be gathering in the same on Monday every office, and the bill consists of the following: Miss Hilda Cornish, Mr. and Mrs. Budworth, La Petite Rilie, Howard's Pony Circus, Le Page Sisters, Diu Bell, Forest and King, and the Vesper Quartet.

HERBERT L. CONNIN.

SACRAMENTO

Special Correspondence

SACRAMENTO, Oct. 24.—A bookkeeper and Hennessey's very amusing face, Brown's in Town, was played to good houses Friday and Saturday nights and Saturday matinees at the Clunie Opera House.

The popular Elledge Company, with Jesse Norton, opened Sunday night for a long engagement. The Clunie was packed, while the "standing room only" signs had to be displayed in front of the Opera House. The following are to be given during the engagement: A Flag of Truce, A Nutmeg Match, The Ensign, The Great Metropolis, Uncle Dudley, The Hawk's Daughter, and A Flag of Truce.

Oct. 30th, A Breach of Promise for a week.

Miss Alice Dear, the talented daughter of Manager Frederick of the Clunie, leaves this week for the Northwest with her own company, to produce the new comedy drama, The Electrician. The company will consist of thirteen people—the lucky number for theatrical people. The company will be under the management of Gerome Rader, the popular assistant manager of the Clunie Opera House, while J. J. Davis will be in advance.

STOCKTON

Special Correspondence

STOCKTON, Oct. 24.—The Daily Stock Company opened here on Monday evening in The New South to a very large and appreciative audience.

On Tuesday evening of amusement was presented to the audience. A Model Husband, was presented to about the same-sized audience as Tuesday evening. Darrel Vincent as Herkelian Bartet was the same Herkelian Vin- tont that was so popular in Stockton in days gone by, only a much better actor. The same may be said of W. R. Dailey, whose witciss and popular song singing is always sure of sounds of applause.

On Wednesday Hamlet will be presented with Darrel Vincent in the title role.

TAGOMA

Special Correspondence

TACOMA, Oct. 28.—Mojskia gave a very successful performance at the Mahogany theater here last Thursday night. The audience was one of the largest this Tacoma theater has seen for years, notwithstanding the fact that the weather was very disagreeable.

My Friend from India will undoubtedly draw a large crowd to the Tacoma theater next Wednesday evening, W. M. Hoyt.

OAKLAND

Special Correspondence

OAKLAND, Oct. 25.—The largest house of the season greeted Hoyt's A Milk White Flag at the Macdonough Theater last Saturday night. The comedy went with a tin and burrsh from first to last, and with its rapid fire wit, quick action, clever repartee, made another very successful performance. The comedy, Brown's in Town, comes to this house to-morrow evening for one performance only. The last seats have been very large. Nancy O'Neill opens a season of four nights and one matinée at the house, commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 1st. As Miss O'Neill who is known by her many Oakland friends as Gertrude Lammott, is a native of this city, and there is naturally a great deal of interest being taken in this engagement. Miss O'Neill will appear in five of her strongest plays—The Jewess, Magda, Wollf, Oliver Twist, and The School for Scandal.

By special request the Grand Stock Com- pany of the Empire Opera House, this week, have been presenting Hamlet and The Three Guardsmen in an excellent manner. The attendance has been very large the entire week. Which of the Grand Stock Company will appear in an elaborate production of Lewis Morrison's Feast. The people at Oakland Park this week include the Keltons, Raul, Byron and Raul, the Stanleys, and Lajois and Cunningham.

One of the most successful and enjoyable concerts of the year was given by the Hughes Club last Friday evening at the Auditorium. The program was excellent, the chorus numbers were especially delightful. The audience was composed of Oakland's swell set, the Auditorium being packed to the doors. The Club now number over one hundred members.

Miss Maud Des Rochers' piano recital last Thursday evening was largely attended. Miss Des Rochers returns to her work in New York with the best wishes of a large circle of Oakland musical friends.

The talent that have volunteered their services for the Alfred Wilkie testimonial concert at the Auditorium Tuesday evening, Oct. 31st, comprises Mrs. J. C. Birmingham, and Miss Millie Foy, soprano; Mr. Benj. Clark, tenor; Mr. Clement Rowlands, baritone, the Temple Male Quartet and Miss Hills and Miss Westgate, accompanist. A program well worth hearing has been arranged, and a large attendance is assured.

PORTLAND

Special Correspondence

PORTLAND, Or., Oct. 18.—It has been many years since Portland enjoyed her theaters as well as during the past week, which has been one devoted entirely to operas at both the Marquion and Cordray's. The Boston Lyric Opera Company closed a very successful engagement at the Mar- quion with Carmen while at Cordray's. A Breach of Promise was continued.

Prior to their departure the Boston Lyric Company's troupe was entertained by the officers of the Hugh McCallinah in a very pleasant manner.

The Marquion opened this week with Mary Stuart, which proved its popularity, and that of Mojskia by drawing a crowded house which failed in no manner to express the admiration of the different members of the troupe.

On Tuesday night Marie Antoinette drew a large audience than any other attraction of the season, and from the appreciation expressed by it, no other con- duct could be drawn than that one present was highly gratified by enjoying that privilege. Mojskia closed this evening with Macbeth, and it proved as entertaining and profitable as its predecessors.

A Bevery Time has entertained the play- goers at Cordray's which, from all expressions, has proven a success, and will be continued through the week.

Mojskia will be concluded at the Mar- quion by Mistakes Will Happen, which will be reproduced the remainder of the present week.

Frank Marin and Mona Cook, of the Boston Lyric Opera Company, were married in this city on Tuesday of last week. Jo.

TUCSON

Special Correspondence

TUCSON, Oct. 25.—A Mexido's Grand and Comic Opera Company appear at the Tucson Opera House to-night and to-morrow night. Cavalleria Rusticana tonight, and Il Trovatore to-morrow night is the bill. The advanced sale of tickets indicate good houses.

Tucson is considered one of the best show towns on the Pacific Coast, but this year yellow fever in Louisiana has effected us as well as every other city on the Southern circuit. Few shows are booked for November and December, but later some first-class attractions will be announced. Main's circus will be here during the month of November.

SAN JOSE

Special Correspondence

SAN JOSE, Oct. 16.—Ben Hendricks was at the Victory on Oct. 16th, and played a very fine part. He did himself very well, and was the source of much amusement. His support, however, was rather weak.

Nance O'Neill is a San Jose favorite. She was here the first four nights of this week and filled the house on each occasion. She played Magda, The New Camille, Peg Woffington and Oliver Twist. Her support was excellent, and she herself was at her best.

LOCAL NOTES.

A FACULTY RECITAL.

A faculty recital was given at the Von Meyerinck school of music on Wednesday of last week, when the works of Bach and Wandel were rendered, a large audience being in attendance. A pupil recital was also given a few evenings ago, the program being rendered by Mrs. A. C. Lewis, Miss Crayton, Lulu Feldheim, Helen Heath, Jessie Burns, Eliza Prifer, and Mrs. P. W. McGlade. The Monday morning lectures upon music by Mrs. Mary Fairweather are still matters of great interest and attract good audiences.

BENEFIT MUSICAL.

Wednesday evening of last week a good musical program was enjoyed by visitors to the Bazaar, given in aid of St. Paul's and St. Peter's Church, at Washington Square Hall. Madame Guido Spitzky was quite a star attraction, her soprano solos winning her warm praise. She was in excellent voice, rendering Mon Amers Pin with dramatic effect and responding to an encore with a graceful and popular Italian ballad. Sig. Martinez was the accompanist for the evening. Other numbers were, baritone solo by Mr. Zapeli; tenor solo, Vocii (Tosti), by Dr. Borino, who sang with much taste; Duet Estudiante, by the Misses Spadina; bass solo, Mon Torno, (Tito Mattei) Mr. Dancili. The musical program was under the direction of Mrs. Spadina and declared to be the most enjoyable entertainment during the season. A large audience was in attendance.

SECOND HOUR OF SONG.

The Second Hour of Song given by Edward Xavier Rolker when his pupils, Mrs. Pierre Douillet, Miss E. Warden-Hickey, Miss E. Hanks, Miss D Griswold and Miss Harriet Simons appeared, was too late to review this week, occurring on Thursday evening in Sherman and Clay Hall. Mr. Rolker holds a distinguished place as a singer, his beautifully trained tenor voice being a rare treat to those who value art in its highest sense, and he has the further advantage of charming personality. As a teacher Mr. Rolker has been very successful and his first hour of song last season, in which Mrs. Douillet and Miss Simons were introduced, spoke volumes for his fine method.

CALIFORNIA LADIES' QUARTET.

Mr. Willis Ames, manager of the California Ladies' Quartet, under the direction of Madame Crawford, wrote a bright letter of the way the quartet is being received in the beginning of their tour of the state, and encloses a clipping:

"The concert given by the Californians was the highest order, the program faultlessly rendered, comprising some of the choicest works of the best composers. It is impossible to speak too highly of these artists whose renderings of the most difficult compositions is absolutely faultless. They are the finest combination of pianos and strings ever brought to Southern California."

On Friday of last week a concert was given at Santa Ana and on Saturday at Anaheim, but one of the principal concerts will occur in Blanchard Music Hall, Los Angeles, after which they will gradually work North.

HOWARD MALCOLM TICKNOR.

The Channing Auxiliary is having a course of lecture readings by Mr. Howard Malcolm Ticknor, M. A., of Boston, Mass., the first having been given Thursday of last week upon "Artists, Authors and Celebrities Whom I Have Known at Home and Abroad," with reminiscences of the Americans who formed the artistic coterie in Rome; of the great writers who made Boston famous, and of musicians, actors, and others who have been eminent in their day. Last Thursday the subject was "Edmund Rostand and His Writings," with original translations from the plays which have been presented only in Paris, and from Cyrano de Bergerac as acted by Mr. Tichauer's manuscript version. These lectures will be given each Thursday for some weeks. An hour with this eminent man is a leaf in the book of higher education; his knowledge of the subjects in hand, his fine delivery and language, being lessons that will remain a benefit and delight to his hearers. Miss Jennie Long, who is in charge of the department of elocution in the Pacific Coast Conservatory of Music, was a pupil of Mr. Ticknor, and it was her interest that induced him to visit California; and the Channing Auxiliary is fortunate, indeed, in having secured him for the season of lectures.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC EVENING.

The Western Addition Literary and Social Club held an enjoyable entertainment in Native Sons' Hall on Wednesday evening. The musical program opened with selections by J. D. Hynes orchestra, baritone solo, "The Postillion," (Molloy) by Mr. W. A. Connolly, violin solos by Mr. Bernhard Walther, a musician of ability and reputation who has come here recently, and whose wife, a very beautiful woman with an exquisite voice, has been filling a successful engagement in Los Angeles and will be heard in San Francisco. Soprano solos by Miss Lily Roeder, a pupil of Joseph Greene, who was as usual well received, "A few minutes with W. J. Byrnes," the evening closing with a one act play by Sir Charles Young, "Triffed Apart," the cast being: Sir Geoffrey Bloomfield, Mr. Geo. A. Denison, Lady Gwendoline Bloomfield, Miss May Sullivan.

—MARY FRANCES FRANCIS.

STUDIO ECHOES.

The Spanish-American Circle gave a concert in Golden Gate Hall last Saturday evening.

Sims Reeves, the English tenor now in his 82d year, contemplates a provincial tour this winter.

Hugh Callender was tendered a benefit concert recently through the interest of J. W. McKenzie and the McKenzie Musical Society. The concert was a successful affair.

Elizabeth Strong Worthington has been away frequently from her Berkeley home on lecture tours, working between whiles on a new book. She made quite a success with "The Little Brown Dog," published at the time of the war, and her last book, "How to Cook Husband's," is having a splendid sale, especially in the East. Her lectures on music and other topics were an interesting feature of last season, and she is a most interesting, well informed speaker.

MUSIC IN GENERAL.

Rubenstein's "Demon" has been revived at the Theater Royal, Dresden. This is a work too much neglected by the lyric theaters.

The Court Theater of Darmstadt will produce an unpublished opera by Ferdinand Hummel, which is entitled "Sophie von Brabant."

At the request of celebrated French artists, the French Government has bestowed on Felix Mottl the cross of a Knight of the Legion of Honor.

The Scandinaviam composer Grieg has promised to set to music an oratorio "Peace," the text of which is furnished by Bjornstjerne Bjornson. The work, it is hoped, will be performed at the Peace Congress to be held in Paris during the Exposition next year.

The National Theater of Prague began on the 20th the Smetan cycle. The eight operas of the composer will be given in chronological order, and when the cycle is concluded there will be a concert, at which there will be performed his eight symphonic poems and other works for orchestra and voice by the same composer. The festival will last fifteen days.

An utterly unknown march by Franz Schubert has lately been discovered in a sale of some manuscripts and books near Heidelberg. The piece is for two pianos and eight hands, and has Schubert's signature and the date Vienna, November, 1825. On the margin the words "Hottenbrenner" and "Schwammert" are written in pencil. The latter is a nickname which some of his friends gave to the composer.

Fm Diavolo has been sung in San Francisco many, many times, but the performances of this popular opera given last week by the Tivoli company were remarkably good. The Review thinks them worthy of special mention. The work of Ada Palmer-Walker, Alf Wheelan, Tom Greene and Phil Branson and Wm. Schuster was especially notable, and can be characterized by no other word than brilliant.

Leider's Quintetos will keep the hair healthy.
Brown's in Town

T he story of Brown's in Town, which will be the attraction at the California Theater for one week only, beginning Sunday night, Oct. 29th, is decidedly complicated, and the complications are new. They come about through the efforts of a young man to keep his marriage a secret from his father. In furtherance of his plan, he and his bride go to a country villa where the father arrives later and where friends drop in, to the utter despair of both Brown and his wife. When the father arrives upon the scene he is told his son is visiting a man by the name of Brown; this naturally compels the introduction of Mrs. Brown as well as her husband. One of the friends in ignorance of the marriage is persuaded to play the part of Brown. He finds it much to his liking, and proceeds to make love to the lady in earnest, a proceeding which the husband is powerless to prevent. Matters are further complicated by the fact the pseudo Brown is supplied with two wives to suit the different emergencies, and is finally accounted a Mormon by the irascible father who has caused all the trouble. Ultimately matters are straightened out by the son confessing the fact that he is married, and as the old gentleman has become very fond of Mrs. Brown, he finally gives them his blessing and everything ends happily. The farce is built on novel lines similar to that of Why Smith Left Home. Its dialogue is crisp and fresh, and in action it is said to be about as brisk as they make them. Moreover the people in the cast are competent; they are Mark Swan, Maude Knowlton, W. Cullison, Jessie Msi Hall, C. Horn, Monica Lee, E. Ebner, Mamie Ward, Fannie Midgeley and others.

Lambardi Company Disbands

T he Lambardi Italian Grand Opera Company disbanded in Kansas City October 23rd, after a trip through the West, because of poor business. "This ends the Lambardi company so far as the present organization is concerned," said Edward Beegard, manager for Signor Lambardi, "but a reorganization will be effected by next week. Collamarini, Sostegni, Bardaracco, Rosso, Bergeni and the rest of the stars will remain with us, with the exception perhaps of Signorina Barducci. It is too bad but it cannot be helped. We will come out all right just the same."
Good in Emergencies

would have had a good house, I think, if it hadn’t set in to rain early in the evening.

"Perhaps it was just as well that we chose the slim house, though, because the roof got to leaking badly before the first act was over, and if there had been a crowd they all couldn’t have kept moving around so as to keep out from under the leaks, and some of them might not have enjoyed the play, under the circumstances, superb as it was.

"I was obliged to remodel the play somewhat, because, as you know, Marks was in a state of beastly intoxication, and unable to appear; and the lady who does Topsy is his wife. She insisted on watching by his bedside. She had something to say to him when he first woke up. He had gone to sleep on a pile of scenery in the property room. With some slight changes in the lines, however, and a little recasting, we were able to make the play go all right.

"I was Uncle Tom and Marks too, and the lady who is Little Eva, under ordinary circumstances, also did Topsy on this occasion. It required some excellent work to reconcile the audience to a white Topsy with flaxen curls, and a black Marks, the lawyer, but there was no time to make changes and we did it. There wasn’t an egg thrown during the entire performance.

"While the parade was passing along Main street, in the afternoon, the bloodhound got into an altercation with the butcher’s dog and the argument went against him. He is a big Mongrel pup that I picked up in Kentucky. He not only lacks courage, but he is without sense, too. When Eliza started across the river on the ice the bloodhound—that is to say, the yellow pup—took after her in good shape. But suddenly he sat down on his tail, right in the center of the stage, and began licking some scratches where the butcher’s dog had taken hold of his hind leg. Then, all of a sudden he stopped licking and started on a jump, with his tail between his legs, yelping like the deuce, right out over the footlights and down among the audience.

"I discovered later that we had put in a wrong piece of scenery. It had a picture of a cabin on it, with a dog sitting in front of the cabin. The blamed pup must have mistaken this painted dog for the butcher’s dog, and sitting on it. It spoiled the act; took all the seriousness out of it, and made Eliza’s haste to escape seem entirely unnecessary.

"We had had the audience, what there was of it, with us up to that time. But we couldn’t do anything with it after that. They laughed all through the pathetic scene where little Eva dies, and when Lagree was beating poor old Uncle Tom nearly to death, and I was putting in my best work on that piteous look and heart-breaking appeal for mercy, somebody yelled: ‘Hit him again; he’s Irish!’

"‘But the worst of it came in the last act. This is a very pathetic scene, too, as you probably know. St. Clair and Little Eva are both dead and gone, and Uncle Tom is on his last legs, as it were, and there should be a great deal of sadness and gloom pervading the whole thing. Under the circumstances this sadness and gloom was a hard proposition to maintain. About half way down the center row of seats sat a big fat red-faced man who would wait until the situation became about as sad and gloomy as we could make it, and then he would break out into a fit of laughter and the whole audience would follow suit.’

"‘Perhaps he wasn’t to blame for it. I give him the benefit of the doubt, anyway. He seemed to try to keep quiet, but every now and then he would probably get to thinking of how that confounded pup happened to catch sight of the dog on the scenery, and then he couldn’t hold it.’

"‘We got through about half the act without any particular mishap, though, and would have finished it all right, I think, but right in the middle of a particularly impressive scene the rope which was holding the drop curtain became loosened and the curtain rolled down.’

"‘The show ended right there. The people, either thinking that was the end of it, or else satisfied that they had had their money’s worth, filed out.’

"‘The performance was not a financial success, taking into consideration the man with the attachment, but I consider that it was an artistic success up to the very instant the rope broke, without enunciating the difficulties we labored under.

"‘I am here now, endeavoring to make the necessary arrangements to give the performance tonight. I am in advance of the company, which will, however, arrive in time for the performance, provided the hotel keeper releases them—which I expect him to do when he finds that they will otherwise board with me until other arrangements are made.’

"‘So you see,’ said the Major, when he had finished relating the experience, ‘there was at least one actor who actually required an emergency to show what he could do, and the size of the audience didn’t effect him, except to make him better, perhaps.’

Later the Gnat Major to admit that he had had some experience as a manager, himself, and when I charged him with it, he admitted that Mr. Plankinton Fales was, in reality, himself, that being the name he used while a member of the profession.

Good people for a first-class company to be organized October ist, by a well known manager. Also vaudeville actors, sister teams and single performers; lady pianist.

Hallet’s Agency.
In a Reminiscent Mood

ALVIN’S DIAMONDS NOWHERE.

Charles L. Davis, the actor, otherwise known as Alvin Joslin, was sitting once on the porch of a hotel in Texas, when a man from Detroit stepped in front of him and looked over his head in search of an acquaintance, whom he supposed was in the hotel lobby. Davis, mistaking the Detroiters’ purpose, remarked: “Ah, I see you are a familiar diamond. This one” — indicating the stone on his shirt bosom — “cost me $500. These” — showing his cuff buttons — “cost me $2500 each, and my wife has a trunk full up in our room.”

The Detroit man did not say much, but that evening by arrangement with the head waiter, Davis was placed at supper alone at a table where several chairs. Presently seven men, all commercial travelers, entered the dining room and each one had a large cut-glass fruit dish fastened on his breast, while glass prisms hung pendant from each coat and vest button.

Soberly marching to Davis’ table, the seven men took the vacant seats, and the Detroit man entertained the alleged actor with: “Ah, I see you admire our diamonds. This one,” pointing to the fruit dish, “cost $3,000,000. These,” indicating the prisms, “cost $2,000,000 each, and we have three car loads like them at the depot waiting to be side-tracked. Davis not only changed his table, but went to another hotel.

SHYLOK PROFITATED.

Edwin Booth once told the following story at a supper table: Once during the days of his early struggles Booth was “born storming” down in Virginia at a place called Lee’s Landing. The improvised theater was a tobacco warehouse, and it was crowded by the planters for miles around. Booth and his companions had arranged to take the weekly steamer expected late that night, and between the acts were busy packing up. The play was “the Merchant of Venice,” and they were just going on for the trial scene when they heard the whistle and the manager came running in to say that the steamer had arrived and would leave again in half an hour.

“If we explain matters,” said the manager, “the audience will think they are being cheated and we shall have a free fight. The only thing is for you fellows to get up some sort of natural-like impromptu ending for the piece and ring down the curtain. Go right ahead, ladies and gentlemen, and take your cue from Ned there.”

In London of course was Booth, who resolved to rely upon the ignorance of the Virginians of those days to pull him through. So when old George Ruggles — who was playing Shylock — began to sharpen his knife on his boot, Booth walked straight up to him and said, solemnly: “You are bound to have the flesh, are you?”

“You bet your life,” said Ruggles. “Now, I’ll make you one more offer,” continued Booth. “In addition to this bag of diamonds, I’ll possibly have in two kegs ofigger-head terback, a shotgun and a couple of the best coon dogs in the State.”

“I’m blowed if I don’t do it,” responded Shylock, much to the approbation of the audience, who were tobacco raisers and coon-hunters to a man. “And to show that there are no ill feelings,” when the company got aboard the steamer the captain, who had witnessed the conclusion of the play remarked: “I’d like to see the whole of that play some time, gentlemen. I’m blessed if I thought that fellow Shakespeare had so much snap in him.”

IRVING’S RETORT.

Henry Irving’s reappearance in America recalls the following story of his retort to Wilson Barrett, just before Barrett sailed for his first appearance in the United States. It happened in London one day as he was strolling on the Strand, and chanced to run across Irving. They soon became engaged in conversation as to the critical character of American audiences. Irving had already played in this country.

“So you’re going to America, are you?” asked Irving.

“Yes, in about a month,” was the reply.

“What are you going to play?”

“Cludoes, and possibly Hamlet.”

“Why, I’ve played Hamlet in America,” said Irving disdainfully.

“Well, are you the only man who can do it?”

“No, but I am convinced that you are the only man who cannot.”

In the San Francisco DRAMATIC REVIEW
Faust in the Bush

Some Reminiscences of an Old-Time Theatrical Genius.

Many old-timers in theatricals remember Wm. Lloyd who died in Los Angeles a couple of years ago. Dramatic actor in comedy, farce and tragedy, operatic buffo, prompter, stage-manager, carpenter and machinist by turns, he ran the whole gamut of dramatic usefulness until stricken with paralysis. The last few years of his life he had charge of the stage-door of a local theater, where he patiently waited till "called" to 'go out' before that vast audience in the beyond. Mr. Lloyd possessed a fund of interesting stage anecdotes, gathered during his long theatrical experience.

He came to California in the early 50's, and used to recall many personal reminiscences of the old days at the Jenny Lind Theater and Maguire's Opera House; and of the dramatic triumphs they have seen; or how some-and-so played Hamlet in a bag wig and an English officer's uniform in Red Bluff; or the landlord of a Marysville hotel engaged the tromp to play in his dining-room, charging no admission to the performance, but with a shrewd business idea of corralling the bar-trade of the town, thereby "doing up" the rival establishment.

Lloyd drifted to Australia in the early days, and for a number of years was connected with Lyster's Grand English Opera Company as stage manager, and here is a story of those days spent in the country of kangaroo and ticket-of-leave men:

The company was engaged to play in Ballarat, then a booming mining camp, and though Lyster rarely played outside the large towns, a big guarantee persuaded the manager to visit the camp in question. The opera selected was Faust, and the performance was to be given in a hall in the second story of a building erected on the side of a hill, the first floor of which was used as a wagon shop. Mechanical fittings were of course unknown in this backward's "opera house," and Lyster who thought himself a genius at contriving, hit upon a scheme by which the action of the opera could be facilitated. In the last act, as every one remembers, the reculant Faust descends to hades with Mephistopheles; and as the mechanical trap, by the fall of which this is usually accomplished, was missing, a hole was cut in the floor of the "stage," a wagon rolled underneath, and a ladder erected thereon, down which the tenor and basso were to descend. Lloyd was prompting that night, and with Lyster, anxious for the success of his plan, was perched on the top rungs of the ladder reading the lines to the singers above. The prison scene was on; Marguerite had finished her impassioned though vain appeal to Faust; the tempter and tempted stepped upon the improvised trap, when the wagon wheels commenced to revolve, and tenor, bass, manager and prompter were precipitated back to the bottom, a much quicker descent than they had bargained for. As Squires the tenor sentimentally remarked, "if it wasn't hell it was very near it."—John P. Wilson.

I'ming's Tour

SIR HENRY IRVING and Ellen Terry have arrived in New York, preliminary to a tour of the United States. "While this is our fifth American tour," said Sir Henry, "I feel that we have never before been in the United States under more auspicious circumstances. In the first place the cordiality between the two nations was never greater than it is at the present time, and while my personal relations with American theater-goers have always been of the most delightful character, it is pleasant to feel that the two nations now recognize the ties of kinship as never before.

"I believe that Robespierre, with which we will open at the Knickerbocker, will justify my faith in transporting such an elaborate production. I wanted to give my American friends something entirely new, and I had them much in mind while selecting the piece. Then, too, it is always an inspiration to play to New American audiences, and Miss Terry and myself really look upon our tour as a means of brightening up our faculties as well as entertaining our American friends."

Modern Drama

Speaking to the Yale students, Joseph Jefferson said: "Is the tendency of the modern stage to purity? Is it so bad as that of the Restoration? No, indeed, we never can get so bad as the drama of the Restoration. That was terribly disgusting stuff, so vile that ladies dared not go to the theater without masked faces. The public is to blame for bad plays, for that matter. A man asked me the other day if a certain play was decent.

"Do you think that play is fit to be seen?" he asked.

"How do you know it is not," I asked.

"Well, I have seen it."

"How many times have you seen it," I probed.

"Only twice. I was not sure of some things in it the first time."

We call attention to the new and artistic studio of Mr. Louis Thooy, 846 Market St., Phelan Building.

Through the Window of the Box Office

Half a day spent behind the lobby wickets from which are sold tickets for the various theaters inclines me to a deathless belief that the art of ticket selling should be added to the learned profession, says Ten Broeck in the New York Telegraph.

The box office man may not resemble a college professor; he may not wear the polished and ruffled cranium that is the badge of deep learning and lofty thought; he may not be "up" on cuneiform inscriptions. To him bioplastic gerns and differential calculi may be all one, but he can give the spectated professor cards and spades and beat him, hands down, on the proper study of mankind, which, according to the infallible Pope, is man.

The box office man—that is, the box office man who is master of his art—reads human nature like a book. He can tell at a glance the individual upon whom it is safe to unload seats directly behind the stage-obscuring pillar, and the man to whom he may swear that seats in the "circle"—row seven—are far more desirable than aisle chairs in the corresponding row of the orchestra.

He recognizes at once the financial magnate for whom he will deferentially sell the "best in the house"; and the shrinking music teacher who will painfully part with seventy-five cents—she always has the exact change, in silver—toward whom he may contemptuously shove a single seat in the balcony. The public says of this theater, or that, or the other, that it is a "swell" house; meaning not that the price of admission is greater than to others, and its audiences therefore drawn from the class which spends money most freely, but that the patrons of that special house are more smartly dressed than the audiences one sees elsewhere. This state of things is due to the unerring acumen of the box office man.

That astute gentleman can invariably detect the man who will bring a stunningly dressed woman to the theater and the one whose companion will be sure to be a dowdily doused in a last year's gown. Be very sure that the former will get a conspicuous seat, while the latter is relegated to the shadowy rear. The box office man recognizes the prosperous individual who will wear evening clothes to the play and the rural visitor who will treat his fiancée to peanuts or candy out of a paper bag. He knows the woman who will wear a picture hat to her own companionable joy and to the agonzized undoing of the unfortunate behind her, and he wraps out seats in accordance with his judgment to such buyers.

In short, it is the box office man who dresses the house. And deadheads.

It is upon that professional barmacle that the finest art of the ticket seller is exercised, and woe to the obscure thespian who fancies he can impress the autocrat of the box office with his historic greatness.

Up to Johnny McKeever the popular guardian of the ticket rack at Wallack's, there stalked the other afternoon a long haired and lanky individual in a Hamlet cloak. The aroma of the stage pervaded his entire being; it oozed forth from the shabby shoes under his yellow spots and from his fiery dyed locks. Barnstormer was plainly written upon every feature and every garment. Striking an attitude that suggested a portrait of Macready, he soared in a s'death, villain voice, "Good morrow, good morrow. Have you been to see me yet?" (The deadhead always says been with a long "ee," that's one way you can distinguish them!) "No!" as Mr. McKeever shook his head. "You're losing a treat, my boy. I'm the talk of the town. Ask Charlie Frohman for a box. I want you to see me. And, by the way, I'll take a couple of seats for to-night."

Mr. McKeever handed him two mutilated tickets with a weary air. "Who is he?" said I, with a blush of shame that I hadn't recognized a great actor. "Nobody at all," said the box office man. "Mr. Frohman never saw him. He's a hoary old timer, and this is his third term on earth."

The matinee girl, who is a joy and a delight to the actor, is a thorn in the flesh of the box office man. She swarms in upon him and insists upon knowing all about the play before she decides to buy her seat. It is nothing to the matinee girl that the ticket seller frowns or that murmurs of discontent arise from the waiting line behind her. Nothing will induce her to purchase her ticket until she ascertains how many gowns Mrs. Carter wears, if Lillian Russell will positively appear, if Sothern appears in a mustache, or if Harry Davenport is better than Dan Daly in the part. Having satisfied herself upon these vital points, she asks for the very best seat, in the center of the balcony, and dimples so deliciously that the stern guardian of the box office smiles pleasantly as he hands her too much change, and the matters crowd behind her forgets to grumble.

The afternoon buying crowd had thinned out at a certain Broadway theater yesterday as I stood at the ticket seller's elbow surveying life through his narrow wicket. A flashy individual, costing a check and conspicuous prosperity from every pore, had just left the theater with two aisle seats for to-night tucked away in the pocket of his florid waistcoat.

Up to the window came a sweet faced lady, very, very pretty in a refined and tender way, as a violet is pretty, or a wild rose. "What have you for to-morrow evening?" she asked, in a voice that exactly matched her gentle personality. "Nothing at all," I'm sorry to say," answered the ticket seller. "Oh, I'm so sorry," said the lady, who evidently was a frequent patron of that particular box office. "Mr— is obliged to be away from home to-morrow evening and I promised to bring his mother to see this play." "Well, I don't think your mother would like the play." (confidentially) "It is too gloomy. Why don't you take her to the Empire?" "Thank you, I will," said the lady, as she rustled out of the lobby.

"Why did you tell her that awful fit?" I gasped, pointing to the ticket rack that held dozens of unsold seats. "In the interests of public peace and domestic tranquility," answered the ticket seller. "The man who just left was her husband. He'll be here to-morrow night with her rival," and he struggled into his overcoat and relinquished his place to an assistant with the air of a man who knows he has done a wholly noble act. So you see, the box office man, is not only a student of nature. He is a guardian of the family fireside as well.
Too Bad, Dear Barton

Barton Hill, the veteran actor, would probably not be on the stage these days but would be cutting coupons off United States bonds if the capitalists of San Francisco a quarter of a century ago had appreciated a good thing when they saw it. Not a one of them would invest his capital and after visiting one banker after another Mr. Hill gave it up.

In his conversations he displayed a saib of what seemed to be stone and urged on his doubting hearers the economy and advantage of having the sidewalks made of this material instead of wood, as was the universal custom in those days. He would show that finely ground rock mixed with cement could be laid for comparatively a small price and would form a durable sidewalk, but the financiers could not see it in that light.

Seven years later the wooden sidewalk in San Francisco was a thing of the past and the artificial stone pavement was seen everywhere. The financiers who would have participated in the profits of such a thing were now apologetic to pay well for practically the same material.

But the new sidewalks were not laid under Mr. Hill's patent. That's why he is not cutting coupons now.

Bouquets

T. Daniel Frawley—"Your paper is just the thing—neat and clean. Keep it up."

Florence Roberts—"I am greatly pleased at your progress. The Review has long been needed."

Harry Conroy Clark—"Now, that's something like a dramatic paper. I am pleased to see your enterprise and know that you will succeed."

R. G. Barton, manager of Barton's Opera House, Fresno, writes—"I wish to compliment you on your paper, and I wish you every possible success. It is what has been wanted on the coast for a long time."

Herbert L. Cornish, our Los Angeles correspondent, writes as follows: "The Review has made a decided hit with the talent and managers in this city who are unanimous in the conclusion that it is the best on the coast, and so it is."
THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

November 4th, 1899

Ten Cents a Copy—$3.00 per Year
For Sale at all News Stands

We are willing to risk our reputation as a drama critic by saying that despite all adverse criticism the Zang will play will be a financial success. Such violent rage and some of the Eastern dramatic critics are giving it as can only result in one way—the sale of seats. People will go to see how bad it really is.

We usually have to go away from home to learn the news. The Los Angeles Review was recently to the point of in an article. According to information received by a local theatrical newspaper man, Frank Murray is to be succeeded as business manager of the Frawley company by Chas. W. Strine, who was in charge of the Melba grand opera season here last winter. Strine is now in San Francisco, whither the Frawleys go in a month or so.

The anti-bust ordnance has been so successful that it might not be wise to adopt a measure prohibiting certain theatre-goers from jumping from their seats and going out before the finale. As soon as the hero and heroine are married, there is usually a certain number of the cast—people in front rush unceremoniously and simply spoil the scene for those who have manners and commence to think of leaving until the final fall of the curtain.

The theater is no place for rowdies, even if they are from Stanford or Berkeley. One ill-bred freshman had to be ejected from the Orpheum by a policeman on Saturday night because of his disgraceful conduct during the performance. The new president of the University of California will do well to look after the class of hair-brained individuals who disgrace the college and themselves on very frequent occasions, and especially at the theater.

Blanche Bates

Her is what the New York World says of Bessie Bohen in the New York World
The Children of the Ghetto:

"The performance was remarkable above all else for the acting of Blanche Bates. This young woman won unusual distinction last year as the Ruby, the frightened white girl, in "The Silver Ruby," and as Miladi in Grundy's version of "The Musketeers. In both roles she played with such beauty, great dramatic force, and a fine sense of dramatic effect. Last night, however, she gave an impersonation which, for repose, simplicity, depth, variety and artistic value, is the most perfect thing Mr. Bates has ever done without question to a place on the topmost range of telepathic celebrity."

Wright Huntington

The excellent likeness of Wright Huntington on our front page shows that gentleman in the character of Jack Payster, U. S. N., in his first appearance in the "June." The big picture of Wright Huntington needs no introduction to San Francisco theater-goers as his five years ago. He is a versatile artist and has played a range of parts, but appears in his very best comedy of the legitimate order.

Not Superstitious

Many peculiar and original ideas are attributed to the clever comedian, Harry Corson Clarke, who is now starring in the comedy "What Happened to Jones." The profession in general is a class of people who have a perfect horror of everything having any significance of an ill omen. A story is told of Clarke during his"tour last season. On arriving at the hotel in a town where he was to play that night, he was put down on the register for room 13. He was shown to his room and while going along the corridor he noticed that the numbers ran from 1 to 12, then jumped to 14. He thought it so very peculiar that he inquired of the bell boy for an explanation. He was told that the room numbers were changed by the landlord to change the figures around, as a large party of guests were theatrical people. That being the case, it was impossible to get any of them to occupy that room, continued the boy, but since the figures were changed there had been no objection whatever. Now Mr. Clarke has no special idea to the number 13, to the extent of sticking anything on the 13th day of the month. When the 13th happened to be on a Friday, so much the better he would be pleased. After all, he thought, if a man who was not a boy, he ordered that the landlord be sent up to him. The result was that before the boy was well up the stairs he had received an extra tip, and the number 13 hung over the door.

At another stage of his tour—it was a production of "Frogs and Friends"—an engagement occurred—was for February 13th. In his company there are 13 people, their baggage amounting to 13 trunks and 13 theater trunks for the scenery display of "What Happened to Jones;" the different sections number 13 in all.

It might occur to some people how all this infatuation of this superstitions number on the part of Mr. Clarke. The answer is that he was born on February 13th.

THE MEAN THING

The Call has been advertising raucously its "Home Study Circle" and the interest awakened is immense.

So let us learn from the example of being on the staff of the San Francisco Call, wrote to Sunday Editor Miss M. Hallett:

I see you printed Miss Georgia Cooper's picture surrounded by legs. In your home city, Dirt. Moore was revived by life sized pictures of Dogmar, fed to him in small doses.

The Miss Georgia Cooper referred to is succeeding notably at Morroco's Grand opera house, where excellent parts are given her regularly. Five years ago, she was a mere child, in Los Angeles, known simply as Fred Cooper's little girl. She occasionally essayed child parts in those days. Her ambitions are now grand-opera-ward. The Western Graphic, Los Angeles.

WANTS TO JOIN THE PROFESSION

The Review is always anxious to advise any one with a hankering after the stage to read this review, and therefore it replies to the following:

"Editor Review, as I am going to take the stage up as my profession, I ask you to advise me at what age should I enter a dramatic school. I would like to know and will make a great actor so I am told. Could I make a leading man at 17 with real bery talent. I expect to enter Leo Cooper's school of acting. Please advise me as I want to start right.

With many thanks please publish it in "Dramatic Review and many thanks.

A Reader."

Our advice—Young man, you will find it better to study hard and do your school books before "taking up the stage." If your elocution is not perfect, you might as well go to a farm at once and save yourself and friends much trouble and then proceed to study. A man twenty years hence, but as to whether that is probable you had better ask the manager of the "Frogs and Friends" or Mr. Hallett. They are paid for informing aspirants as to whether they are wanted or not. Seriously, young man, do study first and act afterward.
Jean Clara Walters, an old San Francisco favorite, is making a hit in the New York production of The Dairy Farm.

Ashton Stevens, he with the caustic pen, whose Sunday theatrical reviews used to appear in the Call, is now editor of the News Letter.

Minnie Dupree has been engaged by Nat Goodwin to play parts in his company formerly taken by Gertrude Elliott, who has decided to remain in England.

Grace Howard who made her debut at the Alcazar in Clay Greene's play, the Japanese Wife, has gone on the road with the Breach of Promise.

Mlle. Le Sève with Mathews & Bulger, at the Columbia, has made a genuine sensation with her great act. The lighting effects are perhaps the best yet shown.

We are sorry indeed to hear that manager W. J. Ellesford has been on the sick list. His excellent company has been playing the interior towns to standing room.

Edith Mason will appear as Latulip, a romantic young peddler in the Merry Monarch at the Grand Opera House next week, and be again picturesque in male attire.

Chas. Southwell, who brought the present Morasco Opera Company to San Francisco, will be in charge of the Castle Square Company at the Exposition building, St. Louis.

Edwin Mordant and wife, who have been with Nance O'Neill, have decided not to accept an engagement offered them by the Comedy Theater management and have left for the East.

The Stranger in a Strange Land, with George Osborne as the Indian, continues a remarkable success in New York. They call it a California success, because of Brady, Grimes, George Osborne and the other Californians who are connected with it.

Miss Mamie Gilroy, in Mlle. Fifi wears a charmante singer's dress made by a celebrated Parisian costumer who furnishes the gowns for Rejane, Haldin and Anna Held. It consists of dollars of dollars no less than 160 jewels sewed on by hand. Miss Gilroy comes pretty near outstripping Sadie Martinot in the race for popular approval.

Mr. R. N. Abbey, manager for Miss Annie May Abbot, who is at present touring New Zealand, writes from Auckland—and sends a batch of press notices from all parts of the world in support of what he says—to the effect that Miss Abbott is the "only and original Georgia Magnet." The letter is a case heard in one of the Melbourne courts the other day. Miss Abbott will tour Australia after finishing New Zealand.

L. R. Stockwell has been especially engaged to play the Barber in My Friend from India at the Alcazar. Poor New York! Zangwill, in return for the compliments given his dramatic version of The Children of the Ghetto, calls New York a joy town.

Five of the big star attractions booked for the Columbia are Nat. C. Goodwin, De Wolfe Hopper, Dennus Thompson, Sol. Smith Russell and Julia Marlowe.

Madame Janauscheck has recovered from her recent illness and announces her intention of resuming active stage work. In her time she was great, but time gets in its blighting work.

Inez Dean has joined the Uncle Josh Suecreby Company, Southern, to play the leads.

Berle Archer obtained a divorce from her husband, Herbert R. Archer, at Trenton, N. J., October 21.

Charles W. Swain, who will join De Wolfe Hopper in London, will take Mr. Klein's place with that star.

Sid. Waverly promises some novel ragtime bits during his specialty for the second week of By The Sad Sea Waves at the Columbia.

Sol. Smith Russell is coming to the coast this season with two new plays. He has not been here for more than half a dozen years.

Geo. Chevez will not go out in advance of Harry Corson Clarke, as originally intended. W. O. Lindsay is coming from New York to take his place.

William H. Thompson, of Maude Adams' Company, and Isabel Irving, leading lady of John Drew's Company, were married October 19 in Jersey City, N. J.

Victory Bateman, who was the leading lady at the St. Louis Imperial last season, has been engaged to play in Walter Fessler's new melodrama, The City of New York. Miss Bateman used to be heroine, it will be remembered, at Morasco's.

Mrs. Langtry has considerably decided not to publish her reminiscences.

Francis Power's new play, Mother's Earth, will be produced at the Alcazar next month.

Lynn Pratt has been in a sanitarium in this city for three weeks, ill with malarial fever.

William Brodwick, William Pruette, William Stevens, and Harry Brown, have signed with Jessie Bartlett's Company.

Mamie Carrie Roma, well known here, was one of the stars at the Crystal Palace concert in London on Sunday, October 12.

Everett Hastings is credited with a success in Sol Smith's old part in A Bachelor's Romance, put on by the Dearborn Stock Company, Chicago.

The report that Grace Addison goes with the Nance O'Neill Company is unfounded. Miss Addison is considering several offers, but has not yet contracted.

Nellie McHenry will this season star jointly with John Gourlay in a revival of Bronson Howard's three act comedy, The Long Sunday. The play will be brought up to date.

Charles W. Terriess has been engaged for his third season with Harry Corson Clarke. He will as formerly manage the stage and understudy Mr. Clarke in What Happened to Jones.

William Brewer and Vehnie Castro were married a few weeks ago. Miss Castro's first appearance on the stage was made under Fred Belasco's direction in the early days of the present successful regime.

Harry Corson Clarke, that inimitable comedian who has had wonderful success with What Happened to Jones, will follow Nance O'Neill's engagement at the California. Clarke will then tour the South.

Harry Cochrane once more appeared on the "Rialto" in New York the past week, after an absence of over one year. The medical treatment he received so affected his eyes that he was for a while blind, but he is getting gradually better.

Frank Shurtleff ahead of Mlle. Fifi has passed the town like a flash. Recent Charlie Thropp the second agent also has shown his ability as purveyor of publicity in the press notices. It should be a big opening week for the new Alhambra.

Says a Los Angeles critic: Another one-time Los Angeles girl, Gertrude Foster, is carving out all sorts of success from the theatrical field in the Bay City. Miss Foster is perhaps the youngest leading lady in America. The Alcazar management exploit her in their productions as a star card, and she has, apparently, a fine career before her.

Nerves, one of the Lyceum theater's greatest faves is the bill for the Alcazar next week.

Recently the first appearance of Anita Sullivan, a local aspirant for stage distinction, was announced at Los Angeles. In portrait painting she had already shown ability. Miss Landers from the time she played small child parts in this city has shown unmistakable ability and is developing with years into an actress of decided merit.
The California

Manager Friedlander has this week been giving the California Theater patrons one of the best, clearest and liveliest farce comedies ever seen here. The managers of the show are deserving of congratulations for the unusual merit of the piece, and we can predict that Mr. Brown in Town again will be seen by the multitude. There is genuine fun, utterly without any Gorges Coquelin from start to finish. Each individual member of the company is clever, and it takes clever people to bring the laughs for the complications incident to the story of why Brown's in Town. Maud Knowlton, the leading woman, is a San Francisco girl, and a pretty one, too. She is as dainty as a rosebud as the bride of Preston, who, to fool himself from being cut off from the parental estate for marrying young, gave the name of Brown at a country inn. That name, of course, is "new," and to this instead of the large number of months for the tour was the success of the performance. There were probably few Brown's in the audience, but their absence was more than made up for by the unusually large number of Smiths and Joneses, Brown's neighbors. Miss Knowlton's shapely figure was attired in some very elegantly fitting and stunning gowns. Jessie Mae Hall, who isn't larger than some big dolls, sings "Mamie O'Connor,"—written by Jimmie Swinerton and Frank David—in a very good voice and she had to respond three times to encore. Coon songs were sung by Fanny Midgely, who makes up in black face like the real article, O. H. Emler's vocal imitation of a brass band was one of the most amusing specialties of the performance. Clus. Horn as the father of the young man who had married against his will was indeed a good portrait. Webster Culross adds to the list of peculiarities in a most entertaining way, helping his friend Mark Swan (Preston) to present the marriage, which he himself knew nothing. Swan is a clever actor. Monica Lee, who was formerly seen in "Biograph," and Theetje Rushworth complete the cast. Brown's in Town should be a good money maker for Managers Delcher and Hennessy, for it is one of the best of its kind ever written. Nance O'Neill follows at the California, opening his father's night. She will remain only a week.

The Tivoli

This Tivoli has returned to Grand Opera, opening on Monday evening with Meyerbeer's "L'Africaine," and its presentation was a success in every way. It was well staged and well performed, reminding us that one does not need to wait for the coming of any foreign grand opera company for first class productions. The artistic setting of some of the scenes called forth deserved applause from the crowded house. L'Africaine, though heavy, has much of fine feeling in its sombre chords, and often carried the house with the latent emotion which such exquisite acting as the personality of Sig. Gaudenzo Salassa invites. Salassa, who reminds one strongly of the great Salvini, as the slavering part with spirit and a characteristic forcefulness that seemed to make the scene almost an expression of reality, assuming, however, too much authority, perhaps, in the presence of his queen, who in the person of Miss Anna Tinsley, was received with enthusiasm by her many friends upon her first appearance with Salassa in the council chamber, Miss Lichter's love song in the sleeping Vasco in the prison scene was done with careful art and rendered perfectly, and it is a pleasure to listen to a song story to retain the interest of the average audience. Miss Ada Pulver-Walker sang sweetly the farewell song in the first act, and performed well her part as Inez, Dom Pedro's wife, and in love with Vasco, Sig. Fernando Avedano as Vasco sang his way into the hearts of his rapt listeners, particularly in the love duet at the close of the third act. Miss Warrell in the double character of Dom Pedro and the High Priest had an excellent opportunity to show to good advantage his rich bass voice. The male chorus in the first act was exceptionally good, the men were in good voice and entered into the spirit of the scene in a most admirable manner. One of the gems of the evening was the deliciously rendered soft chorus of seven at the close of the second act, which was rapturously applauded and repeated with added sweetness and beauty.

The Columbia

Matthews and Bulger, and By the Sea. The Waves are with us again and the Columbia enjoys an additional attraction. Miss Mathews and Miss Bulger have enjoyed this conglomeration of incoherence—have laughed long and heartily at jokes and gaffes and sud- denly interjected bits of caricature and real burlesque, and have admired the flashing of brilliant colorings from the stage, with pretty good graceful stage settings, and enjoyed very thoroughly some very good singing by principals and company, all to verses parodied by Mathews and Bulger and three able assistants, and the Japanese lullaby by the feminine members of the cast. Through all this reveal of fun and nonsense, there is ever the well dressed, graceful figure of Sherrie Mathews, the droll witicism and more than clever acting of Harry Bulger, who has talent of a high order, a few striking little gents of German dialect by Tony Hart, some very enjoyable singing by Jane Lenox, and a great many specialties. To say nothing of a Sid Hodgins impersonation by Bessie Challenger and the posing of a very stunning woman whose name does not appear in the program, but who is nevertheless very much in evidence in the glare of the electric light of the piece is a great success, and on Wednesday, there are plenty of laughs in store for those who have not been to the Columbia this week.

The Alcazar

The three Musketeers is running its second week at the Alcazar with tremendous success. The best of any number of adaptations of D'Artagnan for the heart of the American public. The presentation of the brilliant central figures, the lovely per- secuting Anne of Austria, so gracefully and feignedly portrayed by Miss Crosby, the merry King Louis XIII, and the wily, intriguing Cardinal—true character sketches in the hands of Blunkall and King. Each member of the cast has given a careful, distinc- tion impersonation, making the whole a true historic picture.

Grand Opera House

The second week of the new comic opera, The Conspirators, at the Grand Opera House, saw no falling off in attendance, and the piece was given with more smarts than on the opening nights; indeed, there was not a hitch in the whole performance. Dr. Stewart and Clay M. Green, the authors, should feel especially pleased that the production was even more popular the second week, and that both the soloists and chorus, more accustomed to the music, sang with unusual grace and ease. Next week the grand Merry Monk will be produced.

Sarah Bernhardt and M. Corquelin are to make a tour of this country next season under Manager Gran's management, playing the sym- dicate theaters exclusively.

Lederer's Quin-tonica for falling hair.

AT THE LOCAL THEATERS

Amusements ★ ★ Next Week

AT THE ORPHEUM

With considerable difficulty and at great personal inconvenience, the managers of this establishment have secured, for a limited engagement, the services of the great French singing comedians of Paris, Fanny Coon and her company. Her work is unique. Her debut in Paris created one of the greatest sensations that has ever been known. She sings well, dances divinely and is of a dazzling beauty. She will give an act directly from Europe to the Orpheum, opening next week.

Jerome and Alexis, who also come to San Francisco on this tour, are two clever actors who perform an original act in the guise of a frog and lizard.

In keeping with one of the most wonderful performers ever seen on the vaudeville stage, all alone he plays the one act comedy drama, The Betrayed Professor. He takes the part of eight different characters and makes in all twenty changes of costume.

Lola Cotton is the child mind reader who a few weeks ago puzzled the faculty of the University of Cali- fornia by her demonstration of physi- cological oddity. In addition to reading minds, she plays mental cards and works out the most difficult of mathematical problems.

The Biograph is coming back with views taken on board the Olympia during her return voyage, views of the Dewey reception and a number of pictures taken in San Francisco a few weeks ago.

AT THE CALIFORNIA

This afternoon, to-morrow and to-night, will end the performances of Brown's in Town, at the California theater. Sunday night, Nance O'Neill will begin an engagement limited to nine performances. The appearance will be at Nance Sykes, in Oliver Twist, and on Monday night she will produce for the first time on any stage The Shadow, a play of in- tense interest, by Dr. Paul Lindau, a dramatic writer. Another offering second Mrs. Tanquary, was taken from the same source as this play. Dr. Lindau being the author and the pre- sent production his own dramatization. Miss O'Neill will have a tremendous opportunity in The Shadow, which will be repeated on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings and at the Saturday matinees. Her costumes, by the way, will be revealed. Thursday afternoon, at a special matinee, she will play The Jewess, on Thursday evening she will be Lady Teednor. Friday night Magda, will be the bill and Saturday night she will appear for the last time in this city as Casey. Harry Corson Clarke, in What Happened to Jones, will follow.

AT THE GRAND OPERA HOUSE

The Conspirators will conclude a two weeks run Sunday evening at the Grand Opera House. It has proven the advisability of the division of the season and to all appearances could easily do another profitable week in that house. An extraordinary presentation will be given in Francis Wilson's comic opéra succes Les Fiches du milliardaire. This is the prettiest and wittiest pieces ever introduced to an audience and with the magnificent mounting and cast Morosco is giving, cannot fail to score a splendid success. Tuesday evening the 25th performance of the season will be given. Now is the time for presentation to every lady attending a rich and elegantly bound bound volume containing hand-colored pictures of the different parts of the Grand Opera House, with appropriate reading for the privilege. For the fact that this is not an advertisement but a handsome present from Mr. Morosco to his lady patrons.

AT THE TIVOLI

The Tivoli has had many triumphs this season but all records have been broken by the artistic and unequaled singing of Meyerbeer's L'Africaine during the present week. The scenes of enthusiasm which have greeted the performances are shown in the crowded house. Mr. Warrner, Anna Lichter, Ada Walker, and others, the praise bestowed on the singers by the entire press of San Francisco, have resulted in a rush for seats, which the management is unable to meet this week. L'Africaine was only announced for four performances, but the demand for seats could have filled the house three times over if the presentation had continued. Other arrangements for next week have had to be cancelled by the Tivoli, and L'Africaine will be given only a few times, alternating with Bucalos's famous comic opera, Three Black Crows. The Tivoli is opened Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday, while the Three Black Crows are played Monday, Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday evenings and Saturday and Sunday even more.

AT THE ALCACER THEATER

The Alcazar's two weeks of triumph in classic art, The Three Musketeers has come to an end after Tuesday evening's performance. There will be the usual matinee to-morrow afternoon and the final performance will be the revival of that jolly Lyceum Theater farce, Nerves. There are many humorous and exciting situations, but at last peace is restored after explanations, when both women confess that it was only a pantomimic dissection that induced their nervousness and response to some extent. It is not a great deal of confusion and trouble, and agrees to love their husbands in peace. The potager's Croquet was taken from the French of Fammes Nureuses by J. Comyns Carr, and first produced in the cotillion and is a light and frothy and decidedly original inasmuch as it deals with the eccentricities caused by an alleged weakness of the nerves of two very disagreeable women.

THE NEW ALHAMBRA

Mlle. Fifi was seen at the Los Angeles Theater last week, and will be at the Alhambra in this city beginning to-morrow night. To prepare prospective spectators for the wonderful effect of this notice from the Western Graphic:

"What with the reckless smashing of china by the Voucoute and his wife Mlle. Fifi, and the extraneous agent performance of Eddie Fox on the same line of destruction, Manager Jones can hardly keep his hands off his stock of hand-decorated table-ware. But this is only incidental to one of the cleverest little conceits in the city unlimbered in this town for some time. Mlle. Fifi has been illustrated and written up so much in the Eastern papers and magazines that the exhibition of a bit of Salacius French excellence and includes Dora Mervin, Maud Mullery, Dot Stanley, Rose Wellington and May Neban.

THE ORPHEUM

Wright Huntington again occupies the place of honor on the bill at The Orpheum this week and has presented yet another success, Kiss. That the piece will bear seeing twice there can be no doubt, for among the immense crowd at the playhouse there is always a large proportion of regulars and Mr. Huntington's acting is as fresh with the same vim as last week. His reception was not one whit less cordial nor were the laughs any less frequent or hearty. The management Mr. Fenn was overwhelmed in another magnificent creation, more beautiful if anything than the costume of the previous week. Jack Norworth, singing comedian, was the next best thing on the program, He is possessed of a sweet singing voice, and has a monologue which is composed of an entirely new lot of gags and stories, which he tells in a quaint manner. "I took my mother-in-law to the theater last night, and she laughed herself half to death," he said, "and then, of course, she passed." "I'm going to take her again tonight." Hal Merritt and Miss Mur is a team and graceful of it and they do a pantomime which gives Mr. Merritt a good chance to display his abilities as an imitator of anything from a phonograph to a dog-fight. Louise Dresser and her pinicaties also made a big hit and responded to encores until they were tired out. The rest of the bill has already been re- duced to two acts, as follows: Sadie, violinist, Lotty, poses plastique, Laura Burt, monologue artist, and the trained dogs and monkeys. Next week's bill features Miss Marguerite Corvillie, Jerome and Alexis, Leo Corle, Goggin and Davis. Lola Cortot and the Biograph.

THE OLYMPIA

Frank Barton, Ruth Netia, the Rousells, and Carlton and Royce, are the most popular turns on this week's bill, but the last- named team appearing in costumes made entirely of paper by way of novelty. Camella, the Spanish dancer, and the balance of the bill is of the usual comedy which drew good houses. It wasn't exactly high literature, I give the Finches delicate suggestiveness of the kind that makes people laugh and look rigidly straight in front of the mirror. Mlle. Fifi herself was a cute thing in a Frenchy half-gown—I guess they call it—and decidedly Frenchy manner. They played on with a great deal of spirit but for a part of one act, and the boys were consequently disappointed. Fifi was a big success in the comedian of the week.

AT THE CHUTES

Frank Hall subliming Wallace, the frenzied lion, Adgie and her benefactress, in I'm a Friend of Wall and Cole and Cole, aerialists, Parker and Kelly, Irish comedians, and a lot of new people and attractions will interest people during next week at this popular amusement resort.

VAUDEVILLE NOTES

The Tedwyn Sisters are a team of Vermont magician, with the week. They have made a good impression in their first appearance in the East. A new vaudeville theater will be built this year on Third avenue, somewhere between 59th street and 100th street, New York. It will be managed by one of the best-known vaudeville agents.

Edwin Milton Royle is engaged in writing magazine articles on vaudeville and small plays for use in the high-class magazines. Mr. Royle's article on Modern Vaudeville in North's attracted widespread attention. Walter Jones and Norma Whaly are soon to appear in vaudeville. Miss Whaly gave up a good engagement in this city, but Walter Jones set aside an ambition to star to be with Miss Whaly. Here's heroism in a new medium.

Mamie Jordan of the Flying Jordans had a serious accident which almost resulted in death in Sydney, Australia, a month ago. In making the leap from one trapeze to the other she missed her hold and was thrown clear of the net by striking the ground with her head. She is lying at the Grand Hotel, Sydney, and at times suffers great pain, but it is confidently expected that before many weeks have passed she will be in perfect health. Prince Paul is in Omaha.

Howard and Alton are playing the Keith circuit. Knoll and McNeil are resting at Portland, Oregon.

Essipate is a big hit at the Standard Theater, New York.

The De Forrests, violinists, are at the Royal Theater, London.

Harry De Lain, the baritone singer, opens at the Chutes November 25th.

Else Stevens is modernizing with Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, the 6th.

Nellie Howard and Zoyarra are the celebrities on the Owl Theater, Tacoma, Wash.

Henrella and Ryan Bros will play at the Dewey Theater, Oakland, the coming week.

Zoyama plays this city in December at the Chutes and Olympia, with circuit.

Cecilia DeLacey, a well-known vocalist, is at Victoria, B.C. with this city to follow.

The Evans, Leons, and Cottesloe and Von Gofre, are the features at the People's Theater, Seattle, Wash.

Will H. Fox writes from London that Burns and Evans, Montgomery and Cottesloe, and John Watson are big London hits.

Lynwood, the contortionist, departs for Australia shortly. He plays the entire length of the trip, London, with London and Paris to follow.

Douglas and Forde, singers and dancers, both natives of this city, are at the Royal Theater of Varieties, Holborn, England.

Jules and Ella Garrison, who presented some very entertaining traveling productions here a few months ago, have sailed to fill contracts in England.

The Farrells, Billie and Willie, the comedians, are the latest big stackers, have sailed to give the Londoners an idea of the real thing in cake-walks.

Tom and Lily English, the musical comedy team, were at the Palace, Sydney, when the last steamer left. The press in the colonies is loud in their praise, saying they are the cleverest musical team that has been seen here.

Says the Clipper of that fine musician, John Marquart: John Marquart's celebrated orchestra at the Palace, Sydney, Sydney, is rapidly taking the lead of organizations of that kind by giving such selections as are given by the large orchestras which frequent that place of entertainment.

James J. Corbett has signed or play a part in. Around New Mexico, is rapidly taking the lead of organizations of that kind by giving such selections as are given by the large orchestras which frequent that place of entertainment.

Lackaye started on the road with the Trilby Company playing Svenega, Thompson remained to play Svenega in the newly organized company which was kept at New York. On Lackaye's last night he was asked for a speech. After thanking the audience and the public in general for the generous treatment which he had received, he said to the members of the company he was addressing: "As for myself, the greatest compliment that I could do myself, or any one else who has ever had the management to engage to succeed me in the part here no less a personage than the distinguished Mr. —, would be (travelling to the wings for inspiration) Mr. Thompson.

When Lackaye afterwards met Thompson he felt him that Thompson had met with great success in the part, Thompson refused to shake hands but said: "I don't believe you. I shall never believe that it was not prearranged."

Alice Nielsen arrived in town last week and opened the Casino in the Singing Girl. The music is by Victor Herbert, the lyrics by Harry B. Smith and the story by Stan- inal Stange. I have not yet had time to hear it. I have, however, heard Miss Nielsen has with her the best band in American opera, Eugene Cowles, and in Lucille Saunders she has a very efficient mezzo-soprano. No one has a better voice. As to the success of the piece, I must be guided somewhat by the criticisms in the daily papers. It has been accused of being a "mission" and the criticisms "you pay your money and you take your choice." No two papers agree on anything. Even the Evening World has used in its evening editions of the same paper can be expected to place upon a play the same value of merit. For instance, the Evening Sun of October 24th in a half column article of praise is headlined: "The Singing Girl an interesting farce; the new company the Casino has ever shown; hits scored by Nielsen, etc."

But the usually calm and dignified criticisms of the Morning Star of the same day says: "No duller opening had been heard in years."

It is quite as lamentable as ever that she (Miss Nielsen) is compelled by the exigencies of opera to speak. Her provincialism of accent are as offensive as ever to New Yorkers. In Mendelssohn Hall last night I heard that Miss Nielsen has disappeared from the lecture platform to make an appearance in opera. I shall not venture to say whether that is a right or wrong policy, but I quite understand how Miss Nielsen has improved the opportunities for advancement which were given to her by the young Californian who won her esteem while she lived in San Francisco and Oakland.

If Miss Clara Butt, the English contralto, should go to San Francisco, don't fail to hear her. She made her American debut in the Opera House last night. It was so well received and captivated a large audience. All the singing teachers were there in force, and as usual I suppose they now have their hammer. Miss Butt played with her usual skill. She will probably tell you with truth that Miss Butt forced her lower notes, that her mezzo voice was harshly; that occasionally she did not run her scales smoothly; that she actually sang English as well as German and Italian, and was not ashamed to sing "Kathleen Mavourneen." They may even tell you that her voice, although a genuine contralto, was not remarkable either for depth of range nor for volume. But nevertheless she was such a pleasing contrast to the hosts of mezzo sopranos in America who pose as contraltos that it will be a treat to hear her. As she is six feet tall she will probably never be able to find a tenor sufficiently elongated to make her appearance in opera a success. But her success on the concert stage is assured.

Julia Marlowe is doing well at the Criterion in Clyde Fitch's new play, Barbara Fritchie, the American Gypsy Girl. The Barbara of the stage was no feeble old woman, but a brave young girl who fell in love with a Union officer. The reminder of the story is the paraphrase of Whitier's ballad. Although there are many lapses in logic and history of the play, it is a strong story, and in the hands of Julia Marlowe, the Frederick Girl, ought to be a big success.

One night last week while Blanche Walsh was playing La Toceast Grand Opera House began with a new opera, The German Ghetto, by Joseph Jerome, with a libretto by Maurice Thompson. The plot was an old story. It was in the gallery began to laugh at some serious scenes. Miss Walsh stepped to the footlights in the last act of this piece. The German Ghetto, by its very name, is mostly a laugh. Miss Walsh in this respect, with that act of Mrs. Walsh's to the close of the opera. Miss Walsh here in many respects was the equal of Fanny Davenport in her line of parts. I wonder how long it will be before Alimony. Mr. Macdowell discover that they cannot live without each other and that the widower will seek companionship off the stage by marriage to his joint star. I remember that it was several months after the rumored marriage of Miss Davenport and Mr. Macdowell before either of them refused to deny the soft impeachment.

Now that Robert Mantell is free from debt we may see him in New York. Taking advantage of the Federal bankruptcy law he relieved himself of $13,547 of liabilities. Among them no doubt it was the $5,000 back alimony due his wife. For several years Mantell has been trying to get into New York, where he was a favorite, but his alimony kept on increasing and Mrs. Man- tell was obdurate and would not take any cuts in alimony. If it is found that the alimony can legally be avoided in that way the Actors Alliance Club will disband. With Mantell and Thou Q.-Seabrooke already free from such encumbrances I wonder how long it will be before De Wolfe Hopper will go through the Federal court. Hopper announced that the alimony question of getting married so often was the constantly growing bills for alimony. Nella Bergen, who is Mrs. Hopper No. 4, would no doubt be pleased to see De Wolfe turn in his scarf pin to the Federal authorities if that would save her the alimony which is now going to No. 2. Maybe that is why Hopper has decided to remain in London for the season. It would give him a splendid opportunity to run up a big alimony bill which would be cancelled through the Federal court upon his return. But the members of the Alliance Club had better make haste to shake off old claims. Creditors are already beginning to complain of the alacrity with which persons can free themselves from debt in every State by one fell swoop through the Federal courts, and it may not be long before Congress will be induced to repeal the law.

English capitalists have bought the Casino and the Olympia, and George Lederer has been made manager of the two houses. Inci- dedently Mr. Lederer unloaded on the syndicate two of his American burlesques, but retained as his personal property The Belle of New York, which is still in London.

From New Haven, Conn., comes the news that Edna Wallace Hopper and Jerome Sykes have made a big hit in Chris and the Wonderful Lamp, an extravaganza by John Philip Sousa and Glen MacAulock, under the management of Ben D. Stevens, formerly De Wolfe Hopper's manager. After Mr. Stevens let go of Hopper he tried to make a success with Jefferson De Angelis but De Angelis did not have the physical peculiarities of Hopper, and therefore was a failure for a howling success. In Jerome Sykes Mr. Stevens certainly has a bold contrast to his former two leading men in size and figure, and Sykes can sing also.

Napoleonic history is being freely drawn upon by the local playhouses this week. Julia Arthur's new play, More Than Queen, shows her as Josephine Bonaparte and William G. Macdowell as Napoleon. The play is splendid from a scenic standpoint and Miss Arthur's millionaire husband has spared no means to make the play a success.

The Song of the Sword, in which F. H. Sothern is playing at Daly's, shows Napoleon as he was in early life when he had the reputation of being a libertine. Although the public is not disposed to accept this portrait of Napoleon the remainder of the piece fulfills all the romantic requirements of plays in which Mr. Sothern and Miss Harned have achieved success.

ST. LOUIS

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 27.—Social swindlers have their inning this week in the amusement sphere with the Grand Opera Company and the Horse Show.

The short season of the opera at the Olympic this week promises to break the back record at Manager Short's most popular theater.

The star coterie of lyric stars including Mmes. Caule, Sembach, Edouard de Reke, Sig, Campanari and other Mars and Jupiter's of the opera world will be here, including yesterday Wednesday, their opening night. The Barber of Seville Thursday, Faust Friday, Lobengrin Saturday, and La Traviata at the Saturday matinee.

Manager Short is offering Chasunee O'Connell's comic minstrelsy, and a popular Irish comedian and sweet singer to his patrons at the Century. Mr. O'Connell is doing a new play by Augustin Pigge, called the Big House, and it is a strong comedy replete with tender sentiments and catchy songs.

Manager Short, in his advertisement of Hopkins, is packing his popular theater this week with Mr. Barnes of New York, which is being done in a most prolific manner. The vaudeville program at Hopkins includes Lafayette, who is making a hit in his character in the creation of Adelheit, Haines and Wilson, Gilbert Brown and the biograph.

Managers Midkiffon and Tate have captured the hearts of the local theater patrons by giving them the Telephone Girl at popular prices. The performance is just as good as when originally produced by Louis Mann and Clara Lipman, their places being ably filled by Will Sloan and Jessie Merrill.

By the way Nellie Douglas, who cleverly plays Toots in The Telephone Girl Company, was at one time reported to be engaged to Tod Sloan, the jockey, Miss Douglas was then playing with DeWolfe Hopper in Bang. Apparently a clever little woman has won favor in the vaudeville profession, is the headliner at the Columbia this week. She is presenting short sketches that pleased to call a playlet, entitled A New Year's Dream. Others on the program who deserves mention are Confred and Carleton in The People's Musical called The Hoodoo. Charlie Casey makes a hit in his monologue, Polk & Kolins, Exceels & Heath, Lavender & Tomson, Hillsion and Newell & Chavezette meet with favor.

At Havlin's, Manager Garner is offering The White Slave. It is old, but it never fails to draw in St. Louis.

The Taunnoy Tigers, an excellent burlesque organization, is at the Standard, and Manager Jim Butcher has no fault to find with the box office receipts. This company is doing a funny burlesque on Mrs. Carleton and Carleton in The Peacock, of which new musical called The Hoodoo. EVENTS THAT INTEREST THE PACIFIC COAST

specia// Correspondence

Los Angeles, October 31. This week Los Angeles has been rather quiet, in regard to pieces of amusement. The Los Angeles Theatre and Grand Opera House, which is closed for the season, has not been the object of much attention. The Los Angeles Theatre will not reach $15,000, as reported last week. It has been finally decided to bring Morgan's Opera Company to this city for a few weeks, about February rst. Los Angeles people would certainly enjoy having them here.

There has been some talk of Main's circus wintering in Los Angeles. The matter has not as yet, been decided.

On October 27th Miss Minnie MacBride Fiske & Company in Becky Sharp, is a Los Angeles girl.

In the observatory of the Los Angeles Conservatory, Daniel Frawley, the informer who corresponds that he came to this city expecting to lose $1000 on the Los Angeles Opera, failed to realize the working of new opera chairs, the house is being widened, and improved with four additional boxes, electric lighting and an orchestra. The seating capacity enlarged about a hundred.

A new dressing room will add to make everything convenient and put the New Opera up to date. Manager Cohen expects to reopen Saturday, the 28th.

Previous to its closing the Operahouse had for its "raiser" a minstrel first part in which the whole company, including the ladies, took part. W. A. Adams as interlocutor, Billy Armstrong, H. T. Shaw, Emil Walton, Jackson Hearde, Francis Bogy and James O'Neill are doing their good share of running off the "latest" jokes.

Travelle, shadowographer, Emil Walton, musical comedians, and Armstrong and O'Neill, scientific boxes, closed at the Operahouse, the 19th, as well as Trixie Coleman, buck and wing dancer. McPherson and Chandler, duetts, will probably leave for San Francisco on the 31st. A hooliver who will reopen is Ethel Dixon, vocalist, in descriptive ballads and rag time melodies.

Jackson Hearde, comedian, who arrived lately from Australia, where he had been playing with Mac Aodo's Minstrels, is taking all right.

Hamilton Still, baritone, has a "crouch" on account of being a good drawing card. The Williards in their fisco musical act, made a good impression upon the patrons. The instruments are something new down here. Their catch phrase, "We cook sweet music out of queer instruments" is a good one.

The Boston Lyric Opera Company arrived on the Australia. Everyone is holding over for the opera season from the 31st, Clay Clement Company now at the Opera. House is meeting with "cold feet." They have done a poor business compared with what has been accorded other opera companies here.

OAKLAND
Special Correspondence

Oakland, Nov. 1.—Hows and Bolger, the popular comedians, presented their rag-time opera, by the Bad Sea Waves, at the Macomber Theatre last Friday and Saturday.

The supporting company is very good, and includes Miss Isabelle Mercedith, a former resident of this city. Large houses greeted both performances.

The League of the Cross Military Band will hold concert at the Macomber to-morrow night.

The engagement of the Nance O'Neill Company for the Macomber has been postponed until the latter part of the month, owing to a change of dates. The company will appear here on the 21st, 22nd, 24th, 25th and 26th inst.

At the Dewey Opera House the company has been giving a brilliant presentation of Goethe's immortal masterpiece, Faust. The cast is well distributed. Special mention should be made of E. J. Holden as Mephisto, Wm. H. Mack as Faust, Miss Fannie Gillette as Marguerite, and Miss Alice Saunders as Dame Maths. All do exceptionally good work, the costumes are handsome and the stage settings and electrical effects are also very good. Taking it all, all the production of Faust is due to the credit of the management of the Dewey. The audience has been very large. Week of Nov. 6th, the announcement a grand production of the ever popular drama, Michael Strogoff. Mr. E. H. Chapman has been made assistant treasurer of the company, a result of appeals, headed by Mr. Homer Gilbee, will produce Clay M. Green's comedy drama, The Golden Plough, at the Opera on the 26th inst.

The benefit concert of Mr. Alfred Wilkie takes place to night. It is expected the audience will be very large.

HONOLULU
Special Correspondence

Honolulu, H. I., Oct. 25.—After waiting several months for opera chairs the Operahouse closed the 19th for repairs. Work is being rushed and the house, after coming into new opera chairs, the house is being widened, and improved with four additional boxes, electric lighting and an orchestra. The seating capacity enlarged about a hundred.

New dressing room will add to make everything convenient and put the New Operahouse up to date. Manager Cohen expects to reopen Saturday, the 28th.

SAN JOSE
Special Correspondence

San Jose, Nov. 2.—Last Friday and Saturday evenings Brown was in Town, and at the Victory. He had very good houses on both evenings, and closed an unbroken week of high-class, high-price talent.

Monday evening Hotel Toppy Torrey was presented to a packed house, balcony and gallery as well. Foy's aggregation are playing here, and the audience looking at all the time Miss Hall, a San Jose girl, was in the chorus, and strengthened it materially.

SAVANNAH
Special Correspondence

Savannah, Oct. 31.—The Ellsfeld Company closed a very successful week at the Union Opera House, Oct. 20th.

A Breach of Promise opened to good business Oct. 2oth, for a week's engagement. The play is all right for big houses, as the farce comedy made a hit.

Nov. 8th, Garton's Minstrels.
Nov. 10th, Old Kentucky.
Nov. 11th, O'Neill.

PORTLAND
Special Correspondence

Portland, October 25.—The Marquis closed last week with Minstrels Will Haypen, which was produced on Friday and Saturday with a Saturday matinee, and the audience reeled from one convulsion of laughter to be thrown into another by the next. Hoyt's A Black Sheep was on the boards at the above theater on Monday and Tuesday, the present week, and was well appreciated by large audiences.

Ludlow has the bill boards proclaimed the coming of Ovon Vosson, which is now on at Cordays, and is proving very interesting and drawing full houses, and will be continued here for some time.

At the Portland Industrial Exposition is a variety of attractions, among which are Bennett's Military Band and Military parade by the returned volunteers.

TACOMA
Special Correspondence

Tacoma, Wash., Oct. 25—31st. Friend of mine here last Wednesday to a large audience.

A Yenuseh Yeatsman appeared in the Tacoma Theatre.

On the 31st, Tacoma theatre-goers will be given a treat in Old Kentucky, which is a play that never tires, always seeming as refreshing as when first witnessed.

The attraction announced for Saturday, Nov. 4th, at the Tacoma Theatre is Hotel Toppy Torrey, which is having remarkable success on the coast.

STOCKTON
Special Correspondence

Stockton, Nov. 1.—The Dalley Stock Company close here Sunday evening. Nance O'Neill opens a four nights' engagement on Wednesday as by evening.

M. T. CAREEK.

FRESNO
Special Correspondence

Fresno, Nov. 3.—The Dalley Company opened a five-night run at the Opera House on Monday, and judging from the nightly jam at the box office the management of the company and the house will each feel that the visit of that company was not a failure. Indeed, the continued large attendance seems to be indicative of a feeling among all classes of theatre-goers that whatever attraction Manager Barton brings to life is worth seeing.

The company opened with The New Booth, which was generally satisfactory in its presentation, although there is a feeling that more thorough study of the costuming would not be out of place. Darrell Vincent and May Nannery were very satisfactory in the leading roles, each showing that this sort of a play was to their liking.

"Haslet for thirty cents! Well, it can amount to much," was the current remark upon the streets when it was learned that the Dalley Company was to produce that famous tragedy at popular prices. But the satisfaction given on Monday night by Mr. Vincent, Miss Nannary and Retta Villicers sufficed to cause many to hasten in forming opinions as to whether to go or not. "He who hesitates is lost," so, of course, the house was filled again, and not one person present regretted the attendance. Vincent as Hamlet was far better than even the optimism had dared to hope, and his rendition of that famous character predicts for him a brilliant future. He created a most favorable impression and should always be greeted by good houses.

The company also presented Hazel Kirke, Model Husband, and Current Cash. In all things lighter plays, Miss Nye created a very favorable impression. To-morrow night Mile. Fill will be presented with Miss Mantle Gilson in the title role, the Dailies finishing Friday night.

By The Sad Sea Waves

THE COLUMBIA THEATER has an attraction which opened last Sunday evening that has beaten the records for fun-making of any seen on the coast for many a day. Those inimitable comedians Mathews and Bulger, with their exceedingly clever company and musical farce, By The Sad Sea Waves, has caught the fancy of the town, if crowded houses are an indication of popularity. New jokes, new songs, and musical numbers and a steady pit-a-patter of witticisms sums up the entire entertainment. This season everything is new but the title of the piece. A clever comedian, Tony Hart, sings through the piece, in the character of Prof. Wagner Flatt, a dash of absinthe in a glass of good whiskey. Bessie Challenger is another that contributes to the mirth of the evening. Of Mathews and Bulger and themly Ned Wayborn it is unnecessary to speak, as they are a whole show in themselves. This clever combination remains another week.

VAUDEVILLE NOTES

Lira, the transformation dancer, opens at the Chutes the 13th.

Sullivan and Cummings open at the Trinity, Victoria, B. C., the 13th.

Vonotti and Nola, gymnasts, will play this city and vicinity in the near future.

Travelle and O'Neil of Armstrong and O'Neil, returned from Honolulu on the 8th.

Carl Hertz will be in this city April 11th, 1908. He starts from here for a tour of the world.

Baroness Von Tilse, the female baritone, opens at the Delmonico, Victoria, November 6th.

"What Ho! She bumps," is the novel title of a song which has made a big hit in the London Music Halls.

Stuart Robson has been offered twenty weeks in vaudeville at a fancy salary, but says that it will take more than the failure of The Gadfly to drive him out of the legitimate.

Gus Henderson, bounding rope artist, and Eva Ross, descriptive vocalist, have closed a successful week's engagement in the Oregon Industrial Exposition at Portland, Ore.

May Vokes, the original Tilly in My Friend from India, will make her debut in vaudeville shortly in A Lucky Girl, a sketch by Horace McVicker. She will be assisted by Percy Plunkett and Ada Dean Jester.

Lucile Alden the pretty little serio-comic has returned from a four weeks' engagement at the Standard theater, Bakersfield, to attend to some private matters. She will go back there shortly for a long stay.

Louise Drescher, appearing at the Orpheum with Jack Norworth, had a birthday a few days ago, and received an automobile from her father as present. The horseless machine was to be stored, as no one has seen her out in it. "Guess it was sent to her home.

LOCAL NOTES.

CHANNING LECTURE.

Howard Malcolm Ticknor, M. F., gave the third of his series of lectures under the auspices of the Channing Auxiliary on Thursday afternoon in the parlors of the First Unitarian Church, the topic of the evening was "The Tenderness of Thacker'Y" with many illustrations to show the softer side of the great Saturist's character. The Pacific Coast Women's Press Association and Mrs. Truefeld will tender a reception to Mr. Ticknor at the Berkeley Hotel Wednesday evening of next week.

MUSICAL EVENING.

Mr. G. C. Tanishchen and pupils, assisted by Miss Ella McCloskey con- tralto, Mr. J. H. Desmond tenor, Master Vincent Seriffaga pianist, Mr. William Wiertz cellist, Mr. Ferdinand Crucells accompanist, gave a musical evening on Thursday at the V. M. C. Auditorium, the program being an interesting and varied one, the Mandolin Orchestra taking a prominent part. The concert occurred too late to review, but the criticism will be given next week.

VESTED CHOIR ASSOCIATION.

The Vested Choir Association of San Francisco and vicinity celebrated the Seventh Festival of the Feast of All Saints in the Church of St. John the Evangelist on Wednesday evening. The musical portion of the program included: Organ prelude (a) Allegretto in B minor [Louis Viener]; (b) Hymn of the Rites [Chas M. Widor]; Processional Hymns, 176-179; Magnificat—Nunc Dimbis in F [G. M. Garrett]; Anthem, "What Are These" [Sir J. Stainer]; Hymn 175, Oratorio Anthem—Send out Thy Light" [Chas. F. Gounod]; Presentation of Alms—"Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow"; Vesper Hymn [Theodore Vogt]; Ret- rocessional Hymns, 396 and 418; Organ Postlude—Fantasie, from Sonata XVII [Joseph Rheinberger]. The churches participating and choir masters were: St. Lukes, Wallace Sabia; St. John's; Miss E. M. Phillips; Cathedral Mission of the Good Samaritan, Miss E. Brown; St. John's, Oakland, Rev. Hanna; Christ's Church, Alameda, J. de P. Feller, Jr.; St. Mark's, Berkeley, Rev. Geo. E. Swan; St. Paul's, San Rafael, Fred Goldtrap.

CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERT.

The Minetti Quartet gave the first of the series of Six Chamber Music Concerts [fourth season] Friday afternoon of last week, the members of the Quartet being Giulio Minetti, first violin; Eugene Carinmeller, second violin; Charles Heusen, viola; Arthur Weiss, cello. The program which was executed with the artistic perfection that has made the Minetti Quartet celebrated in California was: [Bazzini]—Quartet in D minor op. 75 No. 2, Allegro appassionato; Adante con moto, Davoust (intermezzo). Final quasi presto. [Haydn]—Quartet in G minor op. 74 No. 3, Allegro, Largo assai [Assai moderate], Menuetto, Allegretto, Finale allegro con brío. [Beethoven]—Quartet in B flat op. 18 No. 6, Allegro con brio, Adagio ma non troppo, Scherzo allegro, La malinconia adagio, Allegretto quasi allegro.

STUDIO PERSONALS.

The San Francisco Conservatory of Music will give a concert in the Metropoli- tan Temple Nov. 10th, under the direction of Mr. Bonelli. An interesting program has been arranged, and some of Mr. Newton's pupils in the department of elocution will take a prominent part.

MUSIC IN GENERAL.

The Bostonesians have a new co- tralto who rejoices is the name of Jennie Jeth.

One of the finest violins of the world, a Stradivarius used by Wil- liam L. Weeks. It is owned by Mr. Kupferschmidt of Chicago.

The morning musicals which have been so much in vogue with the elite of New York and Washington the last season are to be one of the delights of the coming winter there.

"So the craze for too rapid tempo, widespread in our day, destroys musical form and tends to degrade music to a confused and uninteresting noise; nothing is lost but speed, and that is not enough."—Sainz-Sanz.

Sousa has added to his list a very melodious serenade, Camulodes, words by Chas. F. Lummis and lyrics by Georgia Pierrott Strong of Los An- geles. Miss Strong has also written a plantation lullaby, called "Hush-a-bye Mah Honey," for Delia Stacey.

Mr. Sherwood gave some delightful programs at Chautauqua this summer, his piano recitals being the most pop- ular events of the season. Music students from all parts of the United States and Canada attend Chautauqua every season to profit by these educa- tional programs, and to receive instruction from this master of the piano.

Naples has a Conservatory of Music, now under the direction of Sig- nor Platania, with 100 pupils attend- ing, who pay $1.50 a month for tuition. Most of these are Italians, and the museum itself enjoys a Govern- ment subsidy of $30,000 a year. In addition to this it has an income of $50,000 through a legacy of St. Pietro a Mailla, and these amounts enable the institution to do some good work. It is not generally known that Doni- zetti himself was for several years director of this Conservatory. The Teatro San Carlo is an enormous opera house, with a seating capacity of over 4,000 situated in the very heart of the city, with gorgeous decorations in gold and red, six galleries and a large auditorium. It was built in 1810, and has been the seat of triumph of many of the great artists of the world.

During the coming tour of Leandro Campanari's Orchestra Sinfinica Mi- liouse in the United States one of the important features will be the presentation of some of the more important orchestral works of American com- posers. Mr. Campanari is also con- sidering the feasibility of opening a contest for a symphonic composition by an American composer, which would be included in the programs by Mr. Campanari for the entire tour.

Mr. Frederick Vroon, the popular leading man and Miss Agnes Ränken a young actress of merit are new acquisitions to the fake O'Neil Company, which is now one of the strongest companies travelling.

She came on pleadingly.

I had heard of it—this amateur night—and now I have seen it—twice. This is a great town. We are free to think, always, and on Thursday night to act—at the Chutes—if we had rather do that than see little holes in Pat's socks or keep a "date" with our "Sunday" at the shutter-cleanser counter.

And would we? Why, yes, a few of us. There was Mermaid Mollie, for instance. (They are not billed, these amateurs—I name them for the patted out from the wings, a seaweed passmannerie covering her shoulders tenderly, and below the weed, some once-white silk drapings that yielded floatingly to the outlines of an insuffi- ciently shaped figure. Do I make you clear? Oh, the sorrow of too much, Eh? what? Oh, anything. 'Tis said even, that too much modesty is bad. She sang tenderly of loves and longings. That is, I think she did. Manners are cut at the Chutes, Thursday night, and the audience out- howled her to a man. Isn't it lovely to be a perfect savage? Just natural, I mean, without this hindering culture. to be judged on her merits, and surged out a mass of wooly-white foam, a seventh breaker, not on speak- ing terms with a single pebble on the beach.

O, there are other audiences, and when she finds something nicely suited to her particular line of ability, why then—but not now, Mollie, not now.

"What do you do day times?" yelled a shrill voice above the din. Something with her hands, I'll wager. They were large and red and useful and never has a book closed over a finger of them for thought.

Out rolled a dark creature—a black cloud of bargains from the velling counter—and the thought of forked lightning in her heart silenced the roar in us. Plainly, she had not ex- pected to be heard, and the unhopped for quiet almost drove her song from her mind. Weakly it crept back: "Don't be too anxious to run down a woman,"—and her hair was built like a snippe, pointing her upward, who said, "Heaven?" Suddenly she gave an I-am-capable-of-more-than- this gesture at the silence beseeched about her, and took a piercing lure at the melodramatic:

"God pity the poor boats, they're broken. With no one to turn to for bread."

"Go to work," shouted a man. Thoughtless fellow! She was work- ing, like a trooper. Her diaphragm fairly heaved.

"Where's your brother," called a boy to her fleeing figure.

Out be rushed. A fighter, every six foot of him. The kind who bite the ends off bad cigars viciously, and full-stop everything with "See?" He sang, too, in a voice like thunder, and we listened for very fear. "There's one thing more I'd like to say," began the second verse. That was a fatal fluke. He never said it. He was encouraged off to fill another engagement, his diamond stud lighting him on his savage way. Hats went up, and coats, and many a benediction.

On came Rosalie, the prairie flower, trippingly, with song and dance. She had a face of eerie innocence and seven shades of corns in her gown. She was soon taught better. Yes, I mean the shades and the innocence both, in case any one should ask.

But Mike O'Grady, Irish ballad singer, knew how to triumph. He stood and laughed all over himself when well paid, and got his innings when we stopped for breath.

"Mary Ann went out with a can," was treated as a theme and died of the treatment.

craving a little spangle and froth and invalid ribbon distinction. She got it—in a way, and went out waving her hand in fierce unbelief of our judgment.

She met Mag in the wings. I saw them bump. Mag did some neighborhood boasting. I watched her mouth. Once, in the ancestral line of both of them, soda rose from a steaming tub.

And then—the star of the evening! Tall, slim, with the erect droop of a lily. She would have been fetching at any time, but now, after Mike, what a beauty she seemed!

She needn't tell me she has never met a poster girl. All she needed was a dab of green sky and a patch of yellow sward to be on the sign-board. She tried to dance us quiet. No go. She opened her mouth. Heaven! She was a man—a female impersonator, and he owned the house at once. He sang, in a choosing tone, a verse that ended,

A Plea For New Plays

To my mind the most serious obstacle that confronts an author in his efforts to have his play produced is the fact that every manager to whom he applies, basing his opinion on the experience he has gained in his special line of theatrical endeavor, has an ideal of what a good play should be. Very few managers acknowledge even to themselves the possession of this ideal, but it is there all the same and a play presented for their perusal must of necessity come up to this standard, or rather be within its requirements, to stand any chance whatever of gaining a production by that manager.

From the dearth of new plays and new authors every year, one would suppose that we had no author or writer with originality enough to conceive or talent enough to write a play that while meeting all the requirements of a good play, would be, nevertheless, new in every sense of the word. Is it not astonishing that in a country as large as this, with its thousands of theaters, many of them devoted to stock companies for the production of comedies and dramas and its hundreds of thousands of regular theater patrons; with all the facilities which our superior systems afford for the acquisition of a splendid education and the additional advantage of so easily gaining dramatic experience, either by participating as a professional in these productions or by attending their performance at the theater, that we have so few real dramatists or to use a better and more exacting term, playwrights? For while there are a great many “dramatists” there are only a few real “playwrights.”

From the hundreds of plays annually handed to managers for perusal is it not remarkable, how few of them ever attain a production? Surely out of this great number, some few of them must certainly contain enough merit to entitle them to a hearing? But the managers will reply that the risk is too great in producing a new play by an unknown author, as in case of failure it jeopardizes some portion if not all of the house clientele. You see, I do not mention in the item of losses the probable cost of a new production itself for the reason that in a stock house it really cuts but very little figure what play is put on; whether it be a new play or an old one, the expenses for the week would be about the same. But here again you are met with another and just as great an obstacle as the managers’ ideal and that is what has come to be known as the policy of the house and in most theaters this policy consists of only producing recognized successes by recognized authors. No matter what merit your play may possess, should it run counter to these two reasons (and it usually does) you are told that the managers have neither the inclination nor the necessity to make an exception in your favor by entering into a speculation such as the production of your play would be.

These two are the strongest reasons I know why we have so few new authors and so few new plays. However, I hope that some day a manager with principles broad enough to grasp the fact that every new production of an entirely new and original play by a new author will, instead of entailing a loss, be a means of attracting another and a larger class of auditors and that in time the policy of producing a new play occasionally, say once in every three months (for a run of a week), will eventually place his theater in the front rank and that last and by no means least should he succeed in developing a sensational success he will have gained more both pecuniarily and artistically at a single bound than he could attain by years of patient and careful management. For the new play that is a glittering success is the Khooldike of the theatrical world.

A. C. V.

The Christian has been produced in Australia with Thomas Kingston and Henrietta Watson as John Storm and Glory Quayle. The play as presented there has thirty-six speaking parts and was an immediate success.

MR. DAVIS came to California without means, carved out his own fortune and has invested it here mainly in industrial enterprises, building up the city and giving work to many workmen.

The workingman should vote for the man that encourages the employment of labor and has never had any difficulty with his men.

His successful career in business entitles him to the confidence of the business men.

The friends of the public schools can place confidence in him because of his wide experience in that line; he has been President of the State University and is now Trustee of the Public Library and President of the Lick Mechanical School.

He is absolutely independent of corrupt influences: he does not own a single bond or share of stock in either Water Company or Gas or Electric Light or Street Railroad or any of the Southern Pacific Companies and has never made promises beyond endorsing the Republican Platform.

He was a member of the Charter Convention, a constant attendant in its sessions and ardent advocate of its adoption.
Stage-struck Girls

"I was going over a lot of old photographs the other day," said an instructor in one of the dramatic schools, "and it struck me as I looked at the faces of my old pupils that the percentage of those who 'land' is remarkably small.

"I have tried to follow the career of many who have been under my tutelage, and as nearly as I can determine there are about ten failures for every success of any sort. All this, however, does not indicate that the school is at fault; for it has been my observation and that of my associates that a large number of pupils have no desire to go upon the stage, but are governed by other motives in taking a course of instruction.

"Of these cases the greater number are young women whose parents are rich and who have taken up dramatic study simply as a means of getting to New York. Did they come to a finishing school or seminary that would have under a constant computer whose work would materially detract from, if not actually prohibit, their enjoyment. But as dramatic pupils they are not in charge of the instructors, save in the class-rooms; moreover, they are expected to go to the theater as often as possible.

"All this suits them exactly, and with small histrionic ability, but with large powers of persuasion they induce their parents to send them on here to study for the stage. Before they have finished the course their ambition is permitted to lag, and the chances are that their parents are more than glad to learn that they have abandoned their purpose of becoming professional actresses."

"I know one fashionable matron who has sent three of her daughters for a two years' course because she considers the training they are given here an excellent supplement to their regular educational course. If there are private theatricals they are seen to better advantage than the un instructed ones, and two of the trio have made excellent matches since leaving, which would seem to uphold her argument.

"There are many who go on the stage simply because they like to get in with the theatrical crowd, and very often they make a e-nquest of some minor actor, and are glad—for a time. I know one old woman who came on here to chaperon her daughter, and who married a man twelve years younger than herself.

"The daughter was heartbroken, but the old lady had plenty of money and there was no open rupture, though I believe the girl is now supporting herself by work on the stage rather than live with her stepfather. Usually in these cases it is the other way around, and the younger woman is married for the sake of her money.

"They are not all pretenders though, and there is one young girl of wealthy family who will make a second May Robson when she has been ripened by experience. She is a charming girl, but plain—though by no means homely. We all laughed at her pretensions when she joined the class, but it developed that she had had her eye on eccentric work, and as she has a rare appreciation of the humorous and much application, she will make a hit in spite of her money—an infrequent occurrence."—Telegraph.

Songs Are Costly

"The outsider does not realize," said Isidore Witmark, "the expense to which a music publisher is put in marketing a popular song. It is generally supposed that a couple of advertisements in dramatic papers, and possibly a few free copies, is all that is necessary, and that the publisher has nothing more to do except to make out deposit slips for his bank and write checks for royalties.

"It is an alluring picture, and when some man reads that this or that popular song has netted the composer several thousand dollars in a few months, he imagines the business is too easy. As a matter of fact, no man works harder than the song publisher.

"The sale of a piece of music depends upon two things, the catchiness of the air and its New York popularity. The sales in the smaller towns are governed entirely by this latter consideration, and no matter how catchy or graceful a tune may be, if it is not a hit in the New York theaters it is a flat failure.

"I call to mind one song that is just as good a coon tullahly as 'Louisiana Lou' or any of that class, but it is not easy to memorize because of certain tricks of composition. Though it has been upon the market over two years, I do not suppose more than three or four professionals have sung it, and the sales cannot have amounted to more than a few hundred copies. Had the song been offered to me I would have considered myself fortunate in getting it, yet it will never make a hit, or even pay the cost of the type-setting.

"The whole business is one huge gamble, with more blanks than there used to be in the lotteries. A man brings in a song which makes a hit with the reader, and it is decided to publish it. It is given to a man to correct and get in shape, after which it is either set from type or engraved. If the publisher be a cautious man, he will have only professional copies printed.

"These are the same as the regular sheet music form, but are printed on cheap white paper, and are not provided with covers. They are given free to anyone who can produce a program showing his or her name. If the professionals like the song and will sing it, there is a demand created which justifies the publisher in having copies printed for the trade on heavy paper, with ornate cover.

"Again, the publisher tries to more than simply distribute the professional copies, however, for he has to keep a man to play it over and over until the singer learns it. He must also give lessons in phrasing, that the song may be rendered intelligently. He has to furnish waiting rooms, well provided with stationery and other conveniences and must be prepared to furnish free transpositions if the song is not in the proper key to fit the performer's voice. He must get out orchestrations at his own expense, and in the case of a song which will illustrate well he must have lantern slides made for stereopticon use.

"Yes, it is all hazard—all a case of 'throwing a sprat to catch a whale.' When you land the whale you have a rich haul, but for every whale there are a lot of sprats which are pulled off the hook, and a part of the whale goes for more. But we have been very fortunate on the whale end of it, but often the most promising cast simply results in the loss of the line. This is the common experience."—No Grand Opera

Men to the disappointment of those who have looked forward to a season of grand opera during the winter months, Manager Morosco states that the Gran Opera will not sing in San Francisco. Arrangement had been completed some time ago, the existing terms of the opera organization had been accepted by Mr. Morosco, when suddenly he received word that the season was off, and thus San Francisco, notwithstanding all the efforts of a progressive, enterprising manager and a yearning public, will get the go-by.

Frank Tannehill, Jr., who appears in Broadway's farce, Why Smith Left Home, has just completed a comedy for May Irwin, which she has accepted and will produce next season. Why Smith Left Home, was one of the greatest comedy hits last season.

Emma Nevada’s Return

EMMA NEVADA has returned from Europe and will open at the Metropolitian Opera House, New York, tomorrow night. She was, of course, interviewed, and in referring to the tempestuous experiences of her visit to Seville during which she was insulted and almost mobbed by a Spanish audience on account of her nationality, Mme. Nevada grew very eloquent over her treatment by the Queen Regent.

"When I appeared on the stage of the Opera House," she said, "the auditorium was quite empty except for a few rough looking men who heard the first act of Lucia di Lammermoor in grim silence. At the close of the act Col. Poor, the British consul, came behind the scenes. 'What is the matter?' I asked him. 'Don't you know?' he replied. The streets outside are in an uproar, and the people are determined to mob you because you are an American. The only people in the audience are gens d'armes.'"

"Both the consul and my husband begged me not to continue the performance, but I insisted on finishing the opera."

"When the curtain went up on the second act the house was packed with dons in evening dress and donnas in magnificent jewels, all sitting with their backs to the stage. This was disconcerting but also laughable and the humor of it saved me from despair. I sang my best, and at the close of the act the curtain fell in dead silence except for the voice of one grandee who came to the front of his box and shouted 'Brava the orchestra!'"

"During the third act Lucia's mad scene was applauded, but at the end of the opera I was called before the curtain and vigorously hissed and boo'd at in the choicest Castilian."

"No. They didn't throw things at me, but I couldn't have felt more hurt if they had. I had always been so spoiled a favorite in Seville that I couldn't realize that I was persona non grata with my favorite audience."

"That night we were advised by the authorities to leave town, and did so with dispatch."

"Arriving in Madrid, where the news of my misadventure had preceded us, we were met at the railway station by the late Count Murphy, private secretary to the Queen Regent. Her Majesty begged—that means commanded, you know—that I should remain in Madrid and sing at the Palace on the following evening. Of course I did so, and at the close of my song recital the Queen embraced me and presented me with this bracelet."

"This bracelet is a lovely bangle set with a ruby, a diamond and a sapphire—the red, white and blue of the United States flag, and is, by the way, the fourth given to Mme. Nevada by the Spanish Queen."

In reference to her forthcoming tour, Mme. Nevada said that her foremost intention was to make a feature of new works by American composers. "I shall devote myself religiously," she said, "to the hearing of original American music from now until the opening of my tour, and I have no doubt that I shall be able to add some surprisingly good new music to my repertoire. At all events, I shall try!"

FIFTH NEW NAME

Oh, naughty, charming "Pie!"
In your costume so Fig. lepsy,
With all sorts of invitations in your archy glancing eye,
You're a most bewitching vision,
But your name which is Parisian.
Ought really to be anglicized and called Pie, Pie.

Between Acts

The next attraction managers Ellingham house and Mott have to announce at the New Alhambra is Eugene Blair in A Lady Of Quality. This will be one of the most elaborate and magnificent productions seen upon a local stage this season. Miss Blair is a very beautiful woman and as a star is scoring an unprecedented success. She will appear at the New Alhambra for one week only, commencing on Sunday night, November 12th.

Jacob Litt's big spectacular production of Shaanadoosh is to be brought to the coast in the near future. The production will be the same as seen at New York and Chicago and it will necessitate an entire train of eight cars to carry it to this city. The score or more of rough riders who appeared in the Eastern revival of the play will come here and give their exciting drill.

In Old Kentucky will open at the New Alhambra theater on November 15th, for a two week's run. Manager Ellingham says he will wager a new hat that the two weeks will be a record-breaker.

The New York Alhambra is the newest theatrical journal in the field. Beside giving reports from American and European show centers, this journal prints its editorials and some of its reports in English, French and German. In this manner it intends to occupy an international position.

Entered at the postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as second-class matter October 5, 1899.

Now it is said that Dorothy Usher is contemplating retiring from the stage to devote her talents in other directions. Really the stage cannot afford to lose you, Dora, dear, and we will wager that it's only another of your press agent's yarns. Time will tell.

The affliction that has befallen Napoleoni Galliani, the baritone of Lambardi Opera Company, is deeply regretted by his friends and relatives in this city. He sang at the Tivoli for many years, and was well liked by all who knew him. It is feared that he is hopelessly insane.

Every manager in the city is jubilant at the prospects for a good winter season, and the best attractions to be secured in the East are already booked. Nobody can complain of the lack of first-class attractions this season, and the managers are to be thanked for their energy in behalf of the theater-going public.

Golden Gate Lodge, No. 6, B. P. O. E., has secured the Columbia Theater for its annual entertainment on Sunday afternoon, Nov. 19. All the theaters in the city will be represented by first-class talent, and an unusually good entertainment is promised. It is hoped that all members of the profession will in some way lend their aid and encouragement to the entertainment.

Some misguided dramatic writer has said that John C. Rice is too good for vaudeville. Nobody in the legitimate is too good for vaudeville, and it is surprising to notice the rapidity with which some of the best men and women are rushing into it, simply because they can get more money and in some instances have to work less. There is nothing strange about this condition—the public demands a diversity and the demand must be met, hence good salaries for first-class vaudevillians.

Last week we had occasion to speak of disturbances by college boys at the theaters. Now we are compelled to call attention to what at least was a distressing lack of professional courtesy. During the performance of Oliver Twist by Nance O'Neill at the California last Sunday night, a young woman, member of a prominent company, sat in the rear of the house andittered all through the most somber passages, to the great annoyance of everyone who sat near her as well as the actors. Just what was the cause of the mirth is not apparent, but we feel such a breach of etiquette should not pass unnoticed.

The old adage that "dreams go by contrary" was fully exemplified recently in the case of the Tivoli's popular basso, Wm. Schuster. Billy had a vivid dream a few nights before the Jeffries-Sharkey fistic encounter, in which he saw big Jeff cleanly knocked out in the first round, and Billy was knocked out himself. It costs nothing to dream these things, but when a man gambles on the veracity of his somnambulistic wanderings, that is where he is off his whirl. Billy is now fifty cents poorer than he was before the fight, and it is useless to add he is looking for tips in any direction other than that of dreamland.

That New Theater

Every week or so there is put in circulation a rumor of a new theater for San Francisco. The last rumor, pretty well authenticated, is that within sixty days ground for a new show house will be broken, and within a year a new box company will be entertaining the insatiable theatrical propensities of the San Francisco public. Wright Huntington, who left such a favorable impression, had after a season with the AIAE, Co., and was very lately seen in a clever sketch at the Orpheum, is mentioned as leading man of the new company. Mr. Huntington is a great favorite in San Francisco, and as he has said repeatedly that he would like very much to call San Francisco his home, there may be something in this new rumor.

The Electrician

For the first time in Portland, Nevada, a vaudeville comedy-drama of Colorado life, was presented at Cordray's Sunday night and drew an audience that not only packed the house to the doors, but also to the walls, and might have extended itself to the ceiling had there been standing room in that direction.

As Tom Edison, electrician and mine-owner, William R. Ogden filled his part to the satisfaction of all. Frank C. Thompson, as Bill Turner, foreman of the Edison plant, and Frederick Fairbanks, as Savage, were a pair of excellent villains. Miss Madge Daly was an ideal street girl, ready to fight, sell apples or bury mines. Miss Bouvier, although she had little to do as Miss Sessions, did that little very well. The Humoresque of G. W. Bowman, ready to 'drink, shoot or sit on the bench;' Walter T. Tupper, B. P. Van Cleve and Miss Van Cleve. Specialities were introduced by Miss Lamar and Miss Daly.

Portland Oregonian.

Elks' Entertainment

UNUSUAL INTEREST is being manifested in the annual entertainment to be given at the Columbia Theater December 10th by Golden Gate Lodge No. B. P. O. E., in aid of its charity fund. At the meeting two weeks ago a committee of fifteen was appointed to make the necessary arrangements. Henry H. Davis was made chairman of the committee, and he appointed sub-committees on talent committee, entertainment, theater, music, printing, advertising, etc. Messrs. Doulan, Ulrich and Wasson were selected as the entertainment committee and they promise an exceptionally good program. Already they have received volunteers from most of the theatrical people at the local theaters. The Columbia Theater was selected on account of its central location, though Manager Friedlander of the California, Manager Lehyn of the Tivoli, and Managers Mott & Ellinghouse of the Alhambra offered their houses at a most reasonable figure.

The other managers offered their theaters on any day that would not interfere with the regular managers. Some very clever poster work has been done, and the city will be well billed for the performance, which will be in the nature of a continuous vaudeville show. Tickets are only 50 cents each, including reserved seats.

Archie Levy.

I remember the theatrical profession of the West that appears on the front page of this week's Review. As a song and sketch writer, I was for a long time prominent; then I went into active theatrical management and finally founded the Theatrical Booking Association, which he pushed into such prominence that it may be justly considered one of the influential theatrical factors of the Pacific Coast.

Fun in Los Angeles

Tom Garrett, who used to be on the Examiner, (sadly): "Did you see the long list of people who announce that they will never, never attend another Orpheum performance. I printed it in the Record tonight!"

Manager Bronson (wildly grasping the Record from Garrett): "Where is it? Show it to me, quick! What's the trouble with 'um? Hey! Hasn't Walsebeck (fumbling the paper) —I can't find it! Where is your bloody list, old man?"

Tom Garrett (solemnly): "In the obituary column."

T. M. A. Smoker

The San Francisco T. M. A.'s gave a smoker last Friday night at Native Sons' Hall, and everybody enjoyed the entertainment for mind and body provided by the hospitable stage boys. Brother Geo. E. Lank occupied the chair, and among the volunteer entertainers were Wright Huntington, Harry Richards, and Tom Greene of the Tivoli, and several members of the Brown's in Town Company. Clarke Reynolds of the Alcazar officiated at the piano.

Honolulu Life.

Charles Willard, the well-known musical artist, writes from Honolulu:

"We are enjoying the finest engagement it has ever been our pleasure to make. I find the people here very agreeable and should be delighted to make this trip again, as the former who shall hereafter come within hearing of my voice shall hear me talk of our Honolulu engagement. Mr. Cohen, the manager, is a friend to performers. He informed us this morning that the house would close to-morrow for repairs, but that salaries would go on just the same. You can imagine how that information was received. All is lovely and the goose hangs high."

Rankin's Trouble

McKenzie Rankin, manager of Nance O'Neill, was examined Monday before United States Court Commissioner Heacock for failure to pay the war revenue tax due on account of a recent performance of the Nance O'Neill Co. every week at San Jose.

The Commissioner held Rankin to answer before the District Court with bail fixed at $500. Rankin was represented before the Commissioners by Attorney Crittenden Thornton, who interposed a technical defense. Thornton insisted that the tax should be paid by the owner of the theater at San Jose, but with this view Commissioner Heacock refused to agree. The final hearing will soon be held.

When the 900 horses used by Roosevelt's regiment in Cuba were put up at auction in New York recently by the government, Jacob Litt bought twenty-four of them for use in his great revival of Shenandoah, which is just now exciting the enthusiasm of play-goers. He also secured the services of Hatt, and several of the principal heroes of San Juan and El Caney, and in the mimic battle scene in Shenandoah, which stirs audiences to such a pitch of enthusiasm, they make one of the great stirring stage pictures ever seen.
Of a Personal Nature

Miss Adelaide Norwood will likely be the prima donna of the Castle Square Opera Company, that is to open in St. Louis.

The New York Dramatic News says that the Tedwyn Sisters, two California girls with the Irvin Brothers' show, blossomed out with a new wardrobe last week at Miner's Eight Avenue Theater. A new wardrobe for California actresses seems to be a novelty, judging from the News' remark.

Miss Elsie Slifer, of the Concordia Club entertainment, J. P.'s old baritone song, "A Son of the Desert" is still paying him good royalties. It seems to grow more popular every year. The New York Dramatic News says that the Tedwyn Sisters, two California girls with the Irvin Brothers' show, blossomed out with a new wardrobe last week at Miner's Eight Avenue Theater. A new wardrobe for California actresses seems to be a novelty, judging from the News' remark.

George Fraser of the Examiner staff is writing a play of the sermon-order.

Della Fox, who has been near to death, the result of an operation, is slowly improving in New York. Magic Carr Cook, well known to Pacific Coasters, is a member of the Dearborn Stock Company, Chicago.

Mrs. John Morrissey returned from St. Louis last Wednesday, where she spent six pleasant weeks with her parents.

Word comes from Buffalo to the effect that William Gillette has a bigger triumph in Sherlock Holmes than Secret Service ever proved to be.

Marie Burroughs is to be married again. This will be her second venture. Her first husband was Louis Massine. She will retire to private life after her marriage.

It is not generally known that Caroline Knowles, who is this week appearing at the Alcazar and who was for several weeks at the Tivoli, is the mother of Eugene Ormond.

Arkyle Tully, late of the Southwell Opera Company, has been engaged by Harry Corson Clarke to play the part of the Superintendent in What Happened to Jones, and act as assistant stage manager. Mr. Tully is a cousin of Tully Marshall, stage manager and for many years a standby of Charles Frohman.

Geo. A. Boyver is managing The Electrician Company, now touring the coast. Mr. Boyver knows the business from A to Z and he is personally one of the most popular men in the business. F. J. Dailey, who does the advance, is one of those live, up-to-date hustlers, who have revolutionized the methods of play booming. The Review expects to report a big business all along the line.

Plays of the new season who will shortly be seen in Frisco with Eugenie Blair and her company of players, was formerly a member of Becketton Tree's Company and Henry Irving's forces. He returned to America last summer to accept the part of the Earl of Bunt

The Cheerful Liar Company will take the road next Tuesday, opening at San Mateo, with Redwood City, Santa Clara, Gilroy, Salinas and the coast circuit to follow. W. B. Gerard is manager, Lewis Fitzhugh represents the stage and Edward Hare represents general director. Stella Bonar, the star of the cast, has appeared with success in Berlin, Paris and throughout the Eastern States. The cast also includes Frank Blood, Max Stine, Jack Tait, Ward, Sydney Platt, Bernard Jaxon, Ennue Murdock, Leona Leigh and Rose Simmons. The farce is a good one and should prove a box office winner.

Sydney Platt, a clever young local actor, goes out with the Cheerful Liar Company.

The Stewart sisters, San Francisco girls now in the vaudeville, are in New York. They have been very successful on their trip East, and have some good Eastern offers in prospect.

Arthur Donaldson and Edith Hall, who both formerly played here in the Tivoli company, will be seen at the California in Yon Yson. Donaldson should be a bit in the title role, as he is of Swedish nationality, and does not have to invest in a box of dialect to help him out.

Private advice from Thos. C. Leary, the former San Francisco favorite comedian, reports the business of the Kays, now playing in the East in A Hot Old Time, as something enormous. Leary plays the part of Gen. Stonewall Blazer, and it goes without saying that Tommy makes good.

Gertrude Honans, not so long ago known as Gertrude Honans, the child actress, is engaged to be married to Edwin Thanhauser, of the stock company at the Academy of Music in Milwaukee. Miss Honans resides in Brooklyn. She will retire from the stage.

Nellie McPherson and Vera Chandler, known on the vaudeville stage as Chandler and McPherson, society duettists, have just returned from six weeks at the Orpheum, Honolulu. They say their act took well and they had a royal good time.

The many friends of Miss Marie McAllister, who made her debut with the Clay Clement Company at the Columbia this summer, will regret to learn of her very serious illness at the Hotel Stewart. Her life is almost despaired of, her physicians offering little hope of her ultimate recovery. We trust they may be mistaken and that she may be with us many years yet.

The Dramatic News of New York says: "J. J. Gottlieb, of the Columbia Theater in San Francisco, is a vaudeville man in New York. Mr. Gottlieb will remain here about three weeks to book additional attractions for the Columbia Theater in San Francisco, which already has a fine number, including S. E. Smith Russell, John Drew, The Christian Company, Deman Thompson and many others. Mr. Gottlieb has arranged for Henry Miller to appear next summer at the Columbia for another season of productions."
The California

SUNDAY NIGHT ushered in Nance O'Neil's return engagement at the California Theater. The play was Oliver Twist. The part of Nancy Sykes is one of the best that Miss O'Neil essays, though probably the least pleasant to watch, as the realism of the murder scene is a gruesome sight and cannot be witnessed without a shudder of fear and a feeling of gruesome nausea. This young Californian is certainly on the threshold of a great career if she may not be said to have already entered the door. Her command of facial expression, her voice and her mannerisms are all under perfect control, and the beautiful woman becomes in the character the child of the gutter. Her portrayal of Nancy Sykes will go in dramatic history as one of the truly great impersonations of the times. McKee Ran-kin, too, is at his very best in the character of Bill Sykes and makes the sluggish, brutal house-breaker a thoroughly detestable personage without a redeeming feature. W. L. Gleeson made a good Fagin, though not a great one, and Mrs. John T. Raymond as Oliver, George Beckes as Mr. Brownlee, Roland Berthelette as The Artful Dodger, and J. N. Gleeson as Charley Bates are deserving of especial mention.

With Nance O'Neil and her band of players as interpreters, Paul Lin- don's four-act problem play, The Shadow, was given its first English production at the California Theater on Monday night. The Second Mrs. Tanqueray is accused of having drawn its inspiration from the Lindau plot, and certainly there are coincidences, even in situation. However, Therese, the heroine of The Shadow, unlike the Tanqueray lady, is young in love and years, and, in spite of a pitiful "plot on the 'scotchmon," innocent at heart.

The two plays really follow the same lines—betrayal, new and deeper love, confession, marriage, sorrow, and social ostracism, and final suicide. The plan is dramatic, very, but in my event, not new.

The play has been inartistically Englished by its author, who, if one may judge by the translation, is no Piner. There is fine dramatic cloth, none too cleverly cut, and the pieces do not goe and seam and fold as they may some day, when the author or a skillful adaptor shall make it over—for it must be made over—it is well worth it. If put in good English, and somewhat elaborated, Pomipgnac's speech, in the fourth act, where he tells Therese a husband what he would say to him, were Therese, would be of scene-call value—it is so human. Then, there are many other dramatic moments. Yes, the play is well worth reconstruction.

In the meantime, what of Nance O'Neil? There are, perhaps, in a life experience, a half-dozen impressions of the silently superb. Miss O'Neil is one of these. She has but to stand, tilt her head a bit, outline her profile, as she did often on Sunday night, against a dull red portiere, and she is a song without words. Such things as she may do in this world, they are hers. (Just now she does not cover enough.) Wherever she is, on the stage or off, she will always hold the chief part. When some one shall write a play for her, of tragic and pathetic strength, and she shall give to its preparation weeks of introspective study and thought, she will know what it is to take up famous—and may I be there to say, "I told you so."

To live up to Miss O'Neil as star, the company, to a man, feel the cares of a high responsibility upon them, and act with no indolence or easy content. Henri de Froulaeville, the aristocratic husband of Therese, representing the side of life that is conventional and narrow and petty and even ridiculous, was played by Frederic Vroom, the new leading man, Count Eugene de Grange, a legitimist senator, by Roland Berthelette, General Bidard by Barton Hill, Paul, his son, by Charles Crossfield, Pomipgnac, an old family servant, by Charles Bertrand, Mme. Angele de Bussy, Henri's sister, by Mina Crolins, Clemente de Grange, the Count's niece, by Agnes Randink, Celestine, Therese's maid, by Lola Hill, and Aunt Gabrielle Lombard, the aunt in general of everybody, by Ricca Allen.

Next week Harry Corson Clarke presents What Happened to Jones.

Loderer's Quinquina will keep the hair healthy.

Lyric Letter for The Dramatic Review.

The Tivoli

This pioneer American home of opera returned Monday, Wednesday and Friday to comic opera, presenting The Three Black Cloaks, filling out the rest of the week with that splendid success, L'Africaine. The Three Black Cloaks is the conventional comic opera, with scenes laid in Spain and the action of the opera arises from the betrathal of Girona, the village beauty, to Don Louis, the miller, who is a persistent lover, though one finding small favor in the eyes of his future wife. Girona has an ideal that she loves, (who is realized in the form of Don Louis), a young officer in the personal service of the King. The latter is impressed with the charms of Girona and plans an adventure, which is frustrated by Don Louis and by the coming of the Queen, who has received word of the plans of her fickle foe. Finally in the end the lovers' tongues are straightened out, including that of Don Jose, the King's chamberlain, who has secretly married one of the Queen's maids of honor, and the curtain falls on everybody happy. There were no especially brilliant chances for any of the cast, but every part was well taken. Ada Palmer-Walker was allotted a few solos and a couple of duets, which were given in good voice; indeed, one may say that Miss Walker's seems to be growing better and better,—that is, with all of her original power and skill she has added a very pleasing sweetness that is not always found in voices of brilliancy and range. Tom Greene is the best tenor the Tivoli has had in many a day and sang with pleasing effect. He has youth and good looks and a fine physique and will be a very popular member of the Tivoli force. Alf Wheelan was the miller and from a part devoid of almost all humor, he extracted a great many laughs and much good feeling. William Schuster was the King's Chamberlain, and Philip Branch the Queen's irrepressible consort. Charlotte Beckwith, as the Queen, made a very gracious sovereign, as well as a very lovely one. The plot runs through three acts, and was mounted and costumed with the usual thorough attention given all Tivoli productions.

Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday were underlined for the elaborate production of L'Africaine.

The Alcazar

WELL, it's a mix-up from start to finish, the farce-comedy Nerves. Full of people interest, and it interests the audience, and you can but feel jolly and well pleased with this sparkling sketch. Mr. Clarence Mont-aine, as a French confectioner, carries out a well sustained character and certainly adds considerble zest and amusement, while Miss Marie Howe, Madame Zephyr Elaine, the fashion-able milliner, very creditably assists. Mr. Frank Denthorne can find no with the exception that Tin Turtle sweener," and demonstrates his ability in character parts. Miss Juliet Crowley, the maid with nerves, is also excellent. In the second act, Miss Mae Keane, captivated with her charming dancing, Mr. Eugene Ormoud, Miss Gertrude Foster, Miss Caroline Knowles, Mr. Charles W. King, Mr. Carlyle Moore and in fact every member of the company carried out their parts with much cleverness.

The Alhambra

The hoodoo that for years has hung over the Alhambra Theater seems to have been broken at last. It took some clever advertising and a good performance to do it, and Ellingham and Mott are to be congratulated on their success. The performance for the opening week of this theater, under the new management, was Mlle. Fifi, a Frenchy farce that has been widely but misleadingly advertised as a play at which unveiled women should not be seen. Of course the managers did not so advertise the play, but they entered no strong protest against the deceitful work of certain critics of the daily newspapers, for it is a certainty in San Francisco that people will flock to see a show that is reported to be improper. The opening night of Mlle. Fifi was a repetition of the night when the California Theater presented The Turtle, with the difference that Mlle. Fifi was more than suggestively vulgar, while Mlle. Fifi was no worse but far more "moral" than most of the French farces seen in this country—outside of New York, of course.
There are not a dozen suggestive sentences in the whole performance, but three or four of them, while as dainty as possible, would need no explanation to a Sunday-school class. But any deficiency in this direction is more than atoned for by the very clever company presenting it. Briefly the story is of a French Vicomte and his American bride. Mrs. Corson is the comely young woman, and Mr. DeMorgan is the Venetian who professes to love her because of the influence of Sir John Oxen, a companion of her father's, whose soul ambition is breaking women's hearts. Here she fights out the great temptation of a woman's life alone, without the aid of maternal and virtuous training. Her moral life awakens through her own courage, she becomes victorious over evil influences, and the continuance of the story shows a steady growth in strength and nobility of character, till finally the story is a perfect image of all the inherent traits of historical fiction, it nevertheless appeals to certain lives which are now being lived.}

The Columbi

The second week of Mathews and Bulger in By the Sad Sea Waves drew fairly good houses. The popularity of the attraction does not seem to wane in the least. By the Sad Sea Waves will be followed by Why Smith; Left Home, a most amusing comedy opening on Monday evening.

Next Week

Clarke's Friend Jones.

What Happened to Jones, Broadhurst's successful three-act comedy in which Harry Corson Clarke made his star debut, is again to be produced in this city, after which it goes on tour through the southern and eastern States. Mr. Clarke is too well known to the San Francisco public to require extended mention. To such as have seen him in the diversity of roles which he assumed during his connection with earlier stock companies, his work will ever be retained in pleasant memory, no less so being his advent as a star. His engagement in this city will be limited to one week this season and will take place at the California Theater, beginning to-morrow night.

At the Tivoli!

With each succeeding week, the Tivoli Opera House, to the delight of thousands of our lower middle-class, continues to present the strongest attractions which can be found in the operatic list of compositions. For next week, Gilbert and Sullivan's greatest success, Patience, will be presented for four days. This charming little operetta, with its famous historical grand opera, The Masked Ball, (Un Ballo in Maschera),

An exceptional presentation of Patience can be expected, judging from the splendid cast of singers announced by the management. Ada Walker, the new character actress, of the Tivoli, will be heard as Lady Jane, the part she sang so long with the Boston Opera. Miss Winifred Beckwith, will be a stately "Lady Angela; Julie Cote, will have every chance for success, as Lady Saphir; while Miss Sannie Kruger, a niece of Oom Paul of the Transvaal will have the part of Miss Ella. The male characters in Patience will be in the care of Al. C. Wheeler, who is bound to score heavily as Bunthorne, the fleshy poet; Phil Brans, will be the idyllic poet, Algeron Grosevenor; while Tom Greene, will be heard in his best role, that of The Duke of Dunstable. The chorus, orchestra, and stage effects of Patience will be of the most artistic quality, and it is expected that the comic opera, is likely to develop a big demand for seats. The Masked Ball, will probably show the grand opera singers in their greatest success, for Silas, Avedano, Schuster, Anna Lichtenfellr, and Ada Walker have records of triumphs in the various roles in the opera. Signorina Politini, the superb contralto, who was with the Lambardi Opera Co., will make her first appearance at the Tivoli, in the part of "Carmen" which will be given on Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday nights, Patience will be sung at the alternate performances. L'Africane will be sung to-night and Sunday night.

At the New Alhambra.

Eugenie Blair, in a magnificent production of Mrs. Frances Hobson Burnett's A Lady of Quality, will appear for one week at this popular and attractive theater, commencing to-morrow night. This is one of the productions that has appeared in San Francisco this season; and judging from the advance sale of seats, standing room will be at a premium throughout the week. A famous author wrote the play, a famous artist, Earnest Albert, painted the gorgeous scenery for this production; famous costumers dress the characters, and it is but natural that a famous actress should play the part of Clarinda Wildair, and Miss Eugenie Blair has for wonderful thespian powers and surpassing beauty, has added to her fame and fortune by her great portrayal of this heroine. As Cho Wildairs, the rolicking companion in the love story, and her father's favorite friend, one can hardly believe that it is the dignified Eugenie Blair who, a few years ago, started this country by her wonderful Camille, or as Siva in the Wife of Mil-Kutas. A great sensation was made in speaking of the play, says: "The piece naturally divides itself into dramatic scenes. At the age of six Clarinda Wildairs becomes the companion of her father, a person with the greatest of refinement, who has been under the influence of Sir John Oxen, a companion of her father's, whose soul ambition is breaking women's hearts. Here she fights out the great temptation of a woman's life alone, without the aid of maternal and virtuous training. Her moral life awakens through her own courage, she becomes victorious over evil influences, and the continuance of the story shows a steady growth in strength and nobility of character, till finally the story is a perfect image of all the inherent traits of historical fiction, it nevertheless appeals to certain lives which are now being lived."

At the Orpheum.

The new bill at the Orpheum for next week will do more than preserve the tradition of "the best show in town" for the O'Farrall Street vaudeville house. There will be two new acts and every one of them a well proven success. The head liners of the new program are Mr. and Mrs. Richfield, two of the cleverest comedians in the vaudeville world. They will present an original sketch entitled A Heedless Man. Cherub Simpson is bound to be a big favorite. She is a comedian of exceptional ability and, beyond that, is a woman of striking beauty. Burton's Acrobatic Comedy Dogs are the best trained canines in the world. Vinie De Witt is one of the greatest comics in the country. The holdovers are Cornille, Jerome and Alexis, Leo Carle, Goggins and Davis and the Biograph. Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

At the Columbia

At the Columbia Theater for two weeks, beginning Monday night, November 15th, Why Smith Left Home, George H. Broadhurst's latest and biggest farce, will be seen. There is much comedy and many situations for humor and tearing comprisions in the various circumstances that induce Smith's departure from his domicile, and a hearty enjoyment and concurrence by his audience that he does so.

The influence of relatives upon recently married couples offers a wide field of interesting study in this lively farce, and furnishes a number of very merry lessons on the subject of how those connected by ties of kindship with the lately wedded pair manage to disturb their conjugal bliss. The Cook Lady is also a very interesting character.

Of course a play that is good in itself is all the better; but, a well-dressed actress need not be equipped with a large trousseau in order to utilize the costumes, and such is the case in this instance, as a glance at the following well known names will prove: Franl Tannoch Jr., Eugene Redding, C. J. Williams,
NEW YORK
Special Correspondence

New York, Nov. 5.—Sir Henry Irving and Miss Ellen Terry have spent a pleasant and prosperous week here at the Knickerbocker Theater and have two weeks more to stay before going on the road to complete their engagement of twenty weeks in America. I hope they go to California. But when Sir Henry was here last he expressed the opinion that if they have a chance they generally are that it "ought to be shoved together a bit, doncnerter." Since he was here last the great English actor has passed through a severe illness and through some failures of theatrical enterprises. All this tended to make his welcome in New York more sympathetic, even if his new play of Kolin pierre, in which he opened, had not been a strong drama. But the play itself showed that the abilities of the great French dramatist, Victorien Sardou, have not waned. It is a great play. The only regret about the engager is that the actors are generally good and the people almost full of money. It is necessary for the management to double the prices of admission. That puts the great actress out of the place. The story is of a dozen people and it is necessary for its influence for good upon the stage. It would not be so bad if one had to pay only the price which the management is compelled to double, but it was almost impossible to obtain seats for the Irving performances last week without waiting in line as hour in front of the box office or else to purchase tickets at quadrupled prices from the speculators. New York managers all profess to hate the scalpers, but nevertheless the scalpers thrive and grow fat on all profitable engagements. They generally manage to get the best seats in the house and now and then one manager accuses another of issuing tickets to scalpers for the sole purpose of sharing in the unexpected success of some particular enterprise. Constitutional hills to suppress ticket scalping in this city have been introduced in the Legislature but invariably defeated. One country member of the Assembly advocated the utility of the scalper by saying: "If it wasn't for the scalper I could never get to see the best shows when I go to New York. The houses which has to their advantage generally that one is a good play."

Edward Harrigan, who reached the zenith of his success when under the management of M. Hart Hanley, when he was the lessee of Harrigan's Theater (now the Garrick) is playing in continuous shows, and last week he was at the Pleasure Palace with a condensed version of McSorley's Inn which was about as good as he and Mr. Hart formerly used in their variety sketches. When Harrigan broke with Hanley his luck changed, and it has been bad luck ever since.

William H. Crane, whose peg-legged Peter Stuyvesant was a financial success, started in at Wallack's last Tuesday night to recoup by playing A Rich Man's Son, translated from the German. The play is not so wooden as peg-legged Peter was. In fact it looks as if the same author was the story of a rich man who had been a wood-chopper, who had a son given over to Socialism. The son had never earned a dollar in his life, and he did not even thoroughly understand Socialism. The father tried in every way to alter his son's views, but could not do so until he had pretended that he had lost his fortune and compelled the son to go to work. The play endured a long session of the down-towners, but they were delighted to find that hard work in a studio warmed the young man from socialist theories.

It is a sufficient answer to those reckless writers on the decorum of the modern press that a man of the city are the exception and not the rule. In September last only two out of the seven editions of the papers and moral and only two were objectionable as to costumes. In October only one of the seven was reprehensible and of the new paper was The Girl in the Baracks, given by Louis Mann and Clara Lipsman at the Garrick. Last week Miss's included Barbara Fritchie with his Marble at the Chest and Miss Hohbah with Miss Russell at the Lyceum, More Than Queen with Miss Arthur at the Broadway, The Singing Girl with Miss Nielsen at the Casino, The Only Way with Mr. Miller at the Garden, The Tyranny of Tears with Mr. Drew at the Boy's Own's Men's Son with Mr. Crane at Wallack's, Robespierre with Mr. Irving at the Knickerbocker, The Song of the South with Mr. Sothern at Daly's, The Old Homesteaded with Mr. Thompson at the Academy of Music, Children of the Ghetto at the Herald Square and The Dairy Farm at the Pount Street. That is surely a list to be proud of. And I think we could safely add to it Becky Sharp by Mrs. Piske at the Fifth Avenue, for although she represents a bargain sale scene from Thackeray it is merely a portrayal of truth without any attempt to sell the literature which is now almost a classic. Besides, there were those close forces like Why Smith South Left Home, Sister Mary, and A Stranger in a Strange Land. The four continuous shows in town are always clean because they are patronized extensively by women, children and family parties. So when any one tries to tell you that only unclean to succeed, you may be sure that figures disproves the assertion. The press of the drama is upward and onward. The few immoral plays are short lived.

Edward Morgan and Henry Miller wagon to portray that unpopular day trip afternoon at Weber and Fields. They seemed to find lots to laugh at in The Other Woman, and one point hit them most forcibly. In The Only Way Henry Miller daps a towel in water and then apparently puts it on his head. In reality he exchages the wet cloth for a dry one, thus saving his make-up. In the travesty the towels are of different colors, comically exposing the trick.

The irrepressible Oscar Hammerstein, who completed one theater this year, has begun another adjoining it. This makes five properties in Chicago, with American productions of a big business, mostly for some one else. Oscar has the, theater-building habit had. It's a good business but he is not going to San Francisco. In less than a year he would have a half a dozen new theaters on as many productions. "Without question," that's all of Oscar's business. His mission on earth seems to be merely to build new theaters, each one better than its predecessor, and the devil and the sharif of the boardroom. But New York is growing so rapidly that the sheriff seldom gets a theater on his hands.

The ninth week of A Stranger in a Strange Land at the Manhattan continues to crowd the theater, and Messrs. Joseph R. Grinner and William A. Brady find themselves possessed of another unit. George Osborne, as the real Indian is easily the star of the play, although he hasn't a hundred words to say. Sir M. A. Kennedy and Cyril Scott also are prominent as fun makers. The play treats the ignorance of the English people and their ideas about the Indians and their gullibility in believing that there are still wild Indians in Buffalo, is one of the few clear, fresh, and pleasant pieces of entertainment. As successful as the piece is in this city, I should think it would be even more so in London, where the high prices which would appear with accentuated honor on account of the real knowledge of the Indian. There are three Indians in the play, and the manner in which they are used is a little close. But the idea in the mixture of three men with big heads.

Julia Arthur has abandoned her intention of playing Hamlet because her More Than Queen at the Broadway is meeting with too much success to be interrupted.

MINNEAPOLIS
Special Correspondence

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 5.—Two new plays in two weeks is the record the Metropolitan has made this season. One of the productions, a three-act comedy entitled Marriage, is from the pen of Arthur James Pegler of this city, and a member of the Journal editorial staff. Mr. Pegler's play scored a success and was sold to an Eastern manager who promises to give it a New York production. It is bright, full of crisp dialogue, and absurd in funny situations. Mr. Pegler is now working on another piece which he hopes to have produced early next year. It is entitled My Friend, the Count.

The second new play produced is not yet named, nor has the identity of the author been disclosed. It is an historical melodrama, the scene of which is laid in Delhi during the Sepoy rebellion. It has in it the elements of a good drama, but it will have to be almost entirely rewritten before it will be a success. The action drags lamentably at times, and there are too many unnecessary characters who get in one another's way and stop the game at the most inopportune times.

For the present week the Metropolitan will offer Eugene O'Neill's dramatisation of Mark Twain's novel, Tom Sawyer. The piece was here a year ago and achieved a great success.

The offering for the current week will be the Hopkins Transoceanic Specialty Company. This is also the second visit of the company to the city, and it will become as much of a favorite as it was last year when it packed the house at every performance.

The Neil Stock Company, which has been filling a summer engagement here, will remain two weeks longer in the twin cities, and will then start for the coast. Manager Neil has been able to book the entire route on guarantees. He will appear in several of the coast cities and then go to Honolulu.

OGDEN
Special Correspondence

OGDEN, Utah, Nov. 5.—Mistakes Will Happen last Monday was given to a good house, and was much appreciated. A fine, enjoyable play.

H. B. Black Sheen played on Wednesday to the largest house of the season. While the play was enjoyed by all, the lack of plot and the superfluity of specialties was rather tiresome.

A Breezy Time, two nights and a matinee, did not do a very good business.

Next week we have the strongest week of the season so far: Monday, My Friend from India; Wednesday, Von Yonson; Thursday, Why Smith Left Home; Friday; A Lady of Quality, by Eugene Blake.

Ogden is getting tired of comedy. We have had nothing but comedy and vaudeville until even such attractions as My Friend from India and Why Smith Left Home are not like to find a good business.

The Wonderlander Theater has done a profitable business this week.

SALT LAKE CITY, November 6.—Mistakes Will Happen, at the Theater October 31st and November 1st, drew two fair audiences. A Black Sheep, November 24th, played to somewhat satisfied house. A large advance sale was held at the Theater box office this morning for the engagement of Eugene Blake next Thursday night in A Lady of Quality. This attraction promises to be one of the most important engagements of the present season, and as a result great interest is being taken by theatergoers. Why Smith Left Home follows, playing Friday and Saturday.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

Foreign Correspondence
London

Spectator Correspondence.

London, Oct. 31.—A Royal Family, a comedy of romance in three acts by Captain R. Marshall, was produced at The Court Theatre, Haymarket, last night. His Excellency the Governor, by the same author, is well remembered here, and created, I believe, a very favorable impression in America. After a successful career in America, and a favorable reception in Liverpool last week, Mr. Hall Caine's play, The Christian, engaged the attention of a large audience at the Duke of York's Theatre, where it was produced by Mr. Chas. Frohman under the direction of Joseph Humphreys. New York. There was exaggeration everywhere except in the acting which was superb. Mr. Herbert Waring's John Storm was a marvelously performed by Evelyn Millard. As Glory Quesley came through a difficult task with gratifying success. The new opera by Sir Arthur Sullivan and Captain Isaac Hood may be expected in about three weeks' time. The plot will have a Parisian background, and reach will Mrs. Ellen Beach Yaw, the California soprano with the phenomenal voice. In consequence of the repertoire of Sir Henry Irving being so varied while he is in America, he took with him no less than twenty-five tons of scenery, properties, etc. A New Yorker.

London Notes.
The transfer of El Capitan to the Comedy Theater will have additional interest in the fact that De Wolfe, Hopper and Captain Isaac Hood may be expected in about three weeks' time. The plot will have a Parisian background, and reach will be made to Mrs. Ellen Beach Yaw, the California soprano with the phenomenal voice. In consequence of the repertoire of Sir Henry Irving being so varied while he is in America, he took with him no less than twenty-five tons of scenery, properties, etc.

Paris—Rose Adler's Success.

Paris, November 6.—Mlle. Rose Reids of California made a most successful debut this evening at the Opera Comique in the title role of Delibes Lakme, her singing and acting drawing forth unqualified applause from an appreciative audience.

Mlle. Reids is better known to San Franciscans as Rose Adler, her true name. She is the sister of Mrs. Cecilia A. Keeling of this city. She was always welcome in San Francisco concerts, her voice was so full of sympathy and color. These qualities have won her unlimited praise from the critics abroad, who have referred to her as "a voice of such a sensation." She went East about three years ago, and spent a year studying with the best masters in this country. From the East she went to Paris to fit herself for the operatic stage. She has already scored signal successes in the fashionable salons of the capital, and the calegare has been announcing her success in the title role of Delibes' Lakme which she has to add gratified her greater ambition.

Miss Adler is not yet 25 years old and is a woman of much beauty.

PERSONAL

Melbourne MacDowell and Blanche Walsh are playing to big business all over the country. Says Mr. MacDowell recently: "Poor Miss Walsh and I have not been a dissenting voice regarding the wisdom in arranging to have Miss Walsh star with me, and no one is more cheerful about it than our manager, Mr. Ben Stern.

Clay Clement has returned from Honolulu. He announces that Frank Curits is no longer manager for him, though the particulars he declines to give. Mr. Clement will go East and prepare to bring out a new play to be written by himself.

A more talented and promising young lady than Miss Cecilia Castilleja, who goes with the Harry Clarke Company, would be hard to find. To add her beauty, youth, and careful preparation for the stage, and one can safely predict that in her, California will contribute another native daughter to the stage of whom the public may be proud.

Frank De Campand Mrs. De Camp (Ennuce Murdock) go with the Cheerful Elar Company. Mr. De Camp is an extremely clever character-actor. He will be stage manager of the company.

Belle Chamberlin, who was last here with the Bostonians, will render in the third act of Why Smith Left Home, the beautiful ballad "Believe." Effie Ellsler is creating a big stir in the East as Glory in the production of The Christians.

Why Smith Left Home is now being played in no less than five languages.

Jacob Litt's production of Sheehan-Pou will be sent here from Chicago by a special train of eight cars. Over two hundred people will be in the presentation at the Columbia.

Henry Miller and John Drew are to remain in New York well into the spring. They have both caught the popular fancy in their respective productions. In the presentation at the Columbia. Frederic Ward is coming to the coast with five elaborate legitimate productions. Mimmie Tittle comes with the star's supporting company.

Alas, the famous Burbank Theater the Frawley Company is playing repertoire, and notwithstanding the fact that these plays have recently been presented here, the house is nightly sold out. The list includes Motha, Trifyl, The Dancing Girl and Heddle Gabler. Mr. Frederic Brown's in Town will make its appearance.

At the Orpheum a crack-jack bill is up, with the Schubert's on the program. Among the towns-people worth-priced cheap shows and Sunday-night shows, he will make a bid for their money. It has been reported that this attraction would be at popular prices. This is not so, however, as he could not secure all of the famous acts at the price that little Lang, the stage carpenter over whom such a fuss was made recently, in regard to his being discharged from the State Mechanic's Union, has been relieved of his position at the Burbank Theater. Mr. Moseco held him in the position for awhile; in a position that Moseco has no longer to oust him pending the decision of Mr. Wiggles, President of the Union. This is not a popular member, has interceded in his behalf and taken the matter up with the President of the Union. His old place at the Burbank is open to him if the matter is decided in his favor.

Byron Reynolds, of the Frawley Company, has received a cabaret from his mother saying his brother, Major Reynolds, was killed Oct. 31, while fighting with his regiment in South Carolina. An altercation occurred the 6th inst., at Levy's Cafe, between Jules B. Schloss, advance man of A. Beach of Promises, and Fitz Murphy, who represents By the Sea Waves. These companies have rubbed noses now and again and this advance man would not have the difference as to which was the best company, had not friends intervene.

This is the last week of the Frawley Company's engagement in Los Angeles. All the members of the company express themselves as being highly pleased with their visit to this city and regret having to leave. Managers said they and Murray are more than satisfied with the financial end of it, and Los Angeles people are very sorry the Company is to leave. Los Angeles has a warm place in our hearts for the Frawley Theater, and will always give them a royal welcome.

Los Angeles, Nov. 7.—With good attractions at the three theaters, and a number of the companies continuing their engagements with a fairly good fair of entertainment. The season so far has been a very good one for the theatrical management, as well as for the patrons.

The American Cycle Track Company is building a new track, after the plan of the famous track at Salt Lake. Beginning with Thanksgiving, there will be races every week through the winter season. purposes only. In fact, it is coming as a blessing in the shape of a real good laugh, or better yet, such a monotonous one. The piece was played but once in this city, then at the Baldwin just before the fire. It was written by H. A. Du Souchet and commands the highest endorsement from the Eastern press. The piece, which is presented at the Alcazar upon an elabor tate scale and by the way for the first time, has been produced in five cities, the enterprising managers of the Alcazar have secured the coast rights to the piece, and as their run there will place a company on the road with it for a brief tour, headed by L. R. Stockwell, who has been especially engaged to appear in the very humorous role of the barber. The cast will be strong and well represented by leading Alcazaristas. A complete embellish ment of new scenery will dress the animated picture on a scale of magni tude with which its leading actors, upon admission, when $5.10 was the price of admission.

THE ORPHEUM

The Orpheum had five or six new acts on this week's bill, and it seems as if Manager Morrissey's unde corking of绣ing in cost and variety each week. Even standing room was scarce during the week, but this was to be the rule with the Orpheum nowadays. Margarette Cornille, a French comedienne, with a most attractive physiognomy, is the headliner. While she is quite stun ning and sings well in French, she is rarely seen on this side of the ocean. She came to New York. Her room song, with the French accent, was well received and brought an encore. Jack Orndorff from the Alcazar was the best acrobatic getter of the whole show. He does a clever monologue which he entitles "The Jail Bird Com. He made a great hit, and on Tuesday night (after he had tired himself out), Stage Manager Orndorff had to order him back before the footlights to satisfy the audience. Jerome and Alexis, the "fog and the lines" is the same almost impossible contention act that they have been doing for years, and it is just as clever as ever. Lola Cotton, a child wonder, gets a good b ition which her manager calls "thought transparency." While blindfolded she executes an amazing article that may be picked out in the audience. Whatever the means em ployed, her performance is wonderful. Goggins and Davis, acrobatic comedians, do some clever work. They are good entertainers in their line. Leo Carlo is certainly a light ning-change artist, using his one-man comedy drama, The Betrayed Profes sor, it is a grand show and his costume changes. Hal Merritt and Miss Murdock and Louise Dresser, with her picks, pans and the old covers that are still immensely popular. The biograph presents some new pic ures, some of the best ever seen.

THE OBERON

There is no change in the personal staff of the cast this week. O'Farrell street.
Mme. Lillian Walther, Stella and Minnie Berlin, and Master John Keyser will cosign their way into the good graces of the Oberon audiences. W. Horst plays a concert solo, the projecto scope shows the Henry reception andoral parade, and Prof. Ritzen's American Ladies' Orchestra discourses good music as usual.

THE SYMPHONY

Marie D. Wood, the California nightingale, made her reappearance at the Oberon after a long absence, and found that her Frisco friends were legion. She sings in acrobatic song and dance, also caught the audiences with her work. Frank Bailey, who has a singletone, far above the average, does his rage-time specialties and introduces some clever dancing steps four and five encore with Frank and Ruth Nelta, too, still retains her hold on the patrons and brings in two real dark baby in the chorus of her song.

LOCAL NOTES.

HOTHER WISMER’S CONCERT.

Hother Wismer’s Concert at Sherman Clay hall on Tuesday evening of last week attracted an attentive and fair-sized audience. The popularity of the young violinist in the profession was evidenced by the number of musicians present, among them, John Harraden Pratt, Mr. Pasmore, Madame Lada, Chas. Mayer and many others. The program was well selected for those of musical appreciation, but to a mixed audience the long movements in the violin selections were apt to grow tedious to those who were unable to fully realize their value. Mr. Wismer’s renditions were sympathetic and were executed with great feeling and care. He was accompanied by a young favorite with the public, Fred Maurer, who seems to be in constant demand of late, for his work is most thorough, and he has the faculty of keeping in touch with the work of the singer or player. Sometimes I think a good accompanist ought to be allowed to come out at the end and have a wee bit of the glory of the evening; and a pose or two for his trouble. The accompanist is not valued enough usually and this reminds me of the story of an old Scotchman who heard a father praise his daughter for her good cooking. The lean, raw-boned fellow straightened up and said: “Aye, ye prais her—my bairs hears from me when they do no well!” If our accompanists did not do well we would all show the Scotchman’s spirit, I fancy. The numbers were: Grig’s Sonato op. 45 (C minor) for violin and piano; Allegro molto ed appassionato; Allegretto expressivo alla Romanza, Allegro animato, Messrs. Hother Wismer and Fred Maurer; Violin Concerto No. 8 (Gesangscene)—Spohr; Allegro molto Recitativo; Adagio andante (Recit.); Allegro moderato; Violin Solo, (Brumas-Joachim); Duo op. 131 C Major, three movements (Spohr) by Messrs. Wismer and Armand Solomon, a number that called forth much appreciation. Mrs. Matilde Wismer rendered song Beethoven’s “Adelaide” and for an encore “I Love You” by Grieg; receiving much applause. Mrs. Alfred Abbey was an attraction of the evening and was in excellent voice, her numbers, to which an encore was demanded, being Lyrics from “Told in the Gate” by Arlo Bates, set to music by G. W. Chadwick; “Sweetheart, Thy lips are touched with Flame,” “Dear Love, When in Thine Arms I Lie.” The latter especially was sung with most passionate tenderness, and winning a storm of applause. Mr. Wismer’s success was richly deserved.

ALFRED WILKIE’S BENEFIT.

Alfred Wilkie was tendered a benefit concert by his many friends who sought to show their sympathy for the popular singer, for the long and dangerous illness he has lately suffered, the concert taking place on Tuesday at the First Methodist Church, Oakland. A large and influential committee had the matter in charge, and no pains spared to make it a success financially as well as artistically. The artists who tendered their services for this interesting event were Miss Millie Flynn soprano, Misses Wilkins, Peppe, Misses Fisher, and Misses Llewelyn Hughes, the Temple Quartet—Messrs. Benson, Clarke, Wilkie, A. Melvin, G. Carlson—Mr. R. Fletcher Tilton, organist, Mr. Margaret Cameron Smith, Misses Willard and Miss Elizabeth Westgate, accompanists.

CLAIRA BUTT’S SUCCESS.

My New York correspondent writes that Claira Butt scored a brilliant success in her first long recital in that city. Oct. 26, and sends a clipping from The journal, and by the way he tells me that every one who has seen the DRAMATIC REVIEW is very much enthused with it:

“The first recital in this country by Claira Butt, the English contralto, given in Mandelweil Hall last night, was an undoubted success. Her voice was beautifully placed and of splendid compass and very rare power. She sang with great dramatic effect, and even in the forte passages there seemed to be no lack of richness and delicious clearness. Gluck’s air from ‘Alcestis’ was received with the most enthusiasm, and perhaps was a better medium than the other numbers rendered for the particularly dramatic power of Miss Butt’s voice—and if there was any preferable part of the evening’s entertainment, the songs in French and German seemed to have been done with a little more finesse than the English songs, which was perhaps the result only of more careful study in those numbers. The assistance of Miss Mill and Mr. Stern, while not artistically equal to Miss Butt’s share of the evening’s music, was very pleasing, and seemed a fitting musical background to what must be considered a very artistic and certainly a superbly dramatic vocalist.”

SATINTSEBAN’S CONCERT.

A charming evening was enjoyed at the Musicians’ Club Friday of last week, when Sig. Abravanel and Roscoe Warren Lucy contributed to the enjoyment of the guests, Dr. E. G. Eisen entertained them with stereopticon views, and the Violin Society under the leadership of Miss Lada, played Chopin’s Scherzo in B minor, and Sig. Abravanel rendered Invitation, Robert and Devil (Meyerbeer), Storm Winds (Rubenstein), Serenade from Faust (Gounod).

SATINTSEBAN’S CONCERT.

G. C. Santisteban and pupils, assisted by Miss Ella McCloskey, Mr. J. H. Descoud, Master Vincent Arrillaga, Mr. William Wertsch and Mr. Emilio Crenelle, gave a successful concert in Y. M. C. A. Auditorium Thursday evening of last week. Mr. Santisteban is one of the leading mandolin and guitar masters of the city, and his orchestra did praiseworthy work. The enjoyable and varied program included: Overture, “If I Were King,” by the orchestra; Mandolins—Misses Lillian Horner, Helene Brunner, A. Tracey, Irma Livingston, Maud Luskynsky, Sarah Sussman, George Levy and Arthur Ellert; Guitars—Misses Grace Horner, Lucy M. Wade, Mrs. L. R. Ellert, and Mr. Santisteban; Cello, W. Wertsch, Jr.; Song, “The Sun Shines Brightly” (F. Aebi), by Miss McCloskey; Cello obligato by Mr. Wertsch, which was a most charming number; Piano Solo, “Il Gruppo,” by Vincent Arrillaga; Mandolin Solo, “L’Addio a Napoli,” by Lillian Horner, guitar accompaniment by Miss Grace Horner; Song, Manuela (Trotere), by Mr. J. H. Descoud; Cello Solos, Ave Maria and Romance, Mr. W. Wertsch; Misses Lillian Levy and Emilia Tracey with Mr. Santisteban rendered Canto de Armor and Ondina, a composition by Santisteban. The concert closed with Dances Espagones [Moreno] by the orchestra.

HENRY HOMES CHosen.

Henry Holmes is the recipient of congratulations everywhere for his appointment as leader of the Symphony Concerts. He is the right man in the right place, and will have an opportunity of coming before the public in a sphere to which he is admirably adapted. Mr. Holmes is a thorough artist, enthusiastic and earnest, and possessed of unusual ability, experience and magnetism. Mrs. Hearst has come forward most generously as a patron as she always does for any worthy undertaking, and her example will doubtless be followed by other patrons of art. We have needed just such a spirit as Mr. Holmes in musical circles, and he ought to have every encouragement in his unschless devotion to the progress of art in California.

STUDIO PERSONALS.

Mr. Howard Malcolm Ticknor gave the fourth of his lecture readings before the Channing Auxiliary on Thursday, his subject being “How to Judge Plays and Players” with illustrative readings.

Madame Crawford writes that the date of the appearance of the California Ladies’ Quartet in San Francisco will soon be decided. The Southern tour is highly satisfactory so far.

MUSIC IN GENERAL.

Mark Hambourg, a protege of the great Paderewski and a pupil of Leschetizky, was a salon passenger on the Teutonic. Hambourg, who is said to be the most wonderful pianist of his age in the world, is twenty years old. He is a Russian, and appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in St. Louis, and in Carnegie Hall, New York.

It is stated on good authority that a New York flautist has orders for a $20000 instrument to be sent to the hands of an admirer. These daily tributes are received by the fair Lillian whether she is in the city or en route.
George Lask--His Treasures and Memories

Mr. Lask will write his stage reminiscences—when he has time. He told me so himself. So you may look for the publication about Feb. 30, in the year of honest politicians and flying pigs.

But what reminiscences he could write, he would! Rummage through his hoarded treasures, look over his old photographs, read his old scrap-books and autograph albums, and you will know. Listen to his memories of the great and small of early days and question his history from him artlessly with the careful attentions of the interviewer and then you will surely know. He remembers things with astonishing exactitude, and his stage work covers such a wide range of experiences.

"No," said Mr. Lask, "I was not exactly beckoned into the profession, neither did I drift in. Somehow, I just found myself then and there in the glorious days of the old California.'"

If we may have entire faith in our mother’s judgment, that was when he boasted the finest stock company San Francisco has ever known. To begin as call-boy is, I find, equivalent to a certificate of success—a patent right to achievement.

Now, don’t all rush into the call-boy business, because that is not the idea at all. It just has to happen naturally, like the measles and Puritan ancestors.

In that capacity, he learned the theater from front to rear. He even made "props" and helped to paint scenery and got himself and his skill invited over to the Bush Street Theater as assistant stage manager for Max Freeman. That meant a liberal education in plays.

Then wisdom carried him over to Europe.

"For experience, Mr. Lask!" "O, no, just for a trip." It amounts to the same thing, for, in the intervals of sight-seeing, he found time to study stage designs and scenic environment.

"Since then, I have stage-managed for the Pay Templeton Opera Company, the New York Casino, the Grand Opera House, Osborne and Stockwell on the road, Gillette in the Private Secretary and put on summer comic operas in Philadelphia and Buffalo."

That was not the whole truth, for as he talked I was reading a program where he was, as I was, completely killed as That French Maid in The Froth of the Fringe of the Crust of Society. Mercy! That sounds worse than The Second Mrs. Tantrapar.

"But," is answer to my accusing finger, "that was at the Lamb's Theater—our last gasp in the old Twenty-ninth street pasture."

As though that were any excuse for a fib, told to conceal his connection with the problem play! Still, he was in pretty good company. Crane, Joseph Holland and Fritz Williams were of the cast. Clay Greene was the shepherd, and Sydney Rosenfeld the collie.

"So you belong to the fold?" "Yes," said Mr. Lask, "and I’m very proud of the privilege to gambol with its lambs (not mentioning the pale-gray sheep). Mr. Booth proposed my name for membership, and Frank Alken seconded it."

And he said this quite simply. Well, if Edwin Booth had even spoken my name at random, and quite by accident, I would fly permanent flags from its capitate till the crack of doom.

Mr. Lask is such a wavy man. His den is a precious register of dramatic good fellowship. A tale of its treasures would fill the paper, and the editor won’t have it--the Dash!

Looking over his old photographs one learns what an actor really is. He is a poet. All those who are worthy the name have the deep introspective eye and the dreamy air of detachment from their surroundings. Of the young actors, Mr. Miller and Mr. Morgan express perfectly what I mean. Look at their photographs carefully and you will see.

"Yes," said Mr. Lask, "you are right; and there is many a good actor off the stage. Your preachers and your lawyers are the very best." I should say so.

"God bless you, dear old George," is a frequent triumph. And the walls and shelves and chests are wonderful antique histories that end in a copy of Joe Jefferison’s painting of “The Little Church Around the Corner!” One feels a curious pull at the heart as he looks. If it be your privilege to see these treasures, with Mr. Lask as guide, do not neglect it. You, who are safely conservative, will go in; perhaps, knowing an actor as a driftless creature, in some way connected with frayed linen and run down morals. When you come out, he will be a noble fellow, intelligent, wise, generous, kind and faithful. Yet nothing will have altered but the light.

Charlotte Thompson.

JANE LENNOX, of the Mathews and Bulger Company, now at the Columbia Theater, is a daughter of that well-known actor, Walter Lennox, Sr., now playing in London with Broadhurst’s What Happened to Jones Company, and a sister of Fred Lennox, the comic opera singer. She comes by her histronic talent naturally.

Following Eugenie Blair at the New Alhambra Theater, In Old Kentucky will open in this popular theater for a two weeks’ run. The same male cast that has been seen here before in the piece will be seen again, but the feminine roles are taken by three charming ladies whose faces are new to San Franciscans. Skipped by the Light of the Moon will follow In Old Kentucky at the New Alhambra.

Saints and Sinners will follow My Friend from India at the Alcazar.

Jane Coombs, who has made her mark thus far in connection with the play Hickey House, is in this city and will shortly start on a tour of the coast cities under the management of her husband, Mr. Brown.

Ernest Hastings, formerly of the Alcazar, this city, made his debut as leading man of the Dorthean Theater Stock Company in Chicago two weeks ago in The Ensign.

My Friend from India will be most elaborately produced at the Alcazar next week. Eugene Ormond will play Erastus Underhill, and L. R. Stockwell the barber.

The suit of Chas. H. Hoyt against L. R. Stockwell for unpaid royalty seems to have been a misunderstanding and was settled out of court.

May Irwin's Jag

The simulation of drunkenness has always been held by actors to be the height of their ambition. Charles Wyndham and Nat Goodwin, in David Garrick, had some of the greatest "moments" in the scene where Garrick feigns intoxication. Charles Warner, the English romantic actor, reveled in the part of the drink-fined in Drink. Maude Adams' tipping scene in The Masked Ball was her first masterstroke in the direction of securing the unanimous approval of her critics. Isabel Irving, and then Viola Allen won their best laurels where the heroine of The Benefit of a Doubt becomes unintentionally the victim of wine.

But there is to be a new Richmond in the field.

In Sister Mary, Glen McDonough's play, now running in New York, May Irwin, in the title part, takes on a dose of alcoholic enthusiasm that quite pulses the value of any other stage representation of bibulous uncertainty. Sister Mary takes to drink because she is jealous of her husband, and before long she becomes convinced that the room is circling around her with lightning-like velocity.

Sister Mary's surrender to the blandishments of the cup that cheers is utterly genial throughout. The scene is one of the hits of Miss Irwin's career.

Side Lights

The souvenirs presented by Walter Morosco to the lady patrons at the Grand Opera House on Tuesday evening, the 25th performance of the season, were the most beautiful ever given in a theater in this city. No advertising matter marred their elegance, and they were much prized by recipients.

A book on Julia Arthur is shortly to be published in New York, with over a hundred illustrations. W. J. Throld will do the compiling of facts concerning Miss Arthur's career.

The Bostonians gave the first production of the Snugglers of Badayer, their new three-act opera, by Minkowski, at Waterbury, Connecticut, October 19.

Roland Reed made a speech in Kansas City when he produced his new play, The American Eagle, and said it was a serious and difficult matter for an actor to secure a new play. When that speech reached the East, Mr. Reed received sixteen telegrams from stars saying "Amen." Evidently there are many others with the same affliction.

All of the coming attractions at the New Alhambra theater will open on Sunday nights instead of Monday nights as has been the rule in the past with other theaters.

It is said that Edward M. Favor and Edith Sinclair have bought from Frank McKee My Innocent Boy and will take it on the road.

The Merry Monarch at the Grand Opera House will be followed by a complete and costly production of Rice's Evangeline.

Worth of a Name

Helen Leonard is as kindly to the ear as Lillian Russell, yet her real title is theatrically worthless, while in the music of her modern songs our singer receives a heavy salary. Mrs. Eames is Mrs. Story, Mrs. Melba is Mrs. Armstrong and Lillian Nordica is Frau Doeme, yet the prima donnas cannot compel the press or public to recognize their talents. Mme. Patti, who has had three spouses, still refuses to take their names, and announces herself to this day as a madam. Madge Robertson took the name of Kendall, and when she married Lieutenant Grinnell insisted that he should call himself Kendall, too.

Carter is neither euphonious to the ear nor agreeable to the eye, yet Zaza continues to be Mrs. Carter, although her right name is Louise Dudley. Again, there is nothing romantic or beautiful in the stage name of Mrs. James Brown Potter. Yet she clings to it, although her title might be Cora Unquhart. Opp is not an esthetic word, yet our Julie held on to it after she became Mrs. Henri Laraine. The proper title of Henry Irving's leading woman is Mrs. Kelley, yet, although she has had four husbands, that gifted actress will always be known as Ellen Terry. Sir Henry himself was knighted as Irving, but his real name is Brodribb. With his familiar late manager was known as John Daly, but to the dramatic world he was Augustus Daly. Similarly his star began life as Ada Crehan, but won its glories as Ada Rehan.—Hilary Bell.

I hereby name
Zangwill's Career

Max Skelton, of Indianapolis, tells a few things about the early life of Israel Zangwill, the Hebrew novelist, who recently went back to London loaded with chagrin over the criticisms passed on his play, The Children of the Ghetto. "I have been in touch with Zangwill, or, rather, to be more exact, he has been in touch with me," said Mr. Skelton. "I was born in Totten Court road, London, and went to the Jewish free school there. There were seven teachers and a master. Zangwill taught the first or youngest class to which I belonged, and I learned my A, B, C's under him. Zangwill was a chum of my brother's. He was educated in the same school in which he was afterward a teacher. There were seven classes, or, as you would have them here, grades, in the school, each grade averaging from sixty to one hundred boys. Zangwill never had a college education. He was cited in the school as a model of industry. From first to last he was the top boy in all the classes, and had the highest record all the way through. He was a teacher for six or seven years, then a newspaper man, then the famous author of The Children of the Ghetto and other works. His people were poor, and it was to Beetholom Tree, the actor, who is also a Jew, that he owed his start in the world. Zangwill wrote a little sketch, Tree presented it at the Haymarket Theater and made it a success. That was the beginning of Zangwill's career.'

A Famous Actress as a Beggar

One of the late Sir Francis Doyle's sweetest and most touching poems was a ballad (which, I believe, he never published) having for its subject a tale told to him by a fair descendant of Mrs. Jordan, the famous actress, whose equal Madam used to say that he had never seen on the stage. This tale related that on one winter day Mrs. Jordan passed in her carriage a poor woman singing with feeble voice in the street, whose story looked of hopeless misery touched the successful actress' tender heart. Stopping her carriage, Mrs. Jordan told her footprint to invite the poor woman to call at her address in a street close at hand.

The two women were soon alone together; and the poor street singer told her sympathizing interlocutor that she was a widow and had just been turned out by her landlord, together with her starving children, into the frostbound street. Mrs. Jordan quickly borrowed the wretched woman's shawl and bonnet and the skirt of her worn dress, and putting them on, told her to wait by the fire until she herself returned. In a few moments the silence of the street was broken by a heavenly voice issuing clear and sweet from the throat of the most exquisite ballad singer ever heard on the English boards.

"From beneath a tattered bonnet, from within a greasy shawl, That touching tale of music filled with life the souls of all: And the touch of a spirit to their flutted pulses cling, With a strange enchanting rapture, as that rugged woman sang. Arrested by a voice the like of which they had never heard, the workmen paused upon their homeward journey to thrust pennies into the singer's hand. Presently the windows of the houses that she passed opened spontaneously, and a stream of silver fell at her feet. For three-quarters of an hour she continued to gather in the money harvest, which included several gold pieces contributed by carriage folk. Then she hurried to the starving widow's side, restored to her the bonnet, shawl, and gown, and poured a flood of money into her lap. The ballad ends—Not in vain from out her bosom had that music torrent leapt, For beyond her earth-born hearers star-crowned angels smiled and wept: And a solemn utterance floated from our Father's place of rest. Lovers of their fellow-creatures are the beings I love best.

Mr. John Sutherland, the chaplain in A Lady of Quality, will be remembered as the Earl in the dramatic version of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's first famous story, Little Lord Fauntleroy. This was one of the reasons which prompted Miss Blair to secure his services in her company. He portrays the part with a naturalness that has made him popular with the theatregoing public.

The Passion Play

Of the Passion Play, Chauncey Depew says: "I have seen all the great actors of all countries during the last twenty-five years. Each of them has moments in which the personality of the actor is subordinate to the character and temporarily spoils the play, but in the presentation of the Scripture characters at Oberammergau this fault never occurs. Chrisl, Judas and Pilate have no equals and have had none on the modern stage. If The Passion Play were presented at the London Lyceum or at any great New York theater it would be sacrilegious beyond toleration. But in the secluded Bavarian village the vast audience is transported to the Judes of the beginning of the Christian era, and swayed by the same emotions, as if they had been witnesses of the infinite love, frightful sacrifice, resurrection and transfiguration which constitute the pain, hope and glory of Christian faith. Indeed, I have never been so much impressed in my life."

Thrilling Lines Saved

The appearance this fall of Miss Julia Marlowe as the heroine in the dramatization of Mr. Charles Major's novel, When Knighthood was in Flower, brings prominently to notice the admirable work done by this painstaking actress in the past. Miss Marlowe actually "puts her life into another's life." An illustration of this took place during the first rehearsals of For Bonnie Prince Charlie. Mr. J. I. C. Clarke, the author of the English revision, attended these rehearsals, which were held in Buffalo, and on one occasion he found fault with the way one of the male characters spoke the appeal to the Highland men in the first act, which runs:

"Where is the heart of Clannmorris, the heart that was dauntless and leaf? On the sea, on the lands, to the front of the fray, your blue bonnets ever were seen. We fought under Bruce and ye won under Wallace. Ye hungered and thirsted, ye struggled and died, and never a cry from your lips but the cry of the clau and a shout for the flag of your King."

"We'll have to cut that out," Mr. Clarke exclaimed in despair. "It sounds sing-song as he reads it."

"Oh, don't cut it out; I like that passage very, very much," interposed Miss Marlowe. "Give the lines to me."

Without waiting for permission, she declared the lines with such feeling and force that even the cast was affected. On the opening night and until the season ended these lines remained in the play, and Miss Marlowe made them one of her most telling successes.

"In another scene," according to Mr. Clarke, "the heroine shed real tears—not stage ones—and she went to one of the early rehearsals with a dainty lace handkerchief, prepared to weep. Remember, she was playing the role of a Scotch girl and she was poorly dressed. The handkerchief was an incongruity, and I objected to its use.

"I haven't anything else to wipe my eyes on," pleaded the actress, 'except this old shawl.'"

"Use that," I replied.

"She did so, and this touch of naturalism made one of the most pathetic incidents in the play."

Leary's New Hit

Here is a verse that goes with terrific rows, composed and sung by Tommy Leary, now with The Keys, The Shamrock (Air—The Shamrock.)

Since I'm America's sweetest cop, Each English boot came after it— We always flip them up. Sir Thomas Lipton built a boat Of good old Irish stock. He then jumped on the Blarney stone And called it the Shamrock. Chorus—The Shamrock, the Shamrock She came over here, and received a good cheer She was left in the rear— Now we're nothing in fear From the beautiful Shamrock of Ireland.

A Theater Party

During an evening of the last week of The Musketeers at the Alcazar there was a very pleasant occasion, planned and executed by Juliet Croby. She had a number of young ladies, friends of former school days at Van Ness Seminary, as her guests to witness the play, after which she entertained them at a very enjoyable supper.

Entered at the postoffice at San Francisco, Cal., as second-class matter October 5, 1909

The big success of the New Alhambra Theater has demonstrated the fact that only good business judgment is necessary to remove a hoodoo—one of those frightful superstitions which the theatrical man fears more than anything else. Many of the houses in and around San Francisco have much more leisure than stock companies, and trilling little things that a stock actor would be too busy to notice are harbored and gradually magnified by the one-part actor until they assume a magnitude almost impossible to believe. If the members of traveling companies would devote more time to the careful study of their respective roles, they would not have time to think about their competition, and all their friends would be fools.

This is the beginning of the actor’s discontent; the time when he begins to realize what a big success he would have been if—when he had been so foolish as to have essayed some role different from that which now burdens him. Nat Goodwin is anxious for the laurels of the serious drama, and promises to eventually educate his critics and the public to the best properties of his own confidence in himself as an emotional mimic. Goodwin’s friends declare that his semi-serious roles of recent years are but progressive steps from the comic turn of The Nominee to the most tragic for this year. The late Thomas W. Keene was a vaudeville and burlesque actor before turning his ability to the classic drama, and Louis James is another who made a poor success in vaudeville, but did not fail within the pale immortalized by Shakespeare. Beware, ye who criticize the greatest tragedian of the age—Nathaniel Goodwin!

among the greatest of New York’s imminent few successes this season is that of Mrs. Fiske and her remarkable play, Becky Sharp, dramatized from Thackeray’s Vanity Fair. New York’s present theatrical production is especially noteworthy in comparison with that of last year. Play followed play and the number of successes was unprecedented. The remarkable record doubtless inspired a more generous enterprise than usual in other fields. The San Francisco enterprise also based on the vastly improved condition of business generally—and the theaters opened earlier, with a more general than tentative activity. But this season’s record has been far different from that of last year. Pulling has attended almost every one of those pretentious productions favored by dominant influences in the dramatic world, and, as far as the favor, enjoying the partial assistance of a certain portion of the metropolitan press, although Beckman’s production was admitted to be superior to many plays then running, failure was freely—and gratuitously—predicted for Mrs. Fiske by all the influences noted. After only a few discerning critics in New York pronounced unqualifiedly in favor of the play, and yet from the start Mrs. Fiske has drawn the largest and most discriminating audiences of the season, and today interest in her work is more general and flattering than ever.

Several local correspondents of the Review have recently been clamoring for new plays. It would appear from the following interview with A. J. Spencer, Jacob Litt’s representative, that there are plenty of new plays, but their merit is a decidedly doubtful quality. Here is what Mr. Spencer says: “I believe Mr. Litt is the only manager in New York city who makes it a rule to examine everything that is submitted, but the faults thus far have not been encouraging. Of course, good plays are now and then written by new people, and I have no doubt but some of them are unfortunately overlooked in the deluge of mediocrity pouring into every manager’s office. But you may rest assured anything meritorious eventually gets a hearing. If writers only knew how eagerly every manager is looking for something available they would be glad to have a market for their wares provided they have anything worth buying. I have heard it said, by the way, that publishers are much more liberal than managers, and that is much easier to find a house that will take chances on bringing out a book than a man who will experiment with a play. The comparison is preposterous. The expense of a theatrical production is many times that of printing a book, and while a publisher may have a number of ventures on hand simultaneously a manager must try his experiments one at a time, devoting the whole strength of his establishment to each. Consequently the stigma of failure is vastly greater. The two things are as different as day and night.”

Murphy’s Jolly

Murphy, in advance of his tour, has obtained the services of a highly gifted advertising manager, who has written for him a piece of copy that is sure to attract attention. Murphy has not been without business success, and is sure to continue his present excellent form.

Bouquets

Pacific Stock Exchange—About the newest thing in a newspaper way in San Francisco is The Dramatic Review, a finely illustrated journal of sixteen pages. It has a good field, but will not be confined to San Francisco. It is strictly theatrical, and has already made a big hit.

Gaty Pallen, dramatic editor of the St. Louis News Letter—The first number of the San Francisco Dramatic Review has reached my desk. It is ably edited by Wm. D. Wasson, and is full of Western breeziness which makes it very readable to those interested in theatricals.

Riverside Enterprise—A new dramatic journal has been launched upon the boards at San Francisco, and it’s a beauty. With a scope of country unequaled by that of any journal in the world, it has a wide field for duty. The Dramatic Review aims to make itself the leading organ of the West. If it shall succeed in its ambition, it will be but representative of some of the most noted stage folk who have ascended the Thespian ladder in America. It is published by the Review Company, with Wm. D. Wasson at the editorial helm. We congratulate the Review and its editor.
Of a Personal Nature

Annie Smith is doing specialties with Weber's Burlesque Company.

Chas. L. Larkin, manager of Gordon's Minstrels, has been in town this week.

W. R. Dailey writes from Hanford that business in the interior is "immense."

Billy West has been granted a divorce from Josie De Witt by Judge Dangerfield of this city.

Henry Dixey will be with Stuart Rosbon in his production of Oliver Goldsmith, by Augustus Thomas.

Charles Wilber and Sophie Gerber, of Belle Archer's company, were married recently at Keene, N.H.

Robert Edison will replace Frank Worthing in The Children of the Ghetto, going to London with the production.

Lewis Morgenstern is in town, back from Los Angeles, where he has arranged for a four weeks' season for Nation's O'Neill.

Marion Clarke, over whose recent kidnapping there was such a stir in New York, may appear in the coming production of Ben-Hur.

The Duke of Manchester has arrived in New York and has received an alluring offer from the Frohmans to join Julia Marlowe's company.

Managers Ellingham and Mott have secured the services of Mr. Ravlin of the Chronicle to act as press agent of the New Alhambra. A good selection.

Cissie Loftus has been obliged to contradict the rumor which has been current for several days that she is to marry Lawrence Irving, a son of Sir Henry Irving.

Murray and Mack, once more united, are speeding westward, doing a big business and pleasing mightily. The new Finnegan Ball is very clever and amusing.

James A. Herne's new play, Sag Harbor, is really an enormous success, and will duplicate the popularity of Shore Acres. It is now pleasing Boston audiences.

Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott are playing to big business in the Middle West. The Cowboy and the Lady, a failure in London, seems to be acceptable at home.

Edith Hall is reported to be engaged to Supervisor-elect W. N. McCarthy, owner of the Langham Hotel. Mr. McCarthy will neither deny nor affirm the story.

Capt. Reynolds, leading man of the Frawley Company, lost a brother, Major Reynolds, of the British Army, in one of the recent battles between the English and the Boers.

Fred Beckmann, ahead of In Old Kentucky is shaking hands with many old friends this week. Fred was at the Bush Street Theater with Gottlob seven or eight years ago.

In the production of The Masqueraders, produced at the Dearborn Theater in Chicago last week, Ernest Hastings as David Remon, Julia Stuart as Dacie, and Gardner Crane as Sir Brice scored the hits.

Virginia Vaughan, who was with the Woodward Stock Company at Omaha last season, has been very ill at her home in Larkspur, California, for several months, but is now quite recovered. She is entertaining several offers.

It is rumored that Lewis Morrison will open in Philadelphia next season in stock.

Ugo Talso, once well known as an operatic tenor in the companies of Adelina Patti and others, died on Oct. 31st, at the Detention Hospital, Stockton.

Dorothy Boyle, who was violin soloist last season with Sevoie's Band, sailed last week on the steamship Marquette for London, where she will play in a series of concerts.

From all accounts, Mr. West has gathered together the most important of burr-cut artists this season, and the cream of these people come here with him to make a future date.

E. C. Blunkall, former leading man of the Girl from Chili Company, is soon to take the road with a company of his own. Mr. Blunkall has the rights to Mr. Plater of Paris.

Sam Thall, who has the same faculty for making friends as his brother Mark, is in town, ahead of his show, Von Vonson, reported from all points as doing a big business.

Frank Mathew, one of the popular members of the Frawley Company, came up from Los Angeles this week. Frank is one of the boys that San Franciscans speak of with pride.

J. B. Delcher, of Brown's in Town, flitted through San Francisco Tuesday, on his way to Portland. Brown will come very near to breaking the coast record for big business.

Della Fox, who had been seriously ill, steadily improved in health last week, and is now reported to be convalescent. Her mother, Mrs. Harriet A. Fox, is very ill at her home in St. Louis.

Fred Peal has arrived in this city, and is completing arrangements with Gottlob, Marx & Co., for the staging of Jacob Litt's big revival of Sheinaedoh announced for Monday, the 27th inst.

As Colonel Sandusky Doolittle in In Old Kentucky, H. B. Bradley has made the greatest hit of his dramatic career. He was the creator of the part and has played the Colonel for six consecutive years.

Bert Coots has severed all relations with his late manager, M. Wibar Dyer. All time contracted for him while presenting his new comedy, A Battle Scared Hero, which has proved a winner on the road.

Wilson Eros and his wife (Miss Beatrice Eros), well known in San Francisco, have had big success with the Woodward Stock Company in Kansas City and Omaha. We shall have something more to say of Mr. Eros' work next week.

Miss Marguerite Kane is again reported quite ill. Miss Kane is now with Lewis Morrison's Faunt Company No. 1, as Marguerite. The numerous press notices she has received serve to prove Miss Kane another of our prominent California stars.

Elsa Ryan, who plays the part of Madge in In Old Kentucky which opens tomorrow night at the New Alhambra Theater, was a protege of the late Captain Daly. The latter brought out the charming little actress last season, who made her first public and professional appearance as the soubrette with James T. Powers in A Runaway Girl. She played nine different parts for Daly last year.

MISS BEATRICE EKORAN WITH YON VONSON CO.
The Tivoli

Monday evening the Comic Opera Company at the Tivoli gave Gilbert and Sullivan's aesthetic opera, Patience, which meant much more to the lovers of opera a generation ago when the aesthetic craze, started and nurtured with a typical virago, Jane, by the apostle of the sunflower, was at its height; but though pase, its spirit of form is still evident, but the in bringing to the listeners pleasure of the genuine old-fashioned sort unadulterated by the suggestive ideas of the modern art. It opens with an idyllic, dreamy tableau, Reginald Bunthorne [Al. Wheelan], an aesthetic poet, and Ada Bluestockings, who haunts his footsteps or sitting at his feet, hanging upon his every word in an ecstasy of emotion, pander to his egotism and bring down the malice of the Officers of the Dragoons who had up to this time been able to lead captive, as brass buttons always do [Why? Who knows?], these selfsame maidens. Wm. Schuster as Col. of the Dragoons, was able to show off his fine bass in the dash Dragoon song, which the approving audience forced him to repeat, and as a Briton in a British uniform, he seemed inspired in singing British praises. Tom Green as Lieutenant had small opportunity to show off his sweet tenor, but used that little with good effect. Wheelan was as funny as the part of the aesthetic poet will allow—he can look all manner of funny faces. Phil. Branson as an idyllic poet, in his Faunerty costume, was very taking, and won the maidens from the love-born Bunthorne. Ada Palmes-Walker as Patience, the milk-maid, was very clever and graceful, and in good voice, her duo with Branson was particularly well rendered and applauded, as was also her duo with Charlotte Beckwith, whose sweet voice and grace are winning for her the plaudits of the public. Caroline Knowles, as Lady Jane, made a typical virago, and the stage arrangement was especially artistic, and the male chorus of Dragoons were in unusually good form.

Tuesday the Italian Opera Company gave Verdi's Historical Opera, The Masked Ball, with Melba, Avedova, and Anna Lichter in the cast.

Next week farewell to Grand Opera with Othello, Aida, Pagliacci and Cavalleria.

The California

Jones is with us once again, and with him large and enthusiastic audiences. These few words really and completely tell the story of Harry Corson Clarke's success this week at the Californian.

What Happened to Jones is described by the author as a "hilarious succession," and it has been all of that. Such is the personal popularity of Mr. Clarke in San Francisco that perhaps there are more than two or three that many people were turned away, and throughout the week, through hordes of sightseers. Clear weather and attendance have been very large. Harry Corson Clarke's humor is of that dry, suave kind, that is light as a feather before a chuckle or a wink of the eye, it is real humor, ingrained in the man and tempered with just the necessary skill of the genuine artist. Since the days of the Frawley Company's earliest venture in San Francisco when we went to know and appreciate Harry Corson Clarke in a wide range of comedy creations, we have never yet been disappointed in his work, and in Jones we have no reason for the slightest complaint, for he has given us in that part one of the most artistic, most delicate, clean cut characterizations that we of San Francisco have ever witnessed. The company itself is well balanced—made up of handsome women, handomely dressed, and a male cast of more than average excellence. While Marks, the scientifically absorbed professor, with a wife, rules, was good. Scott Seab, the Rev. Anthony Goody, does a bit of acting that marks a great advance in his work and it has been recognized on all sides as one of the most commendable features of the performance. Daniel Halifax is one of the young men on the stage who is a future and he acted Richard Heatherly with much discretion and fine effect. In the small part of the policeman Charles Terrius was a first class stage policeman. Marie Bishop was the professor's spouse and was sufficiently articulate to meet all views of the author. Laura Crews, dainty and winsome, assumed the part of the dashingly-colored girl in Caro, giving a finished performance. Madeleine Ruggieri and Cecelia Castelle delved deeply into the feminine and charming as the daughters of the professor's household. Lida Banning disguised her handsome self with the makeup of a cork-screw curls old maid and acted with decided spirit and intelligence. Last, and worthy of notice, was the Swedish maid of all work, by Carrol Marshall. It was an assumption very laughable and picturesque and met with decided approval.

What happened to Jones is the same big money maker all over the country. In Kansas City the other night the St. R. O. sign was hung out, and Harry Corson Clarke had the same gratifying experience on his San Francisco opening.

New Alhambra

One of the strongest plays seen in San Francisco in many a day was A Lady of Quality, which closes the week-night to the New Alhambra Theater. It is doubtful if Julia Arthur, who made her greatest success in this play, could have been more acceptable, or could have created more enthusiasm than did the handsome, lovely, and charming young Miss Crosby. Indeed, Miss Blair appeared at her best, and her work was rewarded by the applause of crowded houses all week. Her naturalness and gracefulness is one of Miss Blair's strong points, and at no time did she seem to force herself into emotionalism. There was no overdoin, no useless action, and but few inaudible lines. The dramatization is from Mrs. Hodgson Burnett's story—a dramatization that in less capable hands would fail utterly, for with its dramatic quality it is strong and interesting, and it is necessary to have most capable people to interpret it properly. This Miss Blair and her company do. She is supported by William Branswell as Sir John Oxon. Despite the injury to Mr. Branswell's leg while en route, and considering that he was in much pain on the opening night, his performance was most creditable. He would make not a bad looking stage hero, but the villainous part in A Lady of Quality he portrays so realistically strong was so despicable as to almost lose good feeling for his acting. Lee Biker as the Duke of Orleans, was also exceptionally creditable; also Bouic Clark as Sir Geoffrey Wildairs, Geo. Robinson as Sir Humphrey, and Mrs. Underholt, as Miss May Park the sister. The stage settings were exquisite, among the best ever seen in this city. Especially so were those of the first act, in which Clarindo in breeches and Sir John Oxon engage in a fencing bout, and in the second act where they quarrel in the rose-garden. Miss Blair's physical charms are amply displayed in her costume and costumed, and her beauty and attractiveness increase when she appears from time to time in different gowns. The costumes are a splendid feature of the performance. Much credit is due the Alhambra creations under the supervision of William Mithner for some of the best music it has ever been our good fortune to hear.

The Alcazar

My Friend From India has been delighting large audiences at the Alcazar all week. L. R. Stockwell was, of course, the hit of the performance. He received three curtain calls on the opening night, beside a big bouquet of chrysanthemums. It is safe to say that Mr. Stockwell never appeared in a more laughable role and his reception was unanimous and unbounded. Eugene Ormond as Eranus Underholt was particularly good, considering that the part is a very trying one. Frank Dethoruce was Charloe Underholt, a character that afforded him ample opportunity to show his friends what he is really capable of. Geo. Webster as Tom Valentine was exceedingly clever, as also were Clarence Montane as Herivel, Charles W. King as Jennings, and Carlyle Moore as Finnerty. Miss Gertrude Foster in the character of Marlen Hartje, was very bewitching though her opportunities were not great. Miss Helen Henry was as dainty and pretty as ever as Gertie Underholt. Miss Marie Howe, also an Underholt, was especially good. But of the feminine members of the cast Miss Juliet Crosby and Miss Margaret Marshall had the best roles. Miss Marshall took the part of Arabela Beckman-Seeke and very cleverly did she acquit herself, Miss Crosby, however, is entitled to the honors, for her portrayal of Tilly, the German maid, was all that could have been desired. The play will run another week.

Grand Opera House

The Merry Monarch drew so well at the Grand last week that the management has decided to continue the opera for another week. It seems an odd thing that there is no town in the state that will support the best. That Perse is out of the cast for that reason. The company all render the best and the casts and the scenery and the costumes, are enjoyed by large audiences throughout the week. Next week Frangeline.

The Columbia

A good play is the farce, Why Smith Left Home. It has created much hilarity at the Columbia Theater this week. Frank Tannhill, Jr., carries the bulk of the work, and Lizzie May Umer as the cook lady is decidedly humorous. Lottie Williams Salter, who was a favorite in Morose melodrama, is the young bride, and the other roles are, generally speaking, adequately filled.

The Comedy

The German comedy, In Weissen Rosell, in three acts, was given at the Comedy Theater last Sunday night to a crowded house. All members of the company were well received. The principal feminine roles were taken by Miss Von Hofstetter and Miss di Rovey. The male roles were taken by Dennis Hirsch, Josef Grenan and R. G. Leog. These Sunday night German comedies seem to have been successful from the start.
Amusements & Next Week

AT THE GRAND

The Merry Monarch will terminate his reign to-morrow evening, and Monday evening Rice's famous Evangeline will have the most magnificent performance ever given in San Francisco. Charles H. Jones, the Amazon March King, has invented for the occasion what he terms the March of patriotic colors which will be performed by too gorgeously apparelled, beautiful and symmetrical girls; also a minuet a la Wattcean. Editor M. G. McCann, who is the locating Evangelist, and Hattie Belle Ladd, the hero Gabriel. Winfred Goff will make his first appearance here as the feminine impersonator in the character of the beautiful Catherine. Fred Cooper, the popular comedian whose last appearance was at the California Theater nine years ago, has been secured for the little madcap role of Mr. and Joe Clarke, one of the best dancing teams of New York vaudeville stage, has been brought here to play the Little Hare character. John Robertson will act the rebellious calf. There are over twenty other characters that have been added to the cast, and the enterprise of Walter Morosco's has taken root and is growing in the city, and there is a continuous line at the box-office.

AT THE ORPHEUM

The bill at the Orpheum for the week ahead holds forth so many attractions that it will be good as any of its predecessors. The headliner is Cora Stuart, the widow of Tom Robertson and daughter-in-law of the famous dramatist, T. W. Roberston. Supported by an excellent company, she will present The Fair Gunman a Western story. The Circus Rider, the piece made famous by Rosina Vokes. Little Mignon is said to be the cleverest child dancer in the world. She is only eight years of age, but has already many immortals of mature years. Rice and Elmer are two of the cleverest and best known comedians on the vaudeville stage. They will present A Rule's Visit to Chinatown, in which they will introduce some wonderful work on the triple horizontal bars. Little Yerdi is a pretty and clever musician and plays well on every instrument known to the musical world. Hamilton Hill the famous Australian baritone singer, completes the list of new attractions. The hold-eve, the bill will be Vincent Wallace's beautiful ballad opera, Maritana, the cast including Ada Palmer-Walker, Charles C. Smith, Miss Gilbert, William Schuster, Phil Braun, Hubert Sinclair, J. Fogarty and Trovatore. Saturday night's attractions will be as follows: Tuesday, Othello; Thursday, Ernani or Trovatore to be announced; Sunday evening, the double bill of Cavalleria and Pagliacci, and on Sunday night, the bill of Verdi's greatest work, Aida. The music will be published, but these few opportunities to listen again to the exquisite singing of Sig-ers and of Miss Miles, whom the company is delighted to have here. The produc-

AT THE ALCACER THEATER

Another week we have My Friend From India. The play is certainly a clever farce. L. R. Stockwell, in the character of the barber, is the funniest character. He, in the guise of the Yellow Robe Order, vainly trying to make his exit, and being too much sidetracked, we have been informed that he is a The-several of these plantations have been attributed to a variety of causes, notably its parentage of the now well-known hard-pressed minstrels, whose music and mirth are now considered one of the most attractive elements of the play. The skillfully manipulated horse race has also been declared the element of gritting merit in the production. The comedy is one of the most amusing parts of the com-erescent of the reign of the Merry Monarch. Among others there will be Thomas Rice as Jabez, the King of Baritone, the fiery little Yerdi as the powder monkey, and an entire cast of at least twenty-five people, all of whom have been carefully selected as being pre-

Her last engagement was to supervise the opening of the New Alhambra Theater in New York, in which she appeared a few weeks ago, but she was compelled to cancel more than a dozen lucrative dates owing to bad health. Miss Comer was still a young woman, being only 27 years old. She brought to popularity many songs, the most famous being Those Wedding Bells Shall Not Ring Out, The Crucifix and The Tattoo on the Arm.

ANOTHER WEEK's
New York—Nov. 12—To William Gil- lbert, for his part, the book was a device in the same stage Sherlock Holmes, that interesting, if not at times possible, hero of A. Conan Doyle. But Sherlock Holmes is no play. The play Sherlock Holmes, as put on last at the Garrick by Mr. Gillette, was put on last season, and not by Mr. Gillette. The condemnation made one of the most interesting melodramas, which has been seen on here for some time, being the most successful in the effect by a frequent visit to the second stage. The play is full of curiosities from beginning to end, and Gillette has what promises to be a great success.

These striking actors, James J. Corbett, James J. Jeffries and Thomas Sharkey, were the stars of William A. Brady's new venture at the Koster & Bial last week entitled Around New World of Song. In this play, it is rather unfair of Mr. Brady to put such heavy loading men into his cast and expect us to believe that his actors can carry out his imaginative conceptions to the best advantage of his otherwise honest production. He has, of course, been very successful in having his opera, which he has given several times in its present form. I think that if the opera is ever performed on the stage, it will be a greater success, but the present form is a great disappointment to all of us in the audience.

Evelyn Nesbit and Mediterranean Nudists have reached here from Europe in good health and they say that they are ready for poor Calvin, who has led to go around with the Maurice Graf Opera Company and play our night stands. Of course it isn't as bad as that, but Nesbit and Mediterranean Nudists think that outside of New York, Chicago and Boston there are no cities worth mentioning in more than one night. All the same, even on several occasions, put aside some fortune in San Francisco; then never Evelyn Nesbit and Mediterranean Nudists.

Why Smith Left Home is a mystery to me. I've been doing a splendid business in Court A. The play is a hit, but possibly he has merely gone West on a vacation; it is better for the public. But he pulled up stakes here last week, and made his first appearance in the chorus of a new musical at the Casino. The music is amusing and Miss Clara Hepburn is doing her part as Miss Clara Hepburn. Mr. Smith, Smith is a model husband. Dan Man in Count Von Cuggenheim, who made them twisted, was excellent. Miss Alice Yenning, who was Harrison's major for years, is Leslie

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Nov. 13.—Salt Lake Theater, Nov. 13th, A. W. Freeman's troupe, the London Company, is presenting a production which is being made on a score of bill boards and numerous window灯-boxes, and it is one that will make the showmanship of the showman. It is the kind that for the first time (with one exception) in the history of Salt Lake's leading play, has had the whole season's advertising been admitted at popular prices. The theater management has its usual stand firmly in the public eye, and the whole city has steadily refused to admit cheap plays. The house, however, has always allowed local companies to play their tests. Whether the admission of the Fre- emon Company at popular prices means that the theater management is going to continue to bid for the managers with any attractions draw, has not been definitely an- nounced, but it is implied that the house has had a very slim line of attractions the present season, the doors being closed a good share of the time. While the theater is handicapped in having the company, no few attractions, this season has been opened every night of the season and is booked well for the rest of it. This is the kind of company appearing has done a satisfac- tory business. If Mr. Pyper decided to con- tinue with the management of this theater, there is no question that many companies which in the past have been unable to get dates in Salt Lake and have passed the city by, will make it a labor to play in one of the great theaters of the west. In other words, theengagement of Eugene Blair in A Lady of Quality at the theater last Thursday evening. Later in the same evening, a telegram was received by Manager Pyper stating that the company was held up at the railroad station, and unable to appear that evening. Theater- goers were keenly disappointed, and no little regret was felt by the theater management, from which to calculate the loss. The news was worth $1,500. Why Smith Left Home did a fair business at the theater the 11th, though what the other side of the platform, as Mr. Pyper's new play is full of rich humor and it is presented by an evenly balanced company. Manager Pyper used every argument of the night, the first night of the week (Nov. 6) and Arthur Donelson, the leading man, did not do quite so well, but had been out of action for a few weeks. Miss Blair did not do quite so well, but had been out of action for a few weeks. Miss Blair did not do quite so well, but had been out of action for a few weeks. ST. LOUIS, Nov. 7.—The Grand Opera- saon at the Olympic Theater last week was anything but a success. The financial situation with which the Olympic staff had to contend was as much the better comedy, being put on by a strong company in artistic style. The business was not by any means the same as last Thursday. The orchestra is better and the band is stronger, and besides having the company, which has been so good, the orchestra is better and the band is stronger, and besides having the company, which has been so good, the business was not by any means the same as last Thursday.

Behind the Scenes

with Eugenie Blair

EACH one has her descriptive note, best struck through environment.

Miss Blair would fit in comfortably with market stalls. English bound books, dull blue hangings—with sleek-necked horses, the hunter's horn and a kennel of hounds. She should be at her best, perhaps, after a canter on the downs. She must never take little stitches or paint small canvases—she plays the role of the jockey. If she had not acted, she might have done literary work, she says.

My favorite pastime would have been done with no timid pencil. People would have read and been the better for it. She would have said things bluntly, without a trace of malice. She would have struck for right against privilege. In a broad way, I mean, not narrowly, to her own advantage. Her comments on life and things would have been wise and true, but never piquant.

This sounds like the novelist's idea, as he is weekly guns-ask-work. It is rather an opinion, gathered in ten minutes, as she sat before her mirror in satins "shorts" and a snowy blouson, twisting her wig, and cutting out paper for a deep black waffle. If she have not "bit it off" just right, blame the coiffeur.

"A black hair hardens the lines of the face," she said, leaning forward to adjust a patch. "Especially if it be a wig,"—putting on and taking off the chin. "If I am as old as this makes me look, I am certainly getting on," and she wheeled around with a fearfully smile.

The fact that she had dared to say it, was proof positive to the contrary.

"It is rather embarrassing to talk of one's self," she went on, "but I don't suppose you have come here to discuss politics or the last novel."

She chose her words quickly and simply, in the unembarrassed way that comes with experience. She and Blanche Bates are cousins. As she smiled, the eyes and a turn of the chin insisted upon the relationship. The other features wavered.

"I can't think of the call boy. De- cidedly I had not come to discuss politics— in so brief a space so hurrying on to the business in hand."

A Long experience? Well, I have been acting since I was fifteen, and it is astonishing how much more I knew then, than I do now, and I laughed at the memory of it. "My first experience was playing the leading part with Mrs. D. P. Bowers in "Lady Audley's Secret." The leading woman was taken ill and Mrs. Bowers, against her better judgment, was persuaded to let me supply the lines."

Miss Blair was not trusted with the part, but rather mistrusted with it, because no one could be found in St. Louis who would attempt it. She knew the lines, because her mother was of the cast and she had listened to them frequently from the wings. So one can see how the mistakes of our neighbors are often more profitable to us than our very best strategy.

"Did you ever hear of being ill?" did I hear you say? "It is the greatest mistake of life. She spoke the lines with credit, to her head and heart, and has borne speaking lines ever since."

"Searing! For three years now, and I find it quite to my taste. Yes, the cares are brainy. Thought and energy are taxed to the utmost, but one's pleasures are doubled in compensation."

Miss Blair, a philosopher's habit. I believe she finds both a tonic and a storm in nothing—after they are over.

To Camille. Its tenderness and waywardness and hopeless appeal to me, as they do, I suppose, to most women. Yes, I like my role in A Lady of Quality, although it depicts only the stronger phases of a woman's nature. Perhaps it is interesting for the curiosity.

Then she had finished her makeup and slipped into a cloak the color of evening with the stars breaking through.

="You should play Trusts," I said, as the short's disappeared. "I probably shall next season—that and the others."

="My dear wearing less clothes. Well, the first was a little cold, but one warms to the situation and forgets self in the issues at stake."

="Overstep," spoiled the inevitable loss, and I slipped out thinking she had. This was a warning to the situation and forgetting self is the whole secret—the one hope."

STANFORD. Special Correspondence.

STANFORD, Nov. 15.—Katherine R. Oliver, who has met with great success in the first and second performances of the presentation of Barrie’s Little Minister, made her appearance at Stanford last night. While the part she took was so well underlined and filled with work that she took her to Thruma, where he arranged a recital of The Little Minister for his people. Her characterization is good, and her voice in impersonating Mamie, the old woman being a delight. It was so well done that we would have delighted the “Hoot Mon.” It was a pathetic scene and Miss Oliver has done it with skill.

But the best scenes, perhaps, were those between Bubbe, the supposed gypsy, and The Little Minister, Gowan Dohart, and the scene in Cullum wood, of Robinson’s revenge. The latter is a dramatic scene, and gave Miss Oliver a chance to show her ability as a stage artist. She was equally effective, and rendered it in a powerful yet simple manner. Miss Oliver is touring the coast giving recitals from her repertoire in Scotch dialect.

H. L. GOLDFIELD

OAKLAND Special Correspondence.

OAKLAND, Nov. 15, 1899.—It is seldom that a comedy awakens so much real enthusiasm as we have had at the Fox. Miss Pearl Evelyn, an Oakland girl, is the member of the company, and appears as the sweet little wife of a once rakish young French Viciouso and her personal success was most emphatic. The production, while not a new one, is at this result was that when the band paraded to advertise the Reference of Promise, they, for some reason not known to the band but ad-libbed it, then, played She Was Bred in Old Kentucky and By the Sea Waves, to the great dishonesty of the mass who paid the freight. Mr. Delcher now wears a smile which resembles the traditional three bits, of course.

Manager Bronson has installed a megaphone pterodactyl in his playhouse, which seems to spread the news and incidently touches on the merits of his trip to Paris scheme, between the acts. This is a new scheme of advertising his proposition, and he has others. For instance, winter, the Native Sons will have a big benefit at the Orpheum.

The regular talent will be assisted by several local artists who will go toward defraying the expenses of presenting the State medals to the returned soldiers in this part of the State, which event will take place the 25th inst.

At the Los Angeles Theater in Old Kentucky is doing a good business. It is a strong company, and the people here are enjoying the stay. 17, 18, 19, By the Sad Waves is understood. For 19, 20, and 21, A. V. Catterson’s Greater America is here. Followed 22, 23 and 24, A Lady of Quality. Mr. Wyatt is having extensive repairs and improvements made to his theater, and when completed it will be a very attractive place.

At the Berkeley Theater, Brown in Town is doing a record-breaking business, standing room being at a premium for each performance. Mrs. M. H. Connell, and Pringley’s Minstrels will supply the fun for this house.

This production has an excellent bill on, consisting of Louise Dreiser, Jack North, Merrill and Marjorie, Laura Burt, Miles Morgan, Miss C. L. Godfrey, the contortion company, and Sada and Walton’s monkeys.

On Nov. 28, Hayden’s Creation, with 150 volts, and thirty-five in the orchestra, will be given at Stanford’s Auditorium.

The talent has been practicing for weeks, and this is looked upon as being one of the musical events of the season.

SACRAMENTO Special Correspondence.

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 14.—In Old Kentucky packed the Clunie Opera House last Saturday night.

Nance O’Neill in Magda crowed the Clunie Sunday night. The young American tragedienne has certainly captured the town, as people are not satisfied in seeing her once; they go to witness her perfect work in other parts. Miss O’Neill is of course not yet finished but an extra performance is announced his mate to be given Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Fifi is dated for mate and night at the Palomar Thursday.

Valentine Ab, the great mandolinist, appears Wednesday evening at the Congress Theater, and Thursday, at the Royal Mandolin Club, and Richard T. Cohn, tenor, with Mrs. C. A. Neste, accompanist, under the direction of Cha. F. Graether of San Francisco.

Mr. Platter of Paris

The Pacific Coast managers attention is directed to the advertisement of Mr. Platter of Paris, which will make its initial bow shortly for coast patronage.

Mr. Platter of Paris is a delightfully funny force. It is a novel departure from the old time play of this character, because it has a coherent plot surrounding with mirthful situations.

Mr. Platter of Paris has about the most perfect and flashes of light of paper ever turned out.

Theatrical Benefit

The Theatrical Managers’ Association has decided to give a benefit performance of "Theatrical Benefit" on November 14, at which the various theaters of the city will contribute their best talent. The committee on entertainment consists of Managers, Morrisey, Mosoro, Thall and Friedlander. Popular prices will prevail.

Elks’ Entertainment

All arrangements are now complete for the annual entertainment to be held at the Columbia Theater tomorrow night (Saturday) afternoon at 2. Talent from all local theaters will take part in the program and a big success is assured. The entertainment is given for the benefit of Golden Gate Lodge, No. 6.

Mr. Litty’s reviva of Sheenan does appear to be sweeping everything before it. It has recently broken all records, in New York, Boston, Chicago and other cities, crowding the houses, and returning a top financial performance. It is the biggest production of the piece ever given. Everything is better, and is presented much more elaborate scale than ever before.
The Orpheum

The Orpheum

This ever popular house—popular because it always presents to its patrons the best that can be procured in vaudeville—will present this week that was exceptionally of the grand order. The Betrayed Professor, by Leo Carle, the lightning change artist, was enjoyed, and Mr. Carle’s characterizations were well high perfect. Vinnie De Witt, cornetist, reappeared and delighted the audience, and her rendition of Dixie was cheered to the echo. Jerome and Alexis, as the Frog and the Lilac, have installed themselves favorites with the audience by their clever spectator act and Davis, acrobatic comedians, have no peers in their line. The Parisian comedienne, Marguerite Cottin, is as near to the hearts of her audience as when she first made her appearance and her clever rag time singing brings her tumultuous greetings, well deserved. Ryan and Richfield’s original farce, A Headless Man, provoked rounds of applause and earned for it a well merited hit. Churchill Simpson, comedienne, with some superb piano selections and her most clever singing, found a place in the hearts of her attentive listeners. Burton and his dogs were a delightful and welcome addition to the program, which, one in which the management has done itself proud and has merited the approbation of the public, who have responded by crowding the house nightly.

The Olympia

There is only one new feature at the Olympia this week, Norma De Verne makes her professional bow to San Francisco audiences as a ball-olist, and created a great impression. The balance of the bill is good, and consists of Marie Wood, Russell Bros., Ruth Neta, Maude Mullery, Carlton and Royce, May Nelson, Dot Stanley, Camella, Julia Linton and Dora Mer- vin.

The Chutes

The Chutes is still a popular house, and is mystifying people at each performance. Major Mite, Matie Nichols, Adgie, and Cole make up the balance of a fine bill.

The Oberon

The program at the Oberon has undergone no change, and includes Isaac Kahan and the Siblings, Berlin as well as the moving-picture machine and American Ladies’ Or- chestra.

The Alcazar Theater of this city is advertising in the East as the only Farce Comedy Stock Company in America.

Vaudville Notes

Maggie Colburn returned from the north the past week.

Maxxell and Mack, a sketch team, are resting at Los Angeles.

Flora Hastings and Frances Hall are underlined for the Olympia 27th.

Henni Somers, a clever little serio-comic, is underlined for the Midway 29th.

Kitty Henley opens at the Monte Carlo Theater, Taylor, Shasta Co., on the 20th.

Ruth Neta will play the Orpheum circuit, commencing at Los Angeles in the near future.

Ohuhama, the Jap Juggler, opens at Los Angeles Dec. 11th, with San Francisco on the 13th.

Dolly Paxton, the clever little vocalist, opens at the Peasant’s Theater, Seattle, Wash., 20th.

Cad Wilson arrived direct from Broadway and opened the house on the 7th.

Eddie Kelly has parted company with his partner, Walter Parker, and is now head of his own show.

Don Colyer has canceled all his vaudeville engagements, and has joined the Papa’s Wife Company.

The Musical Willards arrived yester-day from Honolulu, after filling a thoroughly pleasant and successful engagement.

The Howard Brothers are now playing the Keilt Circus. Two frisco boys, they have met with phenomenal success throughout the East.

Herr Busch, trapze contortionist, the Musical Fletchers and Lou and Earl Arnold, into house player, left the 20th to bill Honolulu Orpheum engagements.

Sullivan and Cummings, new candidates for public favor, scored heavy on their opening at the Savoy Theater, Victoria, B. C., Nov. 13th. These two comedians have arrived.

Ray Moore, whose husband was imprisoned several months ago for working the "badger" game, has been engaged for Round, New York in Eighty Minutes, at Koster and Bial’s.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Walker and Miss Lottie Walker—father, mother and sister of Mrs. J. C. Cohen, wife of the Honolulu Orpheum president—left this week for a visit to the islands.

The case of Marie Willur against Manager Fleischer of the Oberon has yet come up for hearing. Miss Willur claims her contract calls for ten weeks consecutively, and Mr. Fisher closed her after four weeks’ work, claiming that he will give her the balance of the contract later in the season.

The Standard Theater at Bakersfield burned to the ground on the morning of Nov. 10th. Mr. Carrillo called upon an automobile company, paid their salaries in full, and in a neat little speech gave them all contracts for the opening of his new house— which will be entirely rebuilt—and be ready for its first performance on or about Jan. 1, 1900.

William Buxton departed for Honolulu on the 15th.

Bob Fitzsimmons and his vaudeville company continue to do a big business.

Evie Ross, handsome and talented, is continuing with great success in Spokane.

Elise St. Leon, assisted by Baby Ida, is among this week’s bright people at the Peoples’, Seattle.

Polo, ex-manager of the Orpheum, has a big scheme in view. Hope it will be successful.

Harry De Lain, who is due in this city next month, is this week at Barron’s Auditorium, Norioka, Va.

New faces at the Olympia opening the 20th—Cad Wilson, Cole and Cole, Matie Nichols and Fred Winans.

Manager Ed. Homan contemplates a trip to the Paris Exposition. He will combine business with pleasure.

Gus Henderson, the well-known stage comedian, has become a very popular favorite at the New Cour D’Alene Theater, Spokane.

James J. Corbett is in the cast of Around the World in Eighty Minutes, and hopes to soon become a leader in the burlesque world.

Frank Barton, the well known comic actor, had the misfortune to sprain his leg a few days ago, consequently losing one week’s work.

May Voakes, the original Tilly in My Humpty Dumpty, is now opening a new debut next month in vaudeville. She receives a splendid salary.

Gus Henderson and Eva Ross are playing a successful engagement at the New Cour D’Alene Theater, Spokane.

Manager Bronson of the Los Angeles double house, has sparked a new wrinkle. He is giving coupons to patrons of the house, and to the holder of the greatest number before the 20th, will give a free trip to the Paris Exposition.

Robert Edeson, the original Little Magnificent, has moved to the Alcazar and has decided to go into vaudeville. He made his debut in the Continuus, this week at Keith’s Union Square in a comedietta called Palmiti, as-sisted by Ellen Burg.

Clay Clement

Clay Clement has signed to support Nance O’Neill and will accompany McKee Rankin to his company to Honolulu and Australia. Mrs. Clement will also be a member of the company. Mr. Clement will be a distinct addition to the company and in securing him McKee Rankin did the wisest thing he has done in many years. He is a member of the European tour of Janet Waldorf, and is thoroughly familiar with the stage. He is a versatile performer and has a company in his tour that begins with Honolulu, will go in advance. A good selection.

Hall Caine’s great drama, The Christian, is to be the holiday attrac- tion at the Columbia Theater. Ellen Ebheller is coming to the coast with the very elaborate scenic production of the play.

Between Acts

Saints and Sinners will follow My Friend From India at the Alcazar Theater.

L. K. Stockwell has made a hit in the role of the Barber, in My Friend From India.

The Association of Theatrical Managers will hold their first benefit at the Orpheum Theater Thursday afternoon, Dec. 19th.

My Friend From India has captured the funny-loving people of this city and they insist that the piece run another week.

Francis Powers’ new Mexican Tragedy, entitled Mother Earth, will receive its initial presentation at the Alcazar Theater an early date.

News comes from New York that Blanche Bates and Frank Worthing didn’t desire to go to London with the Children of the Ghetto, and that they remain in New York. Kyfle Bellow and Mrs. Potter are mentioned as being the best in their act to play. Both Miss Bates and Mr. Worth- ing will be in the cast of Naughty Anthony.

Mr. George C. Rodenk, who plays the part of Sir Humphrey Ware in Eugenie Blair’s production of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett’s charming story, A Lady of Quality, has had a thorough course of training in the legitimate school. Beginning his career with the older Salvini, he has played leading roles with both the older and younger Salvini, Creston Clutterbuck, Thomas W. Keene and James A. Herne. Last year he was a member of the Salisbury Stock Company.

M. J. Hooley, who is a member of the San Francisco Company, now play- ing in Washington and Oregon, is a veteran of the Egyptian war and has toured the world with the Queen of England for gallantry in the bombardment of Alexandria in 1882, and the other by the king of Egypt for services in the Crimea campaign.

He joined the English navy in 1879, but left 12 years old. Mr. Hooley is also an author, having completed a drama, An International Society Match, which he hopes to have produced soon in New York city.

LOCAL NOTES

RECEPTION AT THE BERKSHIRE.

Mr. Howard Malcolm Tichnor was tendered a reception at the Berkshire Wednesday evening of last week, Mrs. Tichnor and the Pacific Coast Women's Press Association, of which she is a member, the California, Sotris Citrus, and several ladies prominent in society and musical circles lending their aid in making the reception most delightful. The house was beautifully decorated with silks, flowers and flags and the brilliantly lighted rooms were most inviting, forehead and unconscious to the guests, most of whom were in full evening dress. Mrs. Tichnor was a charming hostess, and everyone thoroughly enjoyed themselves. A program in which Miss Florence Doane, Miss Mansfield, was Mephisto's Court, Occidental Quartet, Messrs. Callender, Brauton, Soucmbo and Betts participated, was a feature of the evening. Mr. Tichnor generously contributed to the evening's pleasure with readings which were a rare treat. The writer was fortunate in having the distinguished guest "all to herself" for a few moments and was charmed with his amiable bearing and liveliness. His manner, like all people of real, true worth, is so easy and free from affectation, and he is most cordial and most interesting when he converses. Supper was served in the large dining room, the guests departing at midnight.

The reception committee were Mesdames Sara E. Keauner, J. M. Jewett, Louise Bogart, Mrs. Asher, Mrs. D. Sharon, M. B. Foster, M. E. Hart, Mannin-Campbell, Spitzky, Elisa M. Sexton, Ada M. Van Pelt, M. E. MUSER, Misses Jennie Long, Augusta Friedich, Harriet M. Skidmore. During the evening the Fairfield Family Strings Orchestra rendered selections. Among the musical people were Mrs. Mannin-Campbell, Walter Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Von Meyer, Mrs. A. G. Coleman, Mr. John Harraden Pratt, Homer Tourjee, Mary Cheney Clark and others of dramatic or journalistic prominence.

PROF. BONELLI'S CONCERT.

The S. F. Conservatory of Music gave a concert in Metropolitan Tem- ple Friday of last week. It was framed to draw an immense audience in spite of the rain. The program was too lengthy to list items in any economy, but taken as a pupil's concert was most praiseworthy. One of the most charming items was Mr. Gervais' Allegro Vivace Movement. Pianos—Miss Juliette Grasse and Mr. Charles Rogers; Violins—Misses A. Benson, M. Abelle, M. Van Doren; Miss Charles Carran; Viola—Mr. G. Yale; Cello—Mr. R. McLean; String Quartet—Messrs. Callender, Brauton, Soucmbo and Betts.

THE PIANIST—MRS. AM KING.

Among the guests of interest last week at the Conservatory Mandolin Club was a very successful appearance of Mrs. Am King, most of whose pupils participated, and Miss Charlotte Voorsanger was much missed. The piano numbers were: Polketta [Fraul], little Hilda Schloha; Tremolo [Koselle], Gertrude Vincent; Value No. 14 [Chardon], Frederick Military Polonaise [Chopin], Miss Irene Hanaran. The latter piano numbers received a little word of repri- son at the last concert for the want of deference she showed a very insu- gent audience; and the writer hopes to see more of her in the near future. I am too much her friend to allow such a serious fault to go unnoticed, and while I believe her to be a masterly pianist, I am hardly conscious of it, she should select a proper time, and I hope Will be a very great success. She is taking a great deal of trouble to give the voices of praise of the next musical: Miss Lottie Lanne and Geo. Caldwell, pupils of Cyrus Brown- lee Newton, gave the laughable ditty, The Happy Pair, doing good job. Mr. Caldwell recited Victor Gal- brath, Miss Lanne also appearing alone. Miss Gertrude Powell pupil of Mrs. Rocekk, sung Marguerita [Faust], and My Lover Will Come Home, all of which were received with great satisfaction. Miss Lanne, pupil of Mr. Rocekk, Miss Alma Coleman, pupil of Alfred Kellner, showed off with the great success. Miss Lanne's voice is firm and her pronunciation better than formerly, and [Vieux-temps] one of the best. She has a great future, and her voice is firm and her pronunciation better than formerly, and her voice is firm and her pronunciation better than formerly.

Miss Van Pelt, one of the well-weathered and successful pupils of Mrs. Martin-Campbell, did splendid work, showing method, perfect pronunciation and good taste, the numbers being: On the Hillside (Maia), for You I'd Leave My Home (Bohemian Song) (Von), as well as the number. Miss Van Pelt's voice is so attractive and the way in which she renders the song for the first time in two years, has been reorganized. Mr. Tichnor, tenor, rendered a sweet, musical voice only in Dreams (D. Koven), also singing with Mrs. Hert- mark's, Ednland, their voices blending most harmoniously. Mrs. Hert- mark's solo was Chanson Provencale (Dell Aqua). Her voice was clear and her and Mr. Tichnor were well received, and her encore, a fugue, was infinitely sweet. Mr. Tichnor received a rousing welcome, his fine bass being heard in Jacques Blumenthal's song, Life, which was rendered with splendid effect and his pianismos passages were most delicately executed. For response to the hearty encore he gave Rocked in the Cradle of the Deep. Arthur Welles is always an acquisition and the bass, marked with his voice, a treat indeed. His interpretation is always intelligent and sympathetic, and he plays with the most gentlest of the article. His numbers were Polonaise de Concert, Chanson Villegoeose [Popper] and Schumann's Reverie. Her voice was firm and her pronunciation was clear, and Miss Pelt, pupil of Mrs. Rocekk, who has recently accepted the position of contralto in Calvary Church, de- termined to tackle one of her own, said Good-Bye [Mise] and for an encor-e. Last Night I was Drinking, a number admirably adapted to her voice and style. Miss Van Pelt's voice is a pleasing one, firm and even in tone, and of velvety quality, with power and sweetness. The writer has watched her progress with interest and was delighted to mark her great improvement since last sea- son, for she has been one of Mrs. Mar- riner-Campbell's most ambitious students, and her success seems assu- red. She was accompanied very skillfully by Miss Neumata Van Pelt.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

CHAR. VAN ORR'S SUCCESS.

Charles Van Orr is doing famously in Orville. He played recently at an evening given by the School Teachers' Institute, where Mr. C. M. Gayley of Berkeley gave a brilliant lecture, "Our Literary Heritage," and Mr. Van Orr appeared with his pupil, Miss Magnolia Reed, in Beethoven's Sonata No. 5, Opus 24, for violin and piano. This young student has made rapid strides with his piano studies, as a year ago she could not play a Kaulkin Sonatina, but now she is ready to give an evening to look upon Mr. Van Orr as a fine master of the piano as well as the violin, that instrument having made his name as soloist and teacher.

CONCERT OF THE BOHEMIANS AMERICA.

The Bohemians of America gave a concert under the direction of Homer Tourjee Friday of last week, which passed off very successfully. The evening was opened by an address by Col. J. E. Kowalsky, which was received with much applause. Miss Eleanor Joseph, pianist of ability, and a pupil of Mrs. A. G. Coleman, vocalist, made her first public debut as a singer on this occasion, and was well received. She sang, For the Shore of the Past, which was rendered with skill and her rendering, and being in excellent voice. She also played Liszt's Second Rhapsody, a thoroughly artistic number. Armand Solomon, oboist, rendered solo, All Varié, op. 22 [Vieux- temps], receiving praise for his good work. The treat of the evening was the rousing reeling by Miss Jenny Long, One of the Real Heroes of the War, her voice being quite enthused by her fine voice, delivery and action, and the strength and pathos she displayed. Mr. Henry McNally was also a favorite of the evening, rendering Lost Choral and I Cannot Tell [Gard]. The interesting evening closed with an illustrated lecture, War with Spain, by Rough Rider C. K. King, giving personal experiences, and aided by stereopticon views.

The McKenzie Musical Society will give a concert in Old Fellow's Hall Thursday of next week which promises to be an enjoyable event, Mr. McKenzie, the director, having arranged an excellent program.

The advance sale of seats for Shen- andoah will open at the Columbia Theater box office on Thursday morning. Arrangements have been made for the continuation of the special season prices, $1.75, 50, 35, and 25, now in vogue, during the Shenandoah engagement.
McKee Rankin’s Mistake

McKee Rankin’s present success and prosperity recalls to mind that at one time in his younger days he was leading man in the stock company at the theater in Pittsburg, and he was visited every few days throughout the entire season by a long lean man, who looked like a typical countryman. He tried to induce him to advance money for the putting of a patent before the public. The visitor had only one way of stating his case, and this he religiously did on an average of three times a week for thirty weeks. He would lounge up to Rankin, and after bidding the actor “good morning” and chatting for awhile, would incidentally remark, “I’ve got a patent out of which untold wealth can be made—if I only had about $500 to get started. Now, Mac, I’ll give you a half interest in it if you’ll advance the money.”

The same speech was repeated so frequently that it became a standing joke in the company, and the young fellow who gave utterance to it was looked upon as a crank by one and all. Other people out members of the company joined the actors in their estimate of the mental balance of the inventor. The season closed. Rankin came to New York, and his friend from Pittsburg was forgotten until some years later when the Danies was in the flush of its success.

Rankin was playing the part of Sandy in Pittsburg, when he received a call at his hotel from one of the millionaires of the Smoky City. He was greatly surprised to think this man should call on him, but a few moments’ conversation put him straight. The visitor was George Westinghouse and the patent he “tried” to get Rankin interested in was the now universally used “air brake,” the royalties from which amount to more than $500,000 per annum.

Ellen’s New Dress

The straightforward simplicity and impetuousness of manner which gives to Henry Irving that distinctive social charm that wins those who are brought under its spell from the attitude of discriminating criticism to that of blind adulation, had an amusing as well as unique illustration during his last visit to San Francisco. At the dinner given to Mr. Irving, Miss Terry and a few of her personal friends by Mr. and Mrs. M. H. De Young, Miss Terry’s illness prevented her appearance, and Mr. Irving was assuring his fair hostess of her genuine regret at being absent, concluding his little speech in this quaint but characteristic fashion: “Yes, my dear Mrs. De Young, Ellen was anticipating this visit with great pleasure—great pleasure. Indeed, she had a new dress made especially for the occasion—a new dress, yes!” Then with a sudden start of recollection: “Her daughter has it on now!” (raising his neck in every direction in search of the wearer of the “new dress,” and discovering her finally, ensconced with the English girl’s demureness in the corner of an adjacent sofa). “Edith, my dear, stand up and show Mrs. De Young your mamma’s new gown!”

The amusements of the hostess and the guests who overheard, was tempered by a tender feeling for the lovável simplicity of a mind which, after ranging the universe of art, could settle down upon the small home interests of daily life with equal enjoyment.

William Bramwell, the handsome leading man of Eugenie Blair’s company, is the son of a well-known New York minister. He was intended for the ministry. However, abandoning that life, he took up the study of law in Omaha. Fursaking the legal profession for the stage he joined Mr. Robert Down and then later was a member of the supporting company of Miss Blair. For the past three seasons he has been leading man for her, essaying each role assigned to him in a graceful and polished manner. He was spoken of as a fit Romeo for Maude Adams’ Juliet, last spring. Not having any desire to play Romeo he did not seek the engagement.

A COMEDIAN'S OBSERVATIONS

SOME INTERESTING THINGS I SAW

DENVER, NOV. 15.—The latest grievance of the "also-rans" and the "has-beens" of the theatrical profession, I learned, as I waited in the Bell Agency the other morning for the growing popularity of dramatic schools.

Out of curiosity or a desire to kill the interminable hours of the pause before a recital, one of my friends, a well-known comic entertainer, had engaged a young man to sit on the stage with him, and for a couple of weeks was about to start on a trip through the West and give the young man his first chance. The young man was a "mass-organizer" and "get-up" man, and had a general knowledge of the theatrical world, but not much experience. The dramatist was an old friend of the young man, and knew that he was an ardent admirer of the most famous of the "fellow-actors," and was determined that he should have a chance to meet him.

The young man had arranged for a production of a play that he had written, and the dramatist was to assist in the production. He had written a play that he knew would be successful, and was determined that the young man should have a part in it, in order that he might have the opportunity to meet his idol, and to see how he could do the part.

No Mistaking Bigelow's Phil

A story waited from Boston indicates that Charley Bigelow, who is almost as handsome as Eugene Canfield, is on to his own curves. Mr. Bigelow, who has been playing a leading part in Papa's Wife, the new French farce in which Anna Held is starring, applied at the box-office of Keith's Theater in Boston, and asked for seats.

The man in the box-office didn't recognize Mr. Bigelow, nor did the business manager of the house. Somewhat chagrined, Mr. Bigelow left the lobby of the theater, but returned presently bearing in triumph a half-sheet lithograph on which was shown in half a dozen colors his own physiognomy! Cynron and all.

"And I that man?" he demanded.

"Indeed you are," responded the box office man. "Those kind of faces don't come in pairs."

And Mr. Bigelow got the best seat to be had.

Advance Agents' War

It is seldom that a city outside of San Francisco in California enjoys the unique spectacle of four theatrical advance agents struggling for supremacy in the shape of advertising their respective attractions. Yet such was the situation of affairs at the Los Angeles and Burbank Theaters last week. James Delcher of Brown's in Town was fighting the opposition, and the other three agents formed a combination to down him. But within the ranks of the Los Angeles theater combination all is not harmony.

Jules Schloss, representing A Breach of Promise, was worried over the bustling abilities displayed by Fred Beckman, ahead of In Old Kentucky, and his croupier, Fitzgerald Murphy, ahead of the interesting of Mathews and Bulger's By the Sad Sea Waves Company that appeared at the Los Angeles theater the latter part of the week.

Schloss decided upon a Napoleonic coup by engaging a band to parade the downtown streets in the interests of his attraction. Murphy and Beckman, his rivals, decided to go him one better. They hit upon a clever idea. They would hire the leader of the band to play She Was Bred in Old Kentucky and By the Sad Sea Waves. The band turned out in the afternoon and imagine Schloss' amazement to find his hired band play airs that were advertising his rivals. However, he accepted the matter gracefully and the last scene of the comedy was enacted in Bob Kern's, where several cold bottles were opened.

Lola Montez' Ruby

J. B. Hagors, the California millionnaire, in very fond of diamonds. He is said to have some of the finest and rarest on this continent. Many of them are set in the old-fashioned round cluster style. His wife before his present one, had some very valuable rings, pins, brooches and ornaments, but she prized a rare ruby more than any of them. It is said to be the finest ruby in America. Although a very fine jewel it is prized more for its historic value than for its intrinsic value as a gem. It formerly belonged to Lola Montez. When Lola Montez was thrown upon the cold mercies of a world that had looked on aghast at the extravagance lavished upon her by King Louis of Bavaria she came to California and took her gems with her. The ruby was offered for sale when her effects were brought to the hammer more than thirty years ago. It was then sold for $1,000 to a speculative jeweler Mrs. Hagors secured it and valued it at $10,000.

The original production of Mid-night in Chinatown occurred at the Chicago Academy of Music, Oct. 29. The house, packed both matinee and night, was almost duplicated all the week. The play promises to be a big success from the box-office point of view, and must have pleased the people. There was "a continuous advance sale. It is not a Chinese drama, but one act is set in the Chinese quarter of San Francisco. Fine scenery enhances the beauty of the production, and a cast far above the average of professional actors met the many strong characters.

Alias, how soon the hours are over. Count us out to play the lover! And how much narrower is the stage Allotted to us to play the sage? But when we play the fool, how wide The theatre is for our buildings! How long the audience sits before us! How many prompters! What a chorus!—Walter Savage Landor.

CONSIDERING the number of players who are taking advantage of the law, Through Bankruptcy as the title of a play might claim some notable names in its acting company.

The latest thing theatrical is a portable playhouse—not a tent, but a real theater made of wood and paper mache. This paper mache idea somewhat suggests the paper house that has often been met with in theatrical history.

Among the fictional and historical characters now impersonated in current plays this year in the United States are Barbara Fritich, Sydney Carton, Becky Sharp, Napoleon, The Empress Josephine, Robespierre, Phil. Sheridan, Stonewall Jackson, D'Artagnan, Richelieu and Louis XIII.

Francis Wilson, in recently admitting that his earlier stage work was done in connection with a minstrel company, spoke in very high terms of that branch of the amusement profession, incidentally referring to an episode that happened during the tour of the all-star cast of The Rivals. Some one in the company reflected disparagingly upon a member of a minstrel organization. Old Mrs. Davie immediately denounced the snob, and said that those who used burnt cork were as good as those who wore grease paint. She appealed to Mr. Jefferson, who remarked that he would have no objections to his daughter marrying a minstrel provided she loved him, and then he added that he himself used to black up and knew that Edwin Booth used to play the lanky, old-time characters. Then Crane remembered when he was a middle man in a minstrel show, and Nat Goodwin referred to the time when he also did an act in burnt cork.

The restoration of the permanent stock company is being extensively discussed, and to some extent put in practice in England, where it had even more effectually died out than in this country. Various reasons are given for this change of policy, one of the most important of which is that the stage there is not at present floating, but is being built up by the highest wave of public fortune. This new departure may do something toward reviving lost interest.

Mr. Mansfield, in his artistic conscientiousness, recalls the actor who insisted upon being given a line by Othello, and blacking himself all over. It is said one reason that there are so few good portraits of Mr. M. in character is that he refuses always to make up in the daytime. He believes in adhering to the light in which he moves as a character. If he made up in daytime he would mix the color and tone the quality of his points, and the portrait effect would be the worse for what he would with it.

The pleasant story that is told by the theatrical business in this city is repeated throughout the country. From the amateur company comes reports of phenomenal times for the player folk. It was expected that the general trade revival which the nation has been undergoing for some time would naturally reflect upon amusement people and be evidently in line with the satisfactory degree that has been the case. Of course in effect this means that as between listening to calumny howler and a chance to go to a show our people can be depended on to do the latter every time.

EXCERPT in the case of those undertakings supported by the better-known managers of the country, and which are usually associated with their names, even the majority of actors in various traveling companies may not be aware of the party or parties responsible for the financial backing of the organization. These, says an authority on the subject, are found in the cities of the most important places. One who recently backed a theatrical organization to the extent of a good many more thousands of dollars than he intended to do was a wholesale grocer in a town of this State, and the last man in the world who would presumably be interested in such matters.

Another was the editor of a semi-religious and metaphysical book which had made a fortune out of that and lost part of it in theatrical speculation. The backer is generally known to the manager, and possibly to one or two of the conspicuous actors, especially if his patronage is liberal; one of them has had its influence in leading him to risk his money. But to most of the actors he is known vaguely, probably by a name not his own, and the extent of his responsibility is never determined accurately.

The Ticket Speculators' Association of New York city, says one of the dramatic papers of that city, declare that they will have a bill introduced at the next session of the Legislature that will require the licensing of all ticket speculators, who must be residents of the city, and will increase the license fee to $200, with $100 for renewals. The present fee is $50, with $25 for renewals. The reason for this action, it is said, is that a number of speculators from Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia swooped down upon the city just before the sale of seats for the Irving engagement offered. These 'outsiders' obtained licenses and secured any number of choice seats, which they peddled in a way which caused much annoyance to the New York speculators, who contend that they always conduct their business "in a gentlemanly way.

A verdict to the effect that when they have a bad case they should pitch into the opposing lawyer, has a kind of a warrant in the practice of writers on theatrical subjects who, when they can't talk anything, will consider the subject of the law, which tends to fall back upon the present day depravity of some sections of the American stage. As a boy riding a rocking-horse is apt to think motion in his case is really progress, these pen-painters evidently imagine that if they work off violent word spasm, controlled as leading spirits by comparatively unfamiliar adjectives, they are accomplishing wonders for civilization and morality. Of course it all results ultimately in the managers continuing to produce what the people go to see, and whatever remedy there may be for undesirable play tendencies lies in the hands of the amusement seekers, and not in a weakening of the moral standard.

Miss Keppich, of the latest addition to the cast of Notre Dame, the famous actress, is in Vienna seriously ill with inflammation of the lungs. Should she recover, her physicians say that she would not be able to appear on the stage again for a long time. Her condition is pronounced critical, and the chances are against her recovery.

Mrs. MAUD BERRY FISHER of Fresno, sister of Clarence Berry, the Klondike King, has become a member of the Castle Square Opera Company, which has entered on the second year of English opera, or opera in English, rather, at the American Theater, New York, and been very successful at popular prices.

During the engagement of Frederic Warde with Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Brune at the Columbia Theater, there will be produced a new and original comedy romance from the pen of Espy Williams, entitled Fortune's Fool. The play was first brought out in Denver and met with marked success. The part assumed by Mr. Warde is that of Cecco, a court jester. Mr. Brune will play the Duke of Milan and his charming wife, Minnie Tittell Brune, the heroine, Nina di Borgo.
Of a Personal Nature

It is stated that Helen Henry will leave the Alcazar this week.

Frederick Warde in a lengthy repertoire is to follow Shenandoah at the Columbia Theater.

The rumor is current that Harry Girard will be the Trovlo's new burro. He is now on a concert tour of the State.

Robert Elliott, one of the cleverest of our young actors, will be seen in the leading role of Shenandoah at the Columbia next week.

Billy Hyne, as clever a monologue artist as there is on the stage, is with the Kidder Concert Company on a two-week's tour of the interior.

Henry Miller's business in New York with The Only Way is said to have been almost double the amount ever done by that star in the metropolis.

John Drew is playing to the capacity of the Empire Theater, New York, at every performance. His production of The Tyranny of Tears, is said to be extremely fine.

Miss Virginia Drew, who appeared with Lewis Morrison in Frederick the Great as the Queen, is to give a dramatic reading in this city in the near future.

Nay Goodwin and Maxine Elliott are to be here shortly after the New Year. They will appear in The Cowboy and the Lady, An American Citizen and Nathan Hale.

Mrs. Duval-Mack, one of our prominent stage instructors, has, owing to the severe illness of a relative, been unable to attend her classes. In a few weeks she hopes to be at work again.

Charlotte Winnette, who plays the part of Alyath Layson in In Old Kentucky at the New Alhambra is new to San Francisco. She created the part in the original production of In Old Kentucky at the Academy of Music, Boston, and this year was secured especially for the Pacific Coast tour.

Messrs. Davis has decided to defer her starring tour until next season.

Frank Opperman is a new and clever character addition to the Alcazar Stock Company.

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Florence Ziegfeld, Jr., and Anna Held, in Paris, France, two years ago.

Alice Nielsen may be heard in Massenet's latest opera, Cendrillon, next season. Manager Perley is considering the purchase of the American rights of the opera.

Lydia Yemas Tities recently played a very successful engagement in Dubin, and her Celts andons and baby songs made a distinct hit with the critical Dublinians.

Thomas Q. Sharrow will re-appear as a star on Nov. 30, when he will open in Albany in Who Killed Cock Robin, a farce-comedy by J. Chever Goodwin and Louis Harrison.

Laura Crum has given two weeks notice to Harry Corson Clarke, as she prefers to remain in this city. Rumor has it that she has signed with the Alcazar and will make her first appearance about December 10th.

The Mirror says: "Grace Howard, a young actress noted for her beauty, and until recently a member of the Alcazar Stock Company, San Francisco, has joined the company playing A Breach of Promise."

W. L. Curtin is another young San Francisco actor to be called East for work in a first-class production. He is to receive a part in the new comedy, A Battle Scarred Hero. Mr. Curtin was born in this city in 1877.

A. G. Belfield, manager of the Army Lee Company, is to abandon repertoire and organize a company for the production of A Determined Woman in which Miss Lee will star. The tour will begin at Toledo, Ohio, Nov. 30.

Miss Laura Crum will re-join the Alcazar Stock Company the week after next.

Jesse Bartlett Davis has decided to defer her starring tour until next season.

Herbert Kidder is negotiating with Emma Nevada to direct her coast tour.

Eugenie Wellington has succeeded John Grieve in the management of the Bijou Theater in Washington.

Charles Wyngate, once of the Frawley forces, has been engaged for a part in David Belasco's Naughty Anthony.

Wallace Shaw, who was one of last season's valued members of the Alcazar Stock Company, is with the Frawley Company.

Fred Russell, the man who looks like Mansfield, is playing with Sothern this season. His wife, Minna Terry, is also in New York.

Joe Rosenthal has reason to be proud of last week's work. He billed himself for In Old Kentucky and it has not been billed for a long time. Market street looked like a picture gallery.

Stewart Allen, who has been managing the Vallejo Theater for the past six months, has returned to the city to accept an engagement with My Friend from India. He still retains his interest in the theater, however, and all companies having bookings with him will fill dates as previously arranged.

Charles W. King left the cast of My Friend from India last Sunday night and the part of Jennings is played this week by Dewey Mullin, who takes the same character with L. R. Stockwell's company on the road. It is rumored that Mr. King will join the Dewey Stock Company of Oakland. He is a clever actor.

Lorena Atwood, a California girl who was for nearly three years leading woman in Monroe's Stock Company, is winning fresh laurels in the South this season. A Galveston paper thus speaks of her work with Lewis Morrison: "The sweetest character in all the play was Miss Atwood as Amalia, the King's sister." In every town Miss Atwood has received much approbation for her acting.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

November 25th, 1899

Edith Hall has given Thall and Kennedy the customary two weeks' notice, and at the expiration of that time she will leave the part of Rolby in Your Version to others. Her successor has not yet been named. It is now believed that there is much truth in the rumor that she is to wed Capt. James McCarthy.

Pretty Elsa Ryan, who so cleverly portrays the part of Madge in In Old Kentucky, now being presented at the New Alhambra, is a New Yorker by birth, but she renders the difficult Kentucky dialect as if she were native born. Miss Ryan, when she was studying for the part spent several months in the Kentucky mountains last year in order to perfect herself in this accent.

Two bright San Franciscans who are making their rapid strides in the theatrical world are Mispick Humphrey of May Irwin's Company and Mr. Orral Humphrey, playing leading juvenile with Joe Murphy. Miss Humphrey played lead in Frohman's Girl I Left Behind Me last season and the year before was with Walker Whiteside. Both are the children of T. M. Humphrey, manager of C. F. Weber & Co. of this city.

Side Lights

The Alcazar will give a special Thanksgiving matinee Thursday, November 30th.

The Alcazar's holiday production will be The Octofoon, with a colored quartet and fifty negroes on the stage.

Lawrence Hanley was adjudged a bankrupt in St. Louis last week, with liabilities of $2,062, and assets of $50, claimed as exempt.

Jacob Litt's special train carrying the Shenandoah is scheduled to arrive Monday morning. Eight cars are utilized to transport the production.

Mother Earth, Francis Power's new Mexican tragedy, will be produced for the next time on any stage at the Alcazar Theater the week of Dec. 4th.

Rosa Elliot, a performer with Wallace's Circus, fell from a trapeze at San Francisco recently and died the following day at Denver, Col., from her injuries.

Among the numerous features to the production of Francis Power's Mother Earth, which will be given at the Alcazar the week of Dec. 4th, will be a special double orchestra. The second orchestra will be under the direction of Prof. Brucigare, the well-known society man of this place.

Actors' Benefit

It has always been the custom for actors to give their services for charity, and now for the first time in this city the actors' charity fund is to be given to the Theatre de L'Opera, on the basis of charity and energy of the associated managers. The association has appointed the following as an entertainment committee: Miss Jenny Hanley, Miss Mary Humphrey, Mark Thall, Walter Mosoro, and S. H. Friedlander. The committee has appointed Philip Hastingsas press agent and he is asking the press and public to aid the benefit. The performance will take place Thursday morning, Dec. 14. The following theaters will be represented: Columbia, California, Grand, Alcazar, Tivoli, Cluny, Alhambra and Orpheum.

Scene from Act III: Jacob Litt's Revival of Shenandoah at the Columbia Theater.
New Alhambra

In Old Kentucky seems to have lost none of its interest, and the husk-nightly. The piece is really hand-somely staged, coining and scene forming rarely beautiful stage pictures, and has been altogether a most successful production, calling forth large audiences nightly.

Grand Opera House

The Morisco revival of Rée's brilliant and astonishing spectacle, Evangeline, that eight or ten years ago was pursuing its scintillating and conquering course over the country with such a galaxy of beauty and talent as Fay Templeton, Louise Montigue, Geo. S. Knight and James Moffitt, has been altogether a most successful production, calling forth large audiences nightly, and has given here. It was rather hard to be there at times, but always luscious. Arthur Wooley, as Capt. Diedrich, was good as the ecentric, affair of the piece, his very own, but his German dialect and his martial exclamations have on other occasions been more speak convincingly funny. Winifred Goff, in short skirts and rotund waist, was a ludicrously kitted Saenger. Catherine, and gave to the part a very acceptable burlesque character. Fred Cooper, an erstwhile manager, specially engaged to do the part of the lousy fisherman, gave a pleasing exhibition of pantomime. Edith Mason is exactly suited for such, barbarous roles, as Evangeline, and her songs were, as usual, extremely well received, notably her spinning wheel song. The more one sees and hears Miss Mason, the more one is impressed with the purity of her voice and the extraordinary facility and ease with which she uses it. Hattie Belle Ladd, sparkling and effervescent, genial of face and stunning of figure, was Galeriei, and as always was very popular. It was the first time she had ever played the part, but it seemed as if she had known it of old. Joe Weston and Joe Clark were the legs of the dancing heller, and George Cooper was fetching as a dashing young blade. Nace Bonville was King Booriboria, with an Irish brogue of emerald hue, and A. E. Arnold studded through the part of Hans Wagner to the great gratification and amusement of the audience. Thomas Perce was not cast, but in act second sang several pleasing Irish songs. And to mention a brilliant feature of the show is to refer to the marches arranged by Stage Director Jones and executed by a most engag- ing and stormy set of street girls. As a neighbor said with convincing reiteration, "that's good—one of the finest things in the show," and so a great many others seemed to think.

The Alcazar

My Friend from India finishes its two weeks' run of hilarity at the Theater this week. It has been one of the most successful productions to the credit of the company. Miss Ada Palmer-Walker in the role of Maithana gave good expression to the melodious music of the Gypsy maid. She sang sweetly and her solo in the first act was especially well rendered, and her duet with Wm. Schuster, Don Jose de Sauterne in the same act was well worth hearing. The Angelus Chorus in this act was well received and the crescendo and fortissimo passages were rendered with more than ordinary feeling and expression, and was really one of the gems of the evening. Miss Charlotte Beckwith made a very pretty boy as Lazarillo, she is growing in popularity with the Tivoli patrons, her grace and beauty, accompanied by a sweet voice and evident desire to do well her part, will place her among the stars ere long. Wm. Schuster scored a hit in the solo. In Happier Days, in the second act, being recalled. The trio, Miss Beckwith, Schuster and Greene in the second act was well rendered and called for an encore. Tom Greene was the dash- ing, rollicking Don Cesar de Bazan to the life, and his beautiful tenor was never heard to better advantage. His solo in the third act was given with such tender beauty as to be worth repeated. The chorus in this act did capital work. In the fourth act, Miss Ada Palmer-Walker's solo, Scenes that are Brightest, was received with a well merited burst of applause, and her duo with Charlotte Beckwith, Sainted Mother, was beautifully given and brought down the house, their voices blending in a harmonious per- fection that was simply irresistible, and the best bit of acting and singing of the evening Mr. Phil Branson as Manuel de Montefiori, filled the part with his usual skill and good address. Miss Christine Stokemeyer as the Mazeppa was a popular soloist, and her conscientious work and earnest application has long made her a favor- ite at the Tivoli and her friends are glad to see her merit rewarded. Tuesday the Grand Opera Company gave a new opera, with Miss Lichter, Avedano and Salassa in the cast, and it goes without saying that it was well done. Thursday, Ertaun, Natural, Cural Rosticanos and Pagliaccio.

The California

Only in one or two instances have Manager S. H. Friedbierd been fooled in looking inferior companies from California Theaters, as he has for the California Opera Company, who took hold of the property. His shrewd judgment in presenting first-class pro- ductions has been heartily recognized and supported by the public, and his success places him among the leading managers of the West. This week he gave one of the best shows of the season. It was Von Yonson, the company managed by Thall and Kennedy. An unusually clever compa- ny it is, too. Arthur Donaldson as Von Yonson that he never should forsake, not even for opera, for of all the Yous of recent years, he is the best. He reminds one of poor Gus Fisherman, the original, so mnistic, so German, so Swedish dialect and so droll his acting. Donaldson was once at the Tivoli Opera House, and while he was ad- mired by many, he could never have hoped in opera to equal his success as a Yon. He is unquestionably the best Swedish character actor on the stage. Another San Francisco and a Tivoli favorite in the cast is Miss Edith Hall, who plays the boy's part of Robby. There never yet has been a sensible excuse for putting a woman in a boy's clothes in a part of this character, and the piece could be strengthened ma- terially by giving the lines to some clever young man who knows something of the comic in the actor's art. Of course, that would have room in Von Yonson for Miss Hall, but the public could certainly appreciate her beauty and talent in some play of a lighter vein where she could be given an opportunity to sing something be- side "In Dear Old London," but it is the Master of it that he said that she gets all out of the part there is in—it for a woman. She is remarkably clever, and her peculiar power never fails to create laughter and interest. The nearest creditable feature in the play is the Lumberman's quartet, certainly the best instrumental instruments to come over the Pike in many moons. As the circus bill would say, this act alone is worth double the price of admission. The Irish landlady, Miss Annie Mack Berlein, is unusually clever for such a role. Her dialect, like Donaldson's, smacks loudly of the real thing. She wears an emerald-colored gown whose gorgeousness and greenness would drive a parrot to drink. Grace Hazard, the book agent, introduces a specialty that per- mits a recall, that in turn permits of an opportunity to exhibit a very pretty little figure. She'll do. Gay Spangler is the villain, and he does it naturally to say the least. Others in the cast are Edward Mack, Clinton Maynard, E. H. Beudor, Sidney Craven, Harry Hubbard, and Beatrice Norman. Miss Norman deserves especial mention for her good work. As usual, a first-class musical program was rendered by Noah Brandt's orchestra.

BIG OPENING

Tivoli Talk, under the clever handling of Bonnet and Smith, is attracting much attention and is held in the highest regard. The idea of good reading matter, penned in snappy, vigorous language that shows the editor has backbone and originality.

REMAINS WITH CLARKE

The report that Ida Banning is to leave Harry Corson Clarke is unfounded, as the following will show: SACRAMENTO, NOV. 21—EDITOR DRAMA REVIEW—Have no intention of leav- ing Harry Corson Clarke; am perfectly satis- fied. Ida Gertrude Banning.

THE CALIFORNIA.

The ever popular Frawley Company has reserved its strongest attraction for its return engagement at this theater, which commences on next Sunday night, November 26, this being the last of the season's engagement. This position in the city, where its English success was duplicated.

Two of the prominent points in its action happen: the one at Tattersall's, the great auction mart for horses, the other at the Derby race which closes the season. The. playing of racing in the United States is a spectacle of great interest to the racing country, where its English success was duplicated.

THE COLUMBIA.

Probably the greatest spectacular war picture which has ever been introduced to the Alhambra can be run today of such a kind as to appeal to all tastes. This picture tells the story of the battle of torpedoes and cavalry, which transfixes it, are all preserved intact. The influence upon the play proper is clear, as the audience will be left in the same state in which the original properties of value, have been added to the stories of magnificent and elaborate staged settings. The picture revival Manager Litt has inaugurated his career as manager of the Broadway Theater, New York, and for fifty nights last Sping the great crowd of Gothenhamites, who had seen the play years ago, again assembled to cheer its mastery features.

THE ALCAZAR THEATER.

There are more performances this week of My Friend From India in the Alcazar Theater. The piece is a bazaar business, and never has been so admirably presented as it is now. There will be the usual matinee Sunday, and Sunday evening the play will close by its capital satire of fakir religion and its capital satire, presented by the same company is the same. The piece has been before the public for a number of years, and at one time it was produced and presented in the famous Palmer Company's repertoire. Not a few of our theater-goes have still a recollection of the beautiful and pathetic tale which frames itself out of the escapade in the life of pretty Hetty Flett, the daughter of a prominent village clergyman, who runs away with her soldier lover, though he wouldn't wed her. The father pursues the runaway couple and brings the poor girl home but all efforts and devices fail of success. It is a tale that is popular, and it is a tale that will have its own brand of shame upon the girl, and she is isolated from those who were once her friends. This picture will be well-staged in the theater of the famous company of that night and the eye catching one of the successful young company is the promise of the famous Alhambra, and those who at one time were cold to her presence comes forward and welcomes the transgressor back to the flock. Saints and Sinners will be strongly advertised in the newspapers of Thanksgiving Day a special matinee will be given. Francis Powers' Men of the Sea, Mother Earth, will follow.

THE ORPHEUM.

The Orpheum management has never stopped at any expense in the matter of securing good attractions for its patrons. As the result, every one of the coming attractions in the world has at one time or another, when in the zenith of his or her fame, appeared at the Orpheum. The greatest artist in the vaudeville world to-day is Camille D'Arville, and the Orpheum management has secured his services for this one week only. The artist has been made the Bostonians famous. She turned her back on opera a few months ago. In yesterday's newspaper there was a great and immediate success, and to hear her in some of her greatest songs is a luxury that the Orpheum management will have the privilege of the people of San Francisco, A. D. Robbins, who is on the new bill, is one of the cleverest tricks has been on the stage. He is a Dutch dialect artist with an international reputation. His songs, recitations and yodeling are imitable, and he is bound to please. The hold-overs are: Cora Stuart and Company, little Mignon, Rice and Elmer, Lucie Werdler and the biograph. Matinee Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

THE GRAND.

Rice's Evangeline is packing the auditorium nightly and is the brightest manifestation of the city's Jones' latest invention. The March of Patriotic Colors, completely put in shape of the evening, will precede it, and the eye is delighted througout by the vision of an extraordinary number of beautiful girls. Mason is a winning Evangeline, Hattie Belle Ladd a dainty Gabriel, Winifred O. Gott a reversion as Catherine and Wolf and Woolley are irresistible humorsly in their roles. Thomas H. Persis is boldly and persistently sung by Mignon, Rice and Elmer, for the evening Evangeline will run all next week and will be given an extra matinee Thursday. The Thanksgiving Day management is preparing a superb revival of the popular comic opera His Majesty, the libretto of which is by Peter Robertson, the well known dramatic critic of the Chronicle, and the score by Dr. H. J. Stewart, the composer. The cast includes: Miss Mignon, Rice and Elmer, Miss Evangeline, Miss Ladd, Miss St. John, Miss Barrows, Mr. Persis, Mr. Robertson, Mr. Persis, and others.

THE TIVOLI.

The long season of grand and English opera at the Tivoli Opera House will terminate with the performance tonight of the famous Don Giovanni, Cavalleria and Pagliacci, and tomorrow, Sunday night, Sissi and Avedaro will bid farewell in Verdi's great triumph, Aida. Next week, the comic opera of Loceno, The Hobo of the Pretty Persian, will be presented for the entire week and Saturday matinee. This charming opera is filled with dainty and catchy music, and no work of its class has so many opportunities for fast and furious fun. Based as the Hobo is, on a plot similar to many to be found in the immortal Arabi"

Anna Held made her appearance last week in Harry B. Smith and Reginald De Fcr
Koven's musical farce, Papa's Wife.
once Miss Held had to leave out all suggestive action from her songs, and it begins to look as though she had some capacity to trade upon except the risque work which made her so well known in the music halls.
Charles Bigelow is her principal comedian.
Papa's Wife succeeded A Stranger in a Strange Land at the Manhattan Theater.
Smith has built up an interesting story from two French plays, and DeKoven has written some music which appears to be catchy.
Whether it will catch on is something the composer would give a good deal to know, but which time alone can decide.

The bill last week at the Lyceum was the strongest we have had since this cosy little understand what the Denverites want in the vaudeville line, and is giving it to them.

Hallen and Fuller made a big hit in their pretty little sketch Her Hero. The Bright

Marie Heath was artistic, as she always is; but I think it would be well if this little lady would secure something new in the way of songs. The balance of the bill was up to the standard.
Hallen and Fuller, and the Bright Bros, have been retained for another week.
At the Denver last week we had Miles

St. Louis, Nov. 13.— Manager Short of the Century and the Olympic Theaters offers for the approbation of the St. Louis theater new productions this week:

Robert Mantell, in The Dagger and the Cross, and Olga Nethersole in Sapho. Mr.
Mantell's new effort is from the pen of W.
A. Tremayne, and the period of the story is far enough iu the past to permit that picturesque costuming and those quaint methods of act and speech that are inseparable from a Mantell production. The star impersonates Roubillae, an Italian painter, who found himself in London during a great plague. The production is worthy of merit, and the play is very melodramatic.
Miss Nethersole's conception of Sapho is very Frenchy.
Of course, Daudet pictured her in her class, the half-world, but Clyde Fitch's dramatization relegates her below

Herbert A. Kidder and his concert company, composed of Mrs. Birmingham, Andrews, Miss Mary, Miss Adeline, Mr. Girard, brune, Mr. Hoyt, Mr. Hoyt, and Miss Moroney, accompanist, will appear before a big house to-morrow, as the advance sales point that way.

Manager Geo. W. Flick of the Civic Opera House has secured a lease on the house for another year. Sacramento is certainly fortunate in having a manager who is an artist and an actor, and his management, as it enables him to bring to this city attractions that would otherwise give us the go by. Since Mr. Flick took the management of the Civic, we have had nearly every attraction that has appeared in San Francisco.

TACOMA.

Special Correspondence.

Charles Hoyt's latest comedy, "A Stranger in New York," will be seen in the Tacoma Theater Tuesday night, Nov. 29th. Paul F. Nicholson will impersonate the role of the Stranger. It is claimed he is the best yet seen in that character.
The laughing dash Parisian comedy, "Mill. Fil," will be produced at the Tacoma Theater next night, Nov. 18th, and will be given nightly for a week. The cast will be well drawn.
Charles E. Blaney's great scenic production, "American Artistic," will be the attraction next Tuesday night at the Lyceum theater.

TACOMA. 25th. December.

Theater-goers will be given a treat next Saturday night, Nov. 24th, in the well known play, "Puddinhead Wilson," which drew such a large and appreciative audience both here and elsewhere. "Puddinhead Wilson" is the archetypal character, the young man is an actor of fine accomplishments and gives a faithful interpretation of the role. William McKay, who will be remembered here for his excellent work as "Sheriff," will do "The Nice and Easy" next week.

In addition to the above, Miss Adeline Western will be the star of the play, "The Last of the Mohicans," which will be taken up with The Jews. The School for Scandal, Camille and Oliver Twist. The sale of seats opened yesterday and the deand company, produce Rosina Vokes' Crease Rider under the name of The Fair Equestrienne, and succeed in making that charming little piece go with a flourish as to render one very forcibly of the time when Miss Vokes was at her best. Miss Stuart seems to have been impressed by the scene where the sofa is improvised for a horse worked the audience to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

Mr. Kearney made a fine Charles Kingborne, and Walter Townsend played the small part of Lord Lofus very acceptably. Rice and Elmer do a comedy sketch in connection with the cleverest horizontal-bar act we have ever seen. Some has been a real border on the impossible. This has been a year of infant phenomena, and each one we see is younger and more phenomenal than the predecessor.

Little Mignon of this week's bill is the smallest, cutest and cleverest of any baby who has appeared on the Orpheum stage. Lucie Verdier, a European artist with a handsome figure and face, plays a variety of musical instruments and plays them all well. The rest of the bill was reviewed in these columns last week, and all scored individual hits. They are as follows: Cherubina Simpson, Margarette Cornelle, Ryan and Richard, Barry's dogs, and the ever-popular Biograph.

The Opera

CAID WILSON, after a year in the Klondike, is back in the harness again, and is an instantaneous hit at the Opera this week. The reception accorded Maccie Nichols was as splendid as ever; the Miss Wilson, Cole and Cole also made a hit in their aerial act. Ruth Nelta is in her last week previous to going to Paris. The partners have been taking a variety circuit and made good as usual. Frank Barton sang as well as ever, but his bad ankle precluded the possibility of any dancing. Maude Wood has a big following, and the following make up a bill of unusual excellence: Miss Merriam, Holland & Royce, Dot Stanley, Camellia and May Nealon.

The Oberon

HERBERT E. MEDLEY and Maud Gatti, who have had a big ovation at every performance this week, scoring one of the greatest successes ever made at the house. The Sisters Berlin, the moving circuit and the American Ladies Orchestra complete the bill.

The Chutes

SEYMOUR and Roll, a very clever vaudeville team, have been running the program at the Chutes this week. Jule Linton in her acrobatic song and dance with a crocheted pillow has well received. Mlle. Lira, dancer, Lola Cotton, Major Mite, Adgie, Frank Hall and the Lions complete the bill.

Vaudeville Notes

Hal Con't is doing his turn in the People's Theater, Seattle.

Dodson is singing Lee Johnson's song at Con't Don't Belong long to Me," at the People's, Seattle.

Forman and Howell are doing a successful banjo turn at the Savoy, Victoria. Delmore and Cummins and Merritt are hits in the same house.

McWade Chillcott, very favorably known all over the country as an adept in booming, is out ahead of Harry Corson Clarke. Fred Wob is No. 2.

Lucie Alden had the good luck to just miss the fire at the Standard, Bakersfield. She was to leave for the same day after the conflagration occurred.

The three Hawaiian Queens, Oriska Worden, Vera Kial and Adele Archer, seen recently at the Orpheum, will for the next five years do England and the provinces.

Fred Niblo, the rapid fire humorist, has been engaged for weeks by Manager Behnau for his own vaudeville company. This is proof positive of Mr. Niblo's success.

The Musical Willards are resting in this city and meanwhile preparing some new instruments. One very novel feature will be an arrangement of music composed from which they will "coax some sweet music."

Hastings and Hall, the well-known vocal duo, open at the Olympia the 27th. This talented couple have just arrived from Dawson City, where they played an extended engagement. We predict for these clever artists the same success.

Tommy Ryan of Ryan and Richfield, almost went into spasms when he walked into Archie Levy's office and discovered the girl of Lynwyn taken 1879. Tommy still insists he is a young man yet, but Levy insists that he is sporting chicken.

Billy Armstrong is evidently afraid the case against him at Honolulu will go hard with him as he wrote his partner Geo. Neil and gave them yet another partner. We hope such will not be the case, however, as Billy is a good fellow and would hardly be guilty of the act he is charged with.

The following California vaudeville stars are meeting with much success in the East: Guerina Vincent, Garden and Hunt, Rob and Mike McDonald, Tedwyn sisters, Gilbert and Goldie, Deodora and Breen, Flahoe, Mand Rockwell, Hadley and Hart, Aimont and Dumont, Walter Talbot; while in Europe California is represented by Carl Hertz, Troy Shattuck, Saharet and Stack and Cotton.

The announcement that the Band, which appeared at the Chutes recently, go direct from Victoria, B. C., to the great Empire music hall of London, England, is not without precedent. It is only a few months since Siegfried, the man of many faces, entertained Pacific Coasters with a number of successful impersonations. When Siegfried has got the London show-goers at his feet, and such magazines as Sears Roebuck and the Strand are giving pages upon pages of their space.

Zoyzra is at the Casino, Butte, Mont.

The Morrels open at the People's, Seattle, Nov. 27.

Ethel Lynwood, the contortionist, contemplates an Australian tour.

Bob and Mike Melards are with the Cracker Jack Company.

The Brothers Mohring are new at the Chutes the coming week.

Roberts, Sarlax and Company open at the Chutes Jan. 1, 1900.

Paxton is on with success at the People's Theater, Seattle, Wash.

Hopper and Starr will be new faces at the Tivoli, Stockton, the coming week.

Trixela, the slightly and very clever little artist, will soon return to this city.

Kitty Hewley and Norna De Vere opened at the Monte Carlo Theater, Kessick, Calif.

Billy Fliman and Miss Lucky George are at the Tivoli Theater, Seattle.

The Keensings are at the Savoy Theater, Vancouver, B. C., with Victoria to follow.

The Gletcherdellas arrived in town on the 27th. They closed their season with Walter Main's circus in Texas.

The new Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, reports big business. The Hayes sisters are booked for the 27th.

Ida Francis, the clever little dian-danse, has retired from the stage, and is teaching. The little lady has quite a good success.

Ruth Nelta has recovered from her late serious indisposition, and is on deck again charging the Olympia patrons.

Eddie Dolan, Dolley Mitchell, and Coulon and Ryder are the headliners at the People's Theater, Seattle, Wash.

Billy Rafferty, the comedian, and Georgia McDermott, serio-comic, were united in marriage on the 13th. Congratulations.

F. Carrillo has commenced the erection of his new house at Bakersfield, Cal. It will be ready for the opening during the holidays.

Harry Delain, the baritone artist's date at the Chutes, has been put back until Dec. 11. This week he is at the Theater Imperial, Atlanta, Ga.

Jennie McCree and Matt Trayers have met with decided approval during their tour with Wepper's Company. The press have been unanimous in praise of these popular Californians.

Dr. Goers opens in this city in the near future. At present he is battling with the S. P. R. Co. His paraphrase was shipped from Chicago, Nov. 1st, and up to present writing had not yet arrived.

...Piddledicks! She would not stay there. No one has taught her. No one can prevent her learning.

"Quick, Quick! Draw me quick I can't wait long. I must see what they are doing."

That expresses the whole child. And that's how she is, she is doing it up, just as she saw it done. She likes little dolls, because they are harder to make dresses for and she thinks San Francisco is just the same as New York.—No better and no worse.

It is a singularly awkward theme to choose for the stage child, and just to understand I am not doing it. But little Mignon is far happier than the children who are to be examined at Christmas on what they do not know. She sleeps better, too.

Cora Suito is the widow of the eldest son of Tom Robertson, the playwright and has done the Robertson repertoire repeatedly in London and the provinces. That explains her preparedness. The Fair Euphrosyne she has played over twenty thousand times, and is not tired of it to the least. Could you tell a good story two thousand times and still serde, it would be a success; a rip-gar nishing? Own up now. You thought the little play fresh this season, did you not? Slip it with such a sparkle.

Rice and Elmer work for their living and fetch up in the wings perfect river systems and puffing like stage smoke. No, they don't hurt each other, although your wildest and most delighted yeas came when you thought they had. Is it so you are so happy when John getsit in the head with a wooden pie and Billy is filled with a rubber sausage? I’m talking to the sea.

Have you seen Marguerite Cornille? Not on your—pardon, pardon, Janes! Ze good Saint Antoine ee know ask il I am capable to forget. She is a visible revere—the most fascinating woman in my experience. And as for the artist—well, I see he has put no one else, as he is come, little Mignon, tucked in for a pretense, to hoodwink the public.

"Modernisme. Minouier, charme" but her head was full of her song.

"Blank. What ees it to be a blank, madam?"

"Almost anything. It is difficult to explain in full without breaking the commandents.

"It ees in ze song. He ees a blank."

"Don't have anything to do with him."

"Non! Pompique!" and she tipped out to come around? if you had not got ze monnione."

"Soon," she said, "I shall do for you ze cake." [Acurst on walk] "Shall you come to see it?"

"Mais, oui. Cela va sans dire."

"And now, maman, we shall go to sup. n't ce pas? I am so soiety. I must have some -- blank! I like it letaine one an' say, else i don't drink."

"Une la verite est belle! And shall I tell you some, madam?"

"Eh! Mais, nonjouius! I has forgot sait you will print ze what I say."

To fill it in to suit your own taste, reader. No, it would not serve well with the fifth column of gossips.

Now, Marguerite, do you know what blank means?

She has the artist soul. And what is that? It is not to like the deadly simple virtue of wearing in proper faux and straight parts—is to dare a vermillion rose next to azure glory —it is to be like wood those unsweet ornaments, the chop, undisciplined, nadated. It is to steer clear of the artist (!) who for twenty-five dollars for superfluous parts, shaves his head with a bad hair gets wrong to good features and decent tresses—it is never to look at though you could be deprived from crown. I should like to see Marguerite in a white, orange and green room knotting flag-flowers for me and you. Me first.

Then the light west dim for the biograph and we heard a voice bellowing us from in the homeward path. We turned perforce to the call. But there was nothing that way and these people of all nations rose before us again, a wonderful art glass win- dow, shutting out a dull neighborhood. An revoir. "Yes, I will look you up in 1900 at Ze Folies-Bergere."

CHARLOTTE THOMPSON

CLARKE WRITES.

Harry Corson Clarke writes the RW from Sacramento, telling of good business, better in this city than San Jose, better, in fact, than last year. He writes also:

"Miss Banning is still one of my valued members, and as she said only an hour ago, anxious to remain all season. Miss Braigrette remained behind for a few days, but catches up with us tomorrow evening. Miss Castelle, one of the sweetest girls I've ever met, with a lovely mother also, was engaged for the Frisco week on as we blend Marjorie and Minerva on the road. She played her week and I received the thanks of Miss Castelle and her mother for the little help I gave the young lady."

WILL BE A GO.

Mr. Plaster of Paris, which E. J. Blackburn and company will shortly produce on the road, was presented at the Dewey Theatre, Oakland, this week. The piece is a good one and abounds in fun, fast and furious. It should make a big hit on the road.

Roster Mr. Plaster of Paris.

The roster of the Mr. Plaster of Paris Company as far as known is as follows: E. J. Blackburn, Lilian Atwood, E. M. Bell or Raymond Whittaker, Ernest Howell, Carmelita Yost or Edna Elsmere, Edward Field, Mae Keene, W. O. Lindsay in advance.

OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENTS and Managers Out-of-Town should remember that all copies for the Review, freight from our regular stuff, must be in the office not later than Wednesday of each week to insurepublication. Has reach the Review Wednesday afternoon.

THE MINETTI QUARTET CONCERT.

The Chamber Music Concert of the Minetti Quartet Friday afternoon of last week drew a large and interested audience at Sherman and Clay Hall. Mr. Minetti has grown in the estimation of the public by his effort to uphold high class music and each year has found him nearer the goal of artistic perfection. Arthur Weiss, who holds a distinguished place as a violinist, Eugene Carlinmuller (second violin), and Charles Heinsen (vocal) both excellent musicians, with Mr. Minetti comprise the quartet that is a pride to California. Mr. Bendix, known so prominently throughout the United States, assisted upon this occasion and the music was an artistic treat. The first number, the Dvorak string quartet in F major, was especially beautiful, the Lento movement holding the audience in the exquisite expression and smooth rendering of the players while the last movement, Vivace ma non troppi, was of most fascinating grace. At times Mr. Minetti's violin seemed to be laughing, so bright and sparkling was the music. The ensemble work was fine, each instrument singing a most harmonious song. Much applause greeted Minetti's solo, Bach's Chacouc, a work requiring great execution and skill, and as an encore the quartet rendered a Bach number. That was a gem. A quartet in F minor [C. Frank] played for the first time, was an elaborate work, and was rendered with the care and merit that this band of musicians always displays, but did not appear to interest the audience as did the other numbers although much enthusiasm rewarded the quartet in each instance. At the next concert the Mendelssohn quartet in E-flat major will be played, Mr. S. Fleishman, one of our local favorites, assisting.

CONCERT OF MADAME GENREVA JOHNSTONE-BISHOP.

A concert was given in Sherman Clay Hall Thursday of last week in which Madame Genreva Johnstone-Bishop, the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of J. H. Howe, Bernhard Mollenhauer, violinist, and Mrs. E. J. Batchelder, pianist, participated. Once more I must request my musical friends to send their tickets earlier if a criticism is desired, especially as I make it a rule never to break an engagement. A musical evening may be established with the interests of so many to look after.

BERNHARD WALTHER BEFORE THE CAMERA CLUB.

An interesting and instructive illustrated lecture was given by Rev. Alfred Kummer of San Jose, at the Metropolitan Temple Friday evening of last week before the Camera Club, to an immense audience. The lecturer, an extensive traveler, was aided by most beautiful views, many of them exquisitely colored. Ripples of laughter greeted his many witty anecdotes that enlivened his description. During an intermission Bernhard Waltner, the Belgian violinist, rendered Austrian Hymn (Hydn), Elvez's dance (Bazzine), accompanied by Mrs. Larson, formerly Miss Shipley, who recently captured the last of the Klotz prize. Mr. Waltner met a tremendous reception, and it was a pity that he had not an opportunity of giving some of his very best work, but showed his wisdom in choosing selections calculated to please a mixed audience. In response to an encore, he rendered with great feeling and taste Raff-cavatina. Mr. Waltner is a worthy acquisition to our musical circles, and a clever performer. His wife, Lillian Waltner, an artistic vocalist and a very fascinating woman, has won the warm interest of John Marquardt among others, and was induced soon after her arrival here to accept an engagement of some weeks for the Saturday concerts at the Emporium. Last Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Waltner appeared at the vespers services at the Unitarian Church in Alameda, their violin and vocal solos being a treat to the congregation. To-morrow, Clement Rowlands, baritone, and Mrs. Ellen M. Drew contraduo, of Boston, will sing. Miss Elizabeth Westgate is organist and director.

GENERAL SHAFTER ENTERTAINED.

Prof. and Mrs. Lemmon of Oakland entertained a large number of the members of the Pacific Coast Press Association last Sunday, General Shafter being the guest of honor. Mrs. Lemmon graciously surrendered the key of her attractive home to Mrs. Sara Reamer, the president, who presided with her usual charming grace. A musical program—Beethoven Sonatas, Miss Agusta Fredericks; a Chopin waltz, Miss Vivienne Weekes, and some pretty Italian songs rendered in Madame Guido Spitzy's best style, was a feature of the evening. Among the guests were Gen. Shafter, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Howard Malcolm Tichnor, Msesdames Sara Reamer, Mary E. Hart, North, Alice Kingsbury Cooley, Gray, Miller, Marshall, Heintz, Mufke, M. B. Foster, Hibbard, Mat. Heyman, Wagner, Weekes, Willard, Mses Harriet M. Skidmore, Agusta Fredericks and others.

STUDIO ECHOES.

While calling at the studio of Mr. A. G. Coleman I had the pleasure of hearing Miss Eleanor Joseph, whose work interested me greatly, for I remember when she began her vocal studies not so very long ago, and she sings far better than some established concert vocalists. Her songs that morning were For the Sake of the Past [Matter] and the Ave Maria of Mascagni. She showed excellent method and every note was firm and smooth and her style good. Miss Joseph is also a pianist and appeared at the Laurel Club last week. This was an interesting meeting, the program including papers, Write me as one that loves his fellow-men, Mrs. Gardiner Randau, Poem [original] Mrs. Ella M. Sexton, Shakespeare's Chiosis, Mrs. S. H. Peart, and three charming ballads by Mrs. J. M. Pierce. Miss Jessie Foster, formerly of St. Louis, has reason to be very much encouraged by the increase of her vocal classes. She is an enthusiastic teacher and devoted to her work and so charming and lovable that she is fast winning friends.

Avis La Faille, formerly of the McKenzie Musical Society, and at present a pupil of Prof. Sawvall, sang at the Bush Street Theater on Wednesday evening.

Prof. Sawvall, known in Southern California, has located in San Francisco in a studio at 427 Sutter street. He tells me that he is very much encouraged with his classes in choral work and sight-reading, and hopes to be well established as a vocalist. Prof. Sawvall has a particularly fine voice, but has not yet appeared in concert in this city.

Some of the pupils of Roscoe Warren Lucy appeared at a recital given in Byron Mausy Hall a few evenings ago, which proved very interesting to those who have watched the progress of this popular master. The program was rendered by Misses Amy Nelson, Marie Weldon, Claire M. Cole, Zoe Darner, Pauline Pettis, Mabel McNally. The 1st Movement and 3rd Symphony (Beethoven) was played by Mr. Lucy, Miss Weldon, Miss Nelson and Miss Darner. The numbers were received with much interest and applause, and the vocal renditions of Miss Webster of San Jose were most enjoyable. Miss Webster has a rarely beautiful voice that will not doubt be of value in the musical world, for she is ambitious as well as talented, and has attracted the attention of judges of artistic excellence.

The Eclectic Club held a meeting at the residence of Miss Agusta Fredericks, 2117 Buena Vista avenue, Alameda, last week, when Miss Emma Mandreyer read anecdotes of famous composers. Mrs. Guido Spitzy Land and Miss Elma Weekes played some Chopin selections.

—Mary Frances Francis.

MUSIC IN GENERAL.

The Chicago orchestra, under the leadership of Theodore Thomas, has decided to decline the invitation of the directors of the Paris Exposition to attend that show in 1900. Thomas freely admits that the verdict in the Dreyfus case was responsible for his determination to remain away from the exposition.

George Edmunds is already thinking out a plan to send San Toy, his new Chinese opera, to the United States. The piece is playing to an enormous business at Daly's Theater in London, and will doubtless enjoy a run similar in duration and magnitude to that of The Greek Slave.

The Columbia is to offer a series of the heavier dramatic attractions for the next two months, and will follow it with Willie Collier in his new play, Mr. Smooth.

Top Notch Press Agent

Los Angeles has one of the best press agents in the country. He’s really too clever for the Los Angeles sphere, and he should be promoted to a managernship or be gobbled up by some New York production whose advantages as a money-drawer need to be proclaimed from the house tops. We refer to George Eby, whose good work has had much to do with the unprecendented success of the Orpheum at Los Angeles. Eby’s success in having the daily papers of his city publish his weird, interesting yarns concerning the theatrical people presented by Manager Bronson is wonderful. Seldom a day passes that he does not have a column or two in one or two of the Los Angeles dailies, and better yet his stories are bright and newy. Eby, of course, is a newspaper man. It is told on him that a few years ago, when he was political reporter on Gen. H. G. Otis’ paper, ‘The Time,’ he saw so much political roteness that he resolved to enter the ministry. As a preliminary step, however, and evidently to make sure of the world’s wickedness before adopting the pulpit, he became city editor of the ‘Record of Los Angeles.’

His unusual success as a newspaper man led to his acceptance of the press agency of the Orpheum, and thus the ministry lost a bright, energetic and wonderfully imaginative writer. The editor of the ‘Review’ has written for his picture, so that our readers may observe the likeness of a man who prefers the show business to leading people to righteousness. Eby would make a good theatrical manager, and we predict that he will yet be heard from in that capacity.

Young Salvini’s Widow

A sur was brought last week in Los Angeles that is interesting merely because the lady defendant is the widow of the Italian actor that, following in his father’s footsteps, held audiences spellbound by his genius. The plaintiff in the case is John S. Sampson, Jr., who is seeking to foreclose a mortgage against Mrs. Maud Dixon Salvini. It is alleged that on June 9, 1897, the defendant made her two notes for $1,600 each to E. S. Hubbard, and to secure their payment gave a mortgage on two small tracts of land at San Fernando. Hubbard assigned his interest to the plaintiff, who is seeking to recover $3,200, with 7 per cent interest and $500 as attorney’s fees.

The companies playing in the interior report unusual success. The return engagement of the Elieford Company at Vallejo was a big success. The Leslie Shirley and W. R. Dailey Company report immense business.

There was a Smith night at the theater in New York where Why Smith Left Home was playing, and every Smith in the audience received a souvenier.

MARY HAMPTON
Advance Agent's Trying Ordeal

"The most trying experience in my career," said Hank Johnson, the veteran theatrical advance man, "was a season I put in with a new author, who was taking out his own piece. He knew nothing about the details of the business and was as fearful of being hoonced as a green farmer on the Bowery. As a natural consequence he was continually upsetting their plans, and I had to make our tour about twice as expensive as it really should have been. Finally I grew so tired of the whole business that I took up a little writing and I carried along three cuts of different sizes that I paid to get into the paper. I collected $1000 on the scheme before he happened to turn over his assortment of pictures and look at the backs. He found the same section of reading matter on all of them, and concluded, to quote the letter he immediately wrote me, that he 'had been basely betrayed by one in whom he had trusted con fidently.' He also said that he had taken 'a serpent to his bosom.' The serpent, otherwise yours truly, was told to consider himself fired. No, my conscience never bothered me any. You see, I gave him at least $10 worth of pure joy with each of those fake clippings."

Always Playing Poker

Now that the original Bostonians are gradually losing member by member, as did the Boston Ideals from which they sprang, it might be interesting to recall how that organization became famous as the most noted card-playing organization from a theatrical point of view, in America. Mr. and Mrs. Barnabee, Tom Karl and his wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Stone were the heavy weights, and there were always sufficient small fry and outsiders on hand to make it the game interesting. Twenty-five cent limit was the Boston Ideal game—no more, no less. No possible circumstance could achieve a variation of this rule. So at twenty-five cent limit the Boston soliders spent their spare time nosing, noon and night—after the theater. They played in hotels, on the cars—everywhere in fact. Karl's variant and Miss Wright have been known to finish a game on the way to the theater in a back of the light car, man and all, playing dice. There was absolutely no end to the ideal poker-playing. Marie Stone used to tell an entertaining story of how she prevented a game on a train. Every one had been up late the night before, and she wanted her husband to get some sleep. Barnabee had purchased four nice new decks of cards, and while they were setting the table in the smoking-room of the sleeper, she asked the old gentleman to let her look at them. He did so, willingly enough, for he suspected nothing. Marie was in bed—that is, in her berth—and she monkeved with the four decks awhile, and then handed one of them back to Barnabee when he came for it, and said she hoped they'd have a pleasant game. The gentlemen retired and commenced operations. To every one's astonishment the first hand was what is known in poker parlance as a coker. Everybody wanted to raise, and when the preliminary raising was all done, Barnabee prepared to help the cards; nobody wanted any; everybody stood pat. There was general consternation, but every one had all he had. When it finally came to a showdown the strange fact was discovered that everybody had a club flush. Tom Karl was the biggest, and he wanted to take the pot, but a general kick was made and a further investigation instituted. Then the discovery was made that the entire deck was composed of clubs. Marie had taken all the clubs from the four decks. Barnabee went back to the sleeper and in a whisper asked the old gentleman if he had done it. She had done it, and the backs of the cards, to which a sleepy voice responded: 'They're out on the bench, twenty miles back by this time. Don't bother me now, I'm tired.' And the gentlemen of the Boston Ideal Company had no poker game on the cars that night.

"Dan" Godfrey, who has returned to London with his band from a tour of the United States, is quoted as saying: "We played lots of good music, but what Americans really want is some catchy tune with a swing. We would give Georgie Camp Meeting or a 'rag-time cakewalk,' and they would nearly tear down the place."

Lederer's Quotations will keep the hair healthy.

Some Prominent Actors

The New York Journal gives this list of actors, and tells what they were doing twenty years ago:

Ada Rehan appeared as Big Clemence in Augustin Daly's production of "Our American Cousin." Francis Wilson, then Frank Wilson, appeared as Tufts in An Unequal Match at the Chestnut Street Theater in Philadelphia.

John Drew was a member of the newly-formed Daly's Company.

May Irwin and her sister Flora were doing songs and dances at Tony Pastor's Theater on Broadway.

Stuart Robson and W. H. Crute were appearing in Our Bachelors.

Jennie Veenas was the Topsy in a revival of Uncle Tom's Cabin.

Rose Coghlan was appearing in Boucicault's drama, Rescued, at Booth's Theater.

Charles A. Stevenson, now Mrs. Leslie Carter's leading man, supported Kate Claxton in The Two Orphans.

Tony Pastor was singing ballads at Tony Pastor's Theater.

Maurice Barrymore was a member of the stock company at Wallack's Theater.

Nat Goodwin made a hit in Hobbies, at Haverty's Fourteenth Street Theater, with his impersonations of well-known actors.

Effie Shannon had been playing the part of Eva in Uncle Tom's Cabin.

E. M. Holland was at Wallack's.

E. H. Sothern was a member of his father's company.

Modjeska was drawing big houses at the Grand Opera House in East Lynne.

Charles Coghlan appeared at Wallack's as Dr. Featherstone in Sydney Grundy's play, The Snowball.

Sol. Smith Russell began his starring role in The Good Folk of the Fells.

Louise Beaudet was a member of Maurice Grau's French Opera Company, headed by Capoul, at the Fifth Avenue Theater.

Roland Reed was seen at Seraph in The Magic Slipper at Haverty's Fourth Street Theater.

Julia Marlowe was with a juvenile Pinafore Company.

Robert Mantell was in England, playing the leading roles in a company headed by Miss Wallis.

Cora Tanner appeared in The Danish Girl.

De Wolfe Hopper was playing a comedy part in Our Daughters, which was presented by the Criterion Comedy Company.

Oils Skinner was seen in Bronson Howard's Wives.

John T. Kelly, now with The Man in the Moon, was in Princess Caripollina at the Broadway Opera House.

Tony Pastor S. Digby Bell appeared in Charity Begins at Home at the Bijou.

Joseph Murphy was making his last appearance in Kenny Gw in the Grand Opera House.

Joseph Jefferson was, of course, playing Rip Van Winkle.

The Play Makers

Hugh Conway was an auctioneer, and he wrote Called Back. Therefore the fact that Michael Morton pursues the same delusive calling does not necessarily check any good opinions we may entertain about the play. A Rich Man's Son. Neither vocation nor avocation has anything to do with dressing anyone but a Mr. Mergans. Mr. Mergans was a school-teacher, yet he enriched our stage with Letterblair, and Loew's, a Wife. Henry Arthur Jones was a 'drummer' in the boot and shoe line, yet he evolved from Oxford ties and patent leathers, those worthy pieces, The Middleman, and Michael and His Lost Angel. William Shakespeare was a hostler, and he did tolerance well on the stage.

—New York Post.

Fatal Shooting

Robert Alexander Simpson, better known as Professor Simpson, was shot and mortally wounded late Thursday afternoon, Nov. 24, at St. Louis, in his dramatic agency and school, 1230 Olive street, by James T. Roberts, a lawyer. Roberts' wife, from whom he had lived apart for the last few months, took a stray shot from a stage craft from Simpson. Roberts tried in vain to persuade her to give up her lessons. Mrs. Roberts said that she had separated from her husband because of his extreme brutality. Simpson was the manager of half a dozen one-night stand dramatic companies.

The Perfect Play

There are two standards by which to determine the perfect play—the managers, the other the critics. Between these two the public very often has taken matters into its own hands and has settled the question finally by making a huge success of a piece that has been condemned equally by the critics or by the managers who put it on. For sometimes a manager is compelled by force of circumstances to produce a play that he does not think well of, simply as a stop-gap, to hold the attention until another and more worthy attraction is prepared. For a new author to deliberately plan to please both of these powers and incidentally to attract the popular favor is a very difficult thing to accomplish.

What are the attributes of the perfect play? Very few know, and those that do know would find it a very hard matter to explain. The manager to whom a new author appeals to produce his piece will reply, that a play to be successful must, of necessity, contain the proper elements of commercial business, as a beautiful painting is composed proportionately of lights and shades, and most particularly of a proportionate part of the one or one that may be made so. By this he means a subject that will either awaken the sympathies of an audience, or stir in them that will antagonize them. For to be very successful, it is wise sometimes to force the public to accept a play that for various reasons it may object to. In such cases, however, the venture—for all dramatic productions are speculations—would be purely a business rather than an artistic undertaking. As most new authors, however, are prone to sacrifice the peaks of the managers and critics to a desire for originality in their plays, this may account for the lifetimes of the few plays produced.

Of late years the popular fancy seems to run altogether to plays of a light and frothy nature, such as comedies of all kinds, farces and musical reviews. The reasons for this state of affairs are hard to determine though it is largely due, I think, to the poor quality of the serious plays presented for consideration. This view is greatly strengthened by the success attending the few serious plays that have been found worthy.

The expansion and development of vaudeville has also to a great extent militated against the chances of the legitimate drama. The success achieved in vaudeville by dramatic stars with dramatic trifles is, however, a certain indication of the permanency and stability of the dramatic taste in our people.

Again the practice of writing plays merely to exploit the talents of some particular player has also served to lessen the quality of our purely dramatic productions. While these star plays, as they are called, nearly always contain the dramatic essentials, still they are generally poor stuff on the stage but feebly to satisfy the desire for serious plays. However, with the return of the stock-company system in vogue now in most of our cities, it is not unreasonable to hope that there will ensue a most prosperous era for play-writing by new authors, and that before long the great expectancy of the American people will be reached by the production of the long-sought and eagerly-awaited great American play.

Joe Jefferson, M. D.

Who would ever think that Joe Jefferson was once almost dead with consumption? Certainly no one that has seen him in that likely dance that the curtain falls on the Cricket on the Heath. When Joe Jefferson was a young actor playing Asa Trenchard, nobody ever thought he would live out his engagement with the company for he was not only narrow-chested, hollow-eyed, and consumptive, but he had a bad cough and voice-begone expression that was painful to contemplate. Everybody about the stage liked him, and apprehensive of his early demise, accorded him every attention conducive to comfort. On the advice of hapless Mr. Macheth, he one day ordered a bottle sale and pill-box baihol and cutting loose from a chain of doctors and drug-stores, lost himself among the highlands of the Hudson, and began at once to get well. Between cold water, out-door exercise, nine hours of sleep, and a diet fit for an invalided monk, Mr. Jefferson is to-day, in view of his advanced age, a fine specimen of physical and mucosal vigor.

This week the California Theater very generously donated a box of evening performance to the Fruit and Flower Mission.

In Germany the performances commence generally at about 6 o'clock, and with only one lengthy wait they are, as a rule, over by 10:30.

WM. D. WATSON... EDITOR
CHAS. H. FARRELL... BUSINESS MANAGER
C. H. LOMBARD... SECRETARY AND TREASURER

Enrolled as periodical at San Francisco, Cal., as second-class matter October 3, 1896.

It seems that Manager Gratz thinks two weeks of grand opera enough for poor benighted, unappreciative Chicago, and says that smaller Milwaukee is willing to pay more money for operatic productions than the windy city. We are sorry for Chicago’s lack of grand opera appreciation, and think we can be pardoned if we toss a few floral tributes at ourselves, when we have recently stood for over fifteen weeks of a great and mental enlivenment, in the Tivoli productions, and are sorry it is all over.

A NEW FIELD of usefulness is evidentely opening for the female theatric celebrity, that of contributing to the big dailies, and there is no doubt that the “stories of their lives” would make interesting matter. Virginia Earle has lately written an article on the social status of actresses for the New York Telegraph, and Alice Neil- son came out in the World of the other day with a sketch of her stage career. We should advise them all if they desire to quit the legitimate to try vaudeville, as they will find that field far more remunerative than that of journalism.

Amy Castles is the latest Aus- tralian songbird, who promises to rival Melba. She was discovered in Bendigo, a small Australian town, and is said to possess a most marvelous voice. The people of the antipodes overlooked Melba on her first appearance when she sang with indifferent success at a slitting a head. They are not making the same blunder in regard to Miss Castles, for at a recent concert given by her before her departure for Paris they showed her with flowers and gifts of diamonds and money. The new singer is under the guidance of some Catholic priests who are her guardians. At Paris she has a most splendid Messeresi preparatory for her debut in opera.

Have you ever thought, asks a New York paper, of how many strong men and remarkable singers California and Australia have produced? Well, just do, and you will surely come to the conclusion that there must be something in the glorious climate idea after all, for the conditions are much the same in both. The air puts something of the blood, expands the lungs, affects the muscles and the brain, or has some other remarkable effect which goes to make fighters of the men and song-birds of the women.

Any theatrical manager will say that there is no theatre pittance of any kind, that our fairly good female singers in his company have from California, and some few are among the best on the light opera stage.

A grand opera class we have Sybil Sanderson, for whom so much was predicted before she met Antonio Terry. She is still in the heyday of her powers, and the announcement that she will once more go upon the stage gives hope that she may in the future do still greater things.

Then there is Ellen Beach Yaw, she with the freak voice, who has to have music written for her far beyond the range of ordinary mortals. Those who have heard her know her to be a marvel as well as a freak.

In this same class comes Ada Colley from Australia. It is the only other country to produce such a voice, and they are almost of identical quality, although Miss Yaw’s is of much greater power. It is remarkable that in this line of natural freaks, as well as in fighting, these two far-away lands should produce like quality.

In the grand opera line, too, Aus- tralia has been a good producer. Were it only for the name of Melba, that far-off land of strange things could never be spoken of lightly in the operatic line.

We have with us and all at once three plays of native manufacture. Shenandoah, In Old Kentucky and Yon Yonson, two dialect melodramas and one historical comedy.

Time was, and not so very long ago either, when three home-made pieces produced almost simultaneously in one city would be a surprising event in dramatic annals, but today it scarcely causes comment.

All of these pieces have been remarkably successful, and why—because they are essentially melodramatic, in other words unreal in construction. Especially is this true of the two dialect plays. The realistic drama, the problem play, and the society play enjoy their short runs, but the romantic and file of theater goers crow the play houses over and over again when the dear melodrama comes to town.

And all the time the bills and the advance agents continue to exploit the “realistic” stories in these unreal creations. “The realistic horse race,” the “realistic log jam,” the railroad train, and the “real” pickaninnny band. There is no doubt about the pickaninnys being “real.” They have their period in their lives, though the majority of them are big enough for ploughs now.

To attempt to point out the unrealities in the “realistic” scenes in these plays would be a wearisome task, but that they abound in grotesque variety is as true as that it is decidedly unreal to try to screen through主力 a window built through a window, as the railroad boarding house mistress does when in pursuit of the gallant Swede in Yon Yonson, or that Madge in Old Ken- tucky should not hear the report of the gun fired close to her mountain dwell- ing, but chases out in wild alarm when the dynamite is exploded.

As the head of the Jewish house wrote to his travelling salesman, “Vat we want is orders,” in melodrama, what the public wants is features. The language and the construction are secondary considerations. Dramatic situations are great things, but features are what make the melodrama go. The beat of the horses’ hoofs behind the scenes in Shenandoah, and the uniforms are “features” of that piece. The sight of the blue suit the heart, and the hoof-beats make the pulses throb in time. The log jam, the rail- road train, and Yonson dropping through the ceiling are “features” in the Swedish dramas, the pickaninnny band, the race, and the female jockey are “features” of In Old Kentucky, and these things the people are willing to pay their money to see, though most of them know all the time that they are but “glitter to catch the eye.” So to the aspiring playwright we would say, if you longs for the plaudits of the public let him construct a piece that is fairly coherent with a touch of heart interest, and if it lacks—congruity and plausibility it will go if loaded with features.

Fred Beckman, the genial advance man with In Old Kentucky, is jubilant over the immense business the popular piece has been doing at the New Alhambra. “Of course,” said he, “we expected a very successful engagement, but the first week exceeded our most sanguine anticipa- tions, and this week is a record-breaker. We have done our best business outside of New York right here at the New Alhambra.”

Aid the Charity Fund

The big show in aid of the players’ charity fund, under the auspices of the Associated Theatrical Managers, promises to be the great theatrical event of the season. It takes place Thursday afternoon, Dec. 14, at the Orpheum, and a monster program has been arranged for the occasion. In fact it will be the greatest bill ever offered in this city. Here is the list of attractions that will be presented, and no doubt the San Francisco public will be pleased in assisting in this worthy cause:

Frederick Warde and Company from the Columbia, the Frawley Com- pany from the California, an act of His Majesty from the Grand Opera House, a lively comedy from the Alcazar, Camille D’Arville, George Fuller Golden, and the cream of vaudeville from the Orpheum, an operatic surprise from the Tivoli, original productions from the Alhambra, Major Mite and big things from the Chutes, Cal Wilson and vaudeville lights from the Olympia. Curtain rises at 1 o’clock sharp; carriages at 4:30.

Box-seats, $5.00; all seats down stairs, $1; balcony, 50c and 25c.

Sale of seats will begin at the Or- pheu box-office Monday morning, Dec. 11, at 9 o’clock.

Death of Chas. Coghlan

CHARLES COGHLAN, the actor, who has been ill since October 30th, died November 29th, at Galveston, Texas, of acute gastritis.

Coghlan’s Royal Box Company played all through Texas with the Understudy as star, who impersonated the famous actor, apparently to the satisfaction of the public.

Coghlan was 56 years of age. He was of English and Irish parentage, being born in France. He early mani- fested a fondness for the stage and became an actor when a boy. He was educated for the bar, but never practiced his early profession. He was the author of several successful plays, among them being Jocelyn and The Royal Box. At the time of his death he had nearly finished his dramatiza- tion of Vanity Fair for his daugh- ter. The remains will be taken to Prince Edward Island, his summer home. The manager of the company has been instructed by wire to cancel all further engagements.

The advance sale of seats for Fred- erick Warde’s engagement begins Thursday morning at the box office of the Columbia Theater.

Hall Caine’s great play, The Chris- tian, is nearing the Coast, and local theater goers will soon have their first opportunity to see the production that has created so profound a stir every- where.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

Of a Personal Nature

Daisy Brogog replaces Edith Hall with the Von Yorson Company.

Marie Wainwright is appearing in the East in one of the Mile. Fifi companies.

Tod Sloan is telling friends in London that he will soon branch out as a theatrical manager.

Lily Glaser's voice has failed her and she will take a long rest. She has been playing Roxane to Francis Wilson's Cyrano.

Scott Seaton is a favorite of the critics, evidently, as they are very generally praising his acting in Harry Corson Clarke's company.

Phyllis Rankin, Macke Rankin's daughter, has sued a New York clubman $25,000 for saying he kissed her. The latest advertising dodge.

Francis Jolliffe is one of the numerous California people who will appear in David Belasco's coming production of Naughty Anthony.

Harry Woodruff, the blonde matinee hero, who was once engaged to Anna Gould, does a song and dance in Anna Held's play, Papa's Wife.

Hope Ross has been engaged to play an ingenue part in the play The Greatest Thing in the World, in which Mrs. Sarah Cowell Lemoyne will star early next year.

Miss Olive Oliver, the handsome young California actress, who is also known as the "best woman feuer in the United States," is with Richard Mansfield.

May Buckley, the original Alcazar Loey Tsing, in the First Born, plays the part of the Chinese widow in the London production of San Toy. The piece is a success.

Edgar Stillman Kelley, whose incidental music for big productions is world famous, has surpassed all his previous efforts in what he has written for Ben Hur. Mr. Kelley is a San Francisco boy.

Tyrode Power and his wife, Edith Crane, are going to Australia with Tress and incidentally Shakespeare. Mr. Power, it will be remembered, was once one of T. Daniel Prawley's shining lights.

Harry Corson Clarke is the friend of aspiring beginners in the historic firmament. He has just engaged Jane Plunkett for his Jones Company. Miss Plunkett is a dashing, rosy cheeked, Junoesque California beauty.

Mrs. Chas. H. Jones, wife of Stage Director Jones of the Grand Opera House, is a sister of Harry Corson Clarke.

Belasco's new comedy, Naughtv Anthony, will be produced in New York in January. Blanche Bates will be in the cast.

Chas. H. Hoyt is back again in New York, fully recovered in health, and busy putting the finishing touches to a new play which he will bring out next season.

Oscar Hammerstein, the indefatigable, is busy making plans for a new theater on West Forty-Second Street, near the Victoria. It will be ready for business in August.

Juliet Crosby as Fanny in Saints and Sinners, has one of the best make-ups ever seen on any stage. Her best friend would hardly recognize her from the front of the house.

Mary Linck and Rhys Thomas, favorites at the Tivoli last season, are singing in the Castle Square Company, St. Louis, and creating the same favorable impression their work met with here.

Frank De Camp and wife, of A Cheerful Little Company, were callers at the Review office Saturday. They reported that business has been very good and that Manager Gerard has a money winner in the farce.

Frank McGlynn, a California boy who has been playing Cardinal Richelieu in Under the Red Rose Company, has joined Henry Miller and will have an important part in Sydney Carton.

Mat Irwin's son failed to pass the examination at West Point. He was appointed a cadet by Congressman Jefferson M. Levy, on the recommendation of Mr. Croker and other Tammanyites. His mother is greatly disappointed over his rejection.

Charles Bryant, the Alcazar's clever stage director, is rehearsing the U. C. boys in their junior farce, James Wobberts, No. 1, S. S., written by Richard Tully. The farce is said to be exceptionally clever, and a couple of road companies are negotiating for it.

Through the death of J. C. Behlow last week, the prospects for the new theater on Geary street would seem to be less now than ever. Several attempts have been made by theatrical managers to have Mr. Behlow proceed with the construction of the theater, but there has always been a hitch.

Miss Kruger, the niece of Oan Paul, who is engaged at the Tivoli, recently received news that her father was wounded in the arm in one of the fights before Ladjysmith. He is a colonel in the Boer artillery.

Avedano and Salassa leave for Italy on December 5th, and will arrive in time to spend Christmas with their respective families. Avedano has an interesting household, or rather houseful, consisting of a wife and ten children.

A new song and chorus written by C. Harry Tebb is now in course of publication. It is dedicated to the Press Club, and was suggested by the club motto, which is a good one by the way, and runs as follows:

"Let the world slide
Let the world go
A fig for a care
And a fig for woe."

Tom Greene scored an immense hit in Cavalleria Rusticana the other night, by singing the drinking song in Italian in response to an encore. The Latin element in the Tivoli audience showed their appreciation by repeated bravos, and the popular young tenor was forced to again respond.

Anna Held has surprised New York audiences by mastering English in a remarkable short space of time, and besides has developed into a very good emotional actress. She has evidently graduated from the "come play wiz me" school, as her dramatic work is highly commended by the New York critics.

Camille D'Arville, the ex-opera prima donna now playing an engagement at the Orpheum, is said to be one of the highest-priced people in the vaudeville. The operatic ranks are being depleted by singers going into this popular form of entertainment, for it means more money and less work.

According to the New York Dramatic News, George Wessels, a former California favorite, has made the hit of his life as Prof. Moriarity in Gillette's play of Sherlock Holmes, now playing in New York. Wessels was always a conscientious actor, and this metropolitan opportunity seems to have been all that he needed to bring him into the first rank as a character delineator.

Elsie Mortimer is a familiar name to Eastern opera-goers. She was a great favorite with Emma Abbott, and for some time sang with her organization. Miss Mortimer later sang with several English companies with marked success. Her voice is a fine dramatic soprano, and she possessed a lansbome face and figure. She has made a distinct hit in the Hoocl in the Tivoli this week. She will play at the Hotel Turvey and Turvey with those of the features of the exposition. The plans are now being designed by a Russian architect.

Muriel Bailey who went to the Philippines as a correspondent will tell her recollections of Aguinaldo and others at the First Presbyterian church, Oakland, next Thursday.

Ida Wyatt, the soubrette and premier dancer, will join the Tivoli forces soon. She is at present composing and arranging the ballets for the Christmas piece to be given at that house.

Miss Julia Cotte, who appeared at the Elks' benefit, scored a decided hit with her clever specialty. This little lady has a bright future before her, as she possesses a pretty voice, and has an abundance of chic and vivacity.

Frank Curtis, who was manager for Clay Clement on his last tour, has a severe accident last week. A small alcohol lamp exploded in his face and burned him severely, he being extremely lucky not to lose his eyesight.

Fred Beckman, of the In Old Kentucky company looks with envy upon the commercial cars in which Richard and Fringle's Georgia Minstrels are transported around the country. "If I only had something of that sort," said Fred, "my troubles would all be over. The hardest job I have when striking a town is to find a stable for my picanninies."

Vladimir De Pachmann, the great Russian pianist, will be heard in three recitals at the California Theater on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons, Dec. 26, 28 and 29. His Eastern tour is arousing a tremendous furor in musical circles, and wherever he is heard, the press is most lavish in praise of his wonderful performances. Prices will range from two dollars down.

Side Lights

There will be a double orchestra next week at the Alcazar during the run of Mother Earth.

Following Richard and Pringle's original Georgia Minstrels, the Black Pattie Troubadours will appear at the New Alhambra.

Manager Ellighouse, of the New Alhambra Theater, has been awarded the Pacific Coast rights for the new Vitagraph pictures of the Jeffries-Sharkey fight. The film is the longest ever made, being fourteen miles in length and taking two and a-half hours to operate. The pictures are said to be the best ever taken of a pugilistic event.

Occasional Correspondents and Managers Out-Of-Town

Should remember that all copy for the Review, except from our regular staff, must be in the office not later than Wednesdays of each week for publication. Have it reach the Review Wednesday afternoon.
The artistic singing and acting of Annie Litcher, Julie Cotte, and Charlotte Beckwith, Caroline Knowles, and of Alfred Carr, Mrs. McFadden, Miss Col- lian Schuster, J. Fogarty, Fred Kavanagh and Tom Greene, will make this opera a most remarkable one, and will start the comic opera ball rolling merrily.

A Chat with Mary Hampton

Mary Hampton, the Sporting Duchess, the giver of tips and wearer of loud plaid, faces the public, to-night, in a straight line by seven Southern ministers! Not remotely, but even unto the brother of her father. A seven generations fight against "the world, the flesh and the devil" for this! Seven moves to lose a Queen. That's bad playing, isn't it?

Though they are gone, perchance their echoes still remain, in various corners of the earth, where I have read, that, in her choice of profession, she has never been godly nor consistent. I am almost afraid she would want to be under the circumstances. The middlesman Southern Southern of her day, to whom I filled with yawns they must have been.

Tis a mighty good thing, neverthe- less, that she's born right, and a lock- ward look at fit ancestry is both con- soling and strengthening. Moral training of the old time sort, that stands a woman upon the texts but does not actually root her there is so needful in our day. The world above-said to those whose spin might think. Vis-avis with Miss Hampton one finds oneself: con- versing freely and comfortably with an intelligent and fascinating companion.

"Why did you choose the profes- sion?" I asked, trying to fix her jacket in my eye for future shopping purposes.

"It was of my choice. I stepped from convent to stage, meaning to be a comedienne. Why? Because I had rather laugh than cry, and Mr. Frohman wouldn't have it. Not because I could not do comedy work, but I could not do serious work and there was a demand, just then, for costume play.

"My first part was Little Eva in — anything but that — you should have known better.

"So did. You chose a bad mo- ment to interrupt. I was Little Eva in The Private Secretary with Gil- lette, Saved!

Most interviews are such hurry-ups. Miss Hampton seemed so leisurely and restful, though I don't suppose she had a moment to spare. A gen- tle courtesy is part of the woman. It could not but be so. I was ad- dressed to hear her say, 'Come out into my garden, while I gather you a bunch of roses.'

She made her first hit in Boston in Sowing the Wind, and so she loves town and play. Just a natural, you know.

Because of this, she has built her own home.

Yes, Sowing the Wind is a beauti- ful play, but it continued, "but I should really love, once again to play Nell Carl in The Great Metropolis.

The remarkable reason of grand opera which this city has witnessed, will close at the Tivol Open House, this evening with performance of Cavalleria and Pagliacci and the fare- well of Signors Salassa and Aveino tomorrow night, in Othello. Next week the Tivol will be closed for five nights for re-decorations and repairs, and will re-open for the regular season of comic opera, on Saturday evening, under the attraction of two well known comic opera, Tar and Tartar. The production will signal the début of Harris Irwin, San Francisco's own favorite comedian and Annie Myres, the clever soubrette.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

THE COLUMBIA

Shenandoah, revived with all the splendor possible to give it, is crowding the Columbia Theater nightly. Staged by Mrs. Alfred Carr and lav- ish manner, it may be truthfully said to have added to its great record of success. A.T. Hankin, General Manager and Emmons and Emmons are three of the cleverest comedians in the country. The cast is perfect. Old Kit, Old Doc, is one of the best things ever produced in America and is one lone cyclone of fun and frolic. The Tennis Trio con- sists of two young men and a pretty girl. Their specialty is club swing- ing and they are said to be the very best in the business. Jesse Millar is a musician of note who promises to teach her audiences a few things about the cornet. The holedowns are Cam- file D'Arville, A. D. Robbins, Pete Baker, Signor Alhimi and the Ida Breh. Matinees Wednesday, Satur- day and Sunday.

THE CALACAZAR THEATER

Saints and Sinners will close with Sunday evening's performance to be followed by a production of Francis Power's, (author of First Born) new play, Mother Earth. The initial pro- duction of this play will be preceded by a catchy one-act farce adapted by Chas. Bryant, enti- tled but to be announced.

Mother Earth is a play which deals with Mexican life. In plot it is a serious matter. Miss Eliza R. Brion and Thall have carefully attended to every detail for the perfect production of the play, and success is assured to the pleasure of the many friends of Francis Powers. Emile Brugurie, Jr., has arranged the music, and a double orchestra will embellish the play.

THE ORPHEUM

The Orpheum management has for next week one of the greatest bills ever presented in San Francisco. Camille D'Arville is retained and at the head of the newcomers is George Fulker Golden, the King of Mon- ologue song. Golden needs no intro- duction to San Francisco folks. He is always original and his great talent as an entertainer will insure him a place among the Emmons. Emmons and Emmons are three of the cleverest comedians in the country. Though the cast is not quite up, Old Doc is one of the best things ever produced in America and is one lone cyclone of fun and frolic. The Tennis Trio con- sists of two young men and a pretty girl. Their specialty is club swing- ing and they are said to be the very best in the business. Jesse Millar is a musician of note who promises to teach her audiences a few things about the cornet. The holedowns are Cam- file D'Arville, A. D. Robbins, Pete Baker, Signor Alhimi and the Ida Breh. Matinees Wednesday, Satur- day and Sunday.
The California

The Frawleys opened their third months winter season Sunday night with a play new to San Francisco—an out and out melodrama—The Sporting Duchess. The piece is superbly mounted, the women beautifully gownned and the ensemble effects are distinct triumphs of stage craft. As is to be inferred from the title, the Sporting Duchess deals with elements of racing in high life, disclosing a couple of family entanglements and mis-ununderstandings through the machination of the villain, [who was so thoroughly good as to be bowed by the galleys], and the love trials of several confiding hearts. The play itself in no way tests the merits of those interpreting it, but served forthwith to remind one that Manager Frawley's present organization is one of great strength, acting together exceedingly well. The cast was a long one and fairly glorified with good people. Frawley, Mary of Desborough, gave an impersonation full of quiet dignity and intelligence and leaves one with the impression that there is much in the opinion that he will before a great while take rank with the four or five great leading men of the country. Hazel Davidson is a naturally pleasing personality to the exigencies of his part, as the villainous Major Mostyn, with the result of frequent hisses from the critics in the gallery. Such being the verdict, from which we are inclined to think it is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Reynolds carried out the author's conception of the part perfectly. In later productions, the public will see him in more pleasing characters, and from reports we may expect much from him. Wallace Shaw, well known as an actor of ability, was Col. Donnelly; Harry Duffield, Captain Fred Chisholm, and Frank Mathieu, as Rupert Leigh showed marked improvement in his work since his début of little more than a year ago. J. R. Amory furnished the comedy element, in the role of Dr. Streatchfield, A. M. S., retired, and had several humorously entertaining scenes with Miss Hampton and Pearl Landers. Mr. Amory is one of the effortless comedians, who create a most genial feeling between actor and spectator and is a valuable member of any company. Theodore Hamilton was Joe Aylmer, the trainer, and presented a picture of the sturdy, honest family retainer, whose reverence and devotion to the horse, Desborough could not be swayed, with a fidelity that made his assumption probably the most striking of the numerous characters well handled.

Mary Hampton, one of the most beautiful women on the stage, recalled, principally, for an exceptional success in Under the Red Robe, presented at the Baldwin a few years ago, was the Sporting Duchess, Her Grace of Milford, and if every gentleman of Briton dressed as well, looked the thoroughbred so completely and created the good impression made by Miss Hampton, then across the water would dwell a race of most fascinating women.

Speaking of fascinating women [and they are Frawley's stock-in-trade] brings us to Mary Van Buren, who was the great surprise of the evening in a really brilliant, living, characterization of the adventures, Vivian Darville. Miss Van Buren has laid aside the passiveness that used to distinguish her, she has added vima and earnestness, has developed a spontaneity and readiness that will soon be recognized as qualities of one of the foremost of our connotations. Pearl Landers, grown into a young lady now, made a very charming Annette Donnelly, in love with the doctor. Phosa McAllister, a great San Francisco favorite, is still with the company and has the small part of Mrs. Donnelly, while Marian Harraway, was an acceptable Countess of Desborough. Little Gladys Weller deserves mention, too, for presenting a picturesque and pleasing little Lord.

The Alcazar

It is seldom that any stock company gives such a finished performance of a difficult play, even down to the most minute points as was the Alcazar the past week. Each and every character hit in the piece is a gem in its way, and were in hands that were well able to care for them. Eugene Ormonde played Jacob Fletcher, an aged minor, with great discretion, and the characterization is one of the best things he has done here. In the pathetic portion his voice was extremely tender, and he sunk his personality completely in the part. This is a piece of emotional acting as the tearful, erling heroine. Frank Denithorne is at his very best in such characters as Ralph Kimball, and George Webster outdid himself as Capt. Eustace Fanshaw. Frank Opperman, the new acquisition to the Alcazar forces, made a most auspicious beginning as Lot Bardon. Carlyle Moore, Josephine Mountain, Everett Howitt, John Torrente, Marie Hove, Juliet Crosby and Maggie Francis Levey extracted from several parts every ounce that was in them. To repeat, the show is one any stock company might well be proud of. The piece was, as usual at this house, extremely well staged.

The Colonial

Branson Howard's great and realistic war play, Shenandoah, has been the Columbus's offering this week, and this splendid play of American war time has again drawn crowded houses to witness the stirring scenes depicted. Jacob Litt, in presenting Shenandoah this time, has added greatly to the spectacular effects, and if the play has lost something in the quality of the actors presenting it, in comparison of the companies playing it, the production has improved the vivid stage pictures and the general sameness of the production. Robert Low, as Col. Kerchival West, was a good looking, manly, dashing hero, and made a good impression. Louis Hendricks, as General Buckthorn, was exceedingly good as the bluff and blustering old general, and Col. Turner, Sergeant Kibbee, the Hibernian, who was the last to see Col. West at the battle of Cedar Creek, gave all a not quite capable, the cleverest performance of any of them. The role of Jenny Buckthorn fell to Julia Bachelder, and to her must be given credit for a most delightful performance, quite the best given by any of the feminine contingent. Estelle Dale was Gertrude Ellingham, Alice Neal Madeline West, and Caroline Franklin Mrs. Gen. Haverhill. The balance of the cast was in fine form, and Shenandoah is a play that will not for a long time lose its interest, and the present production is well worth going. The marshaling of the retreating troops across the stage, the firing of the troops and the garrisons contributed to a most exciting picture of actual warfare. The play runs for another week and is sure of a large attendance.

Grand Opera House

Rice's world famous and beautiful extravaganza, Evangeline, has had a good run at the Grand Opera House again this week. Monday evening a fine audience greeted this favorite production. The company was in fine form and entered into the fun with enthusiasm. Evangeline [Edith Mason] and Gabriel [Hattie Belle Ladd] was so sweetly given that recalls were in order. Hattie belle Ladd was in unusually good voice and her prison song gave unembellished pleasure. Welford Griffith as Catherine carried off the honors. William Wolf, Arthur Woorley, Bessie Fairbairn and George Cooper were all received with enthusiasm. Thos. H. Pensey, after a few weeks' absence for rest and recreation appeared in the guise of a rollicking, roaring Irish boy and gave some delightful Irish melodies. Kathleen Macarreni especially touched the hearts of the audience, who applauded him to the echo. There was an extra matinee on Sunday evening.

New Alhambra

Is Old Kentucky is on for the second week in this house. The melodrama of an enjoyable type is received with enthusiasm every night of the week and it is quite likely that the New Alhambra has presented to the play-going public of San Francisco another new management is helping to make this well located theater more popular. The Pickinny Band is still the hit of the play, with its specialties and fun. The colored boys are good dancers and carry the house.

In Old Kentucky is such a favorite that it could well run another week successfully, but Sunday afternoon is the last performance. Sunday evening the new favorite's, Mr. Plater of Paris, will be presented.

The Tivoli

The BOOHLAH, presented at the Tivoli this week, is a Persian Operetta which, with its many comic situations, lively music and dancing, proved very pleasing and afforded many opportunities for fun. Phil Branson sustained the comic role of Hodiah-Goudal, the Hodiah. Elsie Mortimore made her first appearance before a Tivoli audience Monday night and she certainly demonstrated that she has an excellent voice and possesses the requisite talent to be once welcomed as a favorite. Ada Palmer Walker as Namouna, was at her best. Alf. Wheelan, as Salameek, is as usual with him, did the comic to the delight of all. Tom Greene the handsome Prince Tarpid, with tenor voice, the Governor of the Province and William Schneider, Moka the Cali, were splendid.

The stage settings and management as usual with productions at the Tivoli, were thoroughly good, and the Hodiah filled in very acceptably the week before the second millions began with the advent of Ferris Hartman, Saturday night, December 9th.

Tuesday evening was given over to the Masked Ball and the season of Grand Operas will conclude Saturday night with the double bill, Cavalleria and Pagliacci, rendered in superb style.

Correspondence and Comments of Interest

NEW YORK

Special Correspondence

New York, Nov. 26—Miss Mrs. Kendal's return to America was last week's novelty in theatrical circles. The Elder Miss Blossom at the Knickerbocker Theater is the name of the new play with which they sought to renew their vague here as they did in England. The Elder Miss Blossom Mrs. Kendal has a role in which she has advanced her age in fiction to what she looks in fact. This was a wise move, for it did not compel the audience to pass a matronly looking woman for a young girl, as we were compelled to do when the Kendals were here last time in The Second Mrs. Tanqueray. As Dorothy Blossom, Mrs. Kendal exacts the part of a middle-aged spinster, not one of those old maids on the stage put there for the purpose of provoking laughter; but a mature woman who had had a recent and decent love affair. The story is simply that of Mr. Quick (Mr. Kendal) falling in love with young Miss Blossom and addressing a letter to Miss Dorothy Blossom the same he saw on a handkerchief which she dropped. It turned out that Miss Dorothy Blossom was the Elder Miss Blossom—there you are. The plot has been used over and over again with variations in force comedy. It was suggested for Mrs. Kendal to invest such a story with tragic interest and a happy ending.

Richard Mansfield, the real thing in Caroline, was there last week at the Garden Theater and got a warm reception. Mansfield has made a number of changes in his Cyrano cast since it was seen here last Winter. Katherine Grey has taken the place of Margaret Anglin as Roxane, and Prince Lloyd and Sheridan Block now play the Parts of Christian and the Comte de Balfe respectively, instead of William Courtenay and Arthur Forrest.

Clay M. Greene, formerly of San Francisco, is the author of a clever burlesque on William Gillette's Sherlock Holmes, which is at the Garrick. Greene's burlesque is at Koster & Bial's. Among the hits at Sherlock Holmes' eye and giant brain, the burlesque says when the theater is dark: "I can see that every seat not taken is unoccupied." And later he says that he knows a certain thing is sure to happen because he is the author and he wrote it so.

The biography pictures of the Jeffries-Sharkey fight are being shown at the New York York. With the exception of the last half of the last round the pictures are genuine. The photographic films ran out at the critical period and a sham part of the twenty-fifth round had to be taken. One of the humors of the situation is that although Jeffries was cut in the face and Sharkey looked as though he had been run over by a slaughter house wagon, when Sharkey was photographed the pictures he exclaimed: "There now! Can you see where I got the worst of it? I should at least have been a draw. But I won." That's about what Sharkey said when a blow from Fitz in the eight round brought up the curtain at the Cyclone's Pavilion in San Francisco; and what he said when, after Corbett punched him all around the ring in this city Corbett lost on a foul because his own second jumped into the ring in the ninth round. In view of Sharkey's many unearned victories, Jeffries, the loser, was justified in feeling that he had a decision over the sailor, notwithstanding that Sharkey retired with a broken rib and wasn't able to box for two weeks.

Alice Nielsen in her fifth week at the Casino in The Singing Girl has no cause for complaint. Her stay at the comedy opera has been a financial success and an artistic triumph. The music by Victor Herbert and the story and lyrics by Harry B. Smith and Stanislaus Stange are not any too good, but as a complete comic opera organisation the Alice Nielsen Company is the best bid for public patronage which has been seen at the Casino for many years. In all probability we may look for a long time before we see in comic opera any better than is the best here. The New York Times, writing of the production, was soothly to sing any better than Cowles, he would of course be drawing a larger salary in good opera. And as long as such is there any trace of the human being in a prima donna, it is not likely we shall see in her support any better second woman than Ladilea Wilkins.

The other one Jessie Bartlett Davis in the same company. The fact that Miss Davis got along better than anybody else as her alternate in the Hootonians for three years, but did not like the success of Miss Nielsen in the same company, enabled Miss Nielsen to retain Mrs. Davis' former alternate without any fear of dangerous rivalry. Richie Ling is & as what he has to do well enough. Of the three comedians, John C. Slavin has one of the best natural tenor voices on the stage, and although he makes no pretense to cultivation as a singer, his voice, barring a slight mustiness, is most pleasing and stands out in agreeable contrast in anything in which he is concerned. So much for the singer's who support Miss Nielsen. As for her own share in the comedian's role she may be quickly said that she has improved since she appeared here last year in The Fortune Teller. Perhaps her study in Europe did it. Perhaps she has learned from that great teacher— the public. But at all events, although her voice has no more volume than before, is in a higher stage of development, and her youthful appearance and winsome ways have not failed to charm the fickle, which we have to expect from one of her few years on the stage. The scenery and costumes were much more elaborate than the stage musical direction faultless, so that with such a splendid ensemble if the California favorite does not establish herself as a great comic opera in this country it will be her own fault, for never has any young woman of her experience had better opportunities to display her abilities. It is to be hoped that Manager Frank L. Perley will revive The Fortune Teller for a few weeks before the close of Miss Nielsen's engagement at the Casino to give us a chance to see exactly how well she will play the part and her appearance in that open last year.

Henry Miller has gone on the road with The Only Way, a powerful play made out of circumstances and the life of The Cities. Mr. Miller, as Sydney Carton, the lawyer who made such sacrifices for the husband of his beloved woman, had of course to get beheaded in the last act, and that was something of a disappointment to the matronly girls who always like to see Mr. Miller in some play which "ends well." But the dramatist was too faithful in following Dickens to permit of any such perversion. Dickens, like Shakespeare, is a story teller and does not always let things turn out but like they should, because he stuck very closely to the truth. And the truth in the days of the French Revolution was often led to the gallows. The Only Way, although an interesting dramatization of a part of The Tale of Two Cities, is not "the only way" in which that particular story by Dickens may be worked into a play. As I read the story, after seeing the play I could not help thinking what a wealth of unused material still waited in that story for a good dramatist. In the version in which Mr. Miller appears there are many strong situations, such as the trial scenes in the Court of the Republic, which condemned the heads of aristocrats with such relish. But it will take another play to bring out many more of the same stirring scenes painted by the great novelist. Some dramatist, a follower of Henry George perhaps, will take A Tale of Two Cities one of these days, and he will use the force of the plot and the dramatic interest of Dickens collected in his story, to weave into a play which will make vacant lots out of the common plank on the play. The Republican citizens sliced off the heads of the French monopolists. But the dramatist of The Only Way was in not too deep to the subject at the present time, because what is not understood by the people in general would not be popular, and therefore would not succeed. There is no doubt whatever that Mr. Miller will be a great success in The Only Way and he will be a great service to the country as a part of his repertoire to California next summer.

Among The San Franciscoans in the cast of David Helayo's new farce, Naughty Anthony, are Blanche Bates and Frances Jolliffe. It will open in Washington next month. I often wonder whether Miss Frances Jolliffe is as conscious on the stage as her beautiful sisters who stayed home and married well. Once I when I entered upon her at Yasser College, she said she would never get to the reached the top of the ladder. Then she might retire. But suppose she should marry to become a play as Mr. Julius Arthur is? Then she might continue starring with her husband's consent and continue instead of in opposition to his wishes as was the case with Blanche Bates.

The Actor's Fund Benefit entertainment realized $1,500. The drawing magnet was Sir Henry Irving. When Irving was here before on Christmas, every member of his regular company took a personal check as a token of his regards, and even every extra man and woman in the company got a good-sized extra bill in the salary envelope for that day. Ellen Terry's contribution to the Actors' Fund at the benefit was in keeping with the generosity of the distinguished English tragedian. And to think he is not going to get to San Francisco this year. It's too bad that he is not going to land on Christmas.

Several of the daily newspapers of this city have said that Maud Lillian Berri of San Francisco is the most promising soprano that the Castle Square Company here has had for some time. She made her initial performance last week with that company, in Lucia.

CARSON

Special Correspondence

Carson, Nev., Nov. 27—You Vosun Company played here last night a far a good house, and gave a good performance. Played in Virginia City the 15th, and Reno the 23rd.

Breach of Promise played here last night to a fair house. The play is of the vaudeville type, but every one in it is an artist. They play at Virginia City the 2nd, and Reno the 23rd. I hear that Gorton's Minstrels are heading this way. Hope it is true, as I am sure they will have a packed house every town on this circuit.

The Nevada State Band of Carson have been engaged to render music for the Golden Jubilee at San Jose. The Band will be made up principally of musicians from Virginia, Reno, and Winnemucca.

ST. LOUIS

Special Correspondence

St. Louis, Nov. 23—Olga Northrop's saucious production of Sappho at the Olympic Theater last week certainly created a sensation. The daily papers handled the production as they should, condemning the impropriety of the play. Sappho is certainly the most immoral play ever offered respectable audiences. In a line, nothing is left to the imagination.

Manager Pat Short is offering us A Runaway Girl at the Century this week. It is an operatic comedy worthy of merit. In the cast are James Powers, Rachel Booth, Ethel Jackson, May Baker, Van Renzelaer and a chorus of fifty girls, the majority of whom could capture purses at a beauty show. Joseph Jefferson, like Christmas, comes to us once a year, and he is still appreciated by the theater-goer as much as a child is entertained to Santa Claus.

Managers Tate and Middleton are giving their patrons a new farce comedy, Who Is Who. It is in the style of Hoyt's farces, but it is useless to say not so clever.

Jolietie Bennett, the clever comedienne, assisted by Willis Swoztew, Nellie O'Neill, Harry Loddle, Tony Melhous, James R. Smith and Oscar Figman are at Halvins in Blane's new farce, A Feminine Drummer.

Pat Flynn's biggest sensation show is pleas-the guests at Manager Bolter's Standard Theater.

Digby Bell heads the list of vaudevilleans at the Columbia this week. Other features are Sam, Kitty and Clara Morto, Whitney Brothers and James McAvoy.

Hopkins & Estey Piano Company is magnificently doing The Silver King this week. The scenic effects are superb. The vaudeville features are a Hawkins troupe who have been singing to packed houses. Mr. Southwell has made legions of friends in St. Louis. There is plenty of chance in their true native style, and Charles A. Lord and Otto Kem- mendorf.

C. M. Southwell of the Castille Square Opera Company is delighted with the success his magnificent lyric organization is receiving in St. Louis. They have been singing to packed houses. Mr. Southwell is the man to do it. Martha is the bill this week with Adelaide Norwood and Alma Powell alternating as Martha, Mauve Lambert and Mary Luck singing Nancy, and Miro Delamita and Rhyys Thomas as Lionel. New and the Castilles sing Margery.

Anthony Hope's two novels, Rupert of Hentzau and Phroso, are underlined next week at the Century and the Fox. James K. Hackett as Rupert, and Odette Tyler in Phroso.

W. H. West Ministrels, with Joe the contra tenor, Carroll Johnson, Tom Lewis and Fred Warren, are the Thanksgiving offering at Havil's.

A Wine Guy comes to the Grand next week, and Sam Devere and his torrid bar- beques are at the Standard.

Lawrence Hanley leaves for the coast next week to play a six weeks' engagement in Frisco. It is entirely recovered from his recent illness and is eager to be back on Market street.

Emma Nevada sings at the New Odeon next Friday night.

Mainly because of the success of Hopkins' Theater is in Syracuse, New York, visiting his wife. GAVY PALLEN.

DENVER Special Correspondence

DENVER, Colo., Nov. 27.—As usual, the Taber, Lyceum and Denver Theaters opened to packed houses Sunday night, the 8th. And yet there is some talk of trying to close the theaters by the 8th, but I think that is where it will end, in "talk."

Frederick Warde and his excellent company of legitimate actors, began a season's engagement at the Broadway on Monday night, opening with Henry Guy Carleton's play, "The Girl of the健康的," which had an excellent performance of Paul Di Navarre; the supporting company was good throughout, Miss Titillie being especially clever. CRANBURY, N. J., Nov. 27.—Is Mrs. Maud Gore, the house manager, when Miss May Warde were entertained on Tuesday afternoon, by the Jewish Women's Club of Rahway.

Douglas Fairbanks, a Denver boy, is now a manager of Warde's company. Bill, who for a number of years has led Lincoln J. C. Currie around the country, is abroad of Alfred's Midstrels. I understand that our neighbor across the Colorado, Springs, is to have a new Opera House in the near future. The students of the Broadway Dramatic School will be seen in the new act comedy, "Confusion," on December 5th.

Your correspondent, who has one of the most distinguishable signs of profession of the New York papers, America, received last week an excellent photograph of Sir Henry Irving, made quite fresh by Hiller of London, and I bear the esteemed actor's own autograph.

Pacific Coast Correspondence

LOS ANGELES Special Correspondence

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 26.—This being Thanksgiving week, the various places of amusement have their own ideas. It is to be said that the managers and professional people located in this city passed the holidays in the proper manner, and there were no complaints of thanks to the kind fates which have so far this season smiled on the business in Los Angeles, and incidentally to request their leave this city on next year’s smiling list.

Salal, the violinist, who has been delighting the tephensian audiences, is taking a short rest in this city, and will visit several of the surrounding towns before taking up her work again.

The Frawley Company, when they play their return engagement here in April, will not be at the Barbary Coast, but will play at the Los Angeles Theatre. This appears to be a good move on the part of Manager Wyatt, and, if successful, a step in the proper direction, as it will probably be played at popular prices. Manager Morocean has an Oct 1 Off tour, and looks on his face, while, when interpreted, means there will be something doing at his play-house in April.

El Samna, one of the leading ladles of the city, when she comes to Los Angeles Company, is a Los Angeles girl, and, like the rest of them, is surely making a record for herself, and creating new limits of beauty.

The stage carpenters and scenic artists of the Barbary Theatre have been busy enlivening the past four weeks completing the scenery for the Nance O’Neill engagement. George Bell, one of the best artists in San Francisco, has been brought down here to help in the work.

A small fire started in the Barbary Theatre the 29th inst., and about $500 worth of damage. The origin of the fire is unknown, but the rumor has been set about that a spark of Frawley’s genius had been burning to Morocean’s plans for next April, and in its endeavor to get out of earshot of the Los Angeles fire, fell into a box at the Circle Theatre, with some of the Cumberland 61 threat varnish, and spontaneous combustion ensued.

Los Angeles is enjoying the novelty of having two pieces by the same author played at different theaters at the same time—Thursday and Friday at the Los Angeles Theatre, and What Happened to Jones at the Barbary. George H. Broadway is the author of both.

The Universal Encyclopaedia of Music is the title of a book recently completed by Adolphus Willard of this city. The most wonderful thing about the work is that it has taken forty years to complete it.

The Los Angeles Theatre, Why Smith Left Home, was playing good houses November 30, December 1-2 and will be followed, 4-5-6, by Frederick W. Robertson’s play, A Lion’s Mouth.

The Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, under the management of Mr. J. C. Nelson, gave their customary concert of the season, at noon of December 1, which was largely attended and judged from the sale of seats, was a very successful concert.

At Monaco’s Barbary Theatre, Harry Cronin, noted London, England, actor, playing What Happened to Jones to the house, read the S. R. O., sign, sightly. After a week’s successful engagement the play has again blossomed out with its former playground. Next week Nance O’Neil and her Company complete their engagement with Maggins. 3-4-5-6 and Pig Warlings.

The Orpheum has one of the finest bills ever presented here, and the attendance is up to the high water mark. Manager Bronson is doing extensive advertising, and that it pays is proven by the patronage his Theatre receives. The bill includes Margaret Cortielle, Ryn and Richardfeld, Cherilmie Simpson, Jerome and Alger, Grogan and Davies, Bing, Rudy Roland and Leo Carle.

HERBERT L. CORNISH

OAKLAND Special Correspondence

OAKLAND, Nov. 29.—Oakland has had a week of successful attractions in the shape of live. Nance O’Neill closed one of the most successful engagements in the history of the Macfieborough Theatre last Saturday evening.

The play was given away at all the performances. Miss O’Neill returns in about six weeks for an engagement before leaving for Australia. On Monday and Tuesday evenings of this week Why Smith Left Home was the attraction and did a fairly good business. The company contained all the common people, among them Lottie Williams, who three years ago was sonorete of the company and Thedie, her friends, had not forgotten her and she received a hearty welcome.

The season opens at the Macfieborough this evening for two nights and a special Thanksgiving masque. Business promises to open strongly. The advance is good. In Old Kentucky comes December 4th for another, to be followed by L. R. Stockwell, the popular comic, in My Friend From India for the last of the week, with minueto Saturday and Sunday. At the Dewey Opera House the Grand Stock Company. A great attempt to please large audiences with The Westerner. The management have spared neither pains or money in perfecting the stage and the cast is in capable hands. Landers Stevens and Fanny Gittle are in the cast and d. exceptionally well. Miss O’Neill and Stevens announces an elaborate production of the well known play, Oliver Twist.

SACRAMENTO Special Correspondence

SACRAMENTO, Nov. 26.—The Eliffe Opera House in good houses Sunday night, for two weeks. Given paid admissions were registered at the box-office, an indication of the popularity of Billy, Eliffe and Jessie Norton and prices. The pieces to be presented during the week are as follows: Sunday night, Lost Lovers, Tuesday night, December 2-3, Tuesday, Uncle Dudley, Wednesday, The Idler, Thursday mansion, A Nutmeg Misch; Thursday night, The Black Peg, Friday, The Gally Slave; Saturday mansion, Lady Audley’s Secret and Jack and the Beanstalk; Saturday night, Lost in New York; Sunday, Mrs. Partington and her son Bke.

STOCKTON Special Correspondence

STOCKTON, Nov. 30.—Theatricals in Stockton can be said now to be good—something it used to be only at intervals. Not so, even at intervals, Yos Vincent, with Arthur Donaldson, in the role made famous by Gus Heege, was at the Yo Semite Theatre, did a busi- ness. The company is a good one.

Thanksgiving night Gorton’s Minstrels played to a large house, and it is an excel- lent one. Murray and Mack and My Friend From India fall to the Yo Semite.

This company has some professional talent being seen and heard during this week in the great six days’ golden anniversary of the Central Theatre. Their business being more pretentious than anything yet attempted in the line.

Stockton has never had such a list of attractions as Manager Charles F. Hale will give next month. Some excellent com-paines are booked for nearly every night in the week.

Miss Klade Concert I wrote about last week, too much cannot be said of the artists, but, beautiful, Miss Maude Fay, who is as beautiful as a consummate artist.

The Glee, Banjo and Mandolin Club of the California University was heard Saturday night and was a great hit, being unusually meritorious.

On Sunday afternoon, December 3, the Richmond Opera House will be held at the Yo Semite Theatre. Manager Hale giving greatly reduced price for the company. The company is an affair of the season and rivalled that given by San Francisco. Gen. W. H. L. Norton and Tom McConnell, J. B. Osborn, CITY, and C. E. Evans, the Salatatory. The stage will be elaborately decorated and a program of the highest artistic merit will be presentcd. Stockton Lodge No. 218 now ranks as sec- ond to none on the Coast. Numbering 174 in membership and containing the principal business men of the city.

The fair given by the Catholic ladies of Stockton for the benefit of St. Joseph’s Home is a great hit. A sale was arranged for the week and set up to close. Among those who participated in the event were C. Bren- don, Joe De Morgan, Joseph McGannon, J. Ford, J. Collins, T. Coy, M. Cannon, C. De Young, L. Kalts, H. Harkins, J. Blake, L. Whitehead, J. Gadsby, J. Joyce, F. Clapham, W. Byrnes, Misses A. A. Rawlston, Ettta Ginoncho, Maggie Mystic, Daisy O’Brien, Lillie Castle, Ger- trude, Kate Granville, Hazel Sullivan, Vergie Laufenberg, Lillian Wright, Kate Thomas, Martin Karkeek, Renee Smith, Misses Simpson, Misses Sallins, Missus Hume, Missus Granville, Missus Grafield, Missus Aitabiolette, Ernestine Rachel, and Misses Dawn and Edna Gisselle. Miss Peterson, A. Fruelle, Miss Chevalier’s bargains, Carman, Bellissiquin, May Burke, Roy Bear and many others, those concerned getting up the literary and musical program.

SALT LAKE Special Correspondence

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, Nov. 27.—Shenanigans at the Salt Lake Theatre. No local events of the season were known at the theater for many a day. The house was packed to standing room at every performance. A few weeks ago the house was unable to gain admission. While the stage effects are among the most startling that have ever been attempted in this city, and the performance was a decided success, the company presenting the play is not well known, and those that were watching at the time that will be for some years to come, if Henry Miller appeared in the leading role of Coi. FRESNO Special Correspondence

FRESNO, November 28.—Eugenie Blake has been here, and has gone away, much to the regret of the majority of those who saw her at the Opera House in a Lady of Qual-

I. MANNING KING

FRESNO Special Correspondence

FRESNO, November 28.—Eugenie Blake has been here, and has gone away, much to the regret of the majority of those who saw her at the Opera House in a Lady of Quality. Hilterich she has been little known in this city, in consequence of which the house was never full. She is rated as a first class show down. As it is often the case with traveling companies, there was only one real artist in the company, and that was, of course, Miss Blake. William Brannwell did fairly well as Sir John Oxon, but he did not bring out the proper shades of the part. Mr. Valavoo was, however, to act a coarse and repugnant part without the coarseness appearing to any great degree, and the artistic instinct seems always to predominate with her. Her portrayal of the difficult part was excellent, and Miss Mullen, as Miss Blake, and case that speak volumes for Miss Blake’s ability and training.

Harry Corson Clarke showed us What Happened to Jones last week. Of course there isn’t enough to the comedy to allow an actor to show any great degree of talent outside of a fair ability to make a laugh. But Clarke brought out all there was in it, being ably seconded by each member of the company, is, no-far as they had anything to do.

Nance O'Neil, Fresno's favorite, appeared last night at the Alcazar, and this night will present Peg Wellington. It seems as though she is more magnificent every single time she comes here, but there are two little things which I wish she appeared quite so often in her acting—one being a desire to pose, and the other is a touch of affectation. In the first place, she is perhaps too greatly magnified in any position. And secondly, her portrayal of character is hindered rather than improved by affectation. McKee Raskin made the same favorable impression as of old, and Clay Clement did well, although he was handicapped in Magda by appearing for the first time in a new part.

Francisco A. Dastarze, the San Francisco scenic artist is here, having entered into a contract with Manager Barton to re-paint the scenery of the Opera House. This was all that was needed to make this house one of the very best on the coast, for the stage, so far as proportions go, is already one of the best. The selection of Mr. Dastarze to do the painting is in keeping with the good judgement which Mr. Barton has shown throughout his management of the house.

LONDON, Nov. 11.—The Wrong Mr. Wright, the long-talked-of-three-act farcical comedy by George H. Broadhurst, after a trial at Rithorne's, Nov. 3, was produced at this Strand Theater on Monday evening. The piece has enjoyed considerable popularity in America where all the "wrong" that could be discovered was in the title.
The very decided success attending the performance must be credited chiefly to that clever American comedian, Mr. Thomas A. Wise, under whose direction the piece was produced, and to whom the author is under heavy obligations. The novelty call for the principals and the author after the fall of the curtain seemed to say that The Wrong Mr. Wright was "the right man in the right place." Wise should be given a revival at the Princess's Theater. It is not very high class drama; but Princess's audicence being fully conscious of the fact that high-class drama is very often dull drama, are quite ready to accept the lower quality provided it furnishes the amusement, interest and excitement they have in abundance of when they part with their money at the doors. Mme. Melia sent $2,000 to the Soldiers' Widows' and Orphans' Fund, being part of the proceeds of her concert at the Albert Hall on Saturday last. The cantatria's tour was immensely successful for a longtermical period, during which she will visit Holland, Germany, Austria, and finish with a series of operatic performances at Monte Carlo. We are likely to have a new American comedian in London. This is Mr. Charles W. Swalu, the actor who so delighted play-goers in the States by his delightful performance in 'The Beauties.' Mr.
Swain will join DeWitt Horn's Company shortly. The number of families that managed to see Thursday morning by the war is already having an appreciable influence on the quality of dance at the West End theaters. The messengers feel that war plays are too realistic to be popular for some time to come.

Calamos D'Arville better received at vaudeville pictures than at vaudeville business from simply a consciousness of his powers as a vocalist and as a drawing card are such that it is doubtful if she ever received so much unanimous and enthusiastic recognition on the stage of comic opera that she has since she adopted the plan of appearing alone. The beauty and richness of her voice seems to have improved since she was last heard in this city four years ago. She was the one big and immediate success at the Orpheum this week and the quality of her work is such that she is really worth the highest salary paid to a vaudeville artist. Therefore, Mme. D'Arville won't do well to remain away from the uncertain comic opera stage. There were, as usual, several other new first class features on this week's bill. Pete Bakar, who is billed as the "foremost favorite Dutch dialect artist," lives up to the sendoff and more too. He is well and cheerful and are exceedingly clear. Like D'Arville, this is Baker's first appearance here in vaudeville.
A. D. Robbins, a trick bicyclist, does some wonderful riding on wheels. He was another bit of the new features. Albert Conner with his "Clothes dom, seen, made a great impression. The holdovers this week were Rice & Elmer, Lucie Verdi, Little Mignon, Cora Stuart and company and the American Biograph.

The Olympia

HASTINGS and Hall demonstrated the fact that they are a clever vocal unit also at the Olympia this week.
Their act was a big hit. Carl Wilson has lost none of her attractiveness, and her work goes with the Italian touch.
Marie Wood is good for a long engagement, and Coke and Coke are deservedly popular in their aerial stunt.
The balance of the bill is good, and consists of Carlton and Royce, May Neelson, Dora Mervin, Canadia, and Dot Stanley.

The Chutes

BRANT and Oudow, singing and dancing comedians, and the Molling Brothers, acrobats, are the new people at the Chutes this week. Mattie Nicholls returned after a short absence and received her usual applause. Major Mite, Frank Hall and the lion Wallace, Addie and the picture-machine make up a good bill.

Charles Hawtrey, after disconnecting his shoulder in the second act of The Messen-er of Mars, Nov. 22, pluckily played out the piece, but fainted at the last curtain. As a result of the accident, the house has been closed until November 27. Mr. Arthur Sullivan's new opera, The Rose of Persia, will be performed at the Savoy Nov. 29.
Mme. Patti re-appeared at Albert Hall, Nov.
22, but the event passed practically unnoiced. She will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of her first appearance before the public at a charity concert in 1900 in New York City.

THE ORPHEUM

The Orpheum

MURDIE MONTAGUE, descriptive tenor, has been delighting oberon audiences the past week. Mr. Montague has a strong voice, which is fully equal to the poor acoustic properties of the house. Herbert E.
Medley and Gaal Goode repeat their success during last week. More, and the projectoscope and American Ladies Orchestra complete the program.

ALFRED KELLEHER'S CONCERT.

Mr. Alfred Kelleher was tendered a testimonial dinner at the residence of Mrs. Alfred Kelleher, on Friday last week, Sherman and Clay Hall being crowded to the doors and a delightful evening enjoyed. The interesting and successful event was under the patronage of Messrs. M. H. De Young, C. T. Mills, A. G. Sanborn, L. Lowenberg, W. B. Harrington, J. H. Merrill, L. L. Dunbar, Jno. Zoostey. The program opened with Andantini and Finale from Rubenstein's Sonata in A minor. The number was well received and an encore demanded, but the fiery style of the pianist, Otto Bendix, was rather too much for the violinist, Nathan Lansberger, but the second appearance, in which the Hungarian Rhapsodie [Hauser] was most artistically rendered and won tremendous applause. Mr. Bendix played piano solo, Midsummer Night's Dream, Mendelssohn's Lieder, the familiar melody with its beautiful variations being a favorite in Mr. Bendix repertoire, and was played with the required brilliancy and skill. Mrs. C. J. Wetmore sang Aria from the Queen of Shabah [Gounod] Spring [Maude White] and encores. She has a very good voice of fine range and quality, but she lacks warmth, her rendering being passionless and cold, while she executes well. Mme. Breitschuh-Marqueti, having a treat in an exquisitely rendered harp solo, Il Paragallo [Parish-Alvers] receiving warmest appreciation but declining an encore. Sketch from the Widows' Be-witching was given by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kelleher, who made a wonderful success. They are old favorites upon the operatic stage and their appearance was the signal for round after round of applause, a welcome that was good to hear. Mr. Kelleher does not act the gallant gentleman and the love scenes were deliciously done, Mrs. Kelleher being coquetssh enough to turn any man's head. She had a very fetching way of standing upon her toes when taking her clear, birdlike notes, and the pretty, old-fashioned costumes were very picturesque. Occasionally Mrs. Kelleher's sweet voice was hardly clear, the result of her recent illness. He gave a most graceful bit of acting, in which spirit, refinement and artistic effects were blended and the music was rendered with delightful style and finish, the curtain falling with the dancing of the minuet and a kiss upon the lady's hand that brought down the house.

HENRY HOLMES' CONCERT.

Lovers of music enjoyed a treat in the second Chamber Music Concert Tuesday afternoon at Century Hall. The executants were: 1st violin, Henry Holmes; 2d violin, Hother Wismer; viola — Arnaud Solomon; cello — Theodore Mansfield; vocalists — Misses Benlah George and Zueltta Geery. Accompanist to vocalists, Fred Maurer. The program opened with: String Quartet—Satay in C minor [Schubert], followed by a duet, the Birdie and The King [Dvorak], by Misses George and Geery, pupils of Mr. Pasmore. Brahms' Quintet in F minor op. 34 for piano forte, and strings was splendidly played. It is a noble work, beautiful with its light and shade, and the strong, artistic spirit of Mr. Holmes could not fail to arouse in the younger players greater depth and power. My young favorite, Wismer, quite woke up and played with more fire than I ever heard him. What a privilege for young players like these to work with such a man as Mr. Holmes, for such artists as he are not often given to the world — and next season will doubtless see vast improvement in their style from such guidance as they now enjoy. At the close of each movement rousing applause was given, and the cry of bravos was often heard, most enthusiasm being felt in the Andante and Scherzo movements. Emotions of a different kind was called forth by the beautiful Beethoven String Quartet in C No. 3 op. 59. Exquisitely lovely were the strains that fell upon the ear—rich in harmony and poetic charm, and the face of the old violinist wore an expression almost holy in its reverence for the work of the master he loves perhaps above all others, and at the end a perfect ovation was given and was richly deserved. Mr. Solomon did good work with his viola considering that it is not his chosen instrument, and it would be hardly fair to expect perfection at present. Mr. Mansfield played earnestly, and with his usual care and taste, and I can best express Wismer's work when I repeat that he "woke up." He is always artistic and sympathetic, but the warmth he sometimes lacks was there. Mr. Holmes has requested that the audience arrive promptly at 2:30 in the afternoon concerts to avoid interruption.

STUDIO ECHOES.

The McKenzie Musical Society gave a successful concert in Odd Fellows' Hall Thursday of last week. As usual there was a crowded house, repeated encores and rousing applause, for the society of young people has many friends. Miss Minnie Powell made a great success and was recalled three times after her song, Little George Kroger and Miss Wheeler also being favorites of the evening.

Mr. Harry Brown, who possesses a particularly good voice and who is organist and director of the choir of Holy Cross Church, is studying with a view to being an operatic singer.

Mrs. Eva Tenney's sweet soprano voice has been an acquisition to the choir of Trinity Church in the operatic services lately. Mrs. Tenney has a pretty new studio at 1199 Bush Street and a constantly growing class. Mr. Alfred Kelleher is also at Trinity and Alfred Wilkie tells me that he also is singing there during the absence of Mr. Fortescue.

Three free organ recitals will be given on the beautiful organ at St. Dominic's Church during December by Mr. Franklin Palmer, who was appointed organist after the resignation of James Hamilton Howe. Mr. Palmer is a thorough musician and a rare treat will be enjoyed, for the magnificent instrument will be eloquent indeed under his masterly touch.

Mrs. Jessie Dean Moore reports steady progress with her classes and hopes to give a concert soon with some of her advanced pupils.

The Leaders in the Dramatic Review Beauty Contest

In this week's Review are reproduced the pictures of the two leaders in the beauty contest—Miss Hannah Davis and Miss Laura Joyce, both of the Wayne of the Grand. The voting has been lively for the past few weeks, and the contest has become one that is expected to be spirited as the contest will soon come to a close. Admirems of handsome characters and charmingly good-natured women will no doubt express their views in your votes for your favorites. One year's subscription is good for fifty copies of the Review. Six months' subscription is equivalent to twenty-five. Every copy of the Review contains a vote. Boys, get in line!

Sardou's Method

"Sardou's method of writing plays is unique," says Lawrence Irving, "He goes about it in a mathematical way. At first he selects no characters, no scene, no historical setting. All he starts with is a climax; and he does not even assign his principal characters names—he lets them. A, for example, may be a jealous husband, B, the wife, and C her lover. He twists these letters around until he gets the great scene for which he has been maneuvering, and then he fills in the other characters and the other scenes. After the plot has thus been constructed, he looks about for some historical setting. He is a profound historical student, and usually has no difficulty in finding a period into which his plot will fit naturally. Then he fills it all out, and in a short time—for he works at a rapid pace—the play is complete. It was in this way that Robespierre was written. It was sent across the Channel by act. And with it came the design for the scenery; and for the costumes, and even, in many cases, for the stage properties required. It is interesting to remark that Sardou has never seen the play performed. We tried to get him to leave Paris for this purpose, but he could not be persuaded. "In spite of Sardou's absorbing interest in his subject, he is a very easy man to work with. He is always open to suggestion, and presents the manuscript at a playing date but who doesn't mind being cut. My father always found him willing to cut out whole speeches, and in one case a whole act. As originally written, Robespierre did not end with the conception scene, as it does now; there was another act, which gave a historical account of his death. Sardou wrote with the French idea of a four-hour play in mind, and only wanted three. After the situation was explained to him, he was perfectly willing to cut the play. We occasion-ally did, it is true, as to the parts to be cut. He was anxious that what he called la logique should remain intact. "Coupé, la logique ne coupe pas logique!" he would say. But I am afraid that a great deal of la logique has been cut, nevertheless.

Stories of Digby Bell

Many a laughable yarn is told of comedian Digby Bell, who is almost as well known as a reader of hard luck stories founded on personal experience, as he is as a fun maker. Here are a couple that have gone the rounds of the dressing rooms, but I think have never before appeared in print. One bright Bell's company was making a long jump, Bell and his wife, Laura Joyce, were trying to make themselves comfortable. Bell, in full Bellman's role while the sleeping car conductor came through, called Mr. Bell to one side and said something to him in an undertone. Mrs. Bell's curiosity was instantly aroused, and she asked what the conductor had said. "Nothing much," was his answer, "Laura, go to sleep," he answered. Which, of course, was a useless reply did not satisfy Mrs. B. "I don't think so," she said with finality, "what is the matter, now?" But he said, Digby, "you know what it was going to be, but you knew by the phrasing of the "something." "Well, yes, he did say something, Laura," he continued, "but don't you think it was just as well to stay awake all night trying to find out what he said to you!"—this prevailed. "Well, if you must know," drawled Bell, "he said that there's an engine running wild behind, and if it tags us, we're it. Now go to sleep, Laura, and don't worry any more."

On another occasion the company played a second steamer at a New York and Newport-wife were asleep in their cabin when Mrs. B. awoke. The conductor, awakened by a commotion on deck, a horrid rumbling noise was in her ears, and there was a trampling of feet with an occasional curse. He interrogated, everything could mean but one thing, that a collision had occurred, and that the ship was sinking. After many exclama- tions and alarm she would sleep, her husband to bed. "Get up, Digby," she shrieked, "the ship's sinking and we're all going down!" "Neverwise, Laura," returned Bell, "we're safe enough. But I know you cried, for the hysterical woman, there's an awful noise up above, and you must go and see what is the matter. After much protest the shrieking comedian was at length forced to crawl out in his dishabille, to face a raw foggy morning, only to find the boat tied up at the Newport pier, and di-cover that the ship was not sinking. After many exclama-tions and alarm she would sleep, her husband to bed. "Get up, Digby," she shrieked, "the ship's sinking and we're all going down!" "Neverwise, Laura," returned Bell, "we're safe enough. But I know you cried, for the hysterical woman, there's an awful noise up above, and you must go and see what is the matter."

A Cheerful Liar En-route

Reports from A Cheerful Liar Company now touring the state are most encouraging, and speak well for the prosperous condition of the interior towns. At Watsonville and Redwood City they turned 'em away, and the other theaters they have visited have also shown their approval by packing the houses. At Redwood City the company was entertained by the Cheerful Liers' Club, a local or-ganization, where a regular actor's banquet was served—sandwiches of all kinds, beer et al. The Club also attended the performance in a body. Among the members of the organization who have made individual hits, Max Steinble deserves especial mention. He plays the part of a country cou-stable, and his comedic work has caught on immensely. He also sings some of the latest comic songs with good effect, besides a couple of his own parodies. Stella Bomar is also a big favorite with the audience, and her singing is a feature. Robt. S. Haw-croft, the company's stage manager, is also said to be A-No. 1 in this popular form of entertainment, and the whole cast are thoroughly able in their respective parts. The Cheerful Liar has evidently struck a pay streak, and the Review wishes them every success.

NEW PLAYS

Mrs. Sarah Cowell Le Moyne will make her stellar debut in January in a new comedy, The Greatest Thing in the World, by Mrs. Henry C. De Mille and Harriet Ford, under manage- ment of Liebler and Company. Mrs. Le Moyne's Duchess in Catherine last season, and her Mrs. Lorimer in the Moth and the Flame the season before, have been among the most striking impersonations of recent years.

La Fiesta de San Xavier is being re-hearsed and will be put on at the Los Angeles Theater the 15th and 16th of December. It is said to be full of pretty music and effective scenes. Indians and cowboys lend striking western color to the opera.

The leading lady of the Frederick Wardke Company this season is Mrs. Clarence M. Brune, whom the people of the West will remember as Minnie Titch, an actress of great popularity on this coast four years ago.

Grove-Street Theater

Judge Coffey last week refused to confirm the sale of the Grove-street Theater property, between Polk street and Van Ness avenue. It belongs to the estate of William B. Dolan, of which Mrs. Rose Dolan is the executrix. It was appraised in 1895, when Dolan died, at $153,500. In 1897, on an auction sale, John Hinkel, who offered $45,000, was the highest bidder. Out of the bid costs amounted to $4,541, were to be taken. The matter has been brought before Judge Coffey several times, and each time he has said that the property was worth more. He stated that he would not consider a bid of less than $50,000. The heirs in Ireland have been desirous that a sale should be made, but Judge Coffey observed that he was regarding their interests in refusing to have the property sacrificed. He said that next year its value would be much greater. The matter was postponed until Jan. 4, 1900.

Big Receipts

The engagement which Henry Irving and Ellen Terry have just closed at the Knickerbocker Theater was one of the most remarkable engagements ever attempted in New York.

When the statement for the entire engagement is handed to the actor, before his departure for Boston, where he goes to fulfill another three weeks’ engagement, it will show that the business he has done exceeds that of any New York appearance of his since he first came to this country, sixteen years ago. The total amount received was about $8,000 for twenty-five performances, or $327 per week, and an average of $8,240 for each individual performance. The seating capacity of the Knickerbocker is 1,750.

Maud Berri a Hit

Maud Berry, a Kentucky girl, married to Col. George Berri, has made a distinct hit at the American Theater in New York, where she joined the company of the Castle Square Opera Company last week. She appeared last week in the title role of Lucia di Lammermoor, and was accorded an unusually enthusiastic reception. She was frequently recalled, and several times encorees were insisted upon. Her engagement there has been lengthened, and at its close she will appear with the company at Chicago and St. Louis. She is singing better than ever before.

Mrs. Kendall Interviewed

Mrs. Kendall, the English actress, had a unique experience in Philadelphia the other day. She was interviewed by a young gosling of a reporter, who asked her if she had been in London long enough to give her impressions of the city, and whether she had heard her husband’s latest monologue? He had somehow gathered the impression that he had been talking to Mrs. Ezra Kendall.

The new opera by Sir Arthur Sullivan, in which Ellen Beach Yaw, the girl who mixes the ale with the King's C's, is to make her debut in London, is Persian in character and deals with the topic of hallucination. The cause of the hallucination is the drug hashkhee.

MUSIC IN GENERAL.

The Perfect Violin.

The violin came into existence perfectly like the full-grown, fully-armed Minerva. No one has ever thought of adding a fifth string, or of replacing strings of cat-gut by strings of metal, or of substituting for the wooden bridge a bridge of steel. The course of its history has, in fact, been marked by retrogression, so that the great virtuosi and wealthy amateurs of the present day go for their violins to the past, and, neglecting all living makers, pay large sums for an Amati or a Stradivarius.—Black and White.

Mrs. Craigie on Wagner.

Mrs. Craigie, better known by her pen-name, John Oliver Hobbs, the English dramatist and novelist, has been to Bayreuth for the festival and has gone home to London, chock full of impressions, a part of which she gives herself of in a column and a half article in the London Times. It is a most violent attack on Wagner and all his works and concludes thus:

"As a composer, even if he has mastered the technique of Bach and covered more ground than Beethoven, Wagner has never caught the spirituality of the one nor approached the heights of the other. When he might have soared, he relied upon the scene-painter and imitation clouds on gauze. But where he is supreme among the greatest is in his representation of nature. Wagner alone has seized the music of the earth. No one else has caught and enchanted forever the mysteries of life 'outdoors' — the sound of wind in the trees, the fall of night on black mountains, fiercest gales, and the melancholy of sunset, the spell of a spring morning, the break of day, the madness of the storm, the flow of the river, the singing of rushes in a pool, the rage and hunger of the sea, and the wrath of the tempest. For these physical forces he shows an unerring and serene sympathy; so 'personal equation' disturbed his genius in this regard, or drove him, out of sheer hostility to human nature, as he found it, to utter the word too much. It is the cruel reproof of time and destiny that a man of Wagner's genius should come to be regarded as the pessimistic sensualist who twangs the old song of self-indulgence in a louder, and therefore newer, way. He was a great man, but the greatest man is not so great as mankind. His art was too personal, nervous, overcharged; and the vast crowd who are ever waiting in the market-place to dance to any piping—no matter how inferior—on the sensuous strings, go to him, not for his incomparable gifts, but because he seems a sensation-monger with a hurdy-gurdy."

Between Acts

Director Milburn of the New Alhambra orchestra, is producing some of the best music that is to be heard at any of the local theaters. It is just as essential to have good music as anything else about a theater, and the policy that has been adopted by Managers Ellinghouse and Mott in this regard cannot help but meet with the approbation of the theater-goers.

Richard and Pringle's Georgia Minstrels bill is like a circus, and when Advance Agent Woods gets his heavy work this week, every man, woman and child in San Francisco will know that the darkies are at the New Alhambra.

PERSONAL.

At Chicago the other week, Mansfield was talking of his hard first days as an actor, when he was a sort of private party entertainer, and cut pretty little musical and mimetic capers at London houses. At the close of one bit, bad mouth he fainted at a performance, having had scarce a meal of nourishing food for days.

R. D. Maclean is the stage name of Mr. Shepherd, of Shepherdsville, Virginia, one of the show places of the State. He is the possessor of an estate of over 1,000 acres and of Odette Tyler as a wife.

Edwin Hoff, formerly first tenor in the Bostonians' Company, and now choir master in the Way Down East company, is composing an opera for Frank Daniels.

William Gillette will later take Sherlock Holmes to London, just as he took Secret Service.

Stuart Robson has enlisted Jeffrey's Lewis for his new season in Gus Thomas' Oliver Goldsmith.

Some Stories the Elder Sothern Told

'The elder Sothern was a good story-teller and he particularly liked to dwell on his experiences at the outset of his stage life, when he was a minor member of the John McCullough company,' said the old time theater-goer. "McCullough was playing in Texas, and in one town where he was billed to play Ingomar, through some accident on the railroad, the necessary costumes were delayed. "The manager was equal to the situation, however, "He went to every butcher's shop in town and hired all the sheep and cowhides he could to dress up his supers. "When McCullough came on the stage that night the flesh fell back upon the stanch of the hastily improvised clothing worn by the barbarians. "What do you think of them?" Sothern laughingly asked McCullough, pointing to the supers as the curtain rolled down. "They neither act like, look like nor talk like barbarians," curiously growled the tragedian, "but by heaven they smell like them." "Another time," Mr. Sothern used to say, "we were to play Damon and Pythias in a small country town, and for the scene where sentence is passed upon Damon we managed to fill the quota of four senators who announced the decree of death from our own ranks. But one of them being taken ill, an ambitious youngster who hung about the theater was reluctantly cast for the fourth senator. It will be remembered that the first senator announces, 'I do averse this is the vote,' and each of the other senators in turn says, 'And I.' "At rehearsal, when the scene was reached it was discovered that our new fourth senator was apparently inseparably attached to a pronounced cockney dialect, and during repeated trials he persistently spoke his single line, 'And I.' "'My dear fellow,' said McCullough, 'don't say 'And I.' The speech is 'And I.' "'The young man tried but failed to speak it differently. McCullough, despairing, said to his stage manager: 'This won't do. You must get another man.' "'Please,' Mr. McCullough, 'don't take it away from me,' pleaded the young man, 'I know what you want and it will be all right at night. It will, Mr. McCullough, sure.' "McCullough's good nature overcame his judgment. When that scene occurred at night, and the first senator—myself—declared: 'I do averse that this is the vote,' the second senator, in clear, sonorous tones spoke the words 'And I,' which were very nicely repeated by the third senator. Our poor fourth senator, however, mindful of the rock against which he had previously split, but thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the scene, shouted with vociferous earnestness: "'Me too!' "'Tyrant, prisoner, nobles and audience joined in a burst of hearty laughter, and the performance was perfunctory and unpersuasive for some moments thereafter."

Rusco and Holland control the greatest colorful minstrel aggregations at present in the business. They pay salaries to 105 darkies who make up their three road combinations. These are Richard and Pringle's Original Georgia Minstrels who open at the New Alhambra theater to-morrow night, Rusco and Holland's Famous Minstrels, and the Nashville Students.

We call attention to the new and artistic studio of Mr. Lewis Thon, 806 Market St., Phelan Building.

John Drew Coming

Charles Frohman has made arrangements to send John Drew to San Francisco in the early spring under a contract with Gotlib, Marx & Co., guaranteeing the amount of the receipts of every performance from the Missouri river to California and back.

Mr. Drew and his company will travel in their own private car, playing thirty-two times between New York and San Francisco, and giving only eight performances in the California Metropolis at one time. This car will be equipped with the necessary equipment and the New Alhambra Theater.

Returning, ten cities will be played, and the organization will reach New York early in June. Mr. Drew will probably spend the remainder of the summer in Long Branch.

Lederer's Quintetona will keep the hair healthy.

A Lucky Manager

E. H. Woods, the genial business manager of Richard and Pringle's famous Original Georgia Minstrels, who open at the New Alhambra Theater to-morrow, is a firm believer in the horseshoe as a harbringer of good luck. "No one can ever shake my faith in the horseshoe," said the bustling advance man the other night as he chatted with a Review man in the box office of Managers Ellinghouse and Mott. "When a horseshoe comes my way all my troubles cease. Have never known it to fail. One time in Prescott, Arizona, having nothing to do one afternoon, I took in the horse races. My seat in the grandstand was close to the track, and in the very first race as the horses dashed by me, the finish, a shoe was kicked off and thrown up into my lap. That was enough. Although I very seldom bet on a horse race, I put up a wager on every race that was left on the program, and picked the winner every time. That night at the hotel I got into a game of craps and broke the bank. All on account of that horseshoe. A short time ago I was in Fresno trying to get a certain date from the manager there. Another attraction had the one I wanted, and refused to give it up. I had to have that date or my route would be knocked cockswife. The third day there I was crossing one of the main streets when suddenly a shoe was kicked off by a passing horse. I dashed around to the theater. Guess I got that date, don't I? I shouted to the manager." "That's right," replied he. "here is a telegram just received from ——, cancelling his engagement here." "Of course it was the horseshoe."

The following American professionals appeared in London—a program, arranged in London, for the benefit of the American hospital ship fund. It was in charge of Mrs. Potter and showed the ladies of the chorus of The Belle of New York and El Capitan companies, who sang several numbers, and some national airs. De Wolf Hopper sang a special song, and the famous Sousa March was played by the entire orchestra from the Comedy Theatre. There was also a song to singing, sold liberty silk national flags, which had been presented by the Countess Hatzfeld, and Ted Sloan sold pictures of the hospital ship—the Maure, Miss Bertram Humphreys, an actress well-known in America, sang Luigi Arditi's valse-song, "Se Saran Rose," and for this special occasion Signor Arditi kindly consented to retire from his retirement in order to accompany Miss Humphreys. Miss Nellie Stuart, Drummond's favorite pantomime prince, also had a prominent place in the program, as did H. G. Knowles, Eugene Stratton, Miss Ellen Beach Yaw, and others. Mrs. Potter received a star from "God Save the Queen," the national anthem being sung by the entire company. There were separate tables of tea, as well as an American bar. The occasion was most successful and netted a large sum of money.

Reynolds and Hopper to Quit

After producing The Charlatans in London—or rather after the run of this opera in the British capital is finished—E. R. Reynolds will retire, temporarily at least, from the management of De Wolf Hopper. The American couple, who have been the remainder of his stay on the other side of the water, will be seen in Waagh, and will be backed by Jockey Ted Sloan, who goes into the venture, not because he is particularly anxious to become a theatrical angel, but in order that his friend, Harry Neagle, may have a chance to make money and reputation as a manager.

Mr. Reynolds drops out of that part of the affair because he is also John Philip Sousa's manager, and he doesn't propose to exploit Mr. Hopper in operas not composed by Mr. Sousa. That is the whole story in the smallest kind of a nutshell.

Mr. Reynolds fully expects that when Mr. Hopper comes back to this country next year he will produce the new Sousa opera, and will return to the Reynolds management.

At the New Alhambra next week will be seen James A. Watt, the beautiful ballad singer, with Richard and Pringle's Minstrels. Watt has been with this combination for the past seventeen years and is better now than ever.
Elsa's Chagrin

A pretty girl and a winsome smile proved of so avail upon the four pullous, hard-hearted professional jockeys who rode against Miss Ryan at the New Alhambra Friday night a week ago in the race scene in Old Kentucky. There were too much for the intrepid little lady and fourth place was the best the heroine of In Old Kentucky could do in the race where she was supposed to ride the winner. This is the second time such a misfortune has befallen In Old Kentucky’s heroine during the seven years the popular piece has been here before the public.

The entire plot of the play almost hinges upon the victory of Magde on Queen Bess and when she fails to land the prize but comes trailing along at the tail end, the result can but be imagined than described. In such an event, of course, the hero must lose little girl, you will be, who has grown more viciously that night than ever, triumphs over all.

Friday night Miss Ryan, usually so cool and self-possessed, was visibly affected. As the time for the race drew near, her nervousness became more and more apparent, for rumors had reached her ears during the day that the professional jockeys against whom she was to be pitted that night, had planned to defeat her. When the four jades made their appearance behind the scenes all ready for the race, Miss Ryan looked her prettiest, and although eyeing them suspiciously, she was none the less cordial in her greetings when the introductions took place. Just before the mount she singled out Jockey Joe Piggott, and with a smile that would have put life into a marble statue, she said, "Now, Mr. Piggott, please don’t beat me tonight. That entreaty was too much for the jockey, and grasping the outstretched hand with the double-handed grip he replied tenderly: ‘Don’t fear, little girl, you will be, who will win all right.’ Miss Ryan thanked him with another of those winsome smiles. And yet it was Joe Piggott who won the race.

When the five horses lined up for the start, the four jockeys jostled Queen Bess and excited their own mounts to such an extent that Miss Ryan had great difficulty in maintaining her correct position. Just before the signal was given Queen Bess was bumped into and swerved half way around. Before Miss Ryan could head her in the proper direction, the race was on and Piggott was off like a flash, leaving the heroine to trail across the stage in fourth position. The look that Miss Ryan cast at Jockey Piggott as she dismounted and made her way disguisely to her dressing room, chilled the atmosphere back there on the New Alhambra stage like an Alaskan blizzard.

Simon Bonomoure’s troop of acrobatic Arabs who appear with Richard and Pringle’s Original Georgian Minstrels at the New Alhambra to-morrow are said to be the cleverest of their kind in the business. They appeared with the Buffalo Bill show all through Europe, and attracted great attention in Chicago during the World’s Fair.

The Louvre, Juneau, Alaska, closes its doors Dec. 10. The bottom seems to have dropped out of Juneau.

Inconchanted.

He gazed upon her fair young face,
Her starry eyes, her form of grace,
And leaned to listen when she spoke—
These were her words—"That ain't no joke."
—Chicago Record.

TOD SLOAN has been induced to become an "angel." He will lose his Simoleons in backing a vaudeville show in South Africa and Australia. Tod made his money easy and he seems bent on dropping it in like manner. Sloan has about decided that he would make a good actor. This young man is really taking himself seriously. He has a guardian at once.

With the air of you-must-do-as-I-say, Ashton Stevens, dramatic roaster of the Examiner, is trying to drive Manager Moracco back to melodrama. It's very peculiar how some people are always meddling with somebody else's business. Ordinarily, we admire Mr. Stevens' writing, but he is nearly always so unjust in his dramatic criticism that his opinions are really worthless. Mr. Stevens is yet young; therefore, he has plenty of opportunity to reform. Let us hope that he may.

A WRITER in the New York Telegraph says that the vaudeville business is sadly needing some new features. He also roasts the majority of the present turnus, and says the following should be cut out forever: Clog dancers, jig dancers, singers of public school anthems, acrobats, clowns, trapeze artists, horizontal bar teams, old negroes, burlesque quartets, musical comedy acts, dog circuses, monologues, "artistic" female impersonators, Dutch teams, trick bicyclists, Indians, etc. The members of the latter will sing my new song while waiting for Jack to come. If that list of turns is omitted, the vaudeville manager had just as well close his shop. It is true that there are some acts that are not worth the trouble to drive so many variety people out of the business? We are afraid that the complainant is a cynic.

THE girls of the Belle of New York Company are now playing in London, sold kisses the other day in aid of the Soldiers' Fund. Edna May's first kiss brought $50; Mabel Love's brought $10, and some of the chorus girls' kisses went slowly at $2 and $5. Finally, a young idiotary extravaganza between women was so common that everybody got kisses for nothing. This is a new scheme for charity, but it is surprising even for such a purpose that such an insignificant thing as a kiss should bring more than a shilling.

PAUL LINDAU, whose play, The Shadow, we had the rather dubious pleasure of witnessing recently, has become the director of the Berlin Theatres, succeeding Herr Gruber. This has induced Mr. Wagner, who made it the most fashionable playhouse in the German capital. The preceding director explained his reason for retiring when he introduced his successor, Herr Gruber, to the audience. He said that there were too few successful dramatic authors in Germany today to make a theater profitable unless it got all the good plays which were alone able to attract the public. He mentioned the operatic production of a Schiller play that was said to be unprecedentedly fine, which, drawn on the second performance only people enough to fill seven rows in the parquet, while a popular actress who disappeared after a long absence drew only $1.50 to the actress. The Berlin Theater is not subsidized. Teresina, Gesner, Nutcha, Butze, Marguerite Tondeur, Helene Olddon, who began his success there, Ludwig Stahl and other popular German actors were all members of the company under Lad-wig Barnay's control. But that state of prosperous affairs ended five years ago, and now Dr. Lindau has been engaged for what he has to do towards conciliating back the popularity of the Berlin drama.

THE Rounders left New York for Chicago, whereat the Chicagoans immediately raised a howl. The piece ran for months in New York and we fail to see why Chicago should protest, unless it is certain that what is entertaining for New York is only ribald vulgarity for other cities. Critic Glover hands The Rounders in this style: "I am assured that vulgarity is permissible in The Rounders because that vaudeville does not pretend to be a drama and cannot be taken seriously. The argument may be a trifle obscure, but I presume it is quite satisfactory to those who advance it. On the same principle the contention of the members of the club who consider their plays filthy if they were flung at the passer-by in sportive mood, and a man might wade in a sewer with great pleasure and an entire absence of disgust if he could only convince himself that the man was not taken seriously. This new philosophy of imagination opens us an interesting study in ethics, the basis of which is the proposition that the actor or the man who pretends to assume a vulgar character, utter indecent words and vile suggestions, just for fun, must be acquitted of all impropriety. More than this, when licentiousness is made a merry jest and ribald language is tossed about this stage between women who are half naked and men who pose as hopeless degenerates, respectable people may understand that it is quite proper for them to observe and enjoy these manifestations on the ground that the artists are only acting like indecent people for the fun of the thing, and to show how amusing it is for anyone to be a rube, a rounder or a woman without sense of shame. It makes all the difference in the world how one views these matters, and while it may be difficult for many old-fashioned people to lift themselves up to such abstractions as these, and understand that dirt is not dirt when it is funny, they must either do this or be considered provincial—a truly painful alternative. In the light of this novel theory the manners and methods of the demi-mondaines and their fictitious friends as expressed in The Rounders is to be esteemed as a very interesting and edifying. Under ordinary social or dramatic conditions it would not be considered proper to see a man hiding in a woman's dressing-room to play the part of a peeping Tom on the pretense of being the image of some indecent people. In such a case we are satisfied that it is different. The nastiness is only fun, and may not be taken seriously."

MAURICE GRAU seems to have a just complaint against Chicago. The people of that city decline to support grand opera. This leads the papers there to discuss the matter in an endeavor to find the cause. It couldn't be found. One man interviewed summed the situation up in this wise: "I think it is a shame and a disgrace that the opera is not patronized more liberally. The magnificent aggregation of talent which Mr. Grau has oilered to the musiealizing people of Chicago deserves more appreciation. The prices are not too high, and there is no justice in the claim that they are. When it is considered that you have to pay $1.50 to see an ordinary opera, there should be no complaint when $2.50 will secure a good seat at a per-fomance of the standard of excellence which Mr. Grau presents. Otherwise, there are enough people in Chicago who love and appreciate music, and can afford to pay for it to maintain a season of grand opera. It is the duty of the Thomas Orchestra to understand this art, and I for one will be glad to subscribe my share toward it. We have helped support the Thomas Orchestra, and we should help to support grand opera. The extent to which the Thomas Orchestra has expended a musical sentiment in Chicago is hardly appreciated. It has done much toward cultivating this art, and we should keep on with the advance in this line. There is no lack of talent in music in Chicago, but we cannot expect to be able to support big operas until the government leads a helping and encouraging hand. The success attained in Europe is due to the assurance of support which it lends, and I think it is the duty of a nation to encourage fine music. I would be sorry to see the opera discontinued, and hope that Mr. Grau will change his mind. Three performances a week might work better, and I think we should insulate full houses. Seven performances are too many, as one is liable to grow tired when the operas are presented so frequently. If I remember rightly, only four performances were given during the New York engagement last season—Monday, Wednesday, and Friday nights, and Saturday matinee. This is a feature which I think Mr. Grau overlooked in complaining of the lack of appreciation of his efforts in Chicago. There is no excuse in the statement that the operas are not new, as a person has to hear an opera a dozen or more times to thoroughly appreciate it. So there are even to be extended in Chicago a more general appreciation that is wanted, and I think there are enough people in Chicago who really love music to make the opera season a sucness."

"I FIND," says James A. Herne, "that a man who devotes himself solely to one occupation to the exclusion of other interests, becomes narrow-minded and stereotyped. Thus the actor or playwright who lives entirely in the mimic world, and fills in the intervals of his stage appear-cances with other people's tomes, his tribe, soon forgets the great, busy, progressive world around him, and in course of time ceases to be a true reflector of life. The average actor knows little about politics, and is still less about the vital problems of sociology and political economy, which should be studied by all intelligent men."

Adriene and Frankie Kennedy are now working as a team. They are considered the best flat-footed buck dancers in America.
THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

December 9th, 1899

Personal Mention

C. B. Stone, the brewery magnate, has donated $50 to the theatrical benefit.

James A. Haene is said to have recently returned to San Francisco staging the Children of the Ghetto.

Frances A. Dastarac has been engaged by Manager Barton of Fresno to furnish his cozy theater with new scenes.

The Wrong Mr. Wright is pleasing London theater-goers. Thomas Wise is the Singleton Sites of the company.

Jack McDonald and Clarence Montaine will replace Charles King and E. M. Bell in the cast of Mr. Pluster of Paris on the road.

Melba has contributed $2,000 to the Soldiers’ and Widows’ Fund, now being raised in London, as the result of a concert she recently gave for that purpose.

Frances Saville, a native of San Francisco, is winning golden dollars with her performance, an engagement at the Imperial Opera House, Vienna, until 1903.

Mr. Char. Thall left last Saturday for Santa Cruz to join the Friendly Fraternity Company as business manager; Mr. Cook having taken his post ahead of the company as advance man.

Louis James, balladist, goes out with W. H. Wheeler’s The Man From Japan Company. The company opens at Martinez, Tuesday night, playing north to Portland and Seattle.

Howard Scott is another Californian boy who will soon be seen on Market Street. He leaves the Lewis Marshall’s Frederick the Great Company, and will go on to the Alexan soon.

In Chicago last week, W. H. Howard, who poses as conductor of a dramatic agency just from California was arraigned, charged with swindling three pupils he had promised to put on the stage.

Ollie Morose, manager of the Burbank, Los Angeles, writes as follows: “My business here is simply record-breaking every week. We took the management of the house.” Good for Mr. Morose.

Ernest Hastings, a great favorite with San Francisco audiences, will soon resume his old position as leading man of the Alexan Stock Company. He has been with the Dearborn Stock Company in Chicago.

Laura Crews arrived from Los Angeles Monday and will open in Dr. Bill at the Alexan after the run of Mother’s Day. The management is to be congratulated upon the return of an old favorite.

Daniel Bandmann has again come out of his retirement, and last week produced The Man From Missouri with his wife and students of the Stute University making up the supporting cast. Mr. Bandmann is called as the greatest living Shylock.

Charles Richard, who acted here with Blanche Bates, when Stockwell & Ellingshouse operated the Columbia, is said to have left his home for Santa Cruz, Calif., said to be in the employ of Miss Mary Gray, a prominent young society girl of Troy, N. Y. They have long been friends, and their engagement was not a surprise to their intimates.

Lucille Ulmer Thordiine, the well-known character actress, contemplates a short trip East in the near future.

Cissie Loftus is coming to Cali- fornia this winter. She will appear at a local theater, probably the Orpheum.

Alice Newhagen, playing under the stage name of Alice Neal, with the Shrenandoah company, is a San Francisco girl.

The long-expected has happened—Julia Marlowe has applied to the Birt- lington, Vt., court for a divorce from her husband, Robert Talber. Cause, neglect and lack of support.

Rory Hayes, a pretty chorus girl of the Grand Opera House, was mar- ried Wednesday to Samuel D. Sim- mons in the Mansuergs of the Man- achea Theater. She has retired from the stage.

Etta Butler, the Frisco girl now at Koster & Bial’s, New York, is one of the most promising of advancement. She was given half of the front page of the Telegraph last week. She is a very promising one.

Walter Durocher and Mme. Godski, the bright, particular star of the Melba season last year, will appear here in concert in April.

Danieleman, the baritone, will be with them.

A crank sent a threatening note to Mme. Emma Nevada in New York and the papers published a big story about her life being attempted. Her husband, Dr. Palmer, paid no attention to the writer of the letter.

Gertrude Lewis, a handsome San Francisco girl, has returned from a de- tention in Gotham’s audiences. She is appearing in Frohman’s Lyceum Company as Jane. She is rich and very beautiful.

May Buckley, the former Alexan actress, is to leave the cast of San Toy, the new Chinese opera at Daly’s Widows Bedott Company, taking a serious role which has been cut down to little or nothing, and she desires to continue in such a minor capacity.

Bob Graham, the well-known comedian, who was a big hit in the first Little Tycoon Company, has been engaged by the managers of the Soda Palace, and is appearing through the death of a Scotch relative. Bob says that the fortune is no longer his, but is by law bequeathed to the managers.

Managers C. H. Hall of San Jose, Ficks of Sacramento, and Barton of Fresno, met Tuesday with J. H. Todd in his office in the theater building and concluded some arrangements that will have an important bearing on the theaters they manage. They are providing better entertainment this season than the people of San Jose, Sacramento, Stockton and Fresno have ever known.

Harry Corson Clarke and his company evidently pleased Los Angeles, as the Capital says: “Mr. Clarke was engaged to come here as the box-office men say, and has given money’s worth to every patron who has been there. His humor is pretty, and several of them have talent of no mean order. Laura Crews is the best of the number, and one can see from her that the Los Angeles patriotism is not strained either in saying that.

Miss Cecelia Castelle

What’s in a Name?

One of the strangest theatrical comedies of the season, the notice happened this week at two Los Angeles theaters. The curtain raiser at the Alexan this week was called Up to Watkins and the second was a clever skit. However, on journeying up to the Alhambra to see Mr. Pluster of Paris’ company, Miss Castelle’s piece proved to be almost identical with Up to Watkins. All the situations are the same, and the plot, which has at least three-fourths of the lines. An investigation shows that both pieces were written by the same person, who entitled Your Turn Next and neither manager was aware of the fact until Wednesday of this week.

Robert Elliott, leading man of Alex, is off to the Columbia for a few days. He is a long-time friend of the company, and says the little romance is connected with the prospective ceremony. Thanksgiving night, when the company played a part at the theater in a box, Mr. Elliott noticed the young lady, fell instantly in love with her, and invited her to dinner next day as an introduction through friends, pressed his suit with such earnestness that the young lady capitulated, and tomorrow she will be Mrs. Robert Elliott.

Widow Bedott Co.

Horace Ewing and company, who have been playing in Northern California the past two weeks, have returned to San Francisco for a few days lay over. They played at Fortuna, Ferndale, Eureka, Blue Lakes and Healdsburg, to large and well pleased houses. The following are members of the company: Alex, Bevan, Harry Rowe, Arthur Stewart, Martin Franklin, Estelle Cleavland, Ruth La Croix, Cecelia Castelle, Horace Ewing.

Charlotte Beckwith.

Before Miss Beckwith had any idea of becoming a footlight favorite she was a student at Mills College, and had for a fellow-student Nancy O’Neill: “I made my first appearance in Moth’s at the California Theater two seasons ago, playing the wicked Duchess, more for the fun of the thing than anything else, and have been working ever since.” Last season Miss Beckwith played Minerva in What Happened to Jones, and in that part I must say I saw a pretty face, and being possessed of a sympathetic contralto voice, for the Duchess and hearing above that usually found in opera, it is safe to predict for her a very successful future on the operatic stage.

Front De Camp writes to the Review from Cleaveland that business has been good all along. In Fresno, they played to big houses, receipts for Thursday night being $600.

Once again Francis Powers has demonstrated that he is possessed of a unique ability in play writing. His new and latest play, Mother Earth, as presented for the first time on any stage in New York Monday night has much of the vivid strength and uncommon treatment that made his previous efforts so remarkable and, like in the latter, he has caught to a great degree the local color and spirit of the people he has put on the stage.

His story of Mexican life is not developed as evenly as was First Born. Nor is it as convincing or as coherent, yet it has many moments of intense dramatic treatment and, through an unusual measure of interest. There is a vein of wild philosophy running through the play, which has the effect of adding to it a distinctive tone. Both acts take place out of doors, which gives opportunity for picturesqueness in both action and animation. Act one shows the street just outside the home of Gloria Martinez.

Andreas Alcerares, who is about to wed Gloria Martinez, is accused by Manuel Sanchez of having become enamored in love with Gloria, with unfaithfulness to his promised wife and they part in confusion. Andreas, however, decides to go to a neighboring town to attend a fandango and while there meets and résolves to marry the woman of his passion, Mercedes Muñoz, his old sweetheart. Gloria, unable to bear the suspense from the infatuated friends who have given her of her lover's insincerity, sets out across a strip of the desert to the town in which the fandango is given to find her lover. A windstorm springs up and poor Gloria is blinded by cactus briars. She returns home, and there finds Manuel. Soon after Andreas puts in an appearance, as it is the day set for the ceremony. He has not seen Gloria nor does he know of her affliction, until she is led out by her mother. Andreas' heart turns to stone and he proceeds with his preparations for his coldness; trouble ensues and Manuel severely wounds Andreas.

The scene changes to the house of Gloria blind, in the doorway of the church, where she is met by Manuel. As the two stand in the rain, Manuel confesses to Gloria the tale of the approach of Andreas and Caroline to be married. Manuel swears to her that he will not be her husband and Gloria begs him to give her his knife and she withdraws. As the couple pass by Manuel possess upon Andreas and is killed by the latter; at the same time Gloria stabs herself to the heart.

The play was extremely well acted and costumed, and the scene painter is deserving of great credit for supplying really vivid pictures of Mexican outdoor life. Three of the cast were so exceptionally good as to leave a distinctly marked impression on the audience. They were George Webster who was to the very life the arrogant, bounteous, and rather foolish Mexican King, and his antics with the impoverished king were most amusing. The re- appearance of the king, which was to be his first performance they were cut out. The houses had been fair throughout the week and each succeeding night of the production of the piece has added to its laugh making qualities.

The Columbia

The second week of the great war drama Sherrill Gordon produced, and Messrs. Gohlb, Marx & Co. are to be congratulated on their unprecedented success.

The California

Notwithstanding the adverse criticism of the daily press, regarding the presentation of the play The California at the King, the California has been favored all this week with a splendidly filled house each night.

The theater-goers of San Francisco are not always influenced by the dramatic critic, but to judge from the success of the merits of a play and the capabilities of the members of the company presenting it. An Enemy to the King was a hit drama which attracted the bringing out of the principal roles with fine feeling, appealing to the sympathetic and tender emotions of the audience. Miss Hamlet, played by Mr. Frawley, as Erneston de Launay, and Mr. Hampton as Julie de Varin, falls into this important responsibility. To Miss Hampton must be accredited the greatest praise, as she is at ease with a line of smooth manner and excellent execution. The various other characters were in most cases very well managed, and there are many thrilling and interesting features throughout, the entire production is one that certainly is very entertaining.

New Alhambra

Mr. Plaster of Paris, a farce comedy, was given its initial San Francisco production Sunday night at the New Alhambra, before a large audience. The plot of the piece seems decidedly familiar and there is a reminder of several of its farcical predecessors in the play, but put together so ingeniously as to make a thoroughly enjoyable play. Nels Plaster stepped into the part of the counter cast, and was capably played by E. J. Blunkall. His makeup, dialect and general impersonation were faultless. E. M. Bell, an actor of much ability, made a hit as the lamented Mr. Plaster, and Ward, with a spirited and energetic performance of the male portion of the cast, however, overwhelmed the female members. Miss Lilian Atwood as "the soul who put her into it," and Miss Keene fairly clever as Selina Binks, the old maid, but Helen Hargraves, the Irene, Miss Plaster, a victim of circumstances, while a charming young lady to look at, was hardly up to the requirements of the piece. On Sunday night some time was spent introducing two specialty acts of rather doubtful quality, which were jeered by the audience, and certainly first performance they were cut out. The houses have been fair throughout the week and each succeeding night of the production piece has added to its laugh making qualities.

Manager Dunphy

One more San Franciscan is in a fair way to make a reputation in the theatrical world. This time, in the capacity of manager of the New Alhambra, which is quite well known in this city, has just been made business manager for one of the most prominent men of the city, Mr. R. H. Davis, who is the son of Mr. Davis, the well-known and respected manager of the New Alhambra.

Will F. Dunphy is only twenty-three years of age. He was born and brought to his present position by his mother, Mrs. Annie T. Dunphy, is well known to the theatrical profession and the business community, being regarded as an unusually good business woman. Billy has the best wishes of a host of friends.
At the California next week The Fatal Card will be seen. It is by the same author who made a success of Captain John and it is clever and quite up to date. Its story starts in a mining town at the foot of the Andes, where the reader is introduced to the adventures of a man who is a friend of Austin's, a good-natured, indolent fellow who is the object of the attention of the young woman who is the heroine of the play. The first act of the play is a scene in a saloon where the characters are gathered together and are discussing their plans for the future. The second act is a scene in a boarding house where the heroine and her companion are staying. In the third act, the hero, who has been away fighting in the war, returns and is reunited with his love. The fourth act is a scene in a church where the wedding takes place. The play is well-written and the acting is excellent. The performance is highly recommended for anyone who enjoys a good drama.

THE THREE CANYONS

A Greek Slave, which was also a London success at one of George Edwardes' theaters, was produced at the Variety Square Theater last spring. This was for the first time in America. Dorothy Motion, who is thinner than she was on her last Western trip, was the prima donna. But Minnie Ashley, a singing dancer, also made a good impression and got a good laugh for a sweet little dance. Hugh Chilton, who was at one time thought to be the husband of Della Fox, was the principal. The principal personage also advertised his teeth to his full satisfaction. Albert A. Farr was his partner as Greek slaves.

The story is the old one about a statue coming to life: the trick of waking the statue up and making the life-like image. The fact that the audience sat until nearly 12 o'clock to see the finish of the play is a proof of the judgment that A Greek Slave is going to be a success. If Augustin Daly could only have realized how much money Fred C. answer to jokes of any semblance to it, he would have got his last season.

Emma Nevada has decided to make Philadelphia her American resting place instead of New York. The contrast between gay places and Philadelphia must be so great that the famous California singer ought to feel delightfully quiet among the Quakers.

Ben Hur, the dramatization of Gen. Lew Wallace's novel, was put on at the Broadway Theater last week. It is a scenario with sixteen characters and one cast list. It is a very mechanical chariot race and plenty of Romans. The worst Roman of them all was W. J. Ennis, who played the role of a Roman. Although he were in a Bowery melodrama. Mrs. Morgan as Ben-Hur played emotional parts with great physical emphasis. Cora Radinco, the Egyptian Iris, played well. The press agent is already getting the minutes to discuss the question of who is to be the 'life' on the set, so it ought to be a go.

DENVER

Special Correspondence.

Denver, Nov. 29.—Well, here it is—Humpty Dumpty. Denver, presented under the personal direction of James B. Dickson, book by Edmund E. Price and produced at the Broadway Theater, with a wealth of gorgeous scenery and fifty people in the cast. They introduce everything from church music to a bag-piper and a man in a suit of armor. The play, on Sunday, the 27th, to a splendid house, and business continues good. Eddie McDonnell as the Duke of York who manages one of the best concert acts j has ever witnessed. Miss Mae Raymond as Placidia, Queen of the Romans, was a real Romeo and won sing and was beautifully shown. She was formerly a member of the Castle Square Opera Company. The Brunswick Sisters danced themselves into favor. The audience kept the Treadoiler Quartette singing until they could sing no more. Miss and Goodrick, the Australian roller skaters, were good, but, had they seemed very much out of place. If the turn were changed from the second to the third act, it would go better. The balance of the cast were all splendid; and the transformation scene. The Birth of Day, was simply beautiful, and each scene round after round of applause. You who live away out west will not have the pleasure of seeing this "big show," as they call it in New York next Sunday.

At the Tabor we have A1 Field's minstrel show of the season, which will run for three weeks. They opened Sunday, the 26th, to the Tabor's usual S. R. O., with hundreds turning away. The "dit" and "dot" (as the agent would say). Judging from the advance sales, they will do the business. The Average Street parade is great, and the talk of the town.

This is another attraction you will miss, as it will go no farther west than Denver. Next year they might try the spring.

The New Lyceum, since Monday, has had a good bill, thanks to some slight changes made by Managers Hayes and Hurley. On Monday night, however, some of the turns went by junks, possibly caused by nervousness of the performers, as Manager Mays was sitting down in front. A customer on another day about a joke told by a performer which did not please the audience. He afterwards told me that from the box office, he saw the rear of the stage and they are taking their seats in the front row and make note of anything that was in any way connected with "The Old" and make sure the act was not to be missed. He closed at once. After the first "sitting" the house was closed and many supposed jokes cut out; so that on Tuesday night the performance went with a dash and at least worth mentioning by way of remarks. Let the good work go on. Gertrude Haynes closes her second Saturday night. The Davis children are making a favorable impression this week. Delaoye and Plets, DeForest Sisters, Fox, Jose and Chapman and Du Bell make up the bill.

Side Track opened on the 26th at the Denver Theater to S. R. O., the box office being closed at 12 o'clock. Only two weeks new to the patrons of the Denver, having been played there several times by Jules Weil, they are a farce, and was played by Mr. Walters' talented brother Elmer. Next week, December 3d, Paul Lincoln, Manager the Master and the Dawn of Freedom.

James Dickson, manager of Humpty Dumpty enterprises, is said to be in the process of changing the old firm of Brooks and Dickson, theatrical managers, who at one time handled all the big companies in Boston. For years Mr. Dickson has been located at Terre Haute and Anderson, Indiana.

John Billings, who last season sold tickets and cards at the Grand Central Theater, has been engaged to perform the same duties at the New Lyceum. His courtesy has won him many friends among the theater goers.

I have learned since the departure of Mr. Wood's company that the reason he did not produce his new play here, fortune, was, because he feared the "boy critic," as he called our local critics, would say unkind things, and thus ruin the future success of the play, so his actors are not at fault, not to mention that.

Telephone Girl comes to the Broadway the week of December 12th, and following that we have Joseph Jefferson's sons playing.

Yours truly honored this week by the receipt of a portrait of Miss Ellen Terry; last week by Charles K. Warren, The Storm in The Christian (with Viola Allen).

ST. LOUIS

Special Correspondence.

St. Louis, Dec. 1.—Anthony Hope's comedy of evidence in evidence at Pat Short's Theater this week. That starring romantic actor, James K. Hackett, is doing a surprising thing in the performance of Rupert of Hentzau. The play, like the book, of course, is not as strong as it was in the novel, but the whole with Hope's masterpiece cannot but praise Mr. Hackett's conception of Rupert. His support is excellent. Odetta Tylor made her debut in the stern fumilious of the Century this week in Pharo. The stage environment of the production is unpre- ceeded by the feature. The story is a rehash of the character of Pharo, which mingles the light heroic with comedy just suits Miss Misser's talents. Her work is delightful. D. MacLean, J. H. Benmoss and Frank R. Roberts, the new star has adequate support. Mrs. Dapper is a very good performer. Miss Harpham is doing Miss Harpham, who, is offering their patrons a California "slug" and the one who can give an appropriate sobriquet for the play. The vaudevillists at Hopkins' are the musics, Monroe and Hart, eccentrical comedians, Stover, Risa, Quiblist, and Humpert, the famous acrobat.

George M. Cohen's uncial form, A Wise Guy, is the Thanksgiving offering at the Grand. It was formerly a twenty-minute vaudeville act, and has been embellished into three acts, for fifty dollars a week. And Litton are the featured players, and they are assisted by Reno and Richards, Ray L. Johnson, V. H. Davis, C. McCallum, Moreland Thompson and Roberts, the Allin sisters, Maude Detty, Lissett Reville, Ethel Easton and other attractions.

Managers Middleton and Tate of the Columbia are serving us a menu of vaudeville acts. The offerings are, Mr. & Mrs. D. Harvey and Mrs. D. Halen and Mollie Hat, in a new sketch, A Darper Perfect Joe Fysho monologist, Ora, Bernhard and Oso, the Golden Trio, in a comedy sketch, Scenes in Chinatown, the Leauser sisters, equilibrists, the Car- montelle sisters, Mlle. Nevella and Harty Leavitt, jugglers, Sheldon and Plattanui, black face artists, and several other vaude- ville teams who help to assist to make the continuing variety program.

W. H. West's Minstrels are at Havlin's this week and Manager Billy Garey can con- gratulate himself on the success of his first priced minstrel organization on the road. Mr. West is assisted by Carroll Johnson, Joe Gardner, Will Davis, O. Deary, Fred Warner and other connoisseuses whose names, however, do not appear in black type. A new minstrel song, "Jim Butter's "turkey" attraction is Sam Devere's aggregation of burlesques. The Female Rondounders and The Crab, a burlesque on The Turtle, are two as esthetic rivalry as has ever been given at the Temple of Jollity, which is a proper offspring of the Standard Theater. Mr. Devere's vaude- villians are O'Brien and Buckley, musi- cal comics, the Eight Lady Cripple, in the capacity of the foreign artists, the Walker Sisters, ducetia, the two Leon, Newboy Quinette and the only Sam Devere.

John Havlin, proprietor of Havlin's Theater, purchased a half interest in the Grand Opera House from the Midsteeple Theater Company. Billy Garey will manage and Arthur Gerrin will be his assistant. The Company Manager is said to con- tinue to pack the Expedition Music Hall. Manager Soutthwell is of course wreaked in smiles, he could not be in this bill this week. Basil Illman carries on her St. Louis engagement next week in Maratha. She will receive a warm reception, as she is in her own element. As you know, she is a native daughter of the Golden West. Miss Ferri is a Mrs. Fisher in their productions.

The underlings for next week are Sol Smith Russell at the Century. Mrs. Leslie Carter in Sara at the Olympic. Showing the Wind at the Grand. Hoyt's A Day and a Night at Havlin's Rose Hill Folly Company at the Standard. Shaw No. 2 and vaudeville at Hopkins and continuous vaude- ville at the Columbia.

Miss Schueller, who was open to the New Olden last Friday, was canceled on account of the failure of the iron workers who struck, though Falmouth, the company's "slug" to produce by low and Egerton cottage, called The Bride of Jonive. GAT FALLER

SALT LAKE

Special Correspondence.

Salt Lake City, Dec. 4.—The local theater news is little of importance. Manager of Salt Lake Theater, Nov. 30-Dec. 1. Three of the largest audiences which have yet attended a vaudeville show during the engagement. This will in all probability be the last production of the house, as the owner's creditors have forced the members of the chorus to belong to the Tabernacle choir, and will go East with that organization on its coming concert tour.
Mile. Fif opens a two nights’ engagement at the theater Dec. 7.

A Breach of Promise played the entire past week at the Grand, doing a very good business. A Romance of COon Hollow opens to-night to fill the first half of the week, and will be followed by the Renata-Strebel burlesque Company. A Stranger in New York comes to the Grand Dec. 11.

The closing scene of the death of Oscar Elision, the Mormon Wizard, in Sydney, Australia, reached this city Thanksgiving morning in the following cablegram received by the magician’s brother-in-law, Paul Haummer, from Mile. Edmunds: “Oscar shot dead.” This being the only word which has been received, it is not known how the tragedy occurred. The general belief is, however, that he met death in performing the Hermann bullet-catching trick.

EL PASO

Special Correspondence

EL PASO, Texas, Dec. 1.—Paul Gilmore appeared here last night as D’Artagnan in a new version of Dumas’ Three Musketeers, and every scene was literally packed. The talented young actor was a favorite with his audience from the first. He overdid nothing, but was always D’Artagnan of Dumas’ creation.

Mr. Chandler, advance agent of Prof. Lee, the hypnotist, is arranging for that attraction to give us a four-night engagement beginning Wednesday, Dec. 6. They make the jump from Memphis to El Paso, and expect to show in Sacramento about Dec. 18. The Paul Gilmore Company will appear here in a return engagement of Freedom’s Dawn.

CARADA

Special Correspondence

ST. JOHN, Dec. 1—Opera House, A. O. Skinner, Mgr.—The Robinson Comic Opera Company, under management of Frank V. French, opened a two weeks’ engagement on Nov. 20, producing Boccaccio to a good house. Between the acts are introduced the bloop scene views, Amazon marches, and The Soldiers of the Queen, sung by baritone Frank D. Nelson, and the full chorus in appropriate costume. This specialty is said to be received with storms of patriotic applause that must be heard even reverberating around Pretoria. The bills offer a good range of subjects, from Marianna to Pinafore. Second week opens with The Vaga-bonds. Mechanics’ Institute, Chas. A. Everett, Mgr.—Col. Rogers and his Vericose held forth Nov. 23—24, exhibiting what claimed to be pictures of the Sharkey-Jeffries late unpleasantness. Whether authentic or not, the views were certainly very clear and seemed to be appreciated by the band of dead game sports who patronized the rare intellectual fixture.

Wilson Eno’s Good Work

The closing week of the Woodward Stock company in Omaha brought out some good notices in the daily press in behalf of Wilson Eno, a former San Francisco favorite, and his wife, Miss Berkeley. The Omaha Bee, after commenting on the repertoire, consisting of Noffs, The Musketeers, The Northern Lights, Charley’s Aunt, etc., says:

“Wilson Eno, under whose personal direction all the plays were staged, is deserving of the highest praise, not only for his ability as a stage director, but as an artist as well. All of his work was done with a finish that showed much ability. Miss Berkeley, or Mrs. Eno, as she is known in private life, like her husband, deserves to be at the head of a company and it is the sincere wish of their many Omaha friends that they may some day have the pleasure of seeing them in that position. Miss Berkeley is, without a doubt, one of the most versatile actresses in the stock business. She is a deep thinking little woman and her work shows that she carefully and thoroughly analyzes all her parts. Her characters are always true to life and she makes them up so that they are really studies. Her versatility is proven by the fact that one week she plays a French girl, the Indian Girl, in The Girl I Left Behind Me, and the next that of a society woman—two characters so far apart as possibly can be. Her gowns always attracted attention by their style and fit, and the assiduity of which she possessed seemed to be almost unlimited.”

At Hazard's Pavilion Ptl. R. Miller's The Hottest Coo in Dixie played the boards 3-4-5-6, and did a fair business. The show is very good for that class of a performance, but may not be as popular with the general public as the white male makes the best theatrical coo.

HERBERT J. CONN.

MUSICAL MENTION.

November 26.—The presentation last night at the afternoon performance of the Los Angeles Oratorio Society, under the direction of Prof. Y. A. Bacon, was a marked success in the musical program presented. This wonderful composition still holds the position in the world of music that it attained in London over a century ago. The performance was a magnificent one, which gives him to the voice by smooth and brilliant orchestration, without giving undue prominence to the instruments. The tone-pictures of Choses are wonderfully contrived with the exquisite air, With Virtue, a song that was sung by Miss Georina Johnstone-illsho, whose artistic finish and perfect mastery of the score blended throughout with the character and spirit of the oratorio. Another bit of nature, in Native Worth, was well rendered by Mr. A. Miller, whose tenor voice on this piece, in hisRolling in Follwing Billows brought out Mr. H. S. Williams's wide range and good quality voice.

The ensemble of the chorus was good, especially in the Heavens are Telling, which still remains one of the noblest of oratorio compositions.

The audience last evening, in its keen interest and intelligent appreciation, was one of the finest ever gathered in our city to honor a musical master. Simpson's Tabernacle was crowded to its fullest capacity. Several red carpeted doors that the manager has decided to re-open the oratorio on Tuesday evening, December 5th.

STOCKTON.

Special Correspondence.

STOCKTON, Dec. 5.—Cortin's Minstrels did the high's big. Among the features of the Yo Semite, playing to S. R. O., and their bill was an exceptionally clean one and the company showed usual4ly fine business management.

Murry and Mack did a large Saturday night business. The women are all coming and do their parts well, and Fussinger's Bal 'took' here. As fun producers Murry and Mack are good.

My friend from India held the boards Monday evening and played to large business. L. R. Stockwell is very popular here. The company is a good one and lost no advantage to get everything possible out of the characters. J. E. McCarthy, a good and capable young man, former treasurer of the Yo Semite Theater in this city, is in advance of India for its present tour. Special mention should be made in this play by Miss Mabelle Bowman, who is the sister of Mr. J. R. Bowman and has naturally by her historic abilities, Mrs. Hall having supported Wades and James with great success. Miss Bowman made a distinct hit.

I want to call attention to Mrs. S. Caulderwood, whose picture appeared in the Call last week. Mrs. Caulderwood, rated as a coming stellar attraction in the musical world. She has studied for grand opera and was a well known and advertised singer at St. Frances de Sales Fair in Oakland was pronounced of high class. The audience, from the opening of the act above twenty were in the house. Mrs. Caulderwood is a Stockton girl, having been Miss Lottie Barrie, daughter of Mr. H. Barrie. She has been a great help to her relatives that she will soon appear at the Albambah at the head of an excellent company, and will afterward start for Australia.

The golden justice of the Methodist Church has pronounced the Carnivals of Nations. The rendition of Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, spoken of last week in the great performance, is given here. The following solosists from San Francisco were heard to flattering adulation: Stella Freden, won a large audience, and is a wonderful singer. Mrs. Roper Van Ronen, Miss Cecelia Decker, Miss Florence Boston, Miss Lula Fiedelheim, Miss Brian, Miss Seite, Miss Fanny Denny and H. H. Sellers.

Among the local singers were Miss Mabel Gross, James Jones and Arthur Vincent. One of the most promising tenors voices in this city is that of James Rhea, who is fast coming to the front as a solo artiste. His voice is rich, smooth and well expressed and is one of the most welcome effects. No other tenor now heard in the local church choirs.

The Yo Semite was jammed Sunday afternoon at the Elks' Lodge of Sorrow. Brother Francis E. Beck of San Francisco No. 3, delivered his sermon. In Old Kentucky ended the week's engagments here, and played to a big house. The company is a fine one, as good as has been seen in the favorite Southern play. Eugene Blake and Souza's Brite Fleet follow at once and are sure to please all. Archie Levy has given the Tivoli Music Hall a good singer this week in Miss Annette Gerdes, Business Manager. E. R. Hardy brought with great satisfaction of the success of his boon friend, Harry Conner Clarke, at Los Angeles in Jones. G. E. McMarr SPOKANE, Nov. 30, 1899. —Auditorium Theater, H. C. Hayward. Mr. Capt. Harry Wells, Oregon Vols., lectured on Our War Dead in a session attended by an appreciative audience. Mile. Fl., 26—Good performance, Black Patt's Troubadours opened November 30 for three nights. Large attendance last evening night. H. F. Waite as the successor of Ernest Logan, gave a clean and protogeous performance. He made many friends since he has been declared superior to his illustrious predecessor, now of Australian fame. The Operatic kaliedoscope of Mrs. Cardin, Miss Parks and Miss Murphy, a trained chime, in selection from Ermine, Fanst, Tannhauser and L' Afrique. Week ended November 4th, the Shaw Carol's repertory. DOLPH.

SANTA BARBARA.

Special Correspondence.

SANTA BARBARA, Dec. 1.—Santa Barbara has been in a condition of almost volcanic excitement this last week, at least it has seemed so in contrast to its usual condition of extreme quiet. Thanksgiving day brought a series of festivities which made the little town0 tidy with its whirl of gaiety. One really had to choose between a football game of local interest and the matinee. True, it was only a minstrelstr, but to have an afternoon performance was something, though the evening the minstrels appeared—only the Georgia wild men were a crowdhouse, for both football teams and their friends were there and were gen- erous with applause. The people behind the footlights seemed to urge encouragement, for they looked and acted tired and stiff.

This present week we have another colored attraction, The Hottest Coo in Dixie; Miss Lottie Warde, who has something extraordinary. It may be, for those who like a continuous performance of "O. P. O." Nature has taken a hand in the entertainment of last week by sending in rollers mountain, and was over the Hayward, and bounded the water front and causing considerable destruction. The wreckage was announced by huge placards on the cars, and very one has been running, I mean going. No one rushes here, not even the elect who, from the height of the huge gap and what was much better worth the eight, the long, rolling swells that would come sweeping with a mighty bound over with an unbroken crest fifty feet long and beautiful to see. But this is neither dra- ma, nor song, nor music, but just a show of it of so much interest I could not refrain from it mention.

The Oratorio Club of Santa Barbara is doing good work for the progressive spirit of the town by the excellent program offered to the public. A wonderful variety of views are some of the features presented by the Club.

Mr. Gordon Carter and Mr. Lewis Thwaite, both organizers of representative teaching the public ear to appreciate fine music, and at the same time giving the music lovers at their liberal treat, which come once in or six weeks. Mr. Thwaite is organist and chairman of the musical Church, and gives fine music at the Sunday services.

Between the local talent and occasional vis- itors from other cities, the prospect for good musical and dramatic entertainment during the winter is very bright and encouraging. How well ought to be well interested in what they can get rather than getting exactly what they want.

HONOLULU.

Special Correspondence.

HONOLULU, Nov. 8.—The first four weeks of sixteen performances has passed, giving the local citizens a chance to renew their encouragement and continue until finish their season of thirty-two opera. Everything goes through with a rush. All were pleased with the company, though the the theater- going portion of the inhabitants is very lim- ited, as the same number of people is in each night. Saturday night a special train is run to give those living on the plantations an opportunity to see the opera. This train leaves this morning and arrives on Tuesday in time for all to see. It is an opportunity to go to business in knowing how to have a good house on Saturday afternoon. All schools are provided with tickets, which are given to the scholars, and when presented at the box office by them a ticket is sold at half price. The local theater is open on the last Saturday night of each month, as well as was shown by the last two matinees.

The Neill Company proposes coming here in February. W. E. TAPPAN, M. B. Curtis and wife, late of Australia, are stopping here on account of Mrs. Curtis health.

The Orpheum was playing poor houses for a few weeks for want of talent. Raul, H. Spiller, Mr. and Mrs. H. Spiller, leave for the Coast the 20th. The muscians, W. Camp, and Harry Bean, together opened, opened the zyl. Lillian Sisters from Australia, in operatic selections, opened the zyl.

OAKLAND.

Special Correspondence.

OAKLAND, Dec. 6.—That ever popular and pretty story of Kentucky life, In Old Kentucky, is now playing at the theatre from pit to dome Monday evening, Dec. 4, and delighted the large audience.

T. E. Stockwell, the popular comedian in the roaring part, my Friend From India, opened at the Macfionough last night for a season of six nights and a matinee, and was greeted by a large house. Mr. Stockwell is in a great favorite with Oakland audiences. It is encouraging to say that business will be very large.

On Monday and Tuesday evenings, Dec. 11 and 12, the last week of the performance of The Strand on Sherman will be the attraction. At the Dewey Opera House, Oliver Twist has been a popular attraction. It is artistically mounted and presented by a large cast, the principal characters being in the hands of Landers Stevens, as Bill Lytes, Fanny Gillette, as Nancy Lytes, Driscoll as Tigg, and Oliver Twist, and E. J. Holden, as Pagin the Jew. The audience has been large the entire week.

Week commencing Dec. 12, the Grand Stock Company will be seen in The Knocks of Ten Thousand.
The Elk's Lodge held memorial services at the Macaulough Theater last Sunday afternoon.

MUSICAL NOTES.
Both the society and musical elements are much interested in the first production of P. C. Allen's pastoral, Adria and Aros, at Dieta Opera House next Friday evening. The occasion will mark the first opportunity afforded here of hearing a work composed by Mr. Allen in one of larger forms of composition.
The next concert of the Hughes' Club will take place after the Christmas holidays.

SACRAMENTO.

SACRAMENTO, Dec. 9th.—The Filmore Company began their second week Monday night with Ten Thousand Miles Away.
The evening was given during this week Tuesday, The Ensign: Wednesday, May Blossom, Thursday, A Nutmeg Match; Friday, The Idler; Saturday matinée, Robinson Crusoe: Sunday night, The Black Face. Sunday night's performance is to be left to the patrons of the Cluny Opera House, they being the highest bidders.

Thursday night is to be Newsboys' Night, Manager Fickie and Jessie Norton having re-arranged the orchestra and invited the boys to be present.

THE ORPHEUM

The Orpheum

THERE are a number of new features at the Orpheum this week. The excelsior program, that different Millar, whose expert playing of the cornet was a pleasure to the delighted hearers. Emmonds, Emerson & Emmonds in their jolly skit, One Joe Joke, were received with upcurious applause and must have been more than pleasantly welcomed by the audience. The crowded house demanded a recall, and their take-off of an Orpheum audience was very laughable and fully appreciated. It is to be hoped some of the thoughtless women were affected and may be affected by the theater hat episode, but it is too much to hope that this class can or will learn anything. The Tennis Trio, two athletic fellows and a pretty girl, gave an exceedingly good Indian club performance and were applauded to the echo. George Fuller Golden jumped into immediate high favor. His new Casey jokes are rich, rare and racy. Peter Baker continues to delight the house and a hearty encore gave the Red, White and Blue. A. D. Robbins, the trick bicyclist, is a wonder, but D'Arville is the greatest attraction for the time being. Her sweet, thrilling voice touches the heart and she carries her audiences with her. She sings with exquisite expression coon songs of a high order, if that term can be applied to coon songs, but her charming personality renders them tender and sweet and above the ordinary vaudeville singer.

VAUDEVILLE NOTES

The Williams are tendered good engagements with Mr. Plaster of Paris Company and with the Greater America Company, but could not accept.

They are completing plans for a tour of Portland, Seattle, Vancouver and that country, coming back so as to open with the New Oberon.

Mabel Maitland, the well known contortion dancer, has just arrived in this city.

She opens in this city at an early date.

Lillian Smith, gun and pistol expert, and the Washington electric serengetie dancers, opened Wednesday night at the Orpheum, Honolulu.

John H. Wilson and his troupe of Hawaiians, arrived from Omaha a few days ago. Seven of them will play this city, the others return to Honolulu our regular steamers.

Hastings and Hall, the clever and popular vocal duo, are a decided hit at the Olympia. Their rendition of popular songs were received with marks of approval, and the numerous recalls they received is a sure test that they have already established themselves into popular favor.

Cordray's Latest

MANAGER CORDRAY, Portland's progressive manager, is soon to introduce an innovation at his theater in the shape of a graphophone, which will be used to make announcements to the audience concerning the attractions which are to come to his theater, as well as of items of news in which playgoers will be interested. The instrument was ordered in the East. It will soon be in working order, and ready for business.

Records will be taken of the songs and other specialties that may make a hit during the engagements of the various companies playing at the theater, and they will be used to entertain the audience between the acts of current productions. At times of public excitement, such as the evening of an election day, the returns will be announced from the stage by means of the graphophone.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

December 9th, 1899

In the World of Music

Mr. Alfred Kelleher's successful theatrical concert given in Sherman Clay Hall two weeks ago recalls some interesting points in the career of this esteemed singer and his wife, formerly Miss Susan Galton, who stoned in comic opera years ago, and whose graceful acting and sweet voice won the commendation of the press when they appeared together from Whittaker, boxighted at this recent and gratifying event. When a boy Mr. Kelleher was noted for his good voice and was brought up in Broomton, London, leading the boys' choir. His voice reached high C with surprising ease, and he attracted the admiration of the Dowager Duchess of Argyle, who made a pet of the little fellow. His studies were pursued under Garcia Plaisted, Lily Post, Helen Merrill, Lilian Coleman, Lizzie Boyer, Carrie Roma and others claimed him as their first instructor. Mr. Kelleher is a member of the choir of Trinity Church and is also a master in the San Francisco Conservatory of Music. Mrs. Alfred Kelleher, nee Susan Galton, is a niece of Louise Pyne, the great English opera singer, who first produced Lurline, Satinelle, Rossa of Castle, and Martha. At five years of age Miss Galton appeared in public as pianist, continuing in concert work until the age of fourteen. Her mother Mary Pyne Galton, a gifted musician, who played in London concerts with Joachim and other celebrities, gave her the first instruction in piano and singing, after which she was sent to Paris. Miss Galton was prepared to come out in the Opera Comique in Crown Diamonds, but illness forced her to abandon her cherished plan. Her education received its crowning point in a course of study with Sig. Schira, and she appeared at Her Majesty's Theatre in London as Amina in Sonnambula, singing Marguerite in Faust, Lucia, Traviata and other operas before the Royal family. When only sixteen she appeared at a monster concert at Drury Lane Theater, where Miss Galton was known as the child singer with all the great artists of the day, Trebelli and Rudersdorf, also appearing at the London Pops when Halle and other Concerts attracted thousands of people. For a time she was a member of the American Opera Company, but returned to Paris where she sang in 1868. Miss Galton came to America with her mother, Mr. Whippin and Mr. Kelleher and during the first two years they introduced English comic opera in this country. After a successful season in London, Mr. and Mrs. Kelleher retired from the stage. In Mr. Kelleher's pleasant studio in the Clay Street house, he showed me the portrait of his wife—the face of a sweet girl in her teens,—"When she was a younger, she was said with a smile, as she pointed proudly at the pretty flowing hair. Their home life is very lovely, and five girls and a boy are a living monument of motherhood, dearer to Mrs. Kelleher than the applause and florishes that rained upon the stage in the days gone by.

MEMBERS CONCERT Y. M. C. A.

Mr. Robert Lloyd directed the members' concert of the Y. M. C. A., which was a very pleasant affair, and held at the Associated Students Building. Encores were the order of the evening, every participant being compelled to satisfy the demands of the audience. Mr. Lloyd, in his double encore, the sweet strains of the violin making a happy contrast to the two sopranos. Mr. Lloyd seems to please wherever he appears. He plays with great care and feeling. He has a good voice, as he has proved, and Sarusate, doing some brilliant work. His encore was even more charming, when the applause produced the second encore. Adair, the pretty air that one knows and loves. Mr. Lloyd was in very fine voice all the evening. We have heard him. His robust, ringing tones brought much applause. Mr. Lloyd rolls his r's perhaps a little too much. His numbers were Canticule de Noel [Adam] and a hearty encore, and a duet with Mr. Ogiville, Benedict's The Moon Hath Raised Her Lamp. Mr. Ogiville also sang Romany Lass. He has a good voice, as he has proved, and seemed to be her best number, receiving much praise. Miss Clara Atkins sang Emery's Hurst Ye Apple Buds, very prettily. The American String Quartet appeared several times and made an excellent impression, but they are in no need of encores. There's One That I Love, and encore. The quartet comprises Miss Lena Hartman, Miss Rose Whippin, Miss John Madden, Mrs. Arthur Lewis, pianist. Mr. Franklin Palmer was the accompanist for the entire program.

—Mary Frances Francis.
Behind the Scenes During Rehearsal

"Keep out during rehearsal—this applies to all," was the greeting at the door. Merely a sign and ineffectual, so I turned a table in my passage to the office of the police things, the best place to push for instance, and slid in. They were hard at it. Mr. Webster held the center of the stage wound around you actor, as full of frowns and as easily persuaded to either.

"Now then, we're ready." Miss Patton sat in a corner mending a Mexican ditzy and thumbing an imaginary something with both of her hands.

"Bully!" said I—pot a fine word, but it telegraphed well. She caught it with a grin and pounced on. In fact, all her little dollops and sayings were so good, so characteristic that even in the baldness of an undressed stage, she created a Mexican atmosphere I was to wager a point of Mark's against a box of gloves he makes a hit on Monday night. (She did play up and make them Dead's). She lounged upon words to all who asked and their treatment of them, except by Monsieur, who has a talent for tongues, called the "pony whose name was Dappie Gray." Every little while a character thought over that bit of new business, and woe to the prompter if he interrupted its performance. He was withered with a glance. How would you like to be—the prompter? Mr. Moore doesn't mind—he is too busy to say at grey stones, for beside being prompter he is anybody, everybody, at a moment's notice male or female, from Hamlet down. He has played more parts than the world will ever know.

Mr. Ormoude's seemed the coolest head in the cast. "I'm developing" he would say, simply when times he did not need were handled him. Good things came to him as the act progressed, and he expressed them freely. Mr. Bryant encourages this. Discipline need not suffer because an actor thinks, and it does not.

"Mother of an angel!" said some one suddenly to Miss Howe. She gave her a shove forward to be worthy of the dignity, but it went a shade too far and the effect was killing. I looked up and caught the eye of one Kitty with a shock of merry curls. We had the joke together. O Kitty, it was wicked of you. She has not, only a bit of headlong and she has time and heart to smile. The others snatch every pause to cram for the next entrance. I except Mr. Opperman. He seemed better perfect and hied him to the wings to yawn. It seems one of these happy people who knows what he wants and takes it without affairs.

"I love the pleasures of life—" said Miss Howe laughingly. I thought the sentiment held him, but the truth was he lacked a line.

"Over and over a situation is tried until it fastens and no one loses patience. I learned a lesson that I shall not even forget." The second act was moving well. "Who of some one stalwart to his mate, "Watch this. Here's where we do the body snatching act." and Mr. Deuthorne died again all unconscious of the fate in store for him.

Two good old-model chairs were the church doors and the crowd fished in with never a thought of incongruity. The bell ringer in his own tongue and pulsed the air vigorously. The sober way these people eat without food, sew without needles, wash without soap, buy and sell without money is a joy to the beholder. But the manner of death is most wonderful. The last curtain finds Ormoude and Miss Foster standing erect on the stage. Dead for a duke. "Your tie is askew," says corpse Gloria to her Manuel. Corpse Manuel shakes a thread from her shoulder and the courtesy is even.

"Ten thirty to morrow. please," calls Mr. Bryant as they separate and everyone nods "sinecure."
Concerning Tragedy and a Tragedian.

No change in the theatrical inclinations of our people in the last few years has been so greatly commented upon or so generally deplored as has the decline in interest in our tragic or legitimate drama. That this is so is by popular sentiment conceded to be for the reason that we have no great actors remaining, sufficiently equipped, to successfully essay the great roles that have been made famous by their predecessors. Now, while this is in a great measure the truth, still as there are in all things exceptions, which prove the rule, so it is in this regard, inasmuch as a judgment, harsh as the above undoubtedly is, does not allow for the really fine actors that by the grace of God still continue to ornament and elevate our theaters.

Comparison,—that great and meritorious standard by which all are judged, at least in the theatrical business,—aided by the sentiment attaching to the memory of deceased tragedians, more than anything else, is responsible, I believe, for this state of affairs.

Now, it is evident and unquestioned, after a careful study of existing conditions, that given the proper play, a capable manager would find little or no difficulty in casting it and finding the actors to successfully produce it, no matter what its requirements. This being admitted, it follows that the decline of popular interest in the standard play is due, not to the want of players but rather to the lack of playwrights, competent to evolve a great tragic play. Most of the tragedies, with the exception of Shakespeare's, that still survive, were originally written to meet the requirements of some particular player and I have all the faults of the "star" play in its worst forms. Now, however, that these particular stars are no more, there is neither the inclination nor the desire to witness their production or revival. Besides this, most of these old tragedies have been constructed on lines and by methods no longer in use and have been written in antiquated style and consequently have ceased to attract either attention or respect.

From this we arrive naturally at the conclusion that were some of our present-day tragedians supplied with a proper play, there would unquestionably ensue a revival of interest in the legitimate drama.

Take for instance, the case of Frederick Ward, the distinguished tragedian, soon to appear at the Columbia Theater. Here is an actor, equipped both by nature and education with every endowment necessary to his art, but who has been hampered and restrained by the difficulties which he experiences in obtaining a suitable play; one that, while it would give room and opportunity to the display of his splendid talents, would be, nevertheless, new in every particular.

Nor can it be said that Mr. Ward has not been enterprising in this regard, for on the contrary, he has seized upon every play that has presented possibilities and with a magnificent indifference to monetary considerations, has been more than lavish in giving them proper and adequate productions. From Gallo, the Gladiator, to The Rise of Iskander, he has risked and lost immense sums in his endeavor to find new plays that would answer his purpose. Not only has he been enterprising in the production of new plays, but his revivals of Shakespeare's and other tragedies have been noteworthy and stupendous undertakings.

From the commencement of Mr. Ward's independent career as a tragedian, he has labored earnestly, honestly and intelligently towards the advancement of his high purposes and the position he at present occupies in the theatrical world is a tribute to his industry and genius. There is no actor before the American people today that deserves so well his success as Mr. Ward, and it is with feelings of the sincerest regard that I look forward to his forthcoming production of another new play at the Columbia Theater, in the hope that he may be enabled to find the man to which he has been seeking and that there may accrue to him the reward of his long continued application and endeavor.

Stage Aspirants Who Are Successful

"SUCCESS upon the stage," said Julian Mitchell, can be summed up in the middle distance between over-confidence and timidity; between lack of and the vaulting ambition that o'erleaps itself. The extremes are peculiar to nine-tenths of the girls who apply for a chance to "go on the stage," whether in opera or drama.

"You can tell them in a minute. Perhaps to the uninitiated it is not apparent, but to the stage manager who is called upon to pass on the merits of a dozen or more stage-struck girls every day or so, the girl who will never make a success can be told at a glance. To those who care to study them the types are clearly defined.

"There is the fashionably-gowned girl, who has a perfect passion for theatricals. She generally writes a perfumed note requesting an appointment, and comes tardily to keep it, dressed picturesquely, though faultlessly, in the latest mode. She is certain of every line of her figure, and carries herself with all the swagger airs of the fashionable cult. She looks upon herself, and is careful to so impress it upon the stage-manager, as quite the proper thing. Indeed, her debut will be nothing short of a sensation. Her wardrobe is already on the entity of the smart set. She asks particularly about the privacy of the dressing-rooms, and languidly stipulates the parts she will sing. She is, as you see, lofty in her ideals and exclusive to a degree.

"That girl never succeeds, for she never gets on the stage.

"She offered a place in the chorus, Star indignantly refuses, and that is the end of it.

"Then there is the girl who has been told by all her friends, and they are legion, that she has a wondrous talent and such pretty ways. She knows it better than anybody else, and is careful to have it clearly understood that she is no novice.

"She has acted before—in private theatricals. She has studied Delaure as a matter of course, not of necessity, since she has always been praised for a graceful carriage ever since she was a child.

"She has taken a course in elocution—not because she needed it, but it was a fad with the other girls.

"She has taken lessons in acting—just to get the local color, don't you know, and, well, to acquire repertoire. (This last with a very Frenchy pronunciation.) She seldom accepts the proffered place in the chorus. If she does, she spends more time in trying to overwrite the other girls with her superiority than in serious effort to apply the studies she has made a far. Her humiliation is generally swift and sure, and entirely of her own making, for the chorus has its own peculiar way of eradicating cast from its ranks.

"Then there is the girl who comes to the stage-door just after rehearsal, and asks to go on in the chorus. There is nothing gay or gaudy, frivolous or affected about her. She is plainly though neatly dressed, with just a suspicion of an effort to wear something approaching the popular fashions of the hour. She has nothing to say about ambition; no self-laudatory praises to sing of her studies at home or abroad; no high ideals which include a sweeping reform of the stage. She wants only what she asks for in a matter-of-fact, unromantic way—to go on in the chorus.

"She is the girl who has been on the stage before—in the chorus, and having fallen into the grind of it all aspires to nothing higher. Training has made her indifferent to everything but the stage-manager's orders, which she follows mechanically, and enthuses over nothing but pay-day.

"Quite different from any of these is the girl who approaches the interview with the stage-manager with timidity. Her manner is usually very apologetical, though she watches everything with undisguised interest. The conversation is generally one-sided, because she is too much embarrassed to talk much.

"The trying out of this girl's voice is a positive ordeal for both herself and the stage-manager. Invariably she is too much frightened to sing, and has to be encouraged at a second and even a third rehearsal before she has demonstrated, as she does with surprising sprightliness and a pleasing vivacity, when she has recovered from her first attack of nervousness, that she has talent in plenty.

"That is the kind of girl who generally makes a success upon the stage.

"She is the kind of girl who has not wasted her time on lofty ideals and freakish fads.

"She is not overconfident—over-confidence has ruined the chances of more actors and actresses than lack of talent ever did—hence she works hard in fear lest she fall through insufficiency preparation.

"She is the kind of girl who takes her place in the chorus without a murmur or a grimace. That was not the position she was aiming for, but she is quick to take advantage of every stepping stone, and the chorus is a big span over the gulf between the beginner and success.

"This is her school of practical acting, and she is a close student. Every moment not required for her own part she spends in the wings studying the actions and the business of the stars.

"If it is opera she aspires to, she is the girl who learns to forget dress during those first years of her struggle and devotes every cent she can scrape together in cultivating her voice.

"She is the kind of girl who is generally pretty of face and shapely of figure—two elements most potential in the ingredients that go to make a success on the stage—for she is practical and energetic, which usually result in an equal mental and physical development. Then the proper training makes her a graceful dancer, a good actress and a pleasing singer.

"She is the kind of girl who very soon works her way into small parts, and, as not infrequently happens, into instant public favor."

Letter List

Members of the theatrical profession may have letters addressed in care of this office. No charge will be made for advertising such letters in the columns of the Review or for forwarding.

The great London Adelphi success, With Flying Colors will be the New Year's week attraction at the California Theater. Mr. Frawley has received a complete set of the scene models from London, and rehearsals began last Monday. There will be over forty people in the cast.

Good-bye Wallack's!

The Star Theater, formerly Wallack's, in New York, during the early era, at the corner of Thirteen street and Broadway, must go, as the owner, William Walhof Astor, has learned that it no longer pays interest on the investment. A twelve-story office and commercial building will be erected in its place. But as the Star goes down, the walls of the New Republic Theater on Forty-second street, adjoining Hammerstein's Victoria, are going up under the watchful eye of Hammerstein himself. As a builder of theaters Hammerstein is irreproachable. He has secured Sag Harbor, James A. Hearne's new play, as the opening attraction for the Republic in September of 1900.

The Mechanics Institute has awarded diplomas for superior work to Mr. Louis Thors, Photographer, 556 Market St.

A Box-office Episode

Treasurer Will Empey of the New Alhambra Theater was sitting dreamily at his post in the box office the other morning, wondering why he was up so early. He was suddenly aroused from his revery by the appearance of a somewhat seedy looking individual in front of the window opening, who promptly presented one of the regulation New Alhambra passes. Upon it was written “Give bearer two seats for tonight” and was signed “O. B. Wise.”

“My good man, I can’t give you any seats on that order,” said the genial treasurer, blandly, “there is no such person connected with the house.

“Now look here, young feller,” replied the seedy individual, excitedly, his red nose getting redder, “you can’t bluff me. I want them seats or there’s going to be trouble. That’s a bony fifer order alright and if you don’t recognize it, I’ll just clean out your whole shebang. Come now, cough up. Understand, I’m not looking for trouble, but I don’t take no bluffing.”

It finally took a little persuasion of the forcible order to convince the seedy individual that a pass signed by “O. B. Wise” didn’t go at the New Alhambra.

PERFECTLY SATISFIED

Editor San Francisco Review—Dear Sir,—In justice to Mr. Harry Clarke and myself, I want to refuse, through the columns of the Review, the statement of some of the city press to the effect that I quit Mr. Clarke’s company on account of unpleasant relations. On the contrary, both my social and business relations with Mr. Clarke were of the most pleasant and satisfactory nature. It was understood at the time of engaging myself with his company that it was only for the special engagement. Myself and mother have only the kindliest feelings toward Mr. Clarke.

Cecilia Casella.
Mr. Mansfield was talking of his hard first days as an actor, when he was a sort of private party entertainer and had to pay the bills. He says little music and minia-tetic capers at London houses. At the close of one bitter bad month he fainted at a performance, having had scarce a meal of nourishing food for days. "You know," he said, "there is little do-urence to be placed in a party diet of chicken salad and intermitent ice creams." What a blessed thing is a sense of humor! The hard days had not made the man hard—rather dowered him with a great tenderness for the people, for those who knew that tale, for that tender moment. Somebody across the table asked him what seemed to him the explanation of a certain relaxed state of dramatic art in America just now. He an-tered, "The good actors in New York are good bad and bad plays with good actors." From one in a bundle of letters expressing the satisfaction of some people who had seen The First Violin he read this much: "My husband and I want to tell you how much we loved that play. Perhaps it is because we have a little baby of our own—" There he paused and laid the letter aside, saying: "That's the key I love to strike, and it seems to me that it shows plainly enough what the public wishes. It is the old 'heart interest' idea which is always so new—the children, the home, the cleanly love. I like to look back and think that I have never produced a play that could make somebody ashamed in the seeing."—Jas. O. Brunetti.

David Harum, which gained wonderful popularity as a book, is to be seen on the stage this winter. Charles Frohman, who long owned the stage rights to the book, and has decided to produce it as soon as the necessary preparations can be made. He has selected William H. Crane to create the part of David Harum.

Theatrical Breaks

It is strange but true that this has been a year of bad breaks in the theatrical profession, and the very worst of the breaks have been made by those who should have known better.

Then there is one sort of bad break that has been indulged in all too frequently. It is that of the comedian aspiring to be the real thing in the tragic line. Many have tried it, and most of them have failed dismally. Last year it was The Wolf Hopper, the many married man. This year it was Francis Wilson.

Everybody remembers how Francis tried to outdo the impressive and doleful Mansfield at his own game. In. Where the Breeze Be Best, his nose was longer and so more aham. His poses more dramatic. His delivery of his verses more impressive. It was to be real tragedy, and now that it is over, let it be confessed that he didn't do very well to venture that. If public could have disassociated Wilson from his giddy post, and the giddier Lulu Glaser, they might have applauded. As it was it was only a bad break, and one which counted many dollars out of the comedian's pocket. He has gone back to rough and tumble jesting and being and is lauded and growing wealthy.

Still another and worse sort of bad break was that made by the firm which put on the Zangwill play, The Children of the Ghetto. They had no excuse except an ardent faith in their infallibility, which was really wonderful. They had seen one really good play go to the bowers in spite of good acting and much well wishing. Still they said, "We can't be wrong. We have this piece, and because the dear, foolish public swallowed The Christian and Hall Comedy, we must also blow down Zangwill and The Ghetto." The critics told them the public would not have it. The public itself said the same by stony silence. Then the firm raised the clamor that they were victims of a plot, and gave it out that they would spend thousands to force the play upon the public. They advertised it as "the venomously abused success" on big yellow billows.

Now, there were several really bad breaks in this line. One firm had spent the same amount of money in exploiting their play where it was not known, for every play is known to the New York public without a word from the critics after it has been. It was New York three days, they might have made money. Then to call it "venomously abused" revolted the understanding of all right thinking folk who read the papers, for they had seen for themselves that there was not an ounce of malice or venom in the criticisms.

Another ill advised gentleman was Stuart Robson when he produced The G A f l y . He knew it hit upon a sore spot in the social makeup, and he gloried in the fact. Other managers, wiser than he, had turned the play down. He, through his press agent, exploded its most objectionable features. It was held up to the public as something to be wondered at, and Mr. Robson was a great being for daring to produce. Of course, the dear little play was interested—to the extent of a first night audience. Then it was all off. They had heard all about it, and it was all over. They wouldn't have it at any price, and Mr. Robson was out of pocket, and probably much wiser.

Then there was Nat Goodwin's little talk in Cincinnati, but probably there was much in that which was merited.

And so it goes. There have been hundreds of them made this season, such as Commodore Mohler putting out a company and the like. Taking shows out on shoestrings has been another form of the party. Now that the real season has started everybody hope that everybody else will be good and that there will be no more real bad breaks made in the theatrical world.

Tim's Preference

I heard a funny story about James O'Neill the other day, and in-lessly about "Tim," for many years head porter of the Continental hotel in Philadelphia, writes "A Woman of the World" in the New York Telegraph. It seems that "Tim" had personally attended to the actor's baggage, and Mr. O'Neill decided to show his appreciation of this lordly condescension by giving him a pass for the theater.

"Do you like to go to the theater, Tim?" he asked, taking out his book of passes.

"I do, yer aham," said Tim.

"Are you married? Shall I give you two seats?"

"Well, I'm not exactly married, but I do be spinning' a leddy. Yiz can make it two. Thany, sir," said he as Mr. O'Neill handed him the pass.

"An' what play might ut be, yer aham?"

"Monte Cristo," was Mr. O'Neill's reply.

"Tut, tut," muttered Tim, shaking his head. "Everybody says Monte O'Chirsty doesn't be wurt a minute. Sure, I wonder if yez cud give me a pass fer th' Chestnut."

"What's playin' at the Chestnut?" asked Mr. O'Neill.

"An actor be the name of Gillet, in Hild by the Er' av me, and they say he's foin!"

The bonfire thrower of Europe is at work again. He released last week at a Madrid performance, fortunately killing no one. We can thank our stars that this pleasant pastime has never been popular in this land of the free.
Clarence Montaine left the Alcazar Stock Company Sunday night.

J. H. Love sails the 27th for Honolulu to pave the way for Nance O'Neill.

Jane Plunkett is now known as Jane Irving in the What Happened to Jones' cast.

Argyle Tully, late of Harry Corson Clarke's Company, has returned to San Francisco.

McWade Chilcott has changed his position a little. He is now manager for Harry Corson Clarke's Jones' Company.

Virginia Vaughn has taken Laura Crews' part of Cissy with Harry Corson Clarke. Miss Sears rejoins the Alcazar Stock Company.

E. A. Braden and Harry Hardy are coming to advance Minstrel A Hot Old Time, which will occupy the New Alhambra early in January.

Emile Brugiere, a local young clubman with musical proclivities, has composed some of the incidental music for Mother Earth, now running at the Alcazar.

Paloma Schreamp, the wonderful child pianist, is home in Los Angeles, after a triumphant tour of Europe. She is in perfect health and has gained much in her playing.

Estella Dale, leading woman of the Shenandoah Company, is in private life Mrs. Pitcher, wife of Dr. Pitcher, U. S. A., who sailed last week for Manila with his regiment.

Gertrude Foster, the popular leading woman of the Alcazar Company, leaves the first of the year for New York. Miss Foster has been very popular with Alcazar audiences.

W. L. Curwin, who has been in the cast of several Alcazar productions, has been selected to create an important part in Bert Coote's New York production of A Battle Scared Hero.

Andrew E. Thomson has left Harry Corson Clarke, and is now ahead of the Cheerful Liar Company. He knows the interior towns on the coast as well, if not better, than any advance man in the country.

George H. Allen, who was here with E. H. Wood in advance of the Original General Minstrel, now appearing at the New Alhambra, has the distinction of being the only man who ever billed the Strand in London. He was the advance man for Barnum and Bailey's Circus upon its European tour.

NANCE O'NEIL is doing a tremendous business at the Burbank, Los Angeles.

Virginia Vaughn has left Harry Corson Clarke's Company, and will come back to this city.

Clarence Brune, of the Frederick Wardle Company, came up from Los Angeles a pretty sick man. He is on the mend now, however.

Mr. Tunis F. Dean, well known by virtue of his long connection with the Academy of Music, Baltimore, in the capacity of manager, has arrived here in the interests of the Liebler's The Christian.

J. B. Johns has parted with Harry Corson Clarke and is now in San Francisco.

Word has been received here that Willie Collier will produce during his San Francisco engagement a new play by Augustus Thomas.

Lule Warrington has been very ill for the last few weeks, and at present is in such a critical condition that by the doctor's orders no one is allowed to see her.

Ida Wyatt, one of the best dancers and soubrettes in the business, is arranging the ball at the Tivoli for the Christmas spectacular piece. This means that the ball will be a most pronounced success.

A. T. Shamon, treasurer Frederick Wardle Company, was for a long time a popular newspaper man in Washington, being for seven years correspondent at the National Capital for the New York World.

Black Petty, whose magnificent voice will be heard for the next two weeks at the New Alhambra, has won fame in every part of the civilized world. Her recent tour of Europe was a continuous series of ovations.

Baron de Bush and Pauline Joran, the American prima donnas, were married in London November 24th at St. Margaret's Church, Westminster. She sang with the Carl Rosa Opera Company in London and in Great Britain and was a great favorite abroad.

Kathryn Kiddie is said to be contemplating retirement from the stage for the quietude of domestic life. It is further rumored that a promising young lawyer in New York named Hitchcock will be the groom at this prospective wedding.

At the last moment Grace George, who, in private life is the wife of Manager Wm. A. Brady, resigned the role of Esther in Ben Hur, and Gretchen Lyon was engaged for the part in which she gave a good account of herself for the limited time she had to study up in it.

George L. Monteserrat, the young actor who recently landed in New York from San Francisco, was discovered one day last week to be in a condition bordering on starvation. He was too proud to appeal to relatives or friends, and his condition was only learned when his wife appealed to friends. The couple will be cared for by the actors charitable organization.

Laura Crews' Return

The return of that very charming little actress Laura Crews to her old position in the Alcazar Company, calls to mind her first appearance before the footlights, which was in South San Francisco several years ago, with a company managed by the irrepres- sible James M. Ward, and Laura was billed as the famous child actress. They played to such a good house that enough money was raised to take them to Eureka, where they played a week of repertoire, pleasing the people so much that applause and packed houses were the result. Laura, "the child actress," because such a favorite that her every appearance was the signal for showers of money on the stage.

Strong Attractions Booked

J. J. Gottlob of the Columbia, who has just returned from New York, tells of great theatrical prosperity in the East. Nearly all of the new attractions are booked for long runs, at the conclusion of which they will be brought out here. An unusually strong list of attractions will follow in rapid succession at the Columbia.

Miss Hobbs has passed its one hundredth performance at the Lyceum Theater, New York, and seems destined to play out the season at that theater.

Barbara Frischie is doing an immense business at the Criterion Theater, New York. The play is strong and unusually interesting, according to the critics' opinion.

Wylie Collier and W. H. West's Minstrels are both in Chicago this week on their way to this city. Collier is anything but a provoker in his comedy, Mr. Smootch.

The management of the Columbia Theater announces that all orders for seats for The Christian must be accompanied by the money for same, otherwise they will not be considered. The advance sale begins Thursday.

The Viceroy, the new comic opera by Herbert and Smith, will have its first production by the Bostonians at the Columbia Theater, Chicago.

Alden Benedict has secured Charles W. Chase's dramatization of Henry Sienkiewicz's famous novel, Quo Vadis, and will make an elaborate production of it. The play was tentatively produced in a small town in New York State recently, and the result was satisfactory. In his dramatization Mr. Chase has adhered closely to the book.

The ashes of the late Charles Coghlan will be placed in a sepulchre on his estate in Prince Edward Island. Andrew Robson will continue in his play The Royal Box, and Gertrude Coghlan, who has been ill in Minneapolis, may appear in Mr. Coghlan's last play, Her Laidsbip.

The Cockney Coon

"The successful week just closed here by In Old Kentucky and its present success in London, by an English company, brings to my mind some very humorous remembrances," said Fred Peel, to a Review man last week, just before he was winding up the Shenandoah business. "Here, at home, we all know exactly what the nigger is, so well even, that the white man makes even a better black man than the genuine article. But over in London it is different. There the colored man furnishes amusement with the most wonderful cockney dialect and coquetry mannerisms that could be imagined. They furnish the derisive as they imagine him and have never yet arrived at that stage where they could appreciate the fact that there might be something different, if they would only get away from their British conserva- tiveness. At Moore and Burgess' minstrel show, one of the features of London, the same impossible darkies salute each other in choice cockney and the audiences laugh and are amused and vote the derisive a most amusing cuss."
The Columbia

We have Frederick Warde with us once again, presenting pretty much the old familiar plays that have long been indentified with his name, and surrounded on the present occasion by a very competent and well-balanced company. This week, with the exception of Thursday night and Saturday matinée, has been given over to Anthony Guy Carleton’s charging story of Venetian life, The Lion’s Mouth, the best thing Carleton ever wrote, and a play that affords Mr. Warde an opportunity to display his histrionic talents to very great advantage. He has tried many new plays, and read many others, but somehow the right one has failed to show up, and The Lion’s Mouth still remains a great favorite with him and with audiences. Mr. Warde, as he presents his creation of Rinaldo, makes a virile, picturesque figure, and is seemingly as much at home in this dashing romantic role as in those heavier characters he is so fond of. Charles D. Herman, an actor of magnificent bearing and great artistic skill, who really has few equals in this country in characters demanding tragic force was Fra Angelo, and his characterization has been as much appreciated as that of any in the cast.

Minnie Tittell Bruine, one of the talented Tittell sisters who used to call San Francisco home, was a very charming Linora, daughter of the Doge, and May Ward, as Marcela gave quite as delightful a performance. The remainder of the cast was in thoroughly competent hands, and with an acknowledgment of the beautiful scenic accessories, it may be said in conclusion that The Lion’s Mouth is as we have seen it this week, one of the most completely satisfying stage presentations we have witnessed in some time. Romeo and Juliet was given Thursday night and Saturday matinée.

The California

The name of C. Haddon Chambers as co-author of The Fast Card, was sufficient guarantee that the play is full of dramatic interest and a very interesting melodrama. It proves to be in the hands of the capable Frawley, Harrington Reynolds makes the villainous George Forrester, who has a streak of good in his make-up, a most picturesque character. Mr. Reynolds is a finished artist, and at all times has that indescribable something in his work which we designate as reserve dramatic force. Each time one sees Francis Byrne he seems to be more developed along strictly legitimate lines. His Gerald Austin was mainly, forceful and convincing, Mr. Frawley played Harry Burgess, a light comedy role in the delightful manner so familiar to San Franciscans. Mary Hampton strengthens the good impression made in the previous plays, and Mary Van Buren plays the small but important part of Mercedes with discretion and force. Jim Dixon, the weak and utterly contemptible confederate of Forrester, was so well done by Wallace Shaw as to create a real feeling of reparation for the character. J. R. Amory did an enjoyable comedy bit as Terence O’Flynn, and with Miss Phosa McAllister as Aunt Penelope and Pearl Landers as Cecile, furnished most of the comic relief. George Gaston gave a capital portrayal of the money-loving old fellow. The balance of the cast with their smaller roles were up to the Frawley standard and included Frank Mathieu, Charles Warner, Charles Welch, Clarence Chase, Reginald Traway, Harry Woodward and Marion Barnay. The play was beautifully mounted and showed careful stage management from the very fact that the scenes fitted together with that lack of effort and exactness which one sees in only truly good performances. The Sporting Duchess was presented the last three days of the week.

The Alcazar

The large attendance at this, the second week of Mother Earth, at the popular Alcazar demonstrated that San Franciscans are only too glad to see any new play and to justly judge its merits. Messrs. Thall and Belasco, and of course the author, Mr. Powers, should feel delighted at the success of the new piece, and no doubt its success here will be duplicated elsewhere.

On one occasion a few years ago, Henry Miller invited his business manager to a supper with some of his friends after the performance. In introducing him, he said: "Allow me to introduce you to Mr. So-and-So, my business manager. He goes about the country telling the people what a good actor I am, but he always leaves town before I arrive."

New Alhambra

A crown that was limited only by the walls of the house greeted Richard’s and Pringle’s Minstrels at the Alhambra Sunday night, and a crowd so pleased, it was that at times the walls seemed near collapse. This organization is undoubtedly the foremost of real colored minstrels in the country. It has been said that the colored man is funny only when he does not try to be so, but the peals of laughter on Sunday night seemed to disprove any such statement. No one has ever claimed, however, that the darkey in his native State could not sing and dance; in fact there is music not only in the black man’s voice, but also in his feet. The old familiar part was the best part of the show, and C. A. Hughes is the best of the singers, while Julius Glenn and James Crosby furnished plenty of amusement with their antics and anec- dotes. Of part two the most acceptable feature was the tarantisms, the Bonomones did some clever acro- batic stunts, and La Serpe performed well on the slack wire.

The Tivoli

This popular Opera House reopened on Saturday night to a crowded house with the jolly comic opera Tar and Tartar, on which occasion Perris Harman, so dear to the Tivoli patrons, was received with uproarious applause after two years’ absence in the East. It must have delighted this versatile comedian to feel his old time, well earned prestige still bound the people to him. As Muley he was funner than ever and kept the house in a continual roar with his local hits, not even sparing himself in I Want a Situation. Schuster, as Cardona, looked, sang and acted his part with his usual spirit and vigor. Tom Greene, the tenor, as Yussuf, had but little opportunity except his solo in the third act, Only to Love Her, which was heartily encored. Phil Branson as Kharton was as funny as funny could be. Wheelan as Rajama, the Court Physi- cian, certainly has no equal in this role. Caroline Knowles as Alpaca, was a tartar wife to a T, and her heavy contralto was especially fine in the woman’s chorus, which by the way was unusually well sung, though the choruses throughout were sung with much expression. Anna Lichter as Fauria sang a charming solo. She was beautifully gowned and was in good voice, not showing in any manner the strain of overwork in the heavy opera season just closed. Annie Myers as Taffetta was fully of life and graceful earn- estness, was the part she played. She received an ovation upon her return to the Tivoli after some months’ absence. Charlotte Beckwith as Lambsquin had no chance to use her beautiful voice, but as leader of the march in the third act was a striking figure. The finale of patriotic airs was exceptionally fine, Miss Myers’ rendition of Dixie attracting especial attention.

Grand Opera House

This old, tuneful and ever popular opera The Chimes of Normandy was the attraction at The Grand this week, and the crowded houses and applause demonstrated that it was thoroughly appreciated. Too much cannot be said of William Wolff, whose interpretation of old Gaspard was exceptionally well rendered, and shows him to be an actor of no small ability. Hattie Belle Ladd as Germaine was as usual very good, and her rendition of the Norman Way of Wooing was very fetching and sweetly sung. The role of Jean Grenicheux was sustained by Oscar Lee, who possesses a sweet tenor voice, and considering that it was his “debut” did very well, and should be encouraged to sing out with a little more confidence. Edith Mason was in her element as Serpolette, and her impersonation of a Marchioness was very “cute and clever.” Thomas H. Perese as Henri, Marquis of Corneville, was well cast and up to his usual standard of excellence. Arthur Woolley, as the bailee with aspirations to the hand of Germaine, and Winifred Goff, as the notary, were very comical, and furnished the amusement of the opera. The chorus did very conscientious work and really deserve great credit.

ALCAZAR BREVITIES

Ernest Hastings reopens at the Alcazar next week in the title role of Dr. Bill. Fred Belasco leaves for Europe next month to secure new plays and people. Chimmie Fadden, with Forrest See- bury in the title role, especially engaged for the occasion, will be the Alcazar’s Christmas production.
THE COLUMBIA
The second and last week of Fredric March’s engagement will close on Monday night. The repertoire for the second week is to be as follows: Monday and Saturday nights, Virginia; Tuesday night and Saturday matinee, The Merchant of Venice; Wednesday and Thursday nights, This Is My Affair; Friday night, Sunday nights, The Lion’s Mouth; and Friday night, Romeo and Juliet.
The much discussed play, The Christian, will be seen at the Columbia Theater, beginning Xmas night, in all its magnificent elaboration for a limited engagement. The advance sale of seats for this most important attraction is to begin next Thursday morning at the box office of the theater. Orders for seats from the outlaying cities must be accompanied by the necessary amount for the tickets.

THE TIVOLI
Although the management of the Tivoli Opera House only intended that the comic opera, Tar and Tartar, should run for one week, the business has been so large, that in order to meet the demand for seats, there will be an other week of the play. It is rarely that so hearty an ovation is given to an actor as can be witnessed nightly at the Tivoli, when the "prince of comedians," Ferris Hartman, makes his first entrance as Muley Hassan, the tar. While the bulk of the applause of the audience is given to Hartman, a goodly share is bestowed upon his talented associates. Tar and Tartar will be played for the last time next Friday night. On Saturday next there will be no matinee at the Tivoli Opera House, as the annual holiday extravaganza will be produced on the evening of that day. This year’s offering is entitled Little Bo-Peep, and has been arranged by the well-known stage director, George E. Lask. The holiday production of the Tivoli will be as full of good things as a Christmas pudding is of plums.

THE CALIFORNIA
On account of the tremendous preparations necessary for staging Columbia, ‘61, the Frawley Company will devote their time next week only to rehearsals. This afternoon and evening The Sporting Duchess will be staged for the last time. Positively the most satisfying of all the colored artists that have yet visited the Coast will be seen at the California Theater next Sunday afternoon and night, with The Hottest Coo in Dixie Company. The reputation of The Hottest Coo in Dixie has preceded the attraction, and patrons of the California have a revelation and real treat before them.

The engagement will open with the Sunday matinee, and the Frawley Company will renew their season Sunday night, December 24th.

THE GRAND
The Chimes of Normandy is a great success at this theater. Monday evening Die Fledermaus (The Bat), one of the most successful comic operas ever written, will be revived in English after an interval of nine years. It is the greatest work of Strauss, the Waltz King, and will be magnificently scenèd and costumed, and presented with the following superb cast: Gabriel von Eisenstein, Thomas H. Perse; Rosalind, his wife, Edith Mason; Adele, her maid, Iattie Belle Ladd; Ida, sister to Adele, Ethel Strachan; Alfred, a music teacher, Winifred Goff; Prince Orlando, Foster, Beatrice, Miss Millar, Dr. Frank, William Wolff; Dr. Blind, Charles Arling and Frosh, Arthur Wooley.

THE ALCAZAR
Tomorrow night Mother Earth will receive its last performance and will be followed by the revival of the New York Co. press, Dr. Brunel, the handbook of Hamilton Aldo, who adapted the French of Dr. Carre. The Acazar Company to its full strength will take part, and the popular leading man Ernest Hasting, will reappear to play the role of the doctor, which part he made such a decided hit before. Laura Crews will also make her reappearance.

THE NEW ALHAMBRA
The Black Patti Troubadours will be the next attraction at the New Alhambra, commencing to-morrow night. The New Alhambra Troubadours are pre-eminent in their style of entertainment. The personnel of the company, which numbers nearly three score, includes the most talented colored artists known to the profession. Black Patti (Mme. Stoterier Jones) is the stellar attraction. She is one of the most popular prima donnas on the stage.

THE ORPHEUM
There will be five new acts at the Orpheum next week and every one of the holdovers. At the head of the new bill is La Sylphe, the famous French danseuse. Another great attraction on the new bill is Harrington, the tramp juggler. As a juggler he has few equals and as a comedian, he stands alone. The Llewellyn Sisters, two Australian operatic singers, are among the new people. Gertrude Rutledge is a ballad singer with an international reputation. Dan and Lizzie Avery are two chocolate colored comedians who present a clever sketch.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Royle and company will next week present Captain Impudence, in which Miss Millar and his wife appear at even better advantage than in their first selection. George Fuller Golden will continue to abuse Casey, his own familiar friend, and Hamilton Hill, the Australian baritone, will remain. The biograph will be played at a show;
The picture opened a show the last with the Bostonians. The pickaninnies hillary she sang showed her voice to the best advantage and was received with every sign of approval. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Milton Royle followed in their new sketch, The Highball Family. While it cannot be classed with Capt. Impudence, the little play they appeared in last year, and which they produce next week, and though Mr. Royle’s talents histromically are hardly yet arrived at, the new play promises a new dramatic hit, yet the Highballs furnished much laughter and amusement. Miss Millar, as handsome as ever, was the same charming actress as of old, taking the part of the mother-in-law of Mr. Royle, the trouper, and Mr. Royle, the baritone, Aide, Rutledge and John Layfoot were a very acceptable supporting company. New biograph views concluded the performance.

THE CHUTES
At the Chutes Theater Fred and "Amy Gottlieb," "exponents of Dutch comedy," keep the audience laughing for over six hours. "Senator" Hamden, a colored gentleman who once starred as Uncle Tom, appeared for the first time in monologue and scored a decided hit. An equilibrist and contortionist, billed simply "Walsh," and himself into seemingly inextricable knots, and Major Mite followed his imitation of Cortez with an English music-hall song. Adgie gave a very thrilling set in her cage of lions.

THE OLYMPIA
Morning Brothers, acrobats of a high order, have been more than making a hit at the Olympia this week. They do some marvelous stunts. Hastings and Hall still have their Dawson City popularity, and delighted audiences with their clever solos and duets. Carl Wilson and Marie D. Wood both have a large following, and the others on the bill are very acceptable and include Carlton and Ryder, Doris Marvin, May Nealon, Not Stanley and Canealia.

THE OBERON
Virginia Cameron, the popular vocalist, has been singing her way into the affections of Oberon audiences this week and Rowe and Cleveland,—the dandies, who have likewise scored a hit, continue to perform with distinction. These, with well selected numbers by the Oberon Orchestra and new pro- jectoscope views have made up a well received week’s program.
NEW YORK

Special Correspondence

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—Frank Daniels and a capable company came to Wallack's Theater last week in The Ameer, a comic opera, the music of which was composed by Victor Herbert, and the story and lyrics written by Kirk LaShelle and Fred M. Raskin. There is nothing new in the subject matter and no novelty in the story, which is too old, story of the impetuous potestant who endeavors to enrich himself by a wealthy rupturist. Frank Daniels is a real old-style, and being a very short man physically, he finds the necessary foil f( for much of his humor in W. T. Roach's all chamberlain. Miss Helen Redmond is the American heiress whom the Ameer of Afghanistan would marry to raise enough money to pay the tribute required by the British for his military control. George Beecroft was her English husahand. Miss Redmond proved to be a clever imitation of a Scotchman trying to sing a negro ballad. When the performance is trimmed down, the first efforts of the stock burlesque company may prove to be a success.

Word comes from Philadelphia where H. R. Koenig's whimsical romance, My Lady's Lord, was produced at the Broad Street Theater last week that it will need considerable patching up before it is presentable for this city. Miss Jessie Millard is the shrew of the piece, and her Fancie<ApplicationUser>_physical< ApplicationUser> is an English husband. Other parts were taken with more or less success by Sydney Herbert, Sara Perry, Mabel Fenton, Joseph Scherlock, Jr., J. F. Cook, George Osborne, Jr., J. H. Behrins, and F. C. Backus.

The Singing Girl, with Alice Nielsen as the principal attraction, has been enlisted by some new matter injected into the first act. Julia Marlowe will not take Barbara Fritchie to the Pacific Coast.

Thomas G. Seabrook and a good company were playing at the Amphion, Borough of Manhattan, where Charles D. Walcott, who worked so well at the Grand Opera House, is the principal tenor. Comic Seabrook can play this season without fear of being thrown into jail every night after the performance for unpaid alimony. After having been purged by the Federal Court from all the compliments of the Supreme Court, he has just ordered Mr. Bush to pay a wife a week alimony. Bush is resisting the application for alimony took the ground that as his wife, who is now eighteen years old, was a bar maid before she married him, she could easily return to her old vocation.

J. E. O'Neill was at the Grand Opera House last week in Sydney Grundy's version of the old story, with two matinees a week, in addition to six evening performances, are too wearing on the voice. The rebellious prima donna has the good wishes of every singer in the profession. You can see the quick finish of any principal singer who is willing to sing a trying role two matinees a week. Their Sunday matinee is here enough on a singer, but as she has, in the last Sundays in which to recuperate, she generally manages to wear them down. There are some managers in this city who would not hesitate to ask singers to appear two shows a day if the manager thought he could get enough first class singers to do so, but happily for the poor chorus singers as well as the lesser principals there are singers like Miss Morton, Alice Nielsen, Marie Tempest, and Lillian Russell who strenuously object to a Wednesday matinee.

In the profession believe the pretent set forth by Julia Marlowe in her testimony in the divorce case which she brought last week against Robert Taber. The pretent was that Mr. Taber was "Jealous" because she received more favorable criticisms than he did. Mr. Taber always had the respect of the profession who knew him personally, and that respect has been increased by his conduct in permitting Julia Marlowe to bring the suit for divorce upon the ground of cruelty. No one believes that any one could be cruel to Miss Marlowe, nor even her husband. It is also evident that the jealousy was not entirely due to newspaper criticism.

Cakewalking must still be popular, for it continues to draw great applause in The Ameer, Sister Mary, Pappy Willi, Round New York in Eighty Minutes, The Rogers Brothers in Wall Street, and in which gig.

ROB ROY.

CHICAGO

Special Correspondence

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—The Dearborn Stock Company present, Rosander Matthews' Gold Mine this week with Edwin Arden as leading man. R. D. Blakemore, a light rather than a light comedian, who was admitted to Charlie's Aunt, is a member of the company; also Madge Carr Cook who plays parts in parts and grande dames—but who had no especial play to star her. About all there is in the play is unspoiled by the addition of a Californian, whose principal feature in the production is the man who is always American with his criticisms of everything British—which criticism, in this way, is always good-natured.

Ernest Hastings has left the Dearborn Company to join the Alcazar Stock Company of San Francisco.

This evening, Mr. Goodwin and Miss Maxine Elliott began the last week of their engagement at Powers' Theater with A Gilded Fool for the first three nights, and an American Citizen and The Cowboy and the Lady each succeeding night respectively. A special matinee on Thursday afternoon to which all the leading professional artists were invited is one of the features of their engagements.

At the Lyric Theater the Jefferson-Sharkey fable was presented, and the enthusiastic chorus pictures are probably the finest that have ever been produced.

On Sunday evening, Dec. 5, the German Dramatic Company gave the first production in America of Walther and Stein's comedy-drama, Die Herrsche Sohn (Our Sons) at the Grand Opera House. The limit of Miss Leslie, Carter's engagement in Zaza at the Powers' Theater is twelve nights and two matinées, beginning Dec. 12. The success of Miss Carter in David Belasco's version of Burton and Simon's Zaza is well known. It has been said that we have a new Camille and another Bernhardt. In April the entire organization will go to the Garrick Theater in London.

Anthony Hope's novel, Phreno, which has been so cleverly dramatized, is presented this week at the Columbus Theater by the Grand Opera Company, with Oakes Duffield in the title role. Miss Tyler has made some successes in Shakespearean roles. She also plays in Girl Service. The engagement is for one week.

For one week the boards at McC'Vicker's Theater are held by William H. Weir's Minstrel Company. Among the newcomers are the three Marvilles who join the company here. The Marvilles are goonucle dancers. On Sunday, Dec. 10, the Carpet Bagger, written by Opie Reed and Frank Pickles, both of Chicago, will be presented at the same theater for one night. On Dec. 11 will follow the dramatic versioh of that remarkable "Quo Vadis."

Mr. Smoother to be given this week at the Grand by Mr. Collier is a farce written by himself. It is very well accepted. So Smith Russell is due Dec. 18 at the Grand, in a revival of his celebrated play, A Poor Relation.

At the Great Northern this week there is a new farce-comedy entitled, A Wise Guy, with Emily Lytton and Edmund Hayes in the leading parts. The farce was originally a sketch, and has been elaborated into three acts by George M. Cohan of the Four Cohans. Among the vaudeville favorites at the Chicago Opera House this week, Helen Mora is billed at the head. She is a woman bargains, of her repertoire includes the newest describable ballads.

The Haymarket Theater has for a star attraction this week, Patrice, a dainty comedienne, in Idly's Ghosts.

At the Studebaker the Castle Square Opera Company are giving the comic opera, Tartarella, by Jacobowski. The repertoire week begins Dec. 11, and includes Isolant, Chiuses of Normandy, March, and Beggar Student. The chorus work is very good. Maud Lilian Berri, Maud Lawrence, Andal Roberts and William G. Stewart are favorites. The company will go to the American Theater. It has a different setting for each act to be given at the repertoire week. The New York section of the company will come to the Studebaker for a season of grand opera, opening with Aida on Christmas night.

FREDERICK BOYD STEVENSON.

DENVER

Special Correspondence

DENVER, Colo., Dec. 7.—Things in the amusement line are a little quiet this week. On Saturday evening as given at the Broadway Theater, the attraction being Mrs. Frederic Smutter, a young society woman of this city, who was given at the Opera House from Europe where she has been having her voice cultivated. She was well received by a small audience, and was aided by Prof. Cavolito's orchestra.

On Monday night at the same theater, Frederic Hill's School of Acting produced Augustin Daly's comedy, A Night Off, an adaptation from Der Rusch der Sabinerinnen. The house was only fair, but the play went well, the honors being carried off by Mr. Hill as Brutus Snap, and Miss Leon Herrold as Nipho. Eddie Smith, a professional comic opera comedian, who was engaged by Prof. Hill's Institute, forgot himself in the third act and introduced several funny falls which were out of place in a piece of this kind, and almost ruined Mr. Hill's best scene. Mrs. K. L. Schultz, the wife of a prominent druggist of this city, made her first appearance and wore some beautiful gowns. The only real draw on this otherwise good performance was Lew Kelly, a brother of our clever comedian Joe Kelly, who starred with Mason in Who's Who. In justice to Mr. Hill be it said that this young man is not a regular member of his school, but his services were enlisted for this occasion only. Miss Irene Lorton gave a capital performance, as usual, and gives every evidence of marked ability. Others in the cast who deserve mention were the Misses Hayford and Polly and

Events that Interest the Pacific Coast

FRESNO

Special Correspondence.

FRESNO, Dec. 14.—The best attraction at the Opera house since my last letter was Von Yonnon with a real Swede, Arthur Dunsdall, in the title role. I have been hearing for ten years how Von Yonnon received, so far fate has kept me away from theaters on which that was billed. But I know that Von Yonnon is brilliant. In the 'Evening Democrat,' the best dramatic critic in Central California, has this to say of him:

"His Von Yonnon is not the loot and the fog, but the sturdy Swedish backwoods lumberman, simple and awkward, but never boorish. It is a clean piece of acting of a part, the accepted stage version of which has been of a great, overgrown dignitary, hooting dangerously close to foolishness."

Judging from the remarks made in the 'Evening Democrat,' those who seek the play, I should say that Grace Hazard and Jennie Morris, was a shining light of the company, well done, as Lavin, the young-risqué, were quite well done, as Lavin, the young-risqué, the great-hearted Irish hotel keeper made quite a hit. I think that the balance of the company were not particularly brilliant, as they were not in a particularly favorable way.

Two-minuted shows have been here lately. Gorton's and Richards and Pringle's, one of the latter being the best: the leading feature of it being the quartet made up of Charles Hughes, John Langford, W. C. Ivery and O. C. Cameron. Each has a musical voice and they harmonize well. Therefore, the darker songs which they sing elicited much applause. Mr. Hughes, solo, My Old New Hampshire Home, was sung with much feeling and was appreciated. Other features were La She, the equilibrium and the five acrobats "imported especially from Arabia." In the Gorton Minstrels Edward Fox, the grotesque dancer, is good, and so is the quartet and Vonder and Mullen, the acrobats. The Cheerful Liar brought to Fresno some people quite well known in San Francisco, principal among whom were Stella Ruman, Emmie Munlock, Frank De Camp and Max Steiner. The band was made up of quite good music, and seems capable of handling the play very satisfactorily. Finfgan's bull was here last Friday night and kept up its roar from the rear that the curtain went up till the play was ended. Murray and Mack, with everyone known, brought out Casey and Finfgan all that there was in the parts, and added something by their personalities. Wacky Walker was more than a smile producer in the hands of Charles Hardy, notwithstanding the fact that he was suffering from a very bad cold and spoke with difficulty. Among the ladies Mayme Taylor deserves special mention as she is a good actress and an excellent singer, yet although she has a good voice, and one which has been well cultivated. Katie Beck pleased everyone by her bright, vivacious portrayal of the part of a girl, and also by her excellent dancing. But of all the singers who have been here in a long time not one has a voice of such natural depth and richness and full of melody as the second bass in the male quartette. The other four of the quartette were good. Each one in the company was above the average and made the presentation of the piece a success, but I will be thinking of that boy's voice long after I have forgotten all the rest. This week is a quiet one.

ODDEN

Special Correspondence.

ODDEN, Utah, Dec. 10.—Something very much like a famine is threatening us in the theatrical line. Manager Clark tells us that the doors are not as good as they were and that there are not enough shows coming for two months to nearly fill the demand. Last week we had The Romance of Coon Hollow which did a good business. Last night in Old Kentucky played to a crowded house. Owing to delayed trains, the company did not arrive until late, the curtain raising at 9:30, which was very tiresome to the large number which were standing. The play was excellently received, although this is its fourth appearance here I believe. Pudd'nhead Wilson, by Edwin Mayo, is billed for the 13th, and will do a big business.

Last Friday Capt. Harvey Wells gave a successful performance at the Opera House, which was very instructive and entertaining, and was heard by a large number of people.

The general prosperity which keeps the good companies in the large cities is working a hardship upon us. Those plays that do slip over will rear a good harvest from us though.

OAKLAND

Special Correspondence.

OAKLAND, Cal., Dec. 13.—L. R. Stockwell and his company of clever comedians closed a very successful week's engagement at the Macomber Theater Sunday night. Mr. Stockwell's production of My Friend From India was appreciated by the large audiences that nightly crowded the theater. Mr. Stockwell as Augustus Keen Shaver, with apparent thespian inclinations, is unhesitatingly conceded to be superior to his predecessors in the role. That scholarly favorite of all war drums, Shemashloosh, held the boards at this house Monday and Tuesday evenings, Dec. 11-12, and packed the house at both performances. The company was a good one, and the play gave entire satisfaction. The Warmest Coat in the World will be here the 15th and 16th, to be followed by Frederick Warde, Richard and Pringle's Minstrels, and A Hot Old Time.

At the Dewey Opera House a play dealing with life in Tennessee entitled, Knobs of Tennessee, has been the attraction. The production has been carefully staged. Landers Stevens appears in the leading role supported by a strong cast made up of the following members of the stock company: Maurice Stewart, Carl Birch, E. J. Holden, Wm. B. Mckay, Fanny Gillette, Maude

LOS ANGELES.

Special Correspondence.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 12.—Los Angeles people have certainly run the gamut in the announcement line this week, from the "faho" of the heavy villain to the sweet notes of music that hascharms to soothe the savage breast.

Nance O'Neill is again delighting the people of this city with her clever acting, and is playing to very good business.

Sorris Ross, trained animal show has been in the city this past week, and as the show is good and they are favorites, they did good business.

Little Paloma Schramm, the child pianist who couched such a fine two years ago by her wonderful playing, has returned home, after an extended European tour on which she played before some of the greatest musicians in the world and received praises that are seldom bestowed upon even older people. She will give a concert here, under the direction of J. T. Fitzgerald, on the 14th.

Frederick Warde, during his recent engagement in this city, put on Fortune's Fool to try it for the first time. The piece did not fail favor with the critics, who say the leading character is totally unworthy of an actor with the ability of Mr. Warde. Mr. Warde appeared to the audience for the piece, which is his pleasant way of admitting that he was glad his play was not popular in Los Angeles, and during his stay visited the High School, Normal School, Whittier State School, and several literary clubs, at all of which he spoke on his professional life and the work of Shakespeare.

Louis Mertens, the popular theatrical maestro who came to this city in advance of the McKee Ramkin Company, has gone north. He will not return to Australia with the Company and has given up the place to James H. Love.

Edward Tynan, the doorman at the Los Angeles Theater, has been elected to represent the mail carriers of Los Angeles at their annual convention next week at Detroit.

At the Los Angeles Theater Murray and Mack played to good business at popular prices, the 10-11-12. For the 14-15 the new opera, La Fieles de San Xavier, was put on by local talent and proved to be a very interesting combination, especially to those living in Southern California, as the scenes of the play are laid in this vicinity, and the composers are Southern California people. In the 16-17 my friend from India will be here, at popular prices.

At Monroe's Burbank Theater the Nance O'Neill Company presented The Jewess on the 10-12-12, followed by the School for Scandal, on the 14-16. So far for her engagement has been very successful, notwithstanding the fact that there were strong attractions at the other houses. She has lost none of her popularity and the house is filled for each performance.

At the Orpheum a bill of crisp, cracking vaudeville dances, as Manager Bronson and Press Agent Eley are pleased to term it, is on. The first glance at their "的不同" in the Times makes one wonder if it is not something good to eat, but by going further into the mystery the reader is made to understand that it is for the aid of feed spoes, not for the stomach. The bill consists of Pete Haker, A. P. Robbins, Coso Stuart and Alex Kearney, Monigan, Sig. Alheli, Barth Neha, Lucie Virdier and Rice and Emerson.

Arthur Marshall Perry gave a violin recital at Blanchard's Hall on the 12th. The reception accorded Perry gave their second concert of the season on the 14th last, which was very well patronized.

HERBERT L. CORNHILL.

SPOKANE.

Special Correspondence.

SPOKANE, Dec. 9.—Auditorium Theater, H. C. Haywood, Manager.—The Shaw Company opened its 16th week in repertory, presenting The Westerner, From Sire to Son, in Missouri, Jack of Diamonds, Rip Van Winkle, Love and Law. The performances were good, but the attendance was not what was desired, but is steadily increasing. Mr. Shaw gives a splendidly conducted orchestra, the latter winning encore after encore every performance.

The Fraternal Order of Eagles of which your correspondent is a member, presented the members of the Shaw Company at an open social Sunday. Each contributor to the evening's program, and the Shaw Company were voted "jolly good fellows" and good Eagles.

The Washington State Band and Orchestral Association, under the direction of Fred C. Hopper, opens a series of eight concerts, at the Auditorium the 10th. Indications are for good business.

Week of the 14th Shaw Company in repertory.

SAN JOSE.

Special Correspondence.

A Lady of Quality, and Finnegans's Ball were on the boards last week.

The Fremont High School students of Santa Clara College presented at the Victory the tragedy Sodalesia. It was a revelation of very acting and fine stage presentation. Very few professional troops stage their plays better than the boys did this. It was for the benefit of the Yolande Fund and the large audience insured a good addition thereto.

The lecture last week by Rev. W. D. McKinnon, Chaplain in the United States Army, was a disappointment. Owing to an unexpected summons to proceed to Manila, the Chaplain was unable to be present, so his lecture was read, and well read, by his brother, Rev. B. J. McKinnon. Then, too, the audience expected to hear of Manila, instead they were treated to A Trip Through Canada.
SACRAMENTO, Calif., Dec. 19.—The Eildey Club continued a week's which two weeks' engagement Sunday night.

To-night, Eugene Blair in "A Lady of Quality City Elks."

13th and 14th, Arthur Donaldson in "You Sons.

18th to 23d inclusive, Lee the Hypnotist. 14th for five nights Renz-Santley Company.

25th for three nights Murray and Mack's Fingnan's Ball.

Vaudville Notes

Joyzam opens at the Chutes Mon.-

La Petite Reina is playing at the Denver Theater.

Madge Hall opens at the Orpheum, Richmond, Va., this week.

Oscar Lewis, the Soxved comedian, is at the Alcazar, Denver, Col.

Dr. Goossen has disbanded his company until the holiday season is over.

Conlon and Ryder opened at the Savoy Theater, Victoria, B. C., on the 11th. They scored big, while the Edgerton Sisters are the talk of the week.

Chas. and May Morrell are headliners at the People's Theater, Seattle.

Waldir and Elliot are features at the Cour Noel Bethene Theater, Spokane, Wash.

Chas. H. Whiting is meeting with success at the Fredericksburg, Portland, Or.

Gamett and Vic Lewis opened at the Delmonico, Victoria, B. C., on the 17th.

Archie Levy is now sole agent for the Savoy Theater circuit, British Columbia.

Bob and Mike McDonald, the California Mac's, will return home in May, 1900.

Starkey and Mantelle, bar performers, are at the Parlor Theater, Duluth, Minn.

Pay Templeton will make another try at the Heights. Time not decided upon, but soon.

Archie Levy is now booking a company for Cape Town here before early next spring.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hamilton, a clever sketch team, was at the Columbia, St. Louis, Mo.

Will S. Kising and Lillian Kibble are at the Comique, Spokane, Wash. This is their sixth week.

The De Clairvilles, aerial artists, are making good throughout the North-West. They close their play in this city this Friday.

The Gottobas, Fred and Amy, have no cause to complain at the reception accorded them at the Chutes night.

May Loveland, Meany and Lenora Shannon and Lucien, Cecil Hall and Polly O'Neil are at the Olympic, St. Paul, Minn.

The Healy Sisters, the clever little Frisco girls, are meeting with unusual success with Schellings' Two Married Men Company.

Chas. and Lulu Oro met with decided approval at the Orpheum, Thursday afternoon in Kansas. They have the Castle Circuit to follow.

Mlle. Tiegole, a pretty and shapely little lady, is doing an act similar to Mlle. Lotty. It compares favorably to the last mentioned artist.

Nelle Masing, Margie Addis, Anna George, Marie Willer and Travelle open at the New Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, on the 18th.

Harry De Lain, Templon Sisters and McNeil Sisters are on the bills at the Standard Theater, Fort Worth, Tex. They are playing this way.

Cissie Lotus has been obliged to contradict the rumor which has been current for some time that she is to marry Lawrence Irving, son of Sir Henry Irving.

O. G. Seymour, of Seymour and Dodge, is busy buying soothing syrup for a bumbling hick who joined his immediate family circle at Boston, Mass., on Nov. 26.

The New Standard Theater, under the management of F. M. Calhoun, open on the 23d. Lucile Adele, Stella Dorey, Sadie Fairclough, Helen Moutier, Ida Black and the others have already been booked. More to follow.

Vontello and Nina, Helen Migmon, Annie De Kaven, Bernett Belmont, May Raymond, Lewis and Lake

Fisher and Wall, Mlle. Tyrene and Mme. Vernon make up a strong bill for the Alcazar Theater, Portland, Col. Harley Dow is stage manager.

Jackson Hurd, who went to Australia to join McAdoo's Minstrels, which soon after left the company, stranded, has arrived in this city from Honolulu. Hurd, during the passage from Sydney to Honolulu, gave entertainments on board and filled with over $250 in his pockets. He is a successful minstrel and very few entertainers, white or colored, can give him much of a handicap.

Cast Naughty Anthony

The full cast of David Belasco's new farcical comedy, Naughty Anthony, to be produced at the Square Theater early in January, will include Frank Worthing, William J. Le Moyne, William Elton, Albert Bruning, Samuel Edwards, Charles Wyngate, Claude Gillingwater, E. P. Wilks, Benoig, Tyrone, Blanche Bates, Maud Holland, Oliver Redpath, Mary Barker, Fanny Young, Frances Joliffe, ETHEL NORMAN, CATHERINE BLACK and Janet Hudson.

SUCCESSFUL BENEFIT.

The Review is very glad to chronicle the success of the theatrical charity fund program at the Orpheum, Thursday afternoon. Every inch of space was occupied— every performer entered heartily into the spirit of the occasion and the large audience was highly pleased. The benefit netted about $25,000. Complete report in next week's Review.

The player folk were treated royally, but they couldn't see all the work being done by non-professionals, all of whom were exceptionally good, so they told stories and sung a slight appreciattion of the Club's hospitality. Frederick Wardle, George Fuller Golden, Teddy Hartman and others told stories, and good ones, too, and Hamilton Hill sang. His remarkable baritone voice caused a great stir and he be had to respond to an encore. Homer Henley, a well-known local vocalist, was also praised highly by Mr. Hill, Mr. Warde and others of the profession. Mr. Warde declared Mr. Henley's voice a wonder. The program was arranged by the Club's entertainment committee of which John J. Harrison is the chairman. The Club Quartet rendered some new songs. President James P. Booth made a neat speech welcoming the theatrical people to the club rooms.

Gossip

According to the Butte papers, a benefit performance was tended several members of the disbanded Electric Company last Saturday night by the theatrical people of that city. The Hottest Coon in Dixie will spend New Year's week at Corday's Theater, Portland. They are at the California, San Francisco, next week.

Impressions of Camille D'Arville

There are some things one becomes a happy sharer in, yet can't hand on. I am thinking of the simple gladness of Camille D'Arville. You must talk with her and laugh with her to know it, for nobody's else explanation will make it contagious. Her senses are all alive to the pleasing, as birds are happy because the leaves are green and the sun warm.

Just under the fifth rib beats a great big something that will keep her joyous until the last lullaby is sung, and young, though the years she has be multiplied by three.

The world is several times larger to her than to most people, for she has learned the great secret of letting her full nature come out—of giving to the limit of her sympathetic strength.

You who have listened to her sing perhaps know what I mean. When she steps upon the stage she starts a wave of joy and makes it vibrate to the farthest limit of the audience.

"O Promise Me" finds us all willing, and one of these fine nights, when the wind is high and cool and our spirits are up, we shall forget ourselves and call out, "Why certainly—of course—anything—just mention it."

The man who fancies himself pointed at with one of her including gestures is the most complacent fellow in the audience and if I could have divided the roses she gave me, with the owners of the eyes that coveted them, the story of the leaves and fishes would have been nowhere.

Her expressions and gestures are not brain-spun Delacroix affairs but are left, for the most part, she says to the inspiration of the moment—and it never fails her.

The new is ever inspiring, but to throw inspiration into the old is what counts and we have all heard her do that. With the first bar of the prelude she forgets everything but the song—and sometimes she forgets that.

"Gracious!" she said as she came off, "did you hear the wonderful words I made up for Lulu as I went along? I've been saying them over for a week too. It's high time I knew them don't you think?"

"Courteously suggested my temporizing a bit, but I promptly told her it was—high time. I was rewarded with such a jolly quizzical little smile that I am much encouraged to tell the truth every little while. In fact, truth was rampant for she said San Francisco had a lovely climate for bronchitis.

"Why did I go on the stage? Because I loved it. Yet, had I known the terrible knocks the heart would get before the top was reached legitimately, I should have taken in plain sewing or gone a-governessing. When I did reach the top, it was too late to get any happiness out of it."

She thought she was telling the truth—about its being too late for happiness, I mean, but the very words were followed with the verse of a new song she was learning, because her heart was full of the melody and she wanted someone to share the joy of it.

"A San Francisco audience," she continued, "gave me the most glorious feeling I have ever had since I went on the stage. It was at the old Baldwin Theater with the Bostonians, I had missed a train and could not possibly reach the stage before nine o'clock. Mr. Barnabee explained the situation and said, 'Shall we put on the second prima donna or wait for Miss D'Arville?'

Wait for D'Arville! they called, and when I came they gave me a greeting I shall never forget. It was minutes before I could swallow the sob in my throat and go on with the party."

"From here? Well, I'm supposed to go south, to Los Angeles, but unless I am rid of this cold, I shall not go there or anywhere. They'd all say "Why, of course, you might have known it. D'Arville has lost her voice. That's why she has forsaken opera."

"One of the New York papers said I was the only live dog in vaudeville—that all the others had gone into it when the bark in them was feelable from time and strain. I can't bark up to my reputation with a cold, so I must see to its cure."

By this time the make-up was all off and she sat down cool and clean and fluffy, in her dainty dressing room. I took a square look, trying to fasten some years upon her, but for the life of me I couldn't. I guess she was doing her twelve times and cutting paper dolls about the time that Kipling's first ballad was a-rhyming on the sky. The tales were shaky but the paper dolls were all right!

"Whatever are we coming to?" said a gray-beard I passed in the aisle, "when even D'Arville sings coon songs?"

Excuse me, old man, she sings negro melodies and the gap between the two is wide enough to sprawl over.

Jessie Bartlett Davis wants her to join forces and go into opera again, but if I were she I think I wouldn't do it. It is so much easier not to.

Charlotte Thompson.

T. Daniel Frawley has secured the coast rights from David Belasco of The Heart of Maryland, and will produce this powerful and popular play at the California Theater the middle of January. The Heart of Maryland ought to run for three weeks to crowded houses.
The Drama in Vaudeville

When a periodical of the standing of Scribner's Magazine finds it worth while to devote many pages of serious and favorable consideration to that peculiarly American institution, the "vaudeville theater," it forces recognition of the marvelous change that within a few years has come over the condition and status of the variety show in this country. Only a little while ago the variety show was regarded as the lowest form of stage entertainment. The term "variety theater" and "vaudeville" were synonymous in the minds of the majority of the patrons of regular theaters. There were a few variety theaters in the country, such as Tony Pastor's, that did not deserve, nor bear, this reputation, but they were regarded as exceptional, and were, as a matter of fact, exceptional.

Today there is probably as much money invested in the vaudeville business as in the regular theatrical business. It is practically certain that the vaudeville theaters of the country furnish entertainment every day to a greater public than do the regular theaters. There is probably not a city in the country that does not support at least one theater exclusively devoted to vaudeville. New vaudeville theaters are coming into existence every day. And the patronage of these theaters is of the most respectable character. Their audiences are largely composed of women and children. So completely has the "whirlibog of time" brought in its revenges that there are today many persons who rather shy at the regular theater, and attend the vaudeville theaters with perfect confidence that they will not be offended by indecency. And this confidence is generally justified. The portion of the American stage devoted to vaudeville is the cleanest portion of it. Expressions and "business" that are permitted in even the best plays in the regular theater are strictly tabooed in the best vaudeville houses. In the theaters that make up the most important and most representative American vaudeville "circuit," familiarly called the "Sunday-school circuit," the utterance of an oath by an actor in a performance brings him a polite warning from the management. If the offense is repeated the act is ruthless "cut out" and the actor dismissed from that circuit.

This cleanliness in some measure accounts for the present vogue of "high-class vaudeville," for the American public prefers its theatrical entertainment clean. But cleanliness, in itself, is not entertaining, and there must be some other element in vaudeville to make it so constantly interesting and attractive to so large a theater-going public. This, we are inclined to think, is the dramatic element that has lately become so prominent on the vaudeville stage.

In the old days there was practically no demand and no room for the drama or for acting in the variety houses. Variety performers with dramatic ability or histrionic talent, Denison Oliphant, Thompson, Norrington, My Irwin and others soon left the variety theater for the regular stage.

Now the conditions are reversed. A few years ago legitimate actors, at the invitation of the most able and enterprising American vaudeville managers, began to appear in vaudeville. Theirs "turns" were, of necessity, dramatic in quality. Their work pleased the vaudeville managers. The term "legitimate" came over, some of them for temporary visits, of them to stay. They brought into vaudeville, in their short plays and monologues, the touch of dramatic interest, lacking which scarcely any form of stage entertainment can permanently hold public interest. They made the other vaudeville performers recognize the value of dramatic interest and strive to attain it.

If you will watch a vaudeville entertainment you will see that about every really successful performer "acts," and that his acting contributes not little to the success of his work, even if his "specialty" be only club juggling or something else apparently affording as little opportunity for dramatic effect than the display of historic art.

It is this entrance of the drama upon the vaudeville stage that makes more than any other cause has given to vaudeville, and will retain for it, its present vogue.

Bessie Bonehill

BESSIE BONEHILL, the actress, is a member of the little American colony which is shut up in Johannesburg by the war. She went there to fill a theatrical engagement, and has remained in time for the first fight between the British and Boers. She was given a chance to get away with the refugees, but preferred to stay and play and incidentally take her chances in the future. She writes that she is living largely upon goats' meat, and that, to all intents, Johannesburg is in a state of siege. Martial law prevails and most of the stores are kept closed. Her friends feel no concern for her safety.

Fortune's Fool, Frederick Ward's new play, was produced in Los Angeles. During the evening's performance, Mr. Ward appeared before the curtain and made excuses for some unevenness displayed by himself and players, stating that although on the stage, he was that night a victim to stage fright.

Cumberland 61 will be the Christmas week attraction at the Frawley's in the California Theater. It is not, as its title would suggest, a war play, although it has the civil war for a background.

"Bring on the Tray"

Wallace Munro reports an amusing incident during the recent engagement of Lewis Morrison at the Tulane Theater, New Orleans.

Florence Roberts had been driving with some friends, totally ignorant of the fact that the matinee would begin at 1 o'clock instead of 2:30, the usual hour. She discovered her error just in time to rush to the theater and begin the performance by sacrificing her luncheon. The first act over, she ordered some sandwiches from a restaurant, and these arrived by a negro waiter as the banquet scene in Frederick the Great was in progress, and Mr. Morrison was explaining, "Bring on the entire!" The darky, with typical New Orleans alertness, dashed on to the stage to the amazement of the players and the amusement of the audience who screamed at the spectacle of a dress-suit negro waiting upon the King of Prussia in the historical realm of Silesia. When the intruder had been abruptly assisted to a hasty exit and the scene ended, Mr. Morrison rushed upon the bewildered colored man and furiously roared: "What the devil made you come on the stage?"

"I see your pardon, sir, I see your pardon," cried the terrified darky, "but I heard you say, 'Bring on de tray,' and I done it, sir." — Dramatic Mirror.

The Butterflies

I was the blissful day when Henry Gay Carleton, the playwright, was engaged to marry Olive May, the actress, he made her a present of his play The Butterflies. Part of the loving dedication reads as follows:

"Inclosed is the formal transfer to you of my wedding gift to you, a play whose third act was written with your beautiful face before me in memory, and with love of you filling my heart with hopes sweeter than hopes of Heaven—a play whose success is more than a little due to your own exquisite self, illuminating it like a shaft of sunshine."

That was in 1894. They were married and later parted by a famous quarrel and a North Dakota divorce. Now Olive May seeks to rejoin Carleton from producing the play. Carleton's defense is that he was ill at the time he made the assignment and only intended it to go into effect after he died. But he did not die. Justice Truax reserved his decision.

CLOSED

The Electrician Company closed at Butte, Mont., on the 1st. Inability to secure favorable dates was mainly the reason for this move. Fred Dailey, in advance, arrived in San Francisco Sunday and will rejoin the Dailey Company in Los Angeles.

The Funeral of a Play

FREDERICK WARDE'S STORY ABOUT THE PLAY THAT DIED YOUNG.

When it gets to plays, the popular adage to the effect that the good die young gets a decided setback. It was the day before the night chosen for the first presentation by Frederick Warde of Epsy Williams' play. Mr. Warde looked a little Hristened, but he brought the old, delightful smile into his face, and greeted the group of loungers in his hearty, genial way.

First it was Johnnie Wray's time to tell a story, and then it was up to Al Lindley, and then I tried one, and finally Mr. Warde imagined that something or other reminded him of a good one. Apologetically, in his happy way, for bringing in shop-talk, he mentioned that the new play would be on that night.

"There is always an uncertainty about new plays," he said, "an uncertainty that lingers until after the first presentation, at least. And while I put great hopes in Fortune's Fool, I can't seem to get myself away from a circumstance that took place years ago, when I was one of the pall-bearers at the funeral of a play."

"During rehearsals it seemed to us like a good play; we all had hopes for it; we thought that it would live. But it fell—ah how very flat it fell. If there is no objection from the newspaper man present, I would like to borrow from him that old, familiar 'dull and sickly thud' to express the sound it made when it struck."

"Several hundred people came to see it the first night. There were several hundred less people came the second night. Then we realized that the thing was dead. It had been a sudden but painless death, and we found ourselves with a ghastly and unpleasant corpse upon our hands. So we decided upon an immediate funeral, devoid of ostentation, and without benefit of clergy."

"Instructions were given to the orchestra leader and the stage carpenter. Then the costumes were ransacked, and by trading around and piecing out, we all succeeded in attiring ourselves in sombre black."

"When the curtain rolled up for what should have been the first act of the play, there was revealed to the audience a hasty improvised scene in a country graveyard. The orchestra played the dead march, and the entire strength of the company filed in on a slow and measured tread. At the head of the cortège, with bowed head, was the author of the play, and behind him the manager. These were the chief mourners. The author carried the corpse—the manuscript of his deceased play."

"At the center of the stage the carpenter had already removed the trap-door over the place where the ghost of Hamlet's father appears in the other play. Around this open grave we gathered in silence, and viewed the corpse for the last time. At a signal, the chief mourners choked the deceased into the hole; the curtain rolled down at the same instant."

"The audience, in a bewildered sort of way, grabbed his hat and quickly dispersed. We didn't know what he thought, neither did we care. He could have had his money back if he had asked for it, but he didn't. We were too full of our sorrow to pay any attention to him. We had just buried a dear friend."

"Ah! well, maybe we will bury Fortune's Fool in Los Angeles; I never believe in trying to revive a corpse, and I think I am gifted with a remarkable discernment when it comes to the point of distinguishing a dead play from a live one."

And then Mr. Warde drifted away toward the theater to see how the patient was getting along.

Tragedy in Repose

To the Editor—We believe with your correspondent in a recent issue that tragedy is not dead, but sleeping. The trouble is that we have no tragedies in English but those of Shakespeare. Who would ever think of playing Ben Johnson, Beaumont, Fletcher, Marlow, Otway or Byron, etc.? None of these writers were poets of a high order, save perhaps Fletcher, and all were utterly incompetent to write acting plays, an art only known to the "Divine Triad" of Athens and the dramatists of the present day. Even Shakespeare only wrote a stage play by accident; that is, when the plot is prepared ready to hand for him by the novelist, and when he has nothing to do but fill in the dialogue, as we see in the cases of Merchant of Venice, Romeo and Juliet, Hamlet, Othello and others. If Shakespeare was compelled to evolve original, live situations out of his material, as moderns must do, all of his plays would be on the stage today, and about meet the demand for this species of entertainment.

As it is, only seven or eight of his works are really playable, and these have become so hackneyed by over-use that people do not go to see them, not from a dislike for the poetic drama, but because they have simply had enough of the one dish. We have all heard of the fact that no one can eat a quail every day for thirty days in succession; likewise, no one can read or see the same plays, however meritorious, continually without getting bored at last.

We believe it possible to combine the methods of Sophocles and Sardou, and produce a higher form of drama, which would be the delight and joy of mankind. Imitate Sophocles in the sweetness and elegance of his literature, and Sardou in the construction of the plot, in the conflict of the false, and the tricks of the trade. The old English drama, outside of a few accidental exceptions in Shakespeare, is dead forever. We do not see how it could ever have existed. Long winded and heavy, with so much business or progressive interest, with scenes laid all over the earth, and chambermaids or valets having the last line of an act, they should have been oppressive to our forefathers as to ourselves. If they gave pleasure, it is only because the latter were as rudimentary as the performances, and anything was good enough for "bellies" that asked no questions. We have happily advanced since their time, but mostly in the mechanics, and not in the spirit, of the art. The skeleton is now perfect, but no one has as yet endowed it with flesh and blown into its nostrils the Promethean fire of life. Will such a one ever appear? Yes! But he will have to come with a fifty thousand dollar "Angel" it he expects actors, managers or critics to find him out.

Thrilling Experiences

The rushing waters of Eel river compelled the Jane Coombs Company to surrender one night of their engagement in Ferndale in order to make sure of reaching here in time for their opening tonight at the Occidental theater. They were compelled to drive for nearly a mile through a wash of waters that was on a level with the horses' backs and finally reached the river's bank to find the torrent running about forty miles an hour, but the crossing did not look as dangerous as it appears to attempt to return. With two changes of boats and after an hour's exciting experiences in which they were nearly capized several times they were finally landed upon a high bank within a few feet of the depot in small detachments by a skiff, and boarding the train in waiting reached here last night none the worse for their exciting experiences. —Eureka Times.

Charmon Abroad

Charmon, a Sacramento girl, is meeting with great success in Europe. She writes home that she is a great favorite in Vienna and has won four medals, and has been dubbed "the champion lady gymnast of the world," by Vienna admirers, who have presented her with some beautiful diamonds. She leaves next March for Russia, on a salary of $500 per week.

A Manager's Version

I know of no better place to study human character than the private office of a theatrical manager," remarked Alf Ellinghouse, the popular manager of the New Alhambra Theater, the other night, to a Review man. "The moment a man opens the door of my office I can almost tell at a glance the reason he has honored me with a call. If he takes off his hat before entering, comes up to my desk as if he were walking on eggs and asks tenderly after my health and hopes we are doing well, I know in a minute what he is after. Sure enough, out it comes a moment or so later. 'Can you fix me up for tonight, Mr. Ellinghouse? ' I would like to bring my great-grandmother to see the show.' "If a man bangs open the door, strides in as if he owned the earth and keeps his hat on, I know he is either a collector from the gas company or a representative of a bill posting company with his daily hold-up for passes. If the door is opened cautiously and the intruder comes meekly up to the desk, asks if I am the manager and then commences to discuss the weather, I know he is after a job.

"The ambitious young actresses are the ones, however, to tangle you all up. The pretty one, with a nice, swell appearance, sweet voice and charming manner, wants to be given a chance to go on as a servant or in some small part. She wants to start from the bottom and work up. The homely one, in her second childhood and as repressive as they are made, comes in and insists upon becoming a star. Nothing else will satisfy her. If the former had desired to star, you wouldn't have been surprised."

Religion on the Stage

In speaking of The Presentation of Religion on the Stage, lately in New York, one of the leading pastors among other matters said that he objected to religious plays. There is not enough true devotional spirit in the world today to warrant the presentation of religion on the dramatic stage. The main object of all such performances today is money making. Is it right that the highest sentiments of the soul should in this manner be made the subject of commercial trade? And if the object of such plays is to make men more religious, what form of religion shall the dramatist put in his play? I believe further that the presentation of religion on the stage promotes skepticism. The stage is no true mirror of life. A mirror reflects the real thing, but the stage reflects an imitation. I believe that the presentations of certain alleged religious plays on the stage do a harm to religion. There are some things too sacred for the stage. Shakespeare felt this, for though in his works are to be found some 550 quotations from the Bible, he nowhere reproduces in his plays any religious composition. The presentation of religion on the stage tends to bring religion into contempt.

Julia Arthur's Troubles

Florence Crosby commenced suit in the Supreme Court of New York December 16th against D. P. Cheney, husband of Julia Arthur, the actress, for $50,000 for being ejected from the Broadway Theater on the night of November 18th. The relations of Miss Crosby and Mr. Cheney were once of a very cordial nature, and Cheney's wife seems to still regard her as a rival. They have been principals in an interesting feud and on one occasion when Julia Arthur thought Miss Crosby was in a box in the theater she stopped the performance and ordered her out. On the date mentioned Miss Crosby bought seats for the performance and after being admitted was ejected. Upon that action she bases her suit.

Frank Janning Engaged

Frank Fanning, who used to do some very creditable work with the Alcazar Company, sends word to the Review of his engagement to Mabel Hilliard of the Grand Opera House. Frank has done well in the East and has won much commendation for his work as leading man with the Lewis Morris Company. Miss Hilliard is a very beautiful young woman and gifted with a pretty figure and a good voice. Lederer's splintonics will keep the hair healthy.
Symphony Concert

A symphony concert was given at the Grand Opera House on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 7th, by an orchestra of sixty-six musicians under the leadership of Henry Holmes. The program included the Brahms symphony in E minor, a suite in C by Bach, Wagner's Siegfried idyll, and the Leonore overture by Beethoven. The House was filled from pit to ceiling with a representative audience, both social and musical, fully three thousand people had assembled to testify to the love of our people for really fine music. It was Mr. Holmes' first public appearance as a Director and he was received with open arms. He is perhaps not as magisterial as Herr Schoel, who is the idol of our music-loving people, but the wonderful vigor, vitality and life displayed in his leadership, for a man of his years, was a revelation to all. The andante movement in the first number was the finest rendered in the Brahms symphony. The Bach suite was received coldly and seemed unfamiliar to the audience. Both numbers were given rather under the usual spirit in which they are usually given. Mr. Holmes' reading evidently being more on the distinctively quiet, conservative order, Siegfried was received with more applause, being rendered in exceedingly dainty, delicious style, but Beethoven's Leonore was divinely rendered, and the audience was held spell bound by the delicious strains of such heavenly music under a master's guidance. Mr. Lewis Newbauer's magnificent flute playing was a revelation. The musical people are delighted that these symphony concerts are to be continued. It is to the unbounded generosity of Mrs. Phoebe Hearst that we are indebted for this musical feast.

Ha, Ha!

"Roderick Fitz-Maurice, let me pass!"

Genevieve, gestured imperiously; but the villain ignored her.

"Ha!" he bellowed. "I am not compelled to cringe and fall back before the withering glance of any young person who says 'pass' instead of 'pahs'!"

The poor girl paled. For besides being torn from her lover, she was likely to be fined by the stage-manager.

Paul Gilmore Wounded

Paul Gilmore, the actor, playing an engagement at Phoenix, A. T., was shot Dec. 16th, in the play of Don Cesar. A mistake had been made in substituting for blank cartridges. There was great excitement in the audience when the result of the fusillade was announced. The shot entered the knee. The wound is not thought to be serious.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

THEKE can be had, and The Hottest Coon in Dixie aggregation. Surely, the theatregoer cannot complain of a lack of colored amusement. Wonder what it will be next?

A DUMMY FIGURE formerly represented in The Queen of Chinatown the chap who fell through a roof into an opium den. Now a live athlete is used, and the possibility that he will break his neck increases the popular value of the incident. The new party goes through his part naturally much better than the old.

ONE prominent player thinks that Zangwill is wrong in saying that the stage has degenerated. It is not the stage, but the people who are degenerating. Degeneration simply means a going back, and if the people are going back their very extensive audience in front of the footlights shows at least they are not going back on the stage.

NEW LIGHT is expected to be shortly thrown on another of Shakespeare's most important tragedies. A well-known author of lurid melodrama has conceived the idea of presenting Macbeth with a grand scenic investment in which extraordinary electrical accessories will play a most important part. In time, when it comes to the works of the great bard the light of historic genius may be the last thing thought of for their illumination.

There can be no question that many a good play fails simply because its writer is entirely or comparatively unknown. Bearing on this fact there is a proposition to give a series of performances this year at the Berlin Theater without divulging the dramatist's name until after the tenth performance of a piece. If the play is a failure no name will be made known, and the author will receive compensation in the shape of a small royalty. The object of this new plan is to save the reputations of dramatists who are meeting with some failures.

Charles Coghlan's death attracted so little attention and received so little comment in the newspapers—except in New York, where he was remembered as a local favorite twenty years ago—that we must conclude that he already belonged to the generation past. Yet he was only about 55 years old and it is safe to say that there are few left upon our stage to compare with him in the intellectual and artistic gift of the highest type, a forceful, graceful, accomplished actor who gave dignity to every fitting role he undertook. It was Coghlan's misfortune to enter the theatrical life with a career that break up of the old theatrical organization that stranded so many good actors and brought so many poor ones into prominence. His first starring tour with his sister in Diplomacy was entirely worthy, but chance then intervened with his health and the moral as well as the artistic associations of that enterprise injured him in every way and made him known to a public that had not known him before as an apparently bad actor and his legacy to the personal companion he never really recovered from the depressing effect of his Macbeth and he never afterwards assumed the place upon the stage to which he was entitled. It is a pathetic to think of an actor dying on a stormy tour down in Texas, and leaving absolutely no one entitled to rank in the same class.

In connection with more or less complimentary remarks of late concerning the alleged immoral tendency of a certain class of modern plays, Joseph Jeferson, at a reception in St. Louis said: "if you go to a play of this sort and expect to find it immoral you will not be disappointed. If you go solely to see its beauties, its perfection of acting, its scenic completeness, again you will not be disappointed, and you will have viewed it in the right light. Don't ask yourself whether the play is immoral; ask whether it is well done. That, and that alone, is the test."

The Bishop of London has been talking about the theater. He said: "I think the drama is an admirable form of popular teaching as well as amusement. I do not often go to the theater myself, however, for personally I prefer good plays, by which I mean plays that have a literary merit in them and these are not numerous. Most modern plays do not lay themselves out for literature, but in this respect they are only like a good deal of modern literature which deserted the broad line of human interest and character, and goes in for small situations."

The early days of the career of Henry Irving are rarely thought of in view of his present fame. Only eighteen when, on September 29, 1856, he left a business desk for the stage, his first part was Orpheus in Richmond at the opening of the new theater in the small provincial town of Sunderland. A story is told that on one occasion, when young Irving's acting of some role had proved unsatisfactory, two other members of the company, Mr. Mead and Mr. Johnson, prevailed upon the management to forego his dismissal. Both of these actors later became members of Irving's company. From now on the years were made up of never ending days of hard work and study. He went from town to town, from theater to theater, from part to part, building slowly but surely a solid reputation as an actor of dramaticism and originality. The culminating success of this period of his life was attained when in the latter part of 1878 he became manager of the Lyceum Theater, London. His opening play there was Hamlet, with Ellen Terry as Ophelia and Mr. Chippendale as Polonius. Laertes was acted by Frank Cooper, Orie by Kylre Bellows, the Ghost by Mr. Mead, and Rosencranz by Arthur W. PINero, now so well known as the leader of modern English drama. The career of Mr. Terry and the Lyceum theater from that time on forms an essential and generally well-known part of the history of the English stage.

Don't overlook this point. The Dramatic Review's circulation is not confined to members of the profession and managers. Already more than five hundred theater-goers of this city read this paper every week, and are influenced by its correct reviews of current amusements, and therefore attend the best that is offered by the managers. Heretofore the dramatic paper has not attempted to go beyond the confines of the profession. Why shouldn't the public read dramatic papers if it would learn something of the people who bring laughter and tears, and make us the better for having seen and heard them? The public must be interested, and to that end the Review will, from time to time, add features that will increase its circulation among the musical class and among the thousands who go to the theater for amusement only. Watch us grow.

As apparently observant and well-informed writer on matters theatrical remarks that with our modern stage methods, playing is not hard labor in these days of long runs. An actor in a successful piece can rest all day in his preparation for his effort at night. His actual task requires only three or four hours of endeavor, for which he can fit himself by twenty-one hours of repose. Mechanics work eight hours a day, merchants often fifteen. In former times when stock companies changed their bill every night the actor was compelled to study constantly. It was hard work and poor pay in the early history of our drama. This change in his condition adds to the actor's longevity. Relieved from the strain of perpetual study and surrounded by every luxury that wealth can command, the popular actor has greater expectancy of life than is possessed by most of his audience.

Stock Company for Honolulu

The Orpheum at Honolulu will soon put on a stock company, playing standard dramas and stock plays, striving to specialize first part. President Cohen is playing a great deal of zeal and enterprise that should be bountifully appreciated by the Honolulu people.

The Dramatic Review contains all the news. Subscribe now.
Sidney Drew has been discharged in bankruptcy.

Esmond's play for Nat Goodwin has been called Pals.

Clay Clement, with Nancy O'Neill, is winning fine notices in Los Angeles.

Willie Collier secured a hit in Chicago in Mr. Smooth at the Grand Opera House. In Los Angeles they are talking of L. R. Stockwell as the only "natural born comedian."

Willie Collier will probably have two new plays for presentation in this city.

The James-Kidder-Hanford triumvirate of stars will follow The Christian at the Columbia Theater.

The advance sale demand for seats for The Christian is the largest in the history of the Columbia Theater.

Len Blythe, treasurer of the Los Angeles Theater, has returned from the East, having left the Lombardi Opera Company on its feet and making money.

Jane Kennard, who is the leading lady of the stock company at the Auditorium in Kansas City, while playing Henrietta in The Two Orphans, was severely injured on the stage last week.

On the first night of The Ameer, Wallack's, Frank Daniels made such a clever speech that the reviewers quoted from it. At the second performance the audience demanded it again.

 Blanch Walsh last week was lucky enough to encounter in Montreal some of that kind of demonstrative adulation which is far bygone in most cities. The Mayor went on the stage to present a floral wreath oratorically, and her carriage was drawn from the theater to her hotel by young men.

Filson and Errol are preparing to spend next season touring the country with a farcical comedy by Frank Bouman, called for the present A General Bluff. The title is, however, subject to change, but the comedy is assured fact, and the starring tour is also to be.

The early debut in New York of Sarah Truax as a star is an assured fact. The young actress, who is described as "a beauty chock full of talent," will be seen in what is professionally called "the Mary Anderson repertoire," which includes Juliet, Rosalind, Beatrice, Parthenia, Portia and Galatea.

We are sorry to chronicle the illness of genial Bob White of the California.

In the music hall scene of The Christian, Effie Elliker sings the Glory Quale song.

Anton Schott, the robust Wagnerian, is giving very successful concerts in Portland.

De Pachman, the renowned pianist will appear at the Columbia next Tuesday afternoon.

Charlotte Thompson has just finished two plays that will be produced in New York in the near future.

There is some talk of Horace Bwing reopening the Grove Street Theater and producing popular priced plays.

Lucile Ulmer Thunderke, has been specially engaged for the Christian week production at the Dewey, Oakland.

Archibald McKenney, for many years manager for Fannie Davenport, comes here in the same capacity for The Christian.

Antoinette Trebelle, arrived in this city last week, from a most successful concert season in Australia. She is considering several offers for a few appearances here before going East.

Fred Belasco, the popular lessee of the likewise popular Alcazar, leaves for his European trip in February, remaining until April 3d in New York, then sailing for the other side. Mrs. Belasco accompanies him.

Reports come in from the road that L. R. Stockwell and My Friend From India are having a very prosperous time. Charley Thall, the youngest treasurer in the business, is with the company, and is holding his end up like a veteran.

Peter Studebaker, Jr., son of the Indiana millionaire, died last week at the Savoy. He had just finished two plays, one of which is to be soon produced at the Fischer Opera House, San Diego. It was said that Eugene Ormonde was to have originated the leading part.

Friends of Camille D'Arville crowded her last days in this city with social attentions. She had as many invitations as there were days in the three weeks of her stay here. There were breakfasts and dinners in her honor and many other delightful social attentions.

Sol. Smith Russell will shortly begin his Coast tour. He has two new plays for presentation here.

The Columbia Theater will have a fine list of leading star attractions beginning with James-Kidder-Hanford, and mean Nat, Cary, McDonnell, Maxine Elliott, Sol. Smith Russell, Willie Collier and Deman Thompson.

The Christian

When The Christian, which begins its limited engagement at the Columbia next Monday, was running in New York, Hall Caine made a reply to certain critics who charged the play with "carnality." Said he: "There is no carnality in the relations of John Storm and Glory Quale. The critic who makes this statement ought to be divorced. A religious enthusiast," he went on, "built on the lines of the early Christians, counting the body as nothing and the soul as all in all, conceives the idea that a girl whom he loves is being demoralized by association with certain men. He tries to rescue her from rain, and she will not be rescued. Then a voice seems to come from heaven, 'Save her at all costs. She is tottering on the brink of hell. Better a life ended than a life degraded and a soul destroyed.' He resolves to Christ's body ten feet after. Only she consents to marry him, so he changes his mind."

The Lodge Section

It was plainly to be seen she was from the country as she ambled up the steps at the New Alhambra theater and put her head in at the box office.

"Say, young man, I want two good seats in your lodge section."

"In our lodge section, courteously inquired 'Lodger Empey, you mean you want two seats in one of the loge boxes, don't you?"

"I know what I mean," snapped back this vision from Petaluma, "I'm a member of the Rebecca lodge and I want to go where you put the rest of the lodge people."

New Leading Woman

The new leading woman for the Alcazar, who goes on after the first, is in town, having arrived Tuesday. She is a handsome young English woman and her Alcazar debut will be her first appearance in America. Her name is May Blaney, and she is said to be a winning and accomplished actress.

Alcazar Brevities.

Lady Windermere's Fan will be the production at the Alcazar Theater next month.

Florence Roberts will make a coast tour next season under the direction of Belasco and Thall.

Chimmie Fadden will be the Christmas and New Year's attraction at the Alcazar.

Irene Everett has been specially engaged by the Alcazar management, and will open Jan. 8 in The Mysterious Mr. Bogle.

Side Lights

Phil Hastings announces that a series of five Symphony Concerts have definitely been decided upon.

Three De Pachman Concerts are announced for next week on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday afternoons, at Sherman Clay Hall. A great success is assured, as the opening-day sale Tuesday amounted to $1,700.

A GREAT ENDORSEMENT

"I notice that Murray and Mack are booked at the Alhambra. The show was here last night and it's the best thing I have seen in a long time. All young ladies, good looking, well dressed, not a stick in the bunch, and the show goes with a bang from start to finish. What's the matter with a couple of Irish comedians that take you back to Scanlan and Cronin, or the Kernels, when they were it? An Irish woman (by man) that is a star? A shapely soubrette that has about a dozen changes of costume, and is not still a minute! A German comedian who can sing cakewalks and Irish cakewalks, and has a quartette of boys who can sing in harmony! A couple of song and dance ladies, not far behind the Hesgler sisters! A tramp who puts it all over the rest in thick line for he is not through in ten minutes! There's an Irish cake walk that's the nearest thing you ever saw, and a baritone on Sunser's band that will lull you away from the front of the house. You might notice that the leader of the orchestra can knock a piano silly with our band and beat time with the other, and stands up—no stool!—A Letter from San Jose.

MARRIED

If you didn't know her by her stage name, but only as Anna M. Fiedler, you would be over the moon reading of her marriage Tuesday afternoon. She was married at the groom's residence by Justice of the Peace Kerrigan, before a few intimate friends. She has been a popular actress here and has many friends in and out of the profession. To end the suspense, we will announce that the bride was most generally known as Edith Hall and the groom is Supervisor William McCarthy, the young capitalist who owns the Langham.
The Columbia

Tomorrow night will close a most successful two weeks engagement of Frederick Warde and company. The attendance at each performance was large, perhaps unexpectedly so, considering that the repertoire was familiar to San Franciscans. Warde always satisfies, and especially was this the case on last Sunday and Wednesday evenings when he presented Richard the Third. Mrs. Brune was a very strong member of the cast, proving that her talent is equal to many of the stars of the day, though she lacks that experience that can only come with age. Mr. Herman is a strong, energetic actor, and shared the honors for good, conscientious work. A noticeable feature of the performance was Norman Dr. Witt Phillips, ten years of age, who was the younger of the two princes. There is a bright future for this clever little youngster. The Merchant of Venice will be given this afternoon, Virginii will be the piece for tonight, and the closing performance will be a repetition of The Lion's Mouth tomorrow night. The Columbia management is to be congratulated upon the quality of Mr. Warde's repertoire and its presentation, and the public has showed appreciation by filling the theater nightly.

The California

The California played Sunday afternoon and evening to crowded houses in Miller's musical comedy, The Hottest Coo in Dixie, which is the Clorindy show written up for a two act comedy. Will H. Proctor, who with Billy Cole carries off the honors, has two characters as the Hottest Coo in Dixie and the Lucky Billy. Billy Cole as Joshua made love with a mouth full of expression. Fred T. Carey, as Mister, a legal light, showed up the shyster methods as seen by the funny man and was certainly very taking. Robt. A. Kelly as Lem Loose had the most remarkable facial make-up ever seen on any stage and was particularly funny. Clara Belle Carey as Mrs. Knight, a strong minded widow, received an encore for her song, I Long to Hear that Old Song Again. Miss Georgie Dobbs, recalled after her song, That's One Thing that Rag Time Will Do, responded with another Rag-time dance that was certainly the most wonderful performance of the kind ever witnessed upon any stage. She brought down the gallery gods.

Miss Smith sang Dat Chicken so acceptably as to force a recall. Miss Neile Hawkins is easily the prima donna. For encores she sang My Old Kentucky Home and Comin' Thro the Rye. The cake walking was unique, and the chorus very lively and striking. Negro melodies with their wondrous paths are always enjoyable.

New Alhambra

The Black Pati Troubadours are billed for the Alhambra for next week. The city can well stand these coffee-colored entertainers another week, for they are about as clever as colored people could ever hope to be. They give a three-hour show, comprising comic songs, ragtime, dancing, juggling, comic and grand opera selections, and numerous other things given in an incidental way. It is one big, rapid conglomeration of absurdities that make one smile and laugh until the operatic end of the show is reached. Sisseretta Jones (Black Pati) is the dark-hued star, and she sings as well as ever she did. The Watts are also an important and highly entertaining couple, and if the pleasing of the gallery indicates anything, they were the hit of the whole performance. James Wilson is probably the best darky singer in the world. D. H. Stewart is a wonderfully clever dancer, and especially good were his imitations of a locomotive. He blows real sparks from his mouth. Most of the feminine part of the company is the same as when it was here at the California Theater a year ago, but there has been a great improvement in the general appearance and movement of that part of the show, and especially is there a noticeable change in the quality of the laundry work, though the lingers of the women is nothing to brag about. There are many clever dancers among them—making altogether the best colored show now on the road.

There will be a change in the program next week.

Henry M. Stanky, the famous explorer and now member of Parliament, is lecturing on South Africa in the British Museum Hall. Money devoted to war needs.

The Tivoli

This was the second week of that laughable comic opera, Tar and Tartar, at the Tivoli. Ferris Hartman and Annie Meyers received much applause every night from old friends. Lewis Lincoln, Mr. Billy Gibson, Knowles, Tom Greene, Alf, Wheeler and Julie Cote were particularly creditable. The chorus was very good indeed, making probably the strongest comic opera cast that has been at the Tivoli for many months.

The Alcazar

Of the program of this popular theater is the announcement, Dr. Bill. To all intents and purposes it should have been Ernest Hastings, for upon the first entrance of this popular actor on Monday night, after a prolonged absence in the East, the play and everything connected with it were lost sight of and forgotten in the rousing welcome accorded an old friend. It was several minutes before the enthusiasm of the audience spent itself sufficiently to allow the play to proceed, and then only after Mr. Hastings made a little speech, haltingly and modest, that showed better than anything else could, the reason why his return had called forth such a personal and affectionate welcome. To Laura Crews, who also made her appearance after a long absence, the welcome was cordial and prolonged, and she and Mr. Hastings were almost smothered under the load of flowers passed over the footlights. Dr. Bill affords many opportunities for humorous treatment, and was ably interpreted, Ernest Hastings, as Dr. Bill, around whom the laugh-provoking complications revolved, gave a performance that was easy and natural, and entirely free from horse play, yet thoroughly amusing. Frank Opperman was Mr. Firman, father-in-law to Dr. Bill, and he made the character sufficiently eccentric and pronounced. George Welster did extremely well with the part of Mr. Horton, Inspector of Police, brusque and suspicious, and if Mr. Webster was not such a thoroughly reliable and seasoned actor, we would be tempted to say that each new character he has lately been giving us seems to be better than the last.

Frank Denithorne, as the silly, simpering dude, was very good—only it seems too bad that Denithorne's undoubted abilities are not more often entrusted with stronger work. Marie Howe, in her old part of Mrs. Horton, married to the Inspector of Police, after graduating from the ballet, had that sort of an opportunity—a ecstatic role—that furnishes her with her best work which is always, and on this present occasion, really of a high character. Gertrude Foster played the young, confining wife, and, as in everything Miss Foster does, there was a daintiness and a sincerity that always pleases. Juliet Crosby was a charming Jennie Firman, and Anita Fallon, who can always be depended upon to do justice to a part, was Mrs. Firman. Ellen's maid was capitably done by Pauline Conway and Laura Crews who, since she made such a success of Cleo, in What Happened to Jones, seems destined to be called upon to play dashing and frolicsome characters, was very bewitching and conquering, and gave to the part an abandon and an insolence that was thoroughly in keeping with the character of Miss Fannie Leroy, the dancing girl. Carlyle Moore, as the policeman, and Jack Morris, a new aspirant for stage honors, who made a lively boy, completed a cast of general excellence.

Grand Opera House

It was evident that the audience at the Grand Opera House the past week appreciated the difficulties that the members of the cast were obliged to surmount in presenting the revival in English of Strauss' comic opera, Die Fledermaus, [The Bat] for it differs very much from the general run of comic operas heretofore presented by this excellent company, and that it was so well received is certainly very flattering.

It is difficult to say to whom the greatest praise is due, for all the leading parts demanded an equal amount of attention and were equally well rendered. To Thos. H. Perse as Gabriel Von Eisenstein, as usual much praise is due, and Edith Mason as Rosalind, the wife, was also due to all emergencies. Hattie Belle Ladd enacted her part with her usual good conception. Miss Ethel Strachan, a young lady, from the chorus, as Ada, did wonderfully well, and deserves the greatest praise for her work. Winfred Goff as Alfred and Bessie Fairbairns as Prince Orloffsky were up to their usual standard of excellence. Wm. Wolff had very little to do, as he is resting from his hard work of last week in the Chimes of Normandy, but he played the part of the governor of the prison faultlessly.

To the versatile comedian, Arthur Woolsey as Frosh, the turnkey must be accredited the honor of furnishing the greater part of the fun, and his makeup and dialect were wonderfully good. The play was beautifully staged and the chorus did its usual conscientious work.

THE GRAND

Strauss' pretty comic opera, Die Fledermaus, has proven a brilliant success at the Grand Opera House. It will be performed for the last time Sunday evening. At the extra matinée Christmas Day, David Henderson's famous extravaganza, Sinbad, will be presented in a most magnificent and costly manner with entirely new and picturesque scenery and costumes. Among the many features will be The Transformation, by Frank King, which will far surpass anything of its kind ever witnessed here. Charles H. Jones will introduce The March of the Silver Knights, which will be performed by beautiful girls in armor. Senorita Matilda, Spanish Premier, and a troop of coryphee will be witnessed in graceful and fascinating ballets. The cast will include not only the entire company, but several new faces. The piece to run through the week.

THE TIVOLI

Commencing with this evening, the Tivoli will present its annual extravaganza, founded on the well-known nursery rhyme, Little Bo-Peep. Stage Director George E. Lask, who has arranged the extravaganza, has skillfully introduced as many good things as could possibly be crowded in three hours of fun and delight. The cast of Little Bo-Peep will call for the services of over one hundred people, and will include Ferris Hartman, Annie Lichter, Annie Meyers, Tom Greene, Alf. C. Wheelan, Julie Cotte, Eloise Mortimer, Phil Branson, William Schuster, Cora Harris, Caroline Knowles, Charlotte Beckwith, Ida Wyatt, Master Jack Robertson, etc. All the latest songs, dances, comical situations and a series of beautiful ballets and dances, will be found in Little Bo-Peep. Special matinees on Christmas and New Year's Day and Saturdays.

THE COLUMBIA

The play of the year is undoubtedly Hall Caine's The Christian. New York crowded to see it for 175 nights and Boston scored a run of 110 consecutive nights. San Francisco is to have an opportunity of viewing it for the first time. Liebler & Co., will present The Christian here for a limited engagement at the Columbia, beginning Xmas night. The production here will be marked with the same careful attention to detail as that which characterized it in New York. The company numbers over fifty people. The New York Herald was most enthusiastic in its praise of the play, saying among other things: 'The Christian is first, second and always a forceful play. Many of the incidents of the piece have never been surpassed for strength and purpose, power and pathos. The audience turns from interest to sympathy, and finally to an intense devotion upon the twist of the author's pen or a line from the players' tips, until the looker-on cannot help marveling at the wonderful sovereignty of all concerned in what is undoubtedly the greatest success of the entire theatrical year.'

THE ORPHEUM

The Orpheum offers a good bill for Christmas week. At the head of the program is the greatest artist ever brought to California, even by the Orpheum management, Eugene Ponger, who has a world-wide reputation. She stands in a class all by herself, and although hundreds have tried to imitate her work, there is still only one Ponger. At the close of her engagement here, Ponger returns to Paris, where she is under contract to remain until the close of the World's Fair. Thorne and Carleton are two comedians whose sketch, A Substitue, is said to be very good. Claude Tharde is said to be one of the best single-handed entertainers in America. To the art of humorous story telling he has added the gifts of song and dance. Others who will help to make the Christmas week merry are: Harrigan, the Trump Juggler; La Sylvie; Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Milton Royle and Co.; Gertrude Rutledge; Llewellyn Sisters; The Averys. There will be a special matinee on Christmas Day.

THE CHUTES

At the Chutes a great bill has been prepared for Christmas week. Adgie presents a mirror dance in her cage of lions, and Ruth Nelta and her picnickers will appear. Lillian Von Tise, a female bartone, will make her first appearance here. The La Monts, acrobatic equilibrista; Zoyarrow, on his revolving globe; Kube and Frank Shilds, comedy and trick cyclists, and Major Mite in new specialties, will complete an interesting program. On Monday there will be a Christmas tree and every child in attendance will be given a present.

NEW OAKLAND THEATER

The Moroscos have about concluded arrangements for a new theater on Twelfth street near Broadway, Oakland, to be built by Mr. Witcher and associates. The new house will be a modern and handsome theater in every respect, and the Moroscos will have at least a ten years' kase on it.

LIEBLER & CO. presents HALL CAINE'S Powerful Play

THE CHRISTIAN

Presented here with the same attention to detail as that which characterized its run of 175 nights in New York and 110 nights in Boston.
The Right of Self, which was produced in Germany at the Irving Place Theater last week under the direction of Proctor Wode, the author, is a promising dramatic. His theme in this, his first drama, was a novel one. It is a story of the man who had, before his marriage, been unjustly convicted of a crime. She will not tell her husband. He learns of it from another. Still she will tell him nothing, preferring to attempt suicide, feeling that every person who has been wrongly treated has the right to keep it a secret. The play showed some very strong situations.

Let all singers take warning from the fate of D. M. Reis, a tenor of the Verdi trio, who, while trying to reach his top C on the roof of the New York Theater, ruptured a blood-vessel in the brain. Singers not only run the risk of a sudden and vicio- usly work, but they are in this city of flat houses in constant danger of driving their neighbors into insane asylums.

Max Freeman, the veteran stage manager, is the latest applicant in the Federal Court to be relieved of his obligations. Mr. Freeman did not consider the Federal Court a success, but he thought that unless he got in quick he would not be popular. A day or two before that, Joseph K. Emmet, (young Fritz Ennet) filed his little petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities at $7,070, and no assets—not even a scarf pin like Thomas Q. Seabrook bad. By the way, Seabrook seems to have been playing in haiti luck again. His latest company has just walked back to town.

Frank Daniels has more of the outward requisites for success than Seabrook or Jefferson De Angelis. Mr. Daniels is a four-foot man with a six-foot voice, and that incognegro alone is enough to make a comedian of ordinary reputation. But in addition to his physical peculiarities Mr. Daniels has the genuine audacious humor which we have a right to expect from the opera comedian. His latest vehicle for the display of humour is The Amee. The opera is not strong in any departures. Helen Redmond, the soprano, has a splendid figure, dressed as a boy in a manner which could deceive no one, and her voice is pleasing though not so well cultivated as we expect to hear in a first-class light opera organization. The tenor, George Devall, has a small voice which he strains to fill the requisite. Kate Uart is a soutebrette contralto. It is evident that Kirke La Shehle didn't intend to surround Mr. Daniels with any expensive singers. He believed that with Mr. Daniels, assisted by W. F. Rochester and Will Danforth in their respective parts, the audience would get the full worth of their money. And judging by the attendance this far at Wallack's, Mr. La Shehle knows his business both as manager and as collaborator with Frederick Kauken in writing the words to Victor Herbert's music. The Amee ought to succeed well on the road after a good run in this city.

Signor Giovanni Tagliapietra, the famous grand opera baritone, was terribly shocked the other day by the reasons which had induced him to go to his hotel for lunch. A baritone with an international reputation who has supported the best prima donna, and in New York last week he asked who would be his good singing teacher and he said: 'The nearest one you can find you can't get to him any too with that voice of yours.' So I came to you because you were the nearest to Gran Central Station.

"My boy," said Tagliapietra, when he had recovered from his astonishment, "you are running a great risk proceeding on that principle."

This is the last week of the Kendall's in The Elder Miss Blossom at the Knickerbocker. Their engagement has been artistic- ally and financially a brilliant success. I don't know exactly when Mr. and Mrs. Kendall will reach San Francisco this season but whenever they do, The Elder Miss Blossom will be a treat.

Ignace Jan Paderewski, of the lion mane, appeared one afternoon in Carnegie Hall last week to an immense audience. If it hadn't been raining, the spectators would have cleared landau porticoes, but as it was very wet, they had to dispose of their seats at the last minute. The weather was very wet, they had to dispose of their seats at the last minute. Some speculation was indulged in before the concert, as to whether the marriage of the great Polish pianist since he was in America three years ago would have any effect upon his reception. It must be confessed that although Paderewski played with all his former technical skill and sympathy, he was not as enthusiastically received as could have been hoped. But after the concert hundreds of young women in the audience who contained few men, crowded around the stage and compelled the pianist to play another encore.

William A. Brady is out of Koster and Bial. The syndicate which owns the house objected to the $1,500 a week salary be paid to the tenor and the contract has been terminated in Round Around New York in Eighty Minutes. Mr. Brady will take the burlesque on the road soon. Corbett was getting only $25 a week for his nightly performance, but that was all velvet for him, as the playhouse was only around the corner from his prosperous cafe.

Nat C. Goodwin and Maxine Elliott will follow The Elder Miss Blossom at the Knickerbocker in The Cowboy and The Lady. This is Mrs. Fiske's last week at the Fillmore. Avenue for an entire season seemed preposterous to those conversant with the theatrical situation. But I can candidly say that Manager Southwell and the Castle Square Opera Company are fixtures in St. Louis. Their box office receipts have been marvelous.

Our old friend, Nat Goodwin and his pretty wife, Maxine Elliott, are renewing old acquaintances at the Olympic theater this week. They are giving us Nathaniel Hale, An American Citizen and their new play The Cowboy and the Lady. The advance sale promises a profitable en- gagement. Manager Short is giving us Kellar the "locus focus" man at the Century. He has many new tricks which are very mystifying.

Rhyne and Dunn's production of A Milk White Flag is pleasing the patrons of the Grand Opera House, whilst a clever melo- drama, On the Stroke of Twelve, elicits much applause from the patrons of Manager Garen at Havel's theater. Managers Tate and Martin, have an excellent bill at the Columbia headed by Robert Downing, The Rosinos, Franziell and Lewis and other clever vaudeville. The War of Wealth, Zenol, Carl and Zenon, and Ashley and Josie, Dorothy Drew and Rover, the artist, is the theatrical menu "chefed" by Manager Sam Compton at Hopkins this week.

Manager James Butler of the Standard is serving his clientele with The Gay Masqueraders and this staid bung of bounteous feminity are giving us a coloric performance entitled A Day at Hotel Velen.

Bohemian Girl is being beautifully sung by the Castle Square Company. Maid Lillie Merri is making the hit of her life w- Aline. The understudies are Sam Adams at the Olympic, The Frouniders at the Center, Camille and vaneside at Hopkins, The City Sports at the Standard, A Guilty Mother at Havell's, and Murray and Mack at the Grand, and A Merry Christmas in San Francisco for the Dramatic Review.

GATV PALLEK.
The word dramatic David top-liner, does, off. some bright, appeared and of matinee. barrel intense Merlin ing Merry health yet week the sweetness wrote it my Colorado. this just Powers received. He W. Breach of Premier had two big house Sunday, but far some unknown reason the business has since fallen off. From an artistic point of view this is the most wonderful thing Bradock has offered his patrons this season. It is one of those comedies that is a go from start to finish, and for all good. Miss Nettie Sennett is one of the hardest workers we have ever seen. She is very clever in all she does, and it is too apparent that she is working hard, making one feel uncomfortable for her. I can just imagine that I see her before the curtain goes up saying to the audience, "Now lady and gentlemen, this piece must make a hit here. so work," and they all do work.

On the evening of Dec. 6, the students of the Broadway Drama School gave a most commendable performance of the three-act comedy, Confusion, to a large and well-pleased audience. The following pupils appeared in the cast: Nesara. George Dos- tay, Donald Brooke, W. R. Tren- tham, A. Parker, C. O. Brown, and the Misses Merriil Maine, Margaret Allen, Fanny Marion and Pauline Tappan. The Faculty of this school will give their first public recital on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 15, at the Grand Opera House.

Mr. Thomas Kiernan, of your city, was a caller at my office last week. He tells me his health has improved greatly since his arrival in Colorado.

The younger of the Rossetta Brothers, barrel jumpers, received a bad fall while do- ing his act at the Lyceum last week, but has fully recovered.

The latest addition to the Art Gallery is a large portrait of Miss Villa Allen as Glory Quayle. Merry Xmas. BOB BELL.

Chicago Special Correspondent

Chicago, Dec. 16.—Mrs. Leslie Carter, who is playing Zan at Powers Theater has charmed audiences with a parade of amusing acting. It is unfortunate that most of the intense plays adapted to strongly emotional audiences have become offensive to the morbidly suggestiveness. Surely some would prefer the intense character developed in plays like "Climax," which is the art of a Bernardi, Nelseheller or Carter stone for the shockingness of the theme.

The play, Zan, which is performed by Miss Allen from the French was first written by Pierre Berton and Charles Simons, and the character Zan, a child of the Paris slums, a lawless music ball singer, was played by Miss. Rejane with great success in Paris for one whole winter. The plot is very simple, but has enough of the earthly grand passion to attract the popular demand and give it some moral qualities. Mrs. Carter’s production of the role has a tendency to pul- lulate, to not to elevate it. Mrs. Carter insinuated by Charles A. Niswender, Mark Smith, Hugo Toddan, Helen Tracy, Bertram Millward and Elisabeth Beikney. This is Mrs. Carter’s first appearance in Chicago for two years.

At McCve’s Theater Stanislaus Strege’s version of the Schnickelwick, Yadis, is now running. Mr. F. C. Whittem, who is here in Chicago himself presents for the first time on any stage this play which is attached to some of the same interest that has been aroused by the presentation of the drama, Baa Hoo.

In the play Mr. Strange has endeavored to follow along legitimate lines the much talked-of and read story of Hendrik Schniekle- wie. There is a fine scenic display, repre- senting the Petersen pastry, the garden of Asius, Plantins’ House and the gardens and mansions of dear old Nervo. Music and dances are also features. A chorus of twenty voices with a score composed for this play by Julian Edlund is given. The author has been to write a play—not a spectacular play—but a dramatic story, and in this he has succeeded wonderfully well.

The drama, Quo Vadis, illustrates very pathetically what the Christians suffered and endured during that extremely brutal reign of Nero. The most valuable points of the play is the bringing out the character of Nero and the intrigues of his court against the Christians. Edmund D. Lyons represents Nero as the terrible monster history has depicted. Petronius, one of the most intense and most magnetic characters in the play is taken by Arthur Forrest. Joseph Haworth makes a fine sunny Vinicius, Chilo, the Greek, is represented by Horace Lewis in rather a comic style. Euphrosyne, the Chris- tian girl, is played by Roselle Knott, and Elmer Grandin takes the part of Urus. The play as a whole is well received and enjoyed by the audience at every perform- ance, notwithstanding that the opening night was in Chicago instead of London or New York.

Willie Collier in his new face, Mr. Soms, has been very popular and has been well received by highly appreciative audiences at the Grand Opera House. He has a good company and also Mr. Miller’s wife, Louise Allen, who plays an important part in the drama Mr. Soms, was favorably received.

Next at the Grand comes an old favorite, Bob Smith, Russell in "Beau John" and A Poor Relation, and following future books we find Stuart Rust in this show, play Oliver Goldsmith.

Smart Robin has with him a fine company. His support includes Jeffrey Lewis, Henry D. Dicey, Walter Hair, Clifford Leigh, Florence Rockwell, Eliza Knapp Currey and Beaumont Smith. The veteran Weaver takes the part of Dr. Johnson.

The Stindebakker opens on Christmas week with a spectacular production of Verdi’s Aida.

At the Columbia this week the Patrons are given the new opera The Smugglers of Badayers. Next week, Robert Hood and The still be the rendered.

Alabama is running at the Dearborn for this week with the change of Squires. This is a beautiful little company, in prospect for next week’s performance.

At the Great Northern The Evil Eye is produced with the most brilliant stage effects. The plot is taken from a legend of the Rhine and gives this play a rare thrill for great scenery.

The King of the Opium Ring is the attraction at the Academy this week. The story comes from the Chinese region of San Francisco.

Chicago must wait sometime before witnessing that much of the city. The palace of Sholmes and the Stindevakker. Can AUTHORS of "The Great Theatre," are still running at McCve’s last Sunday night. Mr. Tim Murphy has made a success in it, and it is a truly pretty comedy.

Amos Carrey.
LOS ANGELES—Special Correspondence

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 15—The musical season of 1899-1900 has opened with unusual activity and interest. The Oratorio Society has rendered the Creation twice with Miss- Genevra Johnstone-Bishop as soprano soloist. The society is rehearsing for the Messiah for an early date. Miss- Johnstone-Bishop continuing as leading soprano.

The second Symphony Concert will be given on Dec. 22, with Beethoven's Fifth Symphony on the program. Mr. Harley Hamilton, the organizer and leader of the Symphony Orchestra, has carried the organization through two successful seasons. The first concert of the third season given at the Los Angeles Theater on Dec. 1, with Mr. Hamilton conducting, and Miss Frieda Rosa soloist, was a musical, social and financial triumph. The program included: Overture-Paiste [Spath]; Fifth Symphony by Haydn, the irresistible contributor for Leidner's, and Nellie Mason Shaw, as Eugenia McCreery, furnished the comedy, and were both acceptable. H. W. Hullett, as Liest, Gordon Payne, old Charlie's, with the work in the principal solo of the second act, and his declaration, "I am a spy," brought merited recognition from the audience. Balance of week, Farmer Schramm, Pink Honorees, Band of Rain, The Phoenix, Why Smith Left Home the underliner.

The Washington State Band and Orchestral Association gave its second concert at the Auditorium. The occasion was marked by the appearance of Mrs. Lee Payne, a great one who was the Elf's queen at their carnival last October. Her first number was Solve Reginas (Jusna), which was rendered with splendid expression, "Where the Luebens Iblorm" (Ruck). The Rosiny (Nevins), and "Because I Love You Dear" were also charmingly given. The latter two bringing merited encore. Mrs. Jones has a sweet, vibrant soprano, and sings with excellent method and tender feelings, coupled with a sweet personality and charming presence. She won many friends who will be glad to hear her again.

OAKLAND—Special Correspondence

OAKLAND, CAL., Dec. 20—Admirers of rag-time melodies, darky singing, dancing, and conicalities, found a surfeit of that kind of amusement in The Hottest Coin in Dixie, at the Macdonough last Friday and Saturday evenings. Robert Kelley as a coon tramp, with that tired feeling, was the best taken character and greatly amused the audience with his comic songs and speeches. The dancing was good and the costumes bright and pretty. For Christmas week at the Macdonough the following companies will appear: Dec. 23-25, Greater America; 27-28, Frederick Warde presenting The Lion's Mouth and Richard III; 29-30, Murray & Mack in Finisgall's Juan; Jan. 1-2, Richards & Pringle in colored operettas.

At the Dewey Theater that old favorite, The Corner Grocery, has held the boards this week. Some new features have been introduced, the following people deserving special mention: Gracie Pfleider, as Jimmie Nolan. Alice Szandows, as Mother Nolan. Wm. Mack and J. T. O'Malley, as Daddy Nolan. For Xmas week Manager Holden announces a production of All Bah, for which a number of clever people have been engaged; there will also be a ballet of four young ladies, under the direction of Miss Sidney Fox. The stage is under the management of Geo. Hernandez and J. T. O'Malley. Manager Landers スクッシュ with wife (Fanny Denny) left last week for New York, where Mr. Stevens will secure new plays and new people for 1900. Mr. Stevens will return Jan. 1st, and will make his reappearance in New England Rose.

MUSICAL NOTES

Mrs. Chas. Dickman, the well known opera and concert singer, returns from Paris the first of next year, and will resume her position as solo-alto of the First Presbyterian Church Choir of this city. Mrs. Dickman is well known in San Francisco, having resided there before her departure for Paris. The Orpheus Club gave one of its delightful concerts last evening at the Unitarian Hall, under the direction of Robert C. Newell. The soloists were H. D. Crandall and Putnam Griswold and Miss Pauline Collins. The merry friends of Maudie Lilian Berri (Mrs. Frank Fisher) are delighted to hear that this talented young woman contemplates a visit to her home shortly. Mrs. Fisher at present is singing in grand opera in St. Louis.

HERBERT R. CLARK.

ODGEN—Special Correspondence

ODGEN, Dec. 17.—Edwin Mayo in Puddlhead Wilson last Wednesday played to a good house at advanced prices, and put up a splendid performance. This is a whole some, clean play, and is put on in a most artistic way.

Nothing is at present billed for the coming week.

The lack of dramatic entertainment is bringing out several companies of home talent, and before long we will be besieging our bouquets to amateur stars.

More money is in circulation than has been for years, at this close of a very prosperous year, and it is causing the management of our Opera House much worry that they are not going to get much Holiday business.

Yours very truly,

R. B.

CARSON Special Correspondence.

CARSON, NEVADA, Dec. 18.—The Jessie Shirley Company concluded their week's engagement here Saturday night. They are a very good company and I think the best popular price one on the Coast. Miss Shirley did not do the business anticipated last week that they had been induced to rough, snowing or raining every night.

Gorton's Minstrels which were booked here have canceled, and the only booking known of at the present time is Richards and Pringle's Minstrels, January 15th.

The Nevada State Band, Dec. 15—Carol leave for San Jose tonight. They will have about thirty pieces.

SALT LAKE CITY Special Correspondence

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 18.—In Old Kentucky do I find myself again at the Salt Lake Theater, Dec. 11-17. Edwin Mayo in Puddl's Head Wilson drew three fair houses, 14-16.

University Dramatic Club presents The Weaker Sex at the theater, Dec. 21st.

A Stranger in a Train, which filled the first three nights of the past week at the Grand, played to three of the largest audiences that have ever been in that theater. A Stranger is one of the best attractions Manager Mulvey has ever given to patrons of his house, and the company could easily have filled an entire week.

Paul F. Nichols, Jr., late of the Alice Nielsen Opera Company, appeared in the leading role, winning great favor with his audiences.

Yon Vonson opened a three nights engagement this evening.

JOHN K. HARDY.

TACOMA Special Correspondence

TACOMA, Wash., Dec. 18.—Next Monday evening, Dec. 25, Euginie Blair, supported by a strong company, will be seen at the Tacoma Theater in A Lady of Quality. The Plots have made such a hit as genuine fun makers at the Lyceum Theater the past week that they have been induced to play here one more week, commencing Monday, Dec. 30th.

W. M. HOTT.

SAN LUIS OBISPO Special Correspondence

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Dec. 15—The very successful concert manager of San Francisco, Herbert Atherton Kidder, will play at the Stanford University Glee and Mandolin Club, Los Angeles, Miss Constance Robinson of Miss Constance Robinson of Clubs here on the 23d. He has been touring the North with notable artists of San Francisco, and promises to bring a good concert company this way in the spring. This section of the State has been long in need of entertainments of this particular kind, and we feel confident that the efforts of this congenial and enterprising manager will be heartily appreciated. We congratulate the Stanford Club in securing so able a manager as Mr. Kidder.

Special Correspondence.

ST. JOHN'S, N.B., Dec. 11—Opera House, A. O. Kidder Manager. There is a dearth of news theatrical just at present. Opera House will remain in Stylgan gowns until the 23d, except on the 19th, when the Artillery Band, assisted by local talent, will give a grand benefit concert for the fund for the New Brunswick "Absent-minded" in the Canadian Transvaal Contingent, now with General Leed Methuen on the Kimberley Relief Expedition. On Christmas Day the house will be taken by the Valentine Stock Company, who are now in their tenth successful week at Winnipeg. The Valentine people have a repertoire of over fifty high-class productions and should do well during their six weeks' stay in "Our Lady of the Tides," which title, by the way, is the invention of "your humble," and bears the written endorsement of a young English pound-a-liner named Kipling. The Mechanics' Institute building, whose boards have been trod by so many of the world's famous men in years gone past, is up for sale, and it is among the possibilities that its possession may come into the hands of the genius Humphrey Price Webber, of Boston Comedy Company fame.

Gbach Carnahan.

Winan, a very musical basso, as well as a few of the old favorites, Dot Stanley, Camella, the Pandangummy baritone, May Nealon, Dora Mervin, Marie Wood, Carlton & Royce, Hastings & Hall, and Cad Wilson.

Rita Winfield, with her eloquent violin, is nightly captivating the Chutes audiences.

Dan Malder, one of the best known theatrical men on the coast, is the popular stage manager at the Chutes.

M. B. Curtis will direct the stock company at the Orpheum, Honolulu. Mrs. Curtis will be a member of the company.

Mendel Dreyfus became homesick and cut her additional four weeks at Honolulu and arrived home on the last steamer.

Edna Aug is giving imitations in London of Anna Held and Edna May, and is steadily winning success, which is more than can be said of her work on this side of the pond.

Flora Hastings, who has made an unusual success singing at the Olympia has been this week, pleasantly remembered by Eastern admirers with two large diamonds—a little Christmas gift.

Marguerite Corielle has returned from a successful engagement at the Los Angeles Orpheum, and is enjoying San Francisco hospitality before resuming engagements in the Orpheum circuit.

Lillian Burkhardt has a new one-act play called A Deal on 'Change. It is by Edmund Day. She recently produced the little play at the Wonderland, Detroit, and the author played the opposite role.

The Peoples' Theater, Seattle, contributing to a lively bill, are Mac Russell, Louise Lister, Jessie and Alice Vernon, Mac Trescott, Lilian How, Dolly Paxton, Ben D. Nowan and Arthur St. Clair.

Lillie Western, who has been a vaudevillian for a period considerably longer than she would probably like to acknowledge, is going to take her leave of the stage just one year from Christmas coming.

L. F. Stone, the genial and bustling representative of the Honolulu Orpheum, is sending some good people to the Islands. By the last steamer went Iona Beresford, souleine, and Sid Baxter, equalitarian.

Maud Mullery plays at Los Angeles in the near future.

The Brothers Leondors, acrobats, open at the Chutes Jan. 15.

Russell and Owens, comedy acrobats, will soon be a Frisco feature.

Armstrong and O'Neil open at the Tivoli Theater, Stockton, the 25th.

Cecil Marion and Grace Anderson are the latest arrivals at Dawson City.

Lira, the transformation dancer, just completed a three weeks' engagement at Los Angeles.

Dr. De Kenneth, former manager of the Alhambra, is organizing a vaudeville road show.

Harry P. Cogil who left this city fifteen years ago for Australia and known the world over as one of the famous Cogil Bros., arrived home a few days ago with his wife and child. Harry looks prosperous.

Fanny Rice's husband-manager, Dr. Purdy, insists upon denying that Miss Rice is going to enter vaudeville. The fact is that Miss Rice is willing, but no manager has made a bid for her sufficiently large to meet her requirements, and so, therefore, the deal was off before it was ever on. Miss Rice wants $500 a week for her services in vaudeville.

LOCAL NOTES

CONCERT IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Lent, who made a host of friends during their visit to California, gave a delightful piano and violin recital at the Philharmonic Club, Washington, D. C., Wednesday, Nov. 29. Mr. and Mrs. Lent are both thorough artists, and occupy an exalted position in musical and society circles, numbering their admirers among the elite of Washington, and their concerts attract large audiences, although frequently given. A musical was also given by a large number of pupils of Mr. and Mrs. Lent in the Universalist Church during this month, violin, violon and piano numbers being skillfully rendered by over thirty of their bright students.

Mr. Lent’s little sons appeared playing their father’s compositions — The Mill, for violin, Master Rudolf Lent; Parara, for violin, Master Wilmar Lent.

MUSICIANS’ CLUB CONCERT.

An evening that was a pride to California was given in Sherman Clay Hall Thursday of last week, it being the third concert of the Musicians’ Club, the program being devoted to the works of local composers, including two string quartets for which prizes have been awarded. The numbers were: String quartet D minor [Chas. E. Pemberton], which won the silver medal, rendered by the Minetti quartet; two lovely songs by A’Locher — Exotic Perfume, and Death of the Lovers, sung by Alfred Keller, who interpreted beautifully, but was somewhat intemperate, not being in his usual fine voice, accompanied by the composer. Romance Sans Paroles for piano and viola [Giulio Minetti] — Messers Fred Maurer, Jr., and Kocher Winner; Ay Wankin’ O, a pretty Scotch song by Wallace Sabin, whose work is always commendable, sung by Mrs. C. O. Richards who also rendered To the Raindrops [W. J. McCoy] and Love Has Wings [Oscar Weill], both being compositions of delicate, refined sentiment. Song Allah is light and darkness, a very difficult and original work rendered with fine effect by Homer Henley, accompanied by Theodore Vogt, the composer. Mrs. Richards, accompanied by Mr. Maurer, rendered songs — Joy of the Morning [P. C. Allen], and two gems—Stille Thraen and To One in Paradise—by John Haraden Pratt. These two works were like gems of the purest water in a setting of gold. The interesting evening closed with the string quartet A minor [Alois F. Lejeal], for which the gold medal was awarded, rendered by the Minetti quartet. This was a scholarly work, and the composer is one of whom the Musicians’ Club and our State may be proud. A prominent musician who was present prettily expressed the impression created by the composition: “One feels as if he were walking through a garden of flowers without one thorn.”

MINETTI QUARTET CONCERT.

The Minetti Quartet gave the third of the series of six Chamber Music Concerts Friday afternoon of last week in Sherman Clay Hall, the quartet being Messers. Minetti, Ferdinand Stark, Chas. Heisn, Arthur Weiss; assisting artists — Miss Margaret Brunchez, contralto, and Hermann Genz pianist. The program was: String quartet in E flat major op. 15; Adagio non troppo, Allegro tardante Canyomett [allegretto] Andante expressio, Molto Allegro e Vivace [Mendelssohn-Baltholdy]; vocal number, Vesperger Liebe [Braths], Pastoral [Ros], Wendsung [Herman], and Carl Goldmark’s piano quintet in B flat major op. 30, four movements.

PUPILS’ CONCERT.

Tuesday evening of last week the Pacific Coast Conservatory of Music gave a pupils’ recital that spoke well for the faculty of the school under the direction of Homer Tourjée, many of the students having had only a year’s tuition. This was especially true of Mrs. Coleman’s vocal pupils, who did very creditably considering their short training, for they have laid the first stones in a good firm ground and all appeared easy on the stage for a first appearance, their numbers were Trio, When the Wind Blows [Ritter], Misses Wymouth, Mueller and Lewis; solo, Dost Know? [Rotel] Miss Alice Wymouth; When to Thy Vision, Miss Mueller; Sweet Vale of Avoca, Alfred Palmer. Mrs. Gustavis Arnold, who has had experience before the public in Europe, is taking a special course of study with Mrs. Coleman. Her voice is a mezzo-soprano of good tone and range and she sings with much grace and dramatic effect, although she was not at her best on this occasion. The first number, Marguerite, did not suit her, but she came out well in Frilling zeit [Becker]. Miss Eleanor Joseph won laurels through her piano pupils, who rendered Sostrato in A Minor [Allegro Moderato], [Hannel] with Miss Elizabeth Dewing, second accompaniment Miss Joseph. Concerto C Sharp Minor [Allegro Maestro] [Kies] Miss Lucia Thompson, second accompaniment Miss Joseph; both pupils, but especially the latter being promising. Mrs. Mae Buss, pupil of Miss Jennie Long, gave with good voice and ease rendering Telephonie Communication. Little Marguerite Cowman, taught by Mr. Tourjée, made a brave showing for such a fairy-like little tot with a violin solo, accompanied by her master. Mr. Jesse Lasey also pleased the writer with his cornet solo, The Message [Broek]. The hall was crowded and the audience most indulgent to the participants.

MUSICAL NOTES

Miss Millie Flynn, who has been such a favorite among us, and who will depart for New York soon, gave a farewell concert in Sherman Clay Hall last Tuesday evening. Mr. Marquard, Clarence Wendell, Mr. Mills, Mr. Harry Brown and Dr. H. J. Stew- art participated. The concert will be reviewed next week, as it occurred too late to do justice to the occasion. The other day I dropped in to see Alyce Gates and found her busy at work among her pupils, one of whom possessed a very lovely contralto voice of which Miss Gates is justly proud. There is no studio in San Francisco where more earnest work is done with better results, for Miss Gates throws her life and soul into her profession, and her success is well merited.

Mr. Alfred Keller finds his time very fully occupied at present, for besides his city work, he has formed classes in Stockton, Santa Rosa and Petaluma that occupy three days of the week.

Little Lillian Walther, vocalist, who appeared with much success in Los Angeles, and was also heard in San Francisco recently, has accepted an engagement in Victoria and Vancouver, B. C. Miss Forrest accompanies her, and they will appear in duets and solos, returning in two months, when Mr. Bernard Walter will join them in a trip to Honolulu to produce a musical sketch.

—Mary Frances Francis.

FORTY DEGREES BELOW LIQUID AIR

He had lived two years at Klondike after forcing Chilkoot Pass; he had seen the timid merc’ry leave the bottom of the glass; and, finally, he had turned his hand to mowing his grass.

He had seen the whisky of the North served frozen on a rag; he had gazed upon that eerie scene, a lawson ice-man’s; and had spent eight months each winter in a steel-welted forklift bag.

He had had himself with snowballs in the cool, fresh Arctic air; he had set him down to banquets of cold storage vodka here, the while he wet his bonnets with an icicle, up there.

But all the wealth of cold and gloom, of misery and snow, was but, unto the frigidness he was to undergo— For he stacked his nuggets on a clean and unsuggestive bed.

A Closer Look at Mary Van Buren

*Time was when I considered Mary Van Buren a most unusual person. That I never said it to the extent that I thought it, was because she kept just far enough away from the shine of the footlights to escape singing. Since her performance in "The Sporting Duchess," I have sat right hard upon the stool of repentance and yearned for the confessional. Now that I have said so, I feel emancipated and respectable and fit to discuss the subject.

Indeed she is quite unusual. In a few minutes' chat she started so many thoughts for me that I'm going down by and by to sit on the pasture bars in the afterglow to bring them to a finish.

A close look individualizes her sharply. She carries the charm of pensiveness without sadness, reserve without reserve, and above all the wonderful charm of work without strain. Your tired woman is almost as great a bore as your idle one. The mouth, very willful, says that if ever she were perfectly miserable, she would be quite as perfectly proud. The nose and eyes are merry as the day is long—the true comedian's tip the one and flashes variously from the other. If she be free one day to choose a Shakespearian character, let it be Katherine and the naming of her will be no easy matter.

She has a most musical voice but a manner of using it not quite her own—early adopted I fancy, and perhaps rather hazily adhered to. A controlling personal bent such as hers, should make that voice a thing as individual as the soul. The drama has spread so prodigiously, such a deal more than it has developed, that when one finds a great promise the least interference with its fulfillment is not to be overlooked.

"That is a beautiful view, is it not," she said as we passed the corridor windows looking east. So much that is hideous lay between us and the view that I had to change the focus completely to get at the Whistler etching she was seeing. That kind of rebuke is the sweetest sort of criticism. She owes me one less now and I am made to feel that where she is, very little happiness will go to waste.

And speaking of criticism brings me to her manner of using it. Not only does she wear her own cap but anybody's else that will fit, reading all good criticism carefully for her own improvement. Such an attitude is the sum and all the graces. The woman who finds the critic's words a cause for anger must have a pretty low standard to think that she fills it.

"Opposition to my going on the stage! Indeed, yes—churlishly from my mother. I must have been an easy-going idleness and a never ending series of midnight suppers, gleaned chiefly from the newspapers and the tongues of those who talk but do not think. Now that she knows the truth, she has become reconciled."

That was a hard picture for the mind's eye, though—especially the much worth keeping de-parted with the digestion.

Miss Van Buren reflects a training that begins with the Litanies and reaches through regular spring house cleaning to a proper respect for calling cards and superluous notes. In the thoughtful world of the stage where things are so often what they are not such a foundation is no idle possession.

A bit of her school history would make fine material for opera-bouffe. "I had planned," she said, "to go to Vassar, but tales of the young women there, their advanced ideas and independent ways, reached the hearth and I was sent instead to a college in Albany. Very well, I said, I shall go but my most earnest endeavor shall be to be expelled just as soon as possible."

She lived up to her threat for the very first day she made herself acquainted with all the rules merely to break them, and the first week got more bad marks than any girl in the history of the school—except one. (That girl's name should be published.)

However, she was not expelled and in time became devoted to the place.

"How have you made such strides in so short a time?" I asked, thinking of The Sporting Duchess.

"There is something in opportun-ity," she answered. "But more in be-ing ready for it," thought I.

Apropos of small parts and their manner of handling she said, "You can't carry your mistress' cloak and be absurd to try.

Now that is the wisdom of Solomon, and not to be pursued by a coarse in-tellect with its refined applications. To play big comedy parts is the hope before her and let me be the prophet who says the goal is near—very near. In Cumber-land '61, she is to be a maid servant of the cockney order, and should do it well for she has studied their peculiarities at first hand in London, and has the power, if she but use it, to adjust her expression to her costume, with telling effect.

She will not be looked at from the standpoint of the cold observer, but takes your good-will at a glance without so much as 'by your leave,' yet with a certain courtesy and dignity that shut your eyes to the truth and make you realize that an emphasis of her presence could never be a very great grief.

CHARLOTTE THOMPSON."

Three Performances

The man from Japan Company which went out last week under the management of W. H. Wheeler, gave three performances, Martinez, Crockett and Davissville, and then disbanded. The mother of one of the members of the cast sent tickets to the stranded actors who are now in town.

Sol Smith Russell Breaks Down

In the middle of the first act of The Hon. John Grigsby at the Grand Opera House in Chicago Monday evening, Sol Smith Russell came down to the footlights and began addressing the audience. The latter, unfamiliar with the play, thought the actor was speaking words written by the playwright, and not till Mr. Russell concluded with the words: "I shall therefore retire to my hotel on the advice of my physician," did his hearers comprehend he was dismissing them. Russell played in St. Louis a week ago last Saturday, but laid off last week and went to his home in Minneapolis. His trouble is mental paralysis. He came to Chicago in the morning and played in the evening against the will of his wife. When he found his memory slipping away in the first act, he pulled himself together and made his address to the audience. Manager Haunlin released him from his engagement.

Death of Oscar Elison

A cablegram was received in Salt Lake Nov. 30, conveying the information that Oscar Elison, professionally known as 'Dante,' had been shot dead in Australia. No further particulars have been received, but it is generally thought that he met death in performing the Hermann bullet-catching trick. Mr. Elison was enjoying the most successful tour of his brief career when the tragedy overtook him. He had been in the Antipodes for a year and a half, and was greeted by crowded houses wherever he appeared. In the larger cities of Australia and New Zealand he played as many as one hundred engagements with big patronage.

Mr. Elison was born in Salt Lake City a little over 38 years ago, and at early age showed marked ability as a prestidigitator. He was first brought prominently before the public by exposing the tricks of several artists who were performing in Salt Lake. After this he gave a number of amateur entertainments and met with such flattering success that he entered the professional ranks. A successful tour of the United States and Cuba was then made. June 2, 1898, "Dante" started on a four years tour of the world under the management of M. B. Curtis. He remained in Australia and New Zealand until the time of his death. Elison was considered by many to have been the greatest prestidigitator the country has ever seen. Particulars of his death will not reach this country until the arrival of the next steamer from Australia January 13.
Wonderful Mechanism

There is a decidedly interesting mechanical side to the life-motion picture exhibition of the Jeffries-Starkey championship fight now being shown over the country. Stage-wonders are so common in these days that the fact of our living in an era of scientific miracles almost passes without notice or comment. In making the illumination arrangements for the contest, there were provided 400 specially built arc lights. Reflectors were then placed over them, and so arranged that a correct lighting could only be had from a position occupied by four cameras. In all there was a total candle power of 300,000. This means, it is said, light enough to illuminate a city of 500,000 inhabitants, and yet it was all concentrated below reflectors that covered only 24 feet.

Eleven electricians were placed directly over the reflectors and thus were enabled to control the light of their cameras. Behind these cameras were twelve skilled operators. As a result there were seven and one-quarter miles of film from this film 216,000 distinct pictures were developed. The films are 2 by 2½ inches, the largest ever made in the history of motion photography. It will be remembered that up to this time there had never been an attempt to obtain moving pictures except by sunlight, and that obtaining them by artificial light was largely in the nature of an experiment, consequently the surprise was greater when it was discovered that they were superior to any that had been obtained in the light of day. This has undoubtedly opened up a new field in the moving picture world and no doubt will result in some very novel and curious experiments in the way of moving photography.

Nance O'Neill's Tour

Nance O'Neill's tour of the Orient, written by Jas. H. Love, to the Review will open with the Australian engagement in Sydney, Feb. 26, playing twenty-two weeks in that city and Melbourne, returning to San Francisco and opening at the Columbia Sept. 10th for four weeks, when McKee Rankin will introduce Miss O'Neill to our theater-goers as Lady Macbeth. Then the company goes to New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago, for the balance of the season, which has already been booked. Mr. Love sails on the 27th for Australia.

Hard Luck!

Dick Covey, who was here last year ahead of the Henschel's, and is now in town in the interests of De Pachman, is one of the youngest advance men in the business and one of the most popular. He is telling a good story on him around the California. Dick, since his advent into town, has had exceptional luck with the slot machine. It culminated last Saturday with a royal flush turning up, good for a bottle of Pommery. "Just the thing," he said, for a good time a little later, and with it will be a little bird. But, alas! the floor was slippery and down went bottle and the pleasant hopes planned but a moment before. If a big, cold pot and a small bird figured together that night, the liquid did not depend upon the turn of the slot machine.

Great Memorising

MAUD Lillian Berri, the California primo donna soprano of the Castle Square Opera Company, is credited with a rare accomplishment. She was singing in New York a couple of weeks ago and was cast for the role of Lucia in Lucia di Lammermore, but was not advised of the fact that she would be expected to alternate with Miss Golden until the Thursday preceding the opening performance. In that brief time she memorized the entire score, lines and "business" of the part, in which there are something like 3,800 musical notes and 3,000 words of dialogue. Monday, Miss Golden was taken suddenly ill and Miss Berri was called upon to sing the role a day earlier than she had expected. Her success was pronounced, and the New York papers contained flattering accounts of her work next day.

Rose Adler's Success.

LAST Monday night at the Opera Comique in Paris, in the title role of Delibes, Lakme, Rose Adler, known as Mlle. Redla, the San Francisco singer, achieved marked success. She studied in San Francisco with Mme. Fabbrini, and in Paris with Mme. Colonne. In person Mlle. Redla is a petite brunette, with a mobile, expressive face, and a graceful figure, exceedingly light in all its movements. She is a proficient French scholar, speaking with so perfect an accent that she has difficulty in persuading Parisians that she is not native-born. Her voice is described as a lyric soprano of the colorature type, excelling in keys and trills. She will appear in the title role of Mignon some time during this season.
Players Benefit Reaps a Shower of Ducats

The immense attendance at the players' benefit fund at the Orpheum Thursday of last week, was a delightful shower of reciprocal feeling on the part of the public that has many and many a time had its pet charity enriched through the willingness of managers and actors to contribute their playhouses and their talents free of charge. The performance netted close to $3,000, and was as great an artistic success as it was a financial one. Ten minutes after one of the curtain went up and it was after five when it went down on the last act of a great program.

The program opened with the first act of Mother Earth by the Alcazar Company, followed by Hamilton Hill, the baritone, with songs and encores. Major Mite followed the popular singer, and gave his clever imitations of Cornille, and sang several coon songs in his inimitable manner, besides doing some excellent cake walking, and making one of the big hits of the afternoon.

Frederick Warde and Minnie Tittell Brune gave the balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet. T. Daniel Frawley, Harrington Reynolds, H. S. Duffield and Gladys Weller acted Richard Harding Davis' little story, The Littlest Girl, with beautiful feeling. The Grand Opera House Company sang the Fair scene from the Chimes of Normandy, much to the pleasure of the audience. Then followed scintillations of wit and humor and song by George Fuller Golden, Ferris Hartman, Cornille D'Arrville the excellent tumbling of the Mohrings Brothers and Bonomore's Arabs. Then there were the Eccentric Comedy Trio and the Tennis Trio to bring forth loud applause and approval.

Between acts, Melville Marx, of the Columbia, brought out and introduced Frederick Warde, who explained the purpose of the benefit, saying that he spoke sincerely when he said that in a city of the civilized world are actors received with more cordially, and, if they merit it, with more encouragement and reward than in San Francisco. And the audience must indeed be happy to think that the applause and laughter given during the afternoon would re-echo as music in the ears of some poor actor benefited by the great assembly present.

And he spoke truly, for a more worthy occasion never presented itself, and no fund will ever be handled with more beneficent result than will attend the distribution of this charity fund.

A number of charming young actresses, Nellie Schiller, Georgia Cooper, Elsie Dare, Reta Winfield, Baby Ruth and Hazel Lyons sold programs at prices from twenty-five cents to five dollars and so persuasively successful were they that they turned in about $500.

The program committee in charge was S. H. Friedlander, John Morrisey, Mark Thall and Harry Morosco, with Phil Hastings, Secretary.

Umbrella Lost

Manager Mott of the New Alhambra has the latest umbrella joke that has been recorded to date. But he doesn't think it is much of a joke.

Friday morning he was out at the Central police station to draw down some bail money that had been deposited there the week before to get one of the New Alhambra bill posters out of trouble. Manager Mott had a new silk umbrella with him and as he went to sign the receipt for the money, he deposited the umbrella in a corner and turned around to complete his business at the desk. This done, he folded the receipt, put it in his pocket and turned to get the umbrella. It was gone and a vigorous search for an hour failed to show any trace of the missing article.

"To have an umbrella stolen right in a jail office the moment your back is turned is a pretty hard deal," says Manager Mott.

Off for Eureka

E. J. Blunkall and Walter Lindsay, and the Plater of Paris, Company were in town a few days this week, en route to Eureka where they play Christmas week. They played at Salinas, Watsonville, Hollister and Livermore to good business and much hilarity, the show proving a great laugh producer. Later on they play at Sacramento, San Jose and then South to San Diego.

Many a Slip

The burning of the old Bush Street Theater came as a sad blow to T. Daniel Frawley and Frank Murray, for they had just about completed a lease of the place and hoped to make it the home of the Frawleys, playing six or eight months in the year there, booking first-class attractions the rest of the year.

WEEK COMMENCING

Sunday Night, December 24th, CUMBERLAND '61

Extra Matinee, Monday, Christmas Day

IN PREPARATION—WITH FLYING COLORS.
T. Daniel Prawley is one of the most commendable features in Pacific Coast theatricals. He carries about the largest stock company in America and on occasions, as next week, puts on such big productions as to engage all the unemployed actors in town.

T. DANIEL PRAWLEY

Harry Cogill, who was well-known here years ago as an entertaining minstrel, with his brother, is back here again on a visit. He is on easy street now and enjoying his short visit here

FRANK C. THOMPSON has been engaged to rehearse the Electric in Company.

THE Electrician, which will tour the Coast with a first-class company, will be managed by E. H. Craig.

We have received a copy of the annual report of the Actor's Fund of America. S. H. Friedlander is the San Francisco correspondent of the society.

De Pachmann's Recital

Vladimir De Pachmann, the famous Russian pianist's first recital filled the California Theater on Tuesday afternoon, the warmth and appreciation of his audience being a just tribute to his greatness. We are accustomed to look for a certain amount of personal magnetism in a musician, but Mr. Pachmann possesses no such aid in his work, his hearers being won through his art alone and perhaps we admire him most when listening with closed eyes to his music, shutting out certain peculiarieties of manner. He has strong individuality and a face that bespeaks character, is courteous and indulgent to his audience, and in the midst of most difficult work he will turn to his hearers with a nod and a pleasant smile of good-fellowship as if to say, "How do you like that? We are friends, you and I." His technic is superb, crisp and brilliant, and he interprets poetically, with exquisite shading. He does not stir the soul to the depths of passionate emotion, but if he cannot make the tears start he creates a feeling of perfect rest, blended with bittersweet exuberance and while you listen you are carried into an atmosphere of sunshine and peace. He began with a Sonata [von Weber] and I arrived in time to hear the beautiful andante movement. The Minuet and Scherzo was played with such charm that I pictured somehow a band of merry children, dancing in the sunlight and throwing blossoms at another, for he brings light and color to the mind. Schumann's Warum was a poetic gem, his touch caressing and the delicate pianissimo passages of feathery lightness. Griffin, In der Nacht, Vogel's Prophet, Jagdlied, Abschied [Schumann] followed and he created a sensation in Mendelssohn's Ronde Capricciosa op. 14, playing with such delightful freedom that he was recalled four times to bow his thanks, giving as an encore a Chopin number. Mr. Pachmann is celebrated for Chopin and he rendered three preludes and three Etudes, mastering the technical difficulties with wonderful ease and displaying great taste, rendering also Mazurka and Valse Brilliante in A flat, the program closing with third Scherzo op. 39, C sharp Minor [Capricciosa] among a storm of applause. Among many musicians who were present were Theodore Vogt, Henry Heyman, Hoth Wimsler and Henry Holmes.

Mary Frances Francis.

Although there will be no Sunday night performance of The Christian, the box office of the theater will be open Sunday morning from 10 to 12, in order to accommodate the demand for seats.

Chimney Fadden will continue New Year's week at the Alcazar.

Chieflly Music and Drama

Do you like my heading? No! Never mind you will grow to it. I had to. It is no choice of mine. It was forced upon me. The local writer first to hail me in the critical world, so characterized my writings—in the blackest of black headlines too. It was so thoughtful of him. Let me grasp the outstretched hand. Shake! Thank you, kind Sir. I see fit to accept your judgment and try to struggle up to it.

For in his raving, by mistake, A solemn truth the madman spoke.

Ye gods and little fishes, no! Criticism is never paid for. Stuff that is paid for is not criticism.

Yes, indeed, the hat law holds good to the end of the play. If the woman in front of you puts hers on in the middle of the last act, you would be perfectly justified in lifting it off. No, not well bred—justified. If brought to court, I will undertake your defense. No fee. Contributions. The benefit would be general.

Now that the Symphony Concerts are a thing assured, let us start classes to teach the enthusiast with an undiscovered brain, a thing he much doth need to know—when not to applaud! I hear Mr. Holmes calling "Ansel!' with a Lesh-like lurchness.

Let it be generally understood that the box-office receipts support the theaters. They have no other known revenue. Now the pass system lessens the revenue. By the way, what have you done to deserve a pass?

Indeed, you are quite mistaken. You cannot tell an actor. He is a gentleman and not conspicuous. He does not spend his leisure time in front of the theater any more than a lawyer does his in front of his office. Of course there are actors and would-be.

Several months ago I said practically the following. However, if the deaf and helpless are to be made to hear, one must read, so here goes. No one who makes theater-going a habit can fail to note the awful epidemic of voice affectionation that is sweeping over the dramatic land. Scarcely a theater but offers the spectacle of at least one young woman working herself into the idle ranks of the profession by the cultivation of certain false methods of delivery. The affliction generally takes the form of tricks of speech gathered from some reigning star and given to a suffering public in various degrees of perversion. Nor are the men far behind in the race for dialect supremacy. In fact, I think they are winners. So occupied are these people with the absorbing business of making their dialogue unintelligible to everything lack of the fourth row, that they start out with one pitch at 8:15 and never alter it until 11, delivering speeches with many shades of sentiment as though the language of a cook-book were being steered into the ears of a multitude of deaf note-takers. A season of distinct, clean utterance would be a delightful relaxation after the tension of so much concentrated trying to hear what has not been said. Too much toleration is fatal, and given lips, tongue, teeth, palate and disposition in normal condition, the "inauditable genius" is unpardonable.

The property man and the scenic artist—will they one day be merciful to man? Will it one day dimly dawn upon the managerial mind, that each in his separate sphere should have seen and known intimately the best that art and culture can supply and have an observation ever on the hunt for truth and its highest expression? The drawing-room of the noble four hundred is not furnished by Noonan nor by the gifts of kind friends with inexorable taste, who know naught of each other's intentions. Neither is it touched off with soiled tidies and expensive lamp shades. The man who covers a decent mahogany with a cotton tapestry should be knotted in the fringe thereof and quietly choked. Yellow, red and blue, orange, green and purple should not be hidden to the same "At Home." Invariably they fight and a mix-up would mean mud. Photographs do not litter the mantle-shelves of the cultured. Bachelor dens do not revel in cheap oak side-boards and flashy chronos—and so on, ad infinitum. What's that, Mr. Manager, the great public furnishes so home, knows no better and is happy? The great public feeds at home on underrun bread and fried chops at the stubby hands of bad cooks. Hence are there cooking-schools. Meanwhile there are little liver pills and charcoal biscuit to keep the race from dying. The stage is the school wherein the taste of the public should be educated. Meanwhile, where are the little pills and biscuit to reach the soul? While the scenic artist and property man are what they are [there are exceptions] let the following golden texts be posted conspicuously where he who works may read:

'Tis well to have your hands behind you when you are about to paint. Take advantage of the hindrance to exercise some other talent. Observation for instance. Water does not run up hill.

Stone walls do not wave in the wind. There are no purple cows. Carrots do not grow on vines. You are no Whistler, so come down to nature. It will not "creep up" to you.

The sunlight of God comes from above. It does not buzz nor sputter out. Neither doth the Lord swear at his handiwork.

A moon is not indispensable to night. When it happens, it does not leap to the mountain tops in three-inch jerks.

Garden chairs are best when not upholstered.

Each wine has its glass and champagne corks are not pulled.

"The woman tempted me and I did eat," was not spoken of a varnished apple.

An Observer—No, leading women were not all born to lead, so do not copy them in all things. No lady of quality tucks her handkerchief under her bodice, it is a piece of crass vulgarity. The handkerchief is a concession to nature best kept out of sight.

Just of Passing Interest

The opera part of comic opera. Come back. Come back! The circus procession. Ha, ha! Theingenue who is the leading woman, who imitates the star, who imitates Ada Rehan, who was and is ever shall be great because she imitates no one in all the world. Hurry on, please.

The comic specialty: "There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God." What shall take its place? "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want."

The critic who taketh a pose—and such a pose! One or more of him is in almost every big city to-day, following a pace set by God knows whom. A few wags of the tongue, a few slings of the quill, he dismisses, airy, the knowledge of a lifetime and the earnest labors of weeks. The public is amused and finds him a devilish clever fellow. Watch him saunter along, nodding superciliously to God as he passes—a courteous hint—whatever is agreeable to thee, O Universe, of which I am part, I see must tolerate but do not expect me to approve too thoroughly. Has he a soul? How should I know? The carpenter who has a good plank does not plane it all away into shavings, which however graceful and curvy and cute is it, and is really very high by the pound and build not houses. Where do you think he is going? Address all answers to the Ravings editor.

Of a Personal Nature

T. Daniel Frawley has secured The Heart of Maryland. For lack of space I cannot mention the other hearts.

Upton Goodgueser stayed fully ten minutes at the play last night before retiring to criticise it. Why this loitering?

Camille D’Arville is in Kansas City; Ogden is in Utah—no, no, in San Francisco and in tears. Then there are others with whole population who think of her and continually do cry—First Thessalonians 3:11.

Mary Van Buren prefers American Beauties. Not at all. Don’t mention it. I but guide thee to right-doing.

Mrs. Highminder will not go to see Zaza. She cannot afford it.

Mr. Friedlander has three nickels in his new office waiting for house-pains. He was not able to publish this.

Ferris Hartman says his Boopie jokes are new. "Thou shalt not lie. Thou shalt not steal." There is nothing said about borrowing.

Meditation

The birth year of the Dramatic Review, 1890. The sum of the digits is twenty-seven—three nines. They rhyme with dine and wine. Let us ever toast the year in champagne of the best!

Ferris Hartman Rehearsing the Christmas Spectacle

Four years ago I rode in the car opposite a man absorbed in the doings and sayings of a noisy Hibernian. When the fellow was set down at his corner, I heard the listener exclaim, "By Jiminy, I’d give a week’s salary and a dead straight tip on the races to get onto that fellow’s brogue and style. He’s a peach!"

Yes, that is exactly what he said, and if you are quoting a man, why drown his voice by ringing the changes on English rhetoric?

It was Ferris Hartman, and may he ever keep up the good work of observation. Just such little character studies are the salvation of the low comedian, before whom yawns always the pit of everlasting sameness. A good joke is funny today, tomorrow and through the week perhaps, but a season of it and one grows near to gaping protracted. Just so with the low comedian—because one applauds a certain trick of tongue and gait, it does not go to say that an equal enthusiasm could not be got up for something else.

Ferris Hartman. He has not always followed the county road, ‘tis said, but perhaps he has had a Mazeppa of a horse to ride. Such are not so easily held in check as the trampid nags. So you with the nag nature, think a bit and talk less.

No comic opera singer will ever be driven sordidly to build his life upon rows. The characters he plays do not caution him to hoard. They take so hand in the real business of life, they have no visible means of support save a faith that God will provide, their morality takes the unique stand that if you are too poor to pay for bread you are about to order at the tavern, why not call for champagne and birds and hang the expense, and they would have only to turn upon the heel to become King and crack a whip? "Hi, there! Fetch me up another barrel of twenties. Kick the head out of it. There boys, help yourselves. Not at all—I don’t mention it." That sort of things go on from 10 to 2, rehearsal and from 8 to 11, performance. With time to eat and time to sleep, this is all of life; so what would you? Providence and an eye to the future! Go back—and whatever you do, don’t preach. No man can to publish this for long, nowadays without making a clearing, and the one who stays to listen, has already been saved. Preach not to the righteous. Let the horse neigh, and the pig squeal, and the bird sing and the happy laughter, and let the comic opera singer get what joy he may in his hour of life. It is not half what he gives.

I wandered in to the rehearsal about noon. Rat-tat-tat. "Ready," and the leader lifted his baton. The fiddle bows rose and the wind instruments dropped their sandwiches and pucked—alld but one over-hungy fellow who took an extra bite and blew it through his flute. Confusion and squeaks! Dip up a couple of spoonfuls of wisdom with your soup to-night, old man, and don’t do it again. Of course, I liked it, but you were not there to amuse me, but to play for the Christmas spectacle, which is Ferris Hartman.

Let it not be understood as lightly as it is said, for so little rest does he have in the three hours, that twice I heard him plead earnestly for "just the chorus" as an encore. The plea was granted, for Mr. Lask is no task master.

To be sure, there are ballets and tableaux, and hunters and Japs, and transformations and girls with golden goblets and pitchers such as were carried but not filled with tears. They are other stories, telling on other pages and I have developed a fondness for the single figure.

"Talk about showeling coal!" called Ferris across the emptiness to the echoes beyond, "it is not a circumstance to my job."

And it was not. He knew everybody’s else songs as well as his own and ever lent a hand to help the helplessness. He could but stand still when he sings, but he may not—the public will have him jig and keep moving till the breath in him is well nigh clean gone.

"But I like to be busy," he said, "it keeps me out of mischief, and mischief is very expensive.

We comedians were set upon earth to make the world laugh and we must keep on making it laugh till it is all up with us. Yes, I have pages and pages of stuff to learn, but it’s all right so long as the machinery doesn’t wear out.

Look at poor Sol Smith Russell—softening of the brain—and when he stepped to the footlights to tell the audience he couldn’t go on, they laughed at him. Thought it was in the play. God help him, poor fellow. Then they got up and walked out and next night went to see somebody else. Soon he’ll be ashes and dry bones and a name—perhaps not even a name.

And the comedian who has paid a big half of his life for a ‘cap and bells,’ that he may keep the Tivoli patrons in a roar, had a look on his face so sad, that I felt a queer clutch at the heart and a tear in the eye near to falling.

I turned away, thinking I had done no great thing when I had read a heart of the first class under his plaid coat.

This charming little actress has just returned to the Alcazar, after two road triumphs, one with Stockwell’s Midnight Bell Company and the other with Harry Corson Clarke, having made a particularly strong impression as Clissy in What Happened to Jones. She numbers among theater goers of this Coast a host of friends and is particularly a favorite with our San Francisco audiences.

Another Success

Lovell Craib, who is expected home on a visit in May, is another California girl who brings with her the prestige of Eastern successes. She made her debut about two years ago with a traveling stock company in San Diego. After a short engagement in the southern part of the State she left for the East, where her advancement has since been steady. For the last season she has been a valuable member of the Broadhurst forces.

Advance Agent Moxon of the Murray and Mack Company carries the greatest variety of paper of any man on the road. He has forty-eight different kinds of lithographs and promises to bill Finigan’s Ball better than anything that has yet appeared at the New Alhambra.

ANNOUNCEMENT

With this issue of the Dramatic Review, I retire from the editorship. This step is made necessary by urgent business outside the journalistic field, but it is none the less regrettable, I wish to thank the local managers and members of the profession who have given me much aid in the editorial conduct of the paper. The Review is now firmly established; it is in capable hands, and from time to time it will convince the most skeptical that there is more than room for a live, up-to-date theatrical paper. The Review is preparing to increase its usefulness by putting in a greatly enlarged printing and publishing plant, and I predict a better paper with the improvement soon to come. Thanking the Review readers again, I remain, yours sincerely, WILLIAM D. WASON.

Reports from Honolulu bring the pleasing intelligence that the Dramatic Review has made an unprecedented hit in the Islands and that it sells three to one of any theatrical paper sold there.

It is said that one of the purposes of Landers Stevens' trip East was to look over theaters and arrange for a new place of amusement in Oakland. Report says that the new edifice will be on Broadway, near Fifteenth Street, a three-story building, fitted up in gorgeous style. With this and the new Morocco Theater practically decided upon, it would seem that Oakland would have enough play houses to go around.

There has been much favorable comment on the strong character of the entertainment during the last week at the various theaters of the city. All the shows were exceptionally good.

This local managers are delighted with the big business of the holidays. All regular as well as special performances have been crowded. We are showing ourselves as one of the few big show cities in the United States.

Frankly Fylse is writing a series of articles on the present stage and stage life for the Ladies' Home Journal. For dramatic beginners there could be nothing better. All the stage details are given by Mr. Fylse in a most entertaining way.

The Paris theaters have decided to do away with the obnoxious band of hired claqueurs that have been a feature of Parisian theater life for years. It is the most commendable step yet to be recorded to the credit of French dramatic art.

Mme. Rhea, it has just been discovered, left after her death, sixteen acres of land in Seattle and now this property is coming into heirs. Mme. Rhea, who was in private life Nellie Hortensia Loret, was always a thrifty soul and generally considered a good business woman and it is strange that this property should have remained so long undiscovered.

From the old world comes tidings of a great change in things theatrical—the revolt of the followers of the drama is at hand. Paris is weary of r układ dramas and libidinous farces. She is returning to the ballet, and there are signs of a great revival in that city such as the world has not known. In Italy it is already the rage, and one of the most recent operas from which so much is expected, is to have for its principal feature a ballet that will last nearly an hour. London is taking up the new idea most vigorously, and will set aside its problem plays and music-hall fantasies. Dancing is to be the one engrossing topic.

Vivacious little Kitty Beck, with Murray and Mack, who appear at the New Alhambra tomorrow night in Fifinna's Ball, is Mrs. Mack in ordinary life, off the stage. It seems but natural that Ollie Mack, so bright and witty himself, should have as a running mate for life such a charming little partner. It is a happy combination.

Naughty Anthony Succeeds

In Washington, Monday night, David Belasco scored a success in an entirely new line of work as a good playwright, coming out as a producer of comedy instead of a maker of highly dramatic plays. Naughty Anthony, the name of his new production, is far removed in style and theme from The Heart of Maryland and Zaza. Its first presentation was given at the Columbiaan Theater Christmas night, and at its close the audience, which filled the house, gave the playwright an ovation, while at the end of the second act it insisted on a speech from Belasco.

The play is a straightforward comedy, and though the title might imply otherwise, there is nothing of either suavities or grandeur about it. It depends for its drawing powers on the cleverness of its lines and the amusing situation developed. The cast was selected by Belasco, who is himself, and includes Blanche Bates, W. L. Lemosyne, Frank Worthing and other well-known actors.

Shakespeare's Advice

Shakespeare's advice to girls about the selection of a husband is the best in print, without excepting poor Richard and Hannah More. "Dear Kate, take a fellow of plain condition, for he, perforce, must do the right, because he hath not the gift to woo in other places; for these fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhyme themselves into ladies' favor, they do always reason themselves out again. What, a speaker is but a prater; a rhyme is but a ballad. A good leg will fall; a straight back will stoop; a black beard will turn white; a curled pate will grow bald, a black gown will wax yellow, a good heart, Kate, is the sun and moon, or rather the sun and not the moon, for it shines bright and never changes, but keeps its course truly.""}

Prosperous Theaters

Manager Friedlander of the California seems to have exceeded his own sanguine expectations in opening this house as a permanent. Good business judgment and good productions will keep any theater filled in San Francisco. The Alhambra is the most recently opened theater, and it also seems to be on the road to prosperity and permanency. There are rumors of other new theaters, but it is really doubtful if they could be made to pay "after the newness wore off."

The Black Tulip has failed at the Haymarket and Barrie's new comedy not being ready as a stop-gap for the season, an old comedy will be substituted.

Joe Jefferson, the Minstrel

Mr. Joseph Jefferson, the third and present bearer of that honored name, was unquestionably the youngest actor who ever made his mark with a piece of burnt cork. The story of his first appearance is told by Mr. William Winter in his volume entitled "The Jeffersons." Coming from a family of actors, the boy, as was natural, was reared amid theatrical surroundings, and when only four years of age—in 1833—he was brought upon the stage by Thomas D. Rice himself on a benefit occasion at the Washington Theater. The little Joe, blackened and arrayed precisely like his senior, was carried onto the stage in a bag upon the shoulders of the shuffling Ethiopian, and emerged from it with the appropriate couplet: "Ladies and gentlemen, I'll have you to know I've got a little darky here to jump Jim Crow."

Mrs. John Drew, who was present, says that the boy instantly assumed the exact attitude of Jim Crow Rice, and sang and danced in imitation of his more celebrated companion, a perfect miniature likeness of that long, ungainly, grotesque and exceedingly droll comedian.

Doing Well

Sydne Flatty of the Cheerful Ear Company writes from Eugene City as follows: "We have been doing an immense business ever since we struck the northern country and have given satisfaction everywhere. You would be surprised to see how the news gets ahead of us. Every place we go they tell us they have heard it was a good show. We play Portland the week of the 14th and then north to British Columbia, and also take in Astoria. Max Stienne and wife and the De Camps have been making quite a hit with their specialties, which are really clever."

Boston Lyric Opera Company

The Boston Lyric Company returns from Honolulu Jan. 2, and opens the 8th for a week's run at the Mac donough, Oakland. It is said that a prominent theater man is negotiating for the company to play a strong engagement here in San Francisco.

Through the courtesy of Managers Ellinghouse and Mott, of the New Alhambra 'Theater, and Murray and Mack, of Fifinna's Ball, a special professional matinee will be given at the New Alhambra next Thursday afternoon, to which all theatrical people are extended the courtesy of the house.

Go Bid the Minstrels Play.—Shakespeare.

Jas. C. Williams, years ago

noble stage of the Grand Opera House (now Missouri) with scenery painted by Vogenlin, he was seen as Edmund Dante in Monte Cristo. The animated finished portraiture by Fechter captured the town. In further recognition of his genius after closing at the Grand, Fechter went to the California to play the dual role in The Corson Brothers, specially mounted under supervision of Marion Hill. Fechter would shoulder and shrug his shoulders if reference were made to his coming to California this season.

But much of the above wonderers come from the Alhambra. In the main the history of the house as to success is associated with minstrelsy and burlesque. Billy Emerson performed there, but a good deal of his time after leaving Washington Street was put in the place across the street once run by John Deery as a billiard hall. Converted into a little theater it was opened as Gray's Opera House, then it was known as Studio's Opera House, afterwards as Maguire's—now the scene of the Builders Exchange. In that small house the Holycomy Comedy Company from Chicago, with Jas. O'Neill in the lead first appeared. There also Augustin Daly's company, failing with London Assurance at Plant's Hall, removed, hoping against hope change of base would bring success. In the face of the better comedy work of Barrett and McCullough Company, Mr. Daly's first visit to California was disastrous. The report went the venture cost Diff, manager of the then Olympic Theater and father-in-law of Daly a pretty penny. The history of the Alhambra was one of many vicissitudes, and excepting in its early career, not of steady profit. This was the days of Billy Swatman, Billy Manning, Kelly & Lean, Billy Rice, McAndrews, in fact, all the first-class old-timers have done their "turns" on its stage. In the sense of a local fixture, who will have the courage to "go bid the minstrel play"? The vaudeville stage has absorbed the talent and minstrelsy for the nonce is scattered. The prospect of its soon mobilizing looks indeed remote.

Scott Sutton ("Sit Toby!")

The Glories of the Old Alhambra

Theater (Bush Street) Recalled

Joe Murphy, when a young man

Steady prosperous times at the Alhambra belonged to the Minstrels. The late fire in the old play-house known by divers names at different periods, but opened in 1855 as The Alhambra, inspires authorities to oracle. How the public is informed! Billy Emerson, according to one of these authorities, and the fiction is slavishly repeated by others, was brought out by W. H. Smith. This is done for what? Emerson did not figure at the opening of the Alhambra nor did W. H. Smith bring Emerson out at all. When he did perform there the house was known as Maguire's Theater, but that was long after The Alhambra opened. Under the management of W. H. Smith & Co. (Smith, Heath and Badger), with George H. Coes stage manager and Sam Wetherill, Treasurer, for a while minstrelsy held high revery to great profit at the Alhambra. The company was a strong one. Johnny Mack was the bright particular star. He was certainly in the very first rank as a minstrel, and besides had noteworthy ability for writing skits, hitting on current topics. When Laurence Barrett was playing his first star engagement in San Francisco, the business manager of Maguire's on Washington street announced him as the "youngest and best actor." So Johnny Mack, with firing off of each new skit pro nounced himself as the "youngest and brightest star to appear in the West" in Barrett's "unsung" career. Barrett's was a solid star, a mighty head of minstrelsy, whose speeches from Othello, a la Forrest, in the interludes could, if he would, tell a "whole library" for the benefit of the authorities as to the early days of the Alhambra. The Alhambra was much smaller than known to later day amusement goers. The rear of the pit was darkened by a low overarching dress circle, so the "goofs" were relegated to the back of the pit. Afterwards by excavation height to the roof was obtained and the entire house was remodeled. Another circle was added and the "goofs" like cherubs sat up aloft.

Decadence for the first time at the Alham bra was brought about by Tom Maguire. He failed to hold his own on Washington street in the dramas against the Barrett and McCullough Company opening the California Theater Jan. 18, 1869—so he turned to the minstrelsy for fortune's smiles—and fortune was again kind to the grim, grizzled old manager. He gathered a mighty host of minstrels. The company was called Murphy and Mack. There was Joe Murphy, the "Great," (afterwards better known as the Tribe comedian), then there was Johnny Mack, Johnny Thompson (later of "On Taed" fame), and rare old Ben Cotton. Crowded houses ruled. This did not satisfy Tom Maguire, however, he was still anabas-tous to regain the old Washington street Opera House. So he planned to go down or at least rival the Barrett and McCullough Company. If it had not been for difference in time Maguire's was the very same grand success of a rival opera house the Alhambra was in San Francisco. In the place of her, Ione Burke, formerly of Niblo's and Wallack's, was engaged. In addition, such notables as Frank Mayo, Charles R. Thorne, Jno. A. Carden, WM. Barry, Walter Leonard, Sallie Hinckley, Mrs. M. Parole, Fanny Young, etc.—a strong company. But nothing would do for Mayo but play Hamlet, Macbeth, etc., but against Barrett and McCullough and their company the competition was futile. When Mayo was driven to doing better—and no one has done it as well on the local stage, (although Barrett the highest) May and Mayo and others were seen together in The Robbers of the Pyrenees, Night and Morning, and kindred melodramas, the theater was well filled and play-goers satisfied. But it was too late and Maguire threw up the sponge.

Before leaving Chicago, announced Mr. Mayo would make his last appearance in California, he was given a bumper benefit by fellow players at the Alhambra June 29, 1872. Tom Maguire was the success. In his first appearance as Ruy Blas, he played his best and did not fail to make a profound impres-sion. His playing was not only from his was a man of the town. He as success. The fortune of the Alhambra again were interweaved with the after doings of Tom Maguire. To regain his fortunes he once more turned to the minstrels. This is when Billy Emerson appears in San Francisco and shines behind the footlights on the ancient stage of Maguire's Opera House on Washington street. Monday, Nov. 21, 1870, ushered in a long and prosperous season with the minstrels. The performance was nearly all straight dark eye. The first part was floridly termed "Premier Lexicon Grande Concert." The company in addition to Emerson, included T. H. Budworth, Johnny de Angeles, Reynolds Bros., Fort-telle, Moore's clarion, M. Alvoyer Scott, C. R. T. Murphy, etc. The Alhambra at this time was experimenting with the drama, having little success with Geo. W. Thompson, starring in The Life Signal and The Dutchman in Turkey, supported by Milton Nobles, Sallie Hinckley and Maggie Moore (Mrs. J. C. Williamson.)

For a long time after this the character or kind of shows at the Alhambra varied in quality and scope—everything by turns but nothing long. In burlesque, Elize Holt, the English girl succeeded, as also did the Laviotville Sisters. In opera, Alice Oates won out easily for public favor in French comic operas, while Caroline Riehings, Zelma Spanker, and Harry Baker did fairly well in singing the French. Now and then dramatic spots were tried with varying reward. One of the early stars was Frank Drew, late brother of John Drew, a very talented comedian; it is doubtful if Tim in The Irish Emigrant, including singing of Lady Dufferin's ballad, "I'm Sitting on the Stile Mary," was ever as well done on the local stage.

Two brilliant dramatic events distinguished the history of the Alhambra. These were the engagements of Adelaide Kistor and Cha. Fechter. Those who saw these geniuses at the Alhambra must hold rich memories of the highest class of the actor's art. Of course the tragedue was greeted by the most discriminating of play-goers. The smallness of the stage, poverty of scenery and poor support sadly disappotled Fechter, the greatest romantic and picturesque actor of the day. He had the chance to come to the well-equipped California Theater, and he showed unusual mastery. In his first appearance as Ruy Blas, he played his best and did not fail to make a profound impression by a performance not since even approached, much less rivaled. But the want of scenic effect and stage detail, so dear to the sensitive, artistic Fechter actually galled him. He could not conceal it. On the second night of Hamlet evidently means were resorted to for keeping his spirits by putting others down. By the time the grave yard scene was reached, Hamlet wav- ered not in resolution only, but while bantering with the grave-digger and decanting on mortality, Fechter approaching the grave too close suddenly slipped down into the hole, disappearing entirely from sight to the speechless amazement of the audience and to the quick, silent fall of the curtain which was raised no more that night. A splendid opportunity was given soon after to Fechter to show his magnificent talent as a pictorial actor. His genius for the pictures-

5

The Columbia

All who have read Hall Caine's famous novel, The Christian, have recognized at once its powerful dramatic elements, yet to the uninitiated the condensation of a thick volume of romance into a five-act play is a matter for no little wonder and some dread, lest a hook as forceful in every line might suffer in the re-modeling. Hall Caine, however, has successfully, as Page of Love, maintained the momentum, and with true playwright's instinct has chosen the most effective episodes of his book for dramatization. Certain variations of plot entailing a strong, and new motives for action deprives the play of that subtle character portrayal that has made the book so wonderful a psychical study.

Yet no accurate impression can be had or unbiased judgement given upon a drama founded on a book widely read—for the imagination unconsciouslysums the entire performance with recollections from the mine of unused material in the original romance. The Christian is being most commendably given at the Columbia this week by Liebler and Company—well staged and well cast. Miss Elsler, in physique, scarcely realizes the brilliant and radiant Glora, but in sympathetic comprehension of the true womanliness of the character, she is wholly charming, as well as fully adequate to the dramatic situations of the second and third acts. Colville's John Storm is a master-piece, dominating the entire performance—a very incarnation of the force, the passion, the concentrated power of a strong man heroic in self-composed. Frank Weston, as Horatio Drake, does some fine work in his renunciation of Gloria—showing the more telling force, dramatic emotion controlled rather than violently displayed. Edward Painey, as Lord Robert Ure, was detestable the villain as the role calls for, a noteworthy character study. Funchon Cornwell, of Tar Baby, who demands delicate handling, is rather conventionally melodramatic—otherwise the subordinate parts are in good hands—and distinct character sketches, nothing more fetching than the May of Ida Parks, nor more excessively cock-eyed than Maynard's impersonation of the Manager.

The Alcazar

FOREST, you're the real thing! And Marie, though your make-up is hardly a thing of beauty, you're your own woman. All the more apropos Forest Seabury's impersonation of Chimmie Fadden and Marie Howe's graphic picture of bibulous Mrs. Murphy. If you, my reader, want to enjoy a clean, healthy comedy, if you would look at some true pictures of street life, if you would understand the devious ways that chance compels some people to live, if you would have a clearer understanding of some of the trials and tribulations of the poor, of their small ambitious ungratified, if you would care to sympathize with the little heart trials that come to a manly, open-hearted lover, if you can find time in this work-a-day world to live over your own little romance (or to spin it out in advance)—if any of these sentiments have a place in your make-up, then you will find the play of Chimmie Fadden very pleasing in many ways and worth a visit to the Alcazar. Forrest Seabury gives us the attitude, the slang and the mannerisms of the Bowery boy very adequately. He realizes the ideal Chimmie not only in all these ways, but in size and in a gentle sympathy that runs through his voice and softens the look that comes and goes on his face between the flashes of excitement or rage. Marie Howe's exceptional ability for character work, equips her for the task of impersonating the irresistible Mrs. Murphy and no one will deny her the triumph of a very clever performance, one that will stand the critical test of a comparison with the original creation, and came from the ordeal with flying colors. Ernest Hastings showed his abilities in a new light, exhibiting the possession of a very genial and quiet humor that gained for Mr. Paul the unquestioned sympathy of the audience who quite forgave him the unusual thrust for small pots in his pursuit of peace and happiness. Frank Denithorne played the part of Mr. Burton satisfactorily, and George Webster was a painstaking and agreeable His Whiskers. Ernest Howell, George Nichols, Frank Opperman and W. H. Davenport were respectively Moxie, Larry, Kramer and Kelley, and they gave lifelike ideas of Bowery life. Gertrude Foster, very handsomely gowned, was a refined and charming Fanny, and Juliet Crosby made a hit as the vivacious French maid, "de Duchess." Laura Crews was Maggie, the house-maid, and a modest and charming one she made. Ania Fallon was Mrs. Fadden, a convincing Irish woman, indeed. The rest of the long cast was in good hands. As we have already on several occasions commended the staging of Alcazar productions and their direction, once more we wish to express our lively appreciation of the series of coherent stage pictures guided and directed by Charles Bryant, who, though handicapped by probably the worst stage in America, is making a noteworthy success of the Alcazar's productions.

The California

The Prawley Company has been doing well this week in a stirring war time melodrama called Cumberland '61. By doing well it is meant that there has been a big attendance and that a good production was given of a piece that, while interesting and exceedingly well staged, is scarcely what one would expect from the pen of one so well versed in the dramatic art as Franklin Fyles. Mr. Fyles is very much like some other dramatic critics, even in San Francisco who know—or think they know—how to talk and write about plays and players in the proper way, but when it comes to the writing of a play he is certainly at a disadvantage, especially in melodrama of the character of Cumberland '61. The piece has five acts, which though short, is certainly an argument against it, and there is not a coherent continuation of plot that is desirable to the lover of melodrama. A plot that breaks off at any old part will never do. But the good work of the players saved the piece and made it worth the while of the hundreds who went to see it. The plot of the play hinges on a Kentucky feud, and some thrilling scenes incident to the Civil war and the usual love story suffices for the subsidiary part. Miss Mary Hampton suffered from a severe cold the forepart of the week, but she was exceptionally clever as the moun-taineer's daughter. Miss Mary Van Burien was likewise creditable. Miss Van Burien, Pearl Landers and J. R. Amory furnished the comedy, and very well, too. Mr. Prawley had a most trying part as the handsome cadet, and it is only just to say it was one of the best roles he ever played. Harrington Reynolds, as the unnatural father and colonel, was exceedingly creditable. The remainder of the cast, all of whom well, was as follows: Francis Byrne, Reginald Travers, Charles Welch, George Gaston, Phona McAllister, Wallace Shaw and Harry S. Duffield.

The Tivoli

The Tivoli, redecorated, recarpeted and changed into a thoroughly cheerful place has been this week offering its annual holiday production, Little Bio Peep's song. Periss Hartman. The piece is very entertaining and re-flects great credit on George Lask, who arranged it. Max Hirschfeld has provided some very tuneful music and Oscar Fest, in his transformation scene. The Butterflies, has given us the prettiest thing of the kind yet seen in San Francisco.

Hartman, in the character of Weary Williams, a deputy sheriff, capers about to the accompaniment of continous laughter. Anna Lichter, who was Little Bo-Peepe, sang in her charming style a number of songs and ballads and Annie Meyers, encased in boy's costume, frisked about as the gay young blade, Little Boy Blue. All Wheelan made up and acted an extremely funny and grotesque Mother Hubbard. Tom Greene was a Meph-isto, who was much given to singing of a most pleasant character. Wm. Schuster was devouring as Baby Bunting, and Charlotte Beckwith, one of the most beautiful women on the stage, was the fairy Goodluck. Between the second and third acts Ida Wyatt, who directs the ballads, shows her individual ability in singing and dancing, receiving nightly repeated encores.
The Orpheum

The program at the Orpheum this week is the best the house ever produced—without any exception—not one poor number, and its musically, too. Fougere, the dashing little Parisian of the week with her catchy French songs, bewitching airs and dances. Gertrude Rutledge has a strong, full voice and her singing proved acceptable to the audience. The Averys, clever comedians, are still winning plaudits for their funny songs and dancing. Avery’s facial makeup would be a winner anywhere. Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Milton Royle and their company presented ‘Trips’ Troubles, a screaming farce, which like all their work, was good. La Sylphe, the eccentric, bandless dancer, is a success as a contortionist and was frequently applauded for her peculiar gyrations. Harrigan, the tramp juggler, with his native wit is the same favorite—he performs scene-worthy wunder with his cigar box, tumbler and a lighted lamp. Hamilton Hill with his magnificent baritone gave several songs in his own artistic way. The Holy City being especially well rendered and the audience evidently appreciated it as it was heartily applauded. John J. Thorne and Grace Carleton in their pettico play, The Substitute, scored a hit. Tuesday evening, Fougere sang ‘Dame D’Avril, who is here again on her way East, kindly consented to take her place, which certainly pleased the audience, as the hearty applause upon her appearance testified. The Palms was beautifully sung, and the negro melodies gave much pleasure.

The Oberon

SENIOR ANTONIO VARGAS, the Cuban baritone, is again pleasing at this popular music hall this week and with Seniorita Lye Poletini gave some very good operatic selections, as did also Miss Rose La Croix and Mr. Arthur Stewart with their opera solos and duos. Conductor Ritzau’s violin solos are always received well. The American Ladies Orchestra had a fine programme for Christmas week. Christmas Echoes was especially enjoyable, though the overture, Poet and Peasant, was the finest of the evening. The Oberon’s entertainment is really above the average.

The Alhambra

TOMORROW afternoon, New Year’s Day and thereafter every evening and Saturday matinees. The Alcazar will begin its second and last week. Chimmie Fadden is doing a big hold-down; and its second week’s run bids fair to surpass the first. Mysterious Mr. Bugle will follow with Miss Irene Everett specially engaged for the title role.

The Alhambra

Tomorrow night, the greatest of all Irish comedians, Murray and Mack, the original team, who have starred together for nine years, will be seen at the New Alhambra in a big production of Finngan’s ‘Bill.’ Only for one week will these comedians be seen at the New Alhambra.

Murray and Mack are surrounded this time by the strongest cast that ever assembled together in a farce comedy. There are twenty-five people in the company, all of whom are veritable stars in their lines. Of course Murray and Mack are the stellar attractions, for a more comical and clever team never blushed before the footlights.

The California

With Flying Colors is a melodrama in sixteen scenes and was written by Seymour Hicks and Fred G. Latham. It was produced at the Adelphi Theatre, London, last August, and is still running there. It will be produced for the first time in America at the California Theatre next Sunday night. With Flying Colors tells the old story of villany and virtue, but it tells it, it is said, in a new way. Mr. Frawley has given three weeks to the preparation of this play and the production is the heaviest he has ever made. There are over sixty speaking characters in the play. With Flying Colors will run for eight nights and two matinees, on New Year’s Day and on Saturday afternoon.

The Tivoli

The georgeousness of the holiday extravaganzas, Little Bo-Pep, at the Tivoli Opera House, and the mirth-provoking songs, songs, songs, etc. presented by the big company, have caught the fancy of the town and the result is that Little Bo-Pep is drawing crowded houses and is likely to enjoy a prosperous run for an indefinite time. A special matinee on New Year’s Day and thereafter every evening and Saturday matinees.

The Acazar

To-morrow afternoon, New Year’s Day and thereafter every evening and Saturday matinees. Chimmie Fadden is doing a big hold-down; and its second week’s run bids fair to surpass the first. Mysterious Mr. Bugle will follow with Miss Irene Everett specially engaged for the title role.

The Olympia

A GREAT holiday program this week is the wintry send-off of the Olympia. Hastings and Hall in their musical selections, from comic songs to operatic solos and duos, are strictly up-to-date and thoroughly enjoyable. The Mohr Bros. are better than ever this week. Carl Wilson is very popular with the audience, as every fellow has a feeling that she is singing to him alone. Marie Wood has an excellent soprano voice and handles it well. Stanley Jones is a pretty little balladist, taking and catchy. Camelia’s character dancing is very fetching; and brings down the house always. Vera Chondon, Fred Winom, May Neubon and Carlton and Royce all do well.

The Chutes

The hill for the holidays is an attractive one. Adgie’s spectacular mirror dance in her den of lions is a beautiful revelation of light and color effects. One seemed to see a dozen Adgies and dozens of lions, the illusion being perfect.

Ruth Neita sings some clever comic songs, with her cute pickaninnies, and had a hearty welcome on her return.

The La Mouts, the dress suit acrobats, Major Mite, with his new specialties; Ruebe and Frank Shields, with their marvelous trick bicycle riding; Zoyerro, with her revolving sphere, all make up an excellent programme.

New Alhambra

The Black Patti Troubadours, in Finngan’s Ball, are giving the best entertainment of its kind at the Alhambra the second week. The constantly increasing crowds testify to their great popularity. Their rag time comedy and melody are exceedingly clever and entertaining. The new programme for this week shows their versatility and fitness for their work. Black Patti, James Wilson, D. H. Stewart and the Watts are up to date and we hope to see them here often.

A Fashionable Corner

The very attractive display now being made by the enterprising firm of R. D. Davis & Co. at the corner of Geary and Grant Avenue, is causing a great deal of talk amongst the well-dressed women of San Francisco. Choice, well selected millinery, silk waist, tailor-made gowns, jackets and skirts are the prominent features of this store. While they have been out a short time in business they have already taken a prominent place with the fashionable set. The advantage in shopping at this house is that the entire stock is new and up to date in every detail. Judging from the crowded condition of the store it seems that San Francisco’s most fashionable set appreciates the fact that low prices on the finest goods in process of getting there. Mr. Davis is to be congratulated on his enterprise and aggressiveness in reaching out for the best trade of the city.

An Unique Personage

While chatting with a pretty young actress about a year ago, she suggested that I go to New York. I shook my head doubtfully, as I replied, "I don't believe in palmists, they never come to the point, beat about the bush and make all sorts of blunders." I never found one scientific yet, but I shall go to my marvel and prove them all wrong. The house was on Mason street near Sutter, and reading the sign "Fosselli Scientific Palmist," entered, to find some people waiting, among them some friends of mine, an actor and a vocal teacher, and caught a glimpse of a prominent judge slipp ing through the door, and smiled as I thought, I am in good company at last. While waiting for our turn, my friends informed me that Fosselli had possessed wonderful Psychic power from childhood. He had studied in India, the home of Psychic truth, and the actor declared that the great palmist, Chiero of London, was not his equal. I became more interested as my musical friend told me that Fosselli was a man of intellectual and musical ability, and fond of the arts, and had been known in his readings in Boston, New York, and other large cities. My turn came at last, and I entered a regular "Bohemian den," and was seated at a little table while Fosselli, whom I found very gently manly, proceeded to mark the lines of my hand with a blue pencil so thoroughly that my palm was like a net-work—not a line slighted—and I thought what a demon of terror that blue pencil might have been in the hands of my editor with my copy before him and the sign "My busy day!"

The room was full of pictures, plaster casts of hands and charts, a guitar in one corner, a piano in another, and at my elbow an easel with a half-finished picture, and following my glance he said, "I am fond of my brush in leisure moments." Then he began to read, coming straight to the point, and my life was stretched out before him like an open book from infancy until that day, "I know who you are," he remarked. "A young actress with long, black hair and blue eyes,"—Well, he described my friend so vividly that it made me jump. "You are a writer," he continued, "on a weekly paper, and work among musical and dramatic people. You think you will stay with this paper but you won't. You are going to be very ill. Your editor now East will come home to die to save you." And then he read my fortune.

You will resume your work, but next September, 1899, a new dramatic paper will be published, and you will join the staff through the suggestion or influence of a gentleman at a dramatic agency—a man with blue eyes, brown curly hair turning gray, and a very refined manner. You know such a man? I admitted I did, but said, "Fosselli, this is all nonsense—your past reading is perfect but the future can't be so. Our editor is perfectly well in the prime of life. I am not going to be ill, and have not thought of making a change, and as to the friend you name, he is not likely to have newspaper influence, and no one intends starting a newspaper!" He took my little outburst quietly and said, "We will see what September brings," and I replied laughingly. "That is a wager Fosselli, if you are right I will own my ignorance and surrender completely to your superior knowledge. He won. I lost—for his prophecies came true. Only a week afterwards my editor was brought home to die, passing away when I was helplessly ill and out of my work for months. I resumed my work with the new editor until last September, when going into the office of the dramatic agency mentioned on business, my friend met me with a smile. "Have you seen the new paper?" he asked, holding up the first copy of the DRAMATIC REVIEW, and suddenly an idea struck him, and he seized pen and paper and wrote a letter of introduction. "See the manager at once," he said. "This is the paper for you—it is sure to be a success," and I was soon in the sunny office of the DRAMATIC REVIEW talking to two of the pleasantest gentlemen I have ever met, and here I am a member of the staff, for I began at once and I am proud of the success we are making as if I were a partner, and full of hope for the future. And the array of actors and musical people I send to the "Bohemian den" for advice is proof of my admiration of Fosselli's wonderful powers, for he is gifted beyond the power of science, and I have to hear of his first failure; and by the way the pretty actress is now in New York and writes she is doing well.—Mary Frances Francis.

Alyce Gates

O'pen upon a time"—that is the way wonderful stories should begin—a little, dark-haired girl lay under an apple tree in the garden of the home of Justin Gates, well known and honored in California from the pioneer days. Her pretty head rested upon her arms as her bright eyes gazed up through the branches, while in childish fancy she read among the green leaves that rustled in the sunny air, pictures of future glory of which she was the heroine. The blue sky, cloudless as her sweet face, smiled upon her and the leaves whispered to her heart, "You will be a singer some day in the great world, some one is coming, coming from across the sea to make your dreams come true." She kept her "apple-tree stories" to herself, for who would understand? She herself did not understand anything then of Psychic laws or that her innocent soul was so full of light that she had unconscious relationship to the wonders of the Occult, that the world has grown to recognize. Alyce Gates became a woman and spent five years in New York with Geo. Sweet, one of the greatest vocal masters of American and European fame. Her natural poetical interpretation was his delight and she became an enthusiastic exponent of his method, and returning to San Francisco opened a vocal studio, building up her profession with gratifying results, teaching faithfully and with cheerful heart "Quality and expressiveness of tone." Her work is a revelation in the art of teaching and the atmosphere of her artistic surroundings inspiring and it is no wonder that the minds of her pupils expand through with lofty ideals. Her voice is a musical dramatic soprano, clear and smooth as a forest stream. She has been a favorite in concert, possessing beside her voice and training a personality of musical charm, drawing her audiences to her in the harmony of gentle soulful attraction.

Of late years the "apple-tree creations" have given place to solitary rambles under the stars or upon the sea-beach, for the boom of the waves was music to her ears, the spray like gems of promise, the water seemed to beckon her to the sands and as the waves rolled to her feet sweet was the message they sang. "The time is coming, coming, when your dreams will be fulfilled. A friend will sail over the sea to point you to your highest work, to be your inspiration." Miss Gates worked on steadily, cheered by the promises of the waves and the leaves, until one evening she sat in the Tivoli with a friend. There were sounds of applause and then perfect stillness reigned and as Sig. Salassa's glorious voice rang out, Miss Gates, who heard him for the first time, burst into tears. "I am leaving against a palm; I have found the oasis in the desert; that great artist will be the one to encourage my highest aims!" she said. Strange! Not at all to those who understand psychic, laws and leadings. To make a long story short Sig. Salassa heard Miss Gates sing and at once recognized the artist. "Beautiful voice," he said. "You know how to sing. You can teach. The school is the same as mine of light and shade. You should sing in opera," and all unconscious of being a link in the psychic chain added as he praised her: "I come like a brother in art and stretch out my hand from across the sea to show you what you can be." Since then Miss Gates has been so encouraged by his criticism of her voice and art that she has gained new impetus and confidence and hopes some day to enter the operatic stage, while she goes on as faithfully as ever with her classes, for the opinion of Salassa is worth having and he is not a man to flatter. Miss Gates comes from a talented family that has shone in musical, dramatic and journalistic work. Her sister Gertrude is clever with her pen and in dramatic art, and perhaps the most beautiful tenor voice California has known was that of Harry Gates, her cousin, who sang in the old Tivoli days. Miss Alyce Gates sang at the large benefit for Italian charities given at Metropolitan Temple last Thanksgiving Day at the request of Sig. Salassa, who also appeared upon that occasion.

LOCAL NOTES

The departure of Miss Millie Flynn for New York, just after the dawning of the New Year, where she will continue her studies as a vocalist will be a loss to the profession of San Francisco, but again to the East, for doubtless our California songbird whose silvery notes have charmed us will have good opportunities of entering the profession in New York, where those of true musical worth are always welcomed. Among the players of this profession are two of Miss Flynn’s favorite artists—Willis Bachelor, Olive Reed-Cushman, Mabel Love, and other of our favorites has proved. Miss Flynn is well known in San Francisco, having been here before the public since she was a street-singer, and her success is due to the careful tuition of Dr. H. J. Stewart, who holds a distinguished place in his profession. Miss Flynn sang at the Plymouth Church for nearly two years, and has been soprano soloist for four years at Trinity Episcopal Church, where regret is expressed at her loss. She has also held a position at the Taylor-street Synagogue for five years. Her voice is rarely sweet and musical, her tones are well rounded, her enunciation good, and she sings with much poetical interpretation; her appearance upon the stage being modest and attractive. Miss Flynn appeared recently at the farewell concert of Frank Coffin and Robert Bien, Native Sons’ Hall being crowded. The Bohemian Club, the profession and society were well represented, the program being rendered by the best local talent including Henry Holmes, who is securing fame in America as he has won it in Europe. Miss Flynn is always an acquisition to first-class concerts, and her voice also well adapted to Oratorio or church work.

MILLIE FLYNN’S FAREWELL.

Miss Millie Flynn’s farewell concert, given under the direction of Dr. H. J. Stewart, Tuesday evening of last week, was attended by an audience that showed warmly their interest in the singer who has been very popular in professional work, several of our local favorites lending their aid in making her last appearance here a success. The concert opened with quartet—Gypsy song [Schumann], Miss Flynn, Mrs. Birmingham, Clar- ence Wendell, Mr. F. G. B. Mills, the number being well rendered and received. Mr. John Marguado, whose appearance is always hailed with pleasure, rendered violin solo, Leonard’s Souvenir de Haydn to much applause. Song, The Rough Rider, was sung by Mr. F. G. B. Mills. He has naturally a good voice, but a cold robed it if its clearness, but he sang with pleasing effect responding to an encore. Miss Miriam Cone gave Aria—A Scorte, [Helleni], making a good impression, giving as an encore, Answer. Miss Flynn received a very hearty greeting when she appeared in her first solo. She looked well upon the stage, and sang with her usual charming ease and refinement. Her number was Valse Song, Delight [Lucetour], a very graceful rendition. Miss Flynn being in excellent voice and singing with much feeling and artistic taste. In response to an enthusiastic encore, she sang Last Night I Was Dreaming, appearing also in duet—Recordare [Requiem] Verdii, with Mrs. Birmingham. Mr. Harry Wood Brown, the possessor of a very melodious baritone, sang Aria—Die Passente [from Faust]. He was a little indisposed, but his smooth rendering and good taste were not to be hidden, and he was recalled singing a second time. Mr. Wendell, tenor, sang Love’s Nocturne [Lawrence Kellic], his voice being sweet and clear, and his style sympathetic. In response to generous applause he gave an encore. His pianissimo passages were delicately taken, and his numbers a delight. Mrs. Birmingham was in particularly fine voice, giving air de Romeo et Juliet [Vaceau], in fact I never heard her to better advantage, and she was a great favorite responding to an encore and singing in the closing number quartet—The Stars That Above Us Are Shining [Weber]. Miss Flynn, Mrs. Birmingham, Mr. Wendell, Mr. Mills, Dr. H. J. Stewart accompanied the singers, lending them his customary graceful support.

CHARLOTTE VOORSANGER.

The other day I received a charming letter from Miss Charlotte Voor- sanger, whose musical ability and devotion to her studies long ago won my interest, while she was a pupil of Prof. E. B. Bonelli of the San Francisco Conservatory of Music. Little Charlotte, as we called her, for she is not sixteen, was sent to New York three months ago to study with Mr. Galligo, before going to Europe to finish her musical education. Mr. Gal- ligo seems to be taking great interest in her and she has made many new friends but her heart turns often to home and ties in California, and especi- ally to Prof. Bonelli, who was as fond and proud of her as if she had been his own daughter. She writes: "Miss Francis, I hope soon to thank you personally for all your kindness to me in my work, and for being so kindest with me. I love my work and can never forget Prof. Bonelli, who taught me to love it. I must work for these innumerable debts. * * I wish I could play like Mr. Galligo, with such technique and such soul. He says I must strive for a crisp, brilliant technique, but there are so many striving to reach the goal, so much more talented than I, that when I realize what I have undertaken, I am dumb-founded at my audacity, but that makes me work the harder. * * * My last piece is the Holburg Suite [Greig] and I have memorized the Prautudium and am preparing Rigaudon for my next lesson and find it very fascinating. My practice hour is near, so I must close. * * * Always think of me as Your sincere admirer." Charlotte Voorssanger.

While chatting with Mrs. Voorssanger regarding Charlotte’s letter she seemed pleased as she had remembered me and told me that her uncle, Mr. Pollak, the solo violinist of New York, had been surprised at the progress she had made in the Conservatory here, and was more than delighted with her work. Mrs. Voorssanger says Mr. Galligo gave her a very strict examination, reserving his opinion until she had played three times, when he declared her interpretation to be good, and her work most thorough. He praised Prof. Bonelli’s tuition, taking up her studies from the point where he resigned Charlotte to her new mas- ter’s care. Mr. Galligo was struck with the care that had been taken with interpretation, as the writer was when about a year ago a piece of music was placed in my hands marked from measure to measure by Prof. Bonelli, and I chose Beethoven’s Moonlight Sonata and a Chopin Etude for Charlotte to study. This was done under the aegis of the San Francisco Conservatory, and won words of praise from Madame Carreno, but there have been other pupils who have distinguished themselves as pianists who owe their foundation and ambition to Prof. Bonelli. Miss Carrie Bowes, who made a success in Europe, and gave a concert upon her return in 1897, Miss Maul Durrant and Mr. Harry Tichau, who passed fine examinations in Berlin, being among the number. It is only fair to call attention to the good work of our local masters when they receive praise from Eastern or European authori- ties and if ever our little friend Charlotte Voorssanger becomes famous it will be pleasant to remember that she was a California girl taught by one of our own masters.

—Mary Francis Francis.

Mayme Taylor, who makes her appear- ance here with Murray and Mack to-morrow night at the New Alhambra, is well known in this city, this having been her home several years ago. She first made her appearance before the footlights at the Tivoli, but after be- coming the wife of Richard Stahl, Hoyt’s manager, she went East, and returns now for the first time. She has a beautiful soprano voice, and has been a success in the East.

Tunis F. Dean

Mr. Dean is business manager of The Christian company now meeting with great success at the Columbia. Although on his first visit to the Coast, he is by no means a stranger in San Francisco where he has been renewing many old friendships made in the East. Mr. Dean was for many years manager of the Academy of Music in Baltimore, also holding a proprietary interest in the house, which played only the leading attractions of the country. This is only his second season on tour. Last year he represented The Bride Elect in the same capacity that he does with The Christian. Walter Dean, his brother, is well remembered here where he made many visits as business manager of the Carleton Opera Company when it was in its prime. The Christian will make a tour of Southern California following its Frisco run, which promises to be one of the most successful engagements in the history of Frisco theatricals.

The advance sale of seats for the second week of The Christian at the Columbia Theater is fifty per cent. larger than it was for the first week at the corresponding time.

Brother Officers, the play produced by Henry Miller at the Columbia Theater last summer, is to be produced at the Empire Theater, New York.

The Hon. Peter Sterling is to be dramatized by Mildred Dowling and Paul Leicester Ford for Nat Goodwin.

Oroville Opera House

The Union Opera House, of Oroville, Cal., has been entirely remodeled. The stage, which will be completed by January 15th, will be the finest and handsomest in Northern California. Nine sets of new scenery have been painted, and also a very handsome drop curtain, representing Heidelberg Castle on the Rhine, framed by a massive gold frame, partially concealed by handsome folds of salmon pink drapery. The stage is 40x35, with a height of 40 ft. to the gridiron or rigging loft. The proscenium opening is 20x26, handsomely finished in cream and gold, studded with electric lights. Eight cozy dressing rooms, 8x8 ft., are placed under the stage, fitted with both electric and gas lights, also hot and cold water. The auditorium is finished in cream and gold, of a Moorish design, the theater being furnished throughout with both electric and gas lights. Mr. Harry R. Jacobs has the management of the new house end is now arranging and booking companies enroute. The management will aim at all times to play only first-class attractions.

Charles Frohman has secured the London success, The Black Tulip, for production in this country.

LOS ANGELES.

Newspaper Correspondence

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 25.—Little Paloma Schramm, in her second recital on Monday evening at Simpson Tabernacle, renewed the profound impression she made the previous week. Another brilliant little musician, Sada Werner, Vasye's young pupil, was here in the same hall on Tuesday evening. This child, violinist, plays with dash and brilliancy combined with delicacy and exquisite shading that would do credit to a much older virtuoso. Mme. Genoveva Johnston-Bishop assisted in the following program: Franck—weisen (Sarasati); Pa ce Mlo, aria from La Fosca del Destino (Vardi) Mme. Bisby; Symphonie Espagnole Lalo allegro, andante rondo; (a) Kreutzer Lost to Mel(175) Bach) by request; (b) Good by (Lady Henry Som- err) Mme. Turner, andante Capriciosa (Saint Sains). Miss Blanche Rogers accompanied both violinist and singer.

The second concert was given by the Symphony Orchestra at the Los Angeles Theatre on Friday afternoon, with Mr. Harley French, conductor. This organization reached a degree of artistic excellence that is gratifying to our music-loving people. The interpretation of Tchaikowsky and Saint-Saens in particular, was a revelation of their deep thought and feeling; the Tannhaeuser overture was given according to the original score. The program included ballet music from the operas Fausters (Rubinstein); Andante Cantabile from Quartet No. 2 of Schoenfield; Mr. Heart at Thy Sweet Voice, Sameon and Delilah, (Saint Sains); Piatti Symphony (Beeth-oven) and Overture to Tannhaeuser Wagner. Miss Krickeker was soloist for the after noon.

Vladimir de Fashmhan will give two concerts next week. On New Year's evening his program will include Schumann and Chopin, while the recital of Wednesday afternoon will be given up to Chopin.

The musical will be rendered at Syrian Auditorium on the evening of January 5th, under the direction of Prof. F. C. Bacon. The soloists will be Mme. Genoveva Johnston Bishop, Mrs. Florence Scarrborough A. Miller and Mr. Barnhart.

The dates for Emma Novara's concerts have been fixed for the evenings of the 13th and 18th of January.

Special Correspondence

STOCKTON, Dec. 27.—The newspapers here seemed to have it for the Kesten- saintly Burlesque Company. All of the journals "outed" the show, stating that it was coarse and the people had no merit, which criticism was not wholly justifiable. There are some redeeming features about the performance, but the local newspaper combination evidently could not see it that way. The result was that after a good house Thursday night, there was about forty peo- ple Friday and Saturday. The company pulled up stakes and went to Sacramento.
Eastern Correspondence

NEW YORK

NEW YORK Dec. 24.—The season of grand operas in this city began at the Metropolitan Opera House, with an opening performance of a new and brilliant Marcia Gran Opera Company.

Never in the history of the Metropolitan Opera House has there been an opening as splendid as on last Monday night when Romeo and Juliet was sung with Eliza Fawkes and Albert Albert, the title roles. Oscar Deming had been heard before in the opening here in the same opera in the season of 1892-93, with Jean de Reuse and Minnie Harkness. And the opening performance here on several occasions with Meta, once with Sembach and once with Melle, for Grimm's opera scenes, to have been a favorite work with which to introduce each season's company of grand opera singers. Historio it seemed that Jean de Reuse was indispensable as Romeo, especially for an opening performance; and after the opening, a few discreetly-plotting story on account of alleged slighting remarks about the other tenors, great interest centered in the voice of Miss Nordica, but it happened that he who was contempt for the imitable Jean, Alveraz was something of a disappointment. He showed a fine dramatic tenor voice, with a splendid resonating tone. But his middle voice was not always to be relied upon for fine effects. He even sang off the key. In passages requiring great vehemence he was at his best. But upon the whole it must be admitted that he did not show himself as a tenor in a position to win the hearts of Jean de Reuse. His friends here in his hopes that he will do better as he becomes more experienced. The opera was a success, as were the season's other productions, and Miss Nordica, with her voice of marvelous force and resonant as ever, as Frere Laurent, and Pol Flouconn was a perfect Caesar. The other productions played at the Empire Theatre, by Tamboer, Pasqu and Lohbrinzing, introducing Calve, Nordica, Terese, Suwon Strong, Schumann-Hein, among the women voices, and Salza Van Dyke, Dippel and Campanari and a number of lesser male artists. Even if Manager Gran does not last in the season, his efforts are still admirable. His talent for publicity, the world's great tenor, he has enough artists already to make the season a successful one.

John Drew. After a very long and prosperous run with the remaining companies of Tears, left last night to go on the road; Minnie Maddern Fiske, after an equally successful run in the American Theatre, left last night; and the Kendals left the Kneckerlock, where the older Miss Bloumon has been a profitable and artistic venture. Other departures were The Dairy Farm from the Fourteenth Street and A Greek Stake from the Herald Square. A Greek Stake is the title of a now running skit the producer of which failed to score hits to New York. It lost rapidly several thousand dol- lars and to be adjudged by an ad- mirer of Dorothy Morton, the primus dona of the company. All last week those inter- ested in the success of the piece were look- ing out for a new angel who would pay the back salaries and advance a few thousand dollars to the show and prevent it from passing new. Many members of the chorus had to strike for two weeks' pay last Tuesday night and but few went on when the show went on yesterday.

With the prospects of an outgoing at the opening of the Metropolitan Opera House, Miss Nordica, for a time at least, was the most interesting of the new and pretty, as are most of the songs, which, by the way, are well sung. Sidney Graeme and Miss Nordica made a big hit with their drawing room interlude and imitation.

Miss Maybellie Davies and Charles Hooker do some wonderful dancing in the third act. New York Dec. 26.—At the Denver, Charles Callahan's Coon Hollow is the attraction this week and is doing well. Miss Lydia Thomas, the star girl, play the part of a Georgina. Her many friends filled the theater Sunday night and gave her a hearty re- sponse. Saturday afternoon, a successful juvenile actor, was seen to advantage in the part of Ralph Markham. Stanley Johns was a popular favorite. Many believe that he is the one to make a lasting hit in this winter's season. George Sharp both deserve mention. Next week, Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The Lyceum bill this week are Louie Dresser and her pickaninnies and Jack Norwuth. The others are Merritt and Monako, Baby Moors, Three Sisters, Constantine, Rosley and Rosette and Deane and Franks. Mr. Henry and Miss Dickson will close with the Coon Hollow Company at Lincoln, Nebraska. They will be replaced by Forest Flood, a Denver man, and his wife (Miss Clemsen.) The Telephone Girl will close a fine performance at the Broadway Sunday the 13th. I cannot write about my own show, so will let you know about some other show, one of the best of course.

BOULL

A SUCCESSFUL RECITAL.

Never in the history of the Lyceum Theater has it held such a large gathering of its patrons with the exception of the engagement at the Chicago Lyceum when the audience was present. The custom of the Legacies, which will prohibit the unauthorized use of theatrical posters, especially pictures of actors and actresses.

Felix Schweighoefer, the famous German actor, arrived last Wednesday to play the title role in the new production for his first appearance here, although he has had a big reputation in his own country for years. He was born in Brazil, but went to Italy and later went into the railroad service, before he concluded that the stage was his field on the stage.

Emma Calvé made her first appearance in this city this season in Carmen, at the Metropolitan last Wednesday night, and repeated it on Wednesday afternoon. One of the features of the performance was the appearance of Alvarez, instead of Salza, as the tenor, because he was sick with a cold. Alvarez was less freckled than in his opening performance as Carmen on Monday night, but his singing was still deficient in detail, although his acting was as fine as Calvé's. ROB ROY

DENVER

Special Correspondence.

DENVER Dec. 21.—The Christian opened at the Broaday Theater Monday night is for an engagement of five nights and then goes on the road. Therefore, in the theater, Denver's go out turning out at once to welcome one of the first good productions of the season. The public had read the book, and naturally everyone wanted to see the play. Miss Ellin Gilleau gave an excellent interpretation of the part of Gabriel Guaycty, being at all times, but in my opinion she did not look the part. The John Storm of J. M. Colville was well done, and Edward Remy gave an excellent performance as Lord Robert Ure. The balance of the cast are all clever, and the chorus, a vote, is not a failure. Miss Helen Weston, W. S. St. Clair, Frank Lyon, Robert Hart, Jr., Harry Sutton, Fauchell Cottrell, Carrie Lee Stowe, Jane Wheatly, Edith de Groff, Sue van Dieder, Mildred Burnham, and Ida Parks. The scenery is beautiful, and judging by the applause which it will be pasted at every performance.

Next week, the 25th, the Jefferson Com- edy Company presenting Rip Van Winkle.

The Tabor has Hoyt's A Stranger in New York this week, which opened with a number of New York fair houses. That night the S. O. S. sign was displayed early. The company, headed by Paul F. Nicholson, Jr., John S. Davidson, L. E. Holms, A. W. Muller, and many others, who were new and pretty, as are most of the songs, which, by the way, are well sung. Sidney Graeme and Miss Nordica made a big hit with their drawing room interlude and imitation.

The King's Musicette will be given at Powers' Theater at the Christmas matinee with Miss Kendal, Miss Arthur, Miss Germaine and Miss Nordica, and Miss Nordica has been appointed as Miss Virginia Harms as Miladly. The dance, by Henry Hamilton, was taken from a romance by Dumas.

Manager F. C. Whitney and Stanislav Strogame, who dramatized Quo Vadis, have left Chicago and gone to New York. A number of new dramatizations of the book Quo Vadis are now offered to managers—some are held at the fabulous price of five or ten dollars for manuscript copies.

Luis Horese Frechette, poet laureate of Canada, and Dr. W. H. Drummond, the widely-known author, gave a fine program at University Hall, Arts Building, December 10th.

The sudden death of Stephen Johns, the dramatic editor of the Chronicle, was a great shock to his associates and also to the Sewickley and Braddock audiences, whom he was very popular, owing to his kind and genial position.

Miss Grace Cameron, soprano, who comes from Omaha, has joined the Bostonians and is extremely popular at the Columbia in the part of Cappuccino, in Smith's and Herbert's Serenade. Miss Cameron has a pretty face as well as a flute-like voice. The Bostonians are not quite up to the standard of the famous originals, with the present cast.

At the Haymarket The Bowery in Kloe- dyke, a sketch full of fun and merriment given by Hines and Remington proves a great favorite. Walton's flying monkeys and Erna's dog circus are good attractions.

The Dearnon Theater Company give next week The Christmas Season, a musical mas- sacmatine. A Conway to be presented at the matinees this year is a calendar printed on six cards, each card shows two months and two pictures of members of the stock company.

At the Columbia Theater during the holi- day week will be given by the Boys' Hofmann's new farce in three acts, taken from Georges Feydeau who wrote The Gay Parisian. The Girl From Max's is the production and contains many laughable situations.

The sale of seats and boxes for the spec- tacular production of Aida has been very heavy, but last Monday night filled the Studebaker during the holidays.
Francis Byrne

Francis Byrne, of the Frawley Company, has come to the position when he can bear gracefully the honors accorded him. Experience is a far better teacher than the schools, and Mr. Byrne's short dramatic career has been full of it.

In '95 he opened with Modjeska at the Garrick in New York, playing small parts with an earnestness that soon won him the position of leading juvenile.

Then followed a season of stock work in Montreal and Milwaukee, where parts showing every shade of sentiment, and the lack of it, fell into his willing hands. He was wise enough to know the value of running the whole gamut and striking the notes clean. Then he went on the road, playing Rupert Lee in The Sporting Duchess.

In Mr. Frawley's opinion he gives promise of great things in future. If in four years he has taken such strides, prediction of a brilliant future is a safe hazard.

Personally, Mr. Byrne is quiet, unostentatious, earnest, studious and devoted to his profession. The Review quite agrees with Mr. Frawley in his estimation of the present and prophecy for the future.

Miss Holdis has been produced in London at the Duke of York's Theater by Charles Frohman.

Susan Strong as Elsa

Miss Susan Strong, the American prima donna, appeared for the first time in this country as Elsa in Wagner's Lohengrin, December 23, at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, and scored a success. Her voice was in perfect condition and was exquisitely handled.

Herr Muhlaun played an excellent Friederichke and M. Dippel's Lohengrin was as fine as usual, although he was suffering from a cold. Mme. Schumann-Heink, M. Meux and Mr. Pringle supported Miss Strong well.

Poor Edwin Hoff

Edwin Hoff was at one time the most popular light opera tenor in America. He had a voice of rare sweetness and range and possessed a most pleasing appearance. He succeeded Tom Karl as the tenor of the Bostonians and made a great success in Robin Hood and other operas. Suddenly his voice failed him and the skill of all the specialists was unable to restore it. He dropped out of sight, broken hearted, and took to drink. A year ago he went to London and for a time appeared in an insignificant part in The Belle of New York. Now he has disappeared utterly, leaving no word of where he was going.

Richard, the Three-Eyed

FREDERICK WARDE left us last Sunday, and that reminds us—oh, well, it’s a good story told by a former manager of Mr. Warde. "Mr. Warde never plays Richard," said he, "that I don’t think of a critic of the play which I once overheard in a Baltimore cafe after the performance. Two young fellows sat at the next table. Said one of them: ‘That play is rot. It is perfectly absurd to make a man spend so much time and money so many people for the purpose of getting a kingdom and then have him offer to trade it off for a horse.’ Just then a party of loggers who had come down the river from the Tennessee timber country bought tickets and went in. The curtain went up and in a few minutes the loggers came back and demanded the return of their money. ‘What is the matter?’ they were asked. ‘Well,’ said one of the party, ‘we didn’t know that man Warde was a cripple or we wouldn’t have gone in at all. We don’t want to see no durned cripple play king.’ ‘Yes,’ said another, ‘an’ the infernal fool began by talking about being discontented with this Winter, when it’s the best winter we’ve had since the war.’

Fancies of an Admiring Mind

A

An actress was recently described by a writer as follows: "Lips that curve deliciously, vivibly carmine, hiding Hogarth's fourfold line of beauty; challenging, imperious, tender; eyes that are shadowy, shadowy, one minute the eyes of Artemis of the Arcadians and the next those of the brooding Juno of the Romans; sometimes languorously alert, sometimes indolently museful, quiescently sorrowful, yet opalescent always, with dormant and dangerous fires; hair that is golden, heavy luxuriant, like that of Homer's Helen; a neck like the daughter of Diana, supple, full-throated, tower-like; a brow rather low and broad, not unlike the Venus of Milo, with the coldness of the classic profile endeared and humanized by a womanish dimple; tall—in truth, tall as a daughter of the gods, tall enough to have delighted one of those old Greeks who left their broken dreams of beauty in the Parthenon of the Athenian Acropolis; tempestuous, subdued, affectionate, tyrannical, loving, unconscious, unscrutable—the last strange gift of the gods—a lovely woman." It is said the writer of the above is a poet; perhaps that explains it.

Mansfield Traveling

An Englishman never at any other time shows so much imagination as when he states a fact—about America. An English paper, recently, wishing to be especially newy, printed the following paragraph: "When Mansfield travels through America, very special arrangements, as is well known, are made for his comfort. There is a big car called the 'Richard Mansfield,' containing a fine four-post bed, bathroom, drawing-room and kitchen all for him, and two other cars containing bed-rooms for his company of two. When they come to a specially fine neighborhood they leave the train, play ball-games on the prairie, have pistol practice, and amuse themselves generally.'"
European Notes

Two women recently acted Hamlet in Vienna. One of these was Sarah Bernhardt and the other Adele Sandrock, who aspires among German speaking actresses to hold a place with Mme. Bernhardt. She acts well her roles and is likely to play them very much the same fashion that the French model does. Franklin Sandrock came to America and made little impression, chiefly through the disadvantages attending her introduction here. She made her reputation at the Volks Theater, Vienna, although she was born in Berlin, and was later called to the Hofburg Theater to take the place made vacant by Charlotte Wolter’s death. She did not remain there long, however, and now travels through the German cities, threatening occasion-ally to invade England or France. Mme. Sandrock did not wait until Bernhardt did Hamlet in Vienna, as she had promised, but anticipated the French actress by several days. She was praised for her power in several scenes and the experiment was declared interesting. Very little more was said in favor of the French actress, who did not succeed in interesting the spectators. The majority of them left after the third act. Josef Kainz recently acted at the Hofburg for the first time. Mme. Rejane is to return to Berlin after her Russian season and give a special performance for the German Emperor. Mme. de Lavallette will be acted. The receipts for Helene Duse’s ten performances in Berlin amounted to $25,000, which was unprecedented there.

Stockwell Insolvent

L. R. Stockwell last Friday filed a petition in insolvent with the Federal Court. He states that his assets amount to $100, and include merely his wearing apparel.

Stockwell places his liabilities at $10,500. Among the debts which he owes he enumerates: Frank Sanger, royalty on dances, $300; Edward Price, royalty on plays secured by a promissory note, $740; Sydney Rosenquest, borrowed money, $300; Goldstein, Cohen & Co., costumes, $300; Francis, Valentine & Co., printing, $500; Hoyt & McKee, royalty on plays, $500; Charles Kent, services as actor, $170; Miss Louise Sylvester, services as actress, secured by promissory note, $175; J. J. Rauer, judgments and claims, $940; Edward S. Salomon, his attorney, legal services, $200. Stockwell has had a long continued siege of hard luck, but we hope that the New Year will see him on the road to prosperity once more.

How Irving Came to Be Knighted

"The glorious part of Henry Irving's career," said Stuart Robson one day, "is that as he has advanced himself he has brought the profession right up with him. Here in America people don't realize what prejudices theatrical folk of England had to contend with, but now the actor stands with the best of them. He has his place in society, just the same as any other artist, and Henry Irving has done most of the work that brought this about."

"For a number of years it was known that the Queen was ready to recognize the great talents of the first of English-speaking actors, and to express the sense of gratitude the nation felt to him for what he had done for theatrical production by conferring on him the title. Irving's friends in the literary and social world were anxious that he should be knighted, but he frequently expressed in conversation his opinion, which, of course, reached what are ambiguously called the royal ears, that he did not desire the honor. It was not until the members of his own profession, headed by Charles Wyndham, went and told him that they desired to see him knighted that he consented."

"You must, Irving, for the good of the cause," Wyndham is reported to have said; 'you have carried your profession up to the point where one of its members is considered worthy of knighthood. 'Your work in this direction will not be completed until you have accepted this honor, which is an honor to us all.' The year after this, among the birthday announcements was Henry Irving."

Irwin on Stage Songs

My Irwin has given out her annual interview. Last year Miss Irwin told a tremendously expectant public how to raise two keys. This year she varies her topics and tells how songs are put into plays.

"The music is the hardest thing, for usually that has to be belonged in by the ears. It is always difficult for the author of the play to do anything about it, for he is most interested in the sequence of his story. It makes me smile to hear people say that there is no plot in a farce comedy.

"The songs go in after the play is finished, and are set in a dozen places before just the right one is found. If I know a song is good and it is not well received, I know it is because it is not in the right place. The place of a song is often changed after the play has been produced, because it was not put in properly in the first place."

"Try hundreds of songs before I get one that is right. It isn't safe to miss one, for fear it will go good. I play them all over myself, or my conductor plays them through for me. They come to me in great quantities to the stage entrance, to the box office, everywhere, and the worst of it is that many of them say to please return the manuscript if you do not use the song."

"The great difficulty is to get a song with good words and music, too. It is heart-breaking sometimes. If one is good, the other are rare in a dozen. If either the song or music is very good, it may carry the other. In a number of songs this has been the case. It happens most often that the music is good and the words are not. It is comparatively easy for a musician who knows his business to write a swinging melody, but it is not so easy to write a song that is really funny. The words of a song are altogether the most important part, and the most attention is given to them. People are interested in the story. There may be a great many in the audience who don't know anything about music, but they can all understand the words, and it is not easy to be really funny."

Bernhardt's New Play

Sarah Bernhardt has received from Sardou the play called The Witch, on which he has been at work for nearly ten years. It is concerned with the Brinwillers poisoning case that took place in the time of Louis XIV. Bernhardt has lately been acting in Portugal, where a civic banquet was given in her honor and other demonstrations impossible now anywhere else outside of South America and the Iberia peninsula were indulged in.

A Small World

"The last time I saw that man," remarked P. S. Mattos, the bustling advance man for Mack and Mack, the other day at the New Alhambra, after a pleasant chat with the Review representative in the private office of Managers Ellingham and Mott, "was at Orchard Beach, Maine, years ago when he was in short pants. Now I run across him out here, clear across the continent. I tell you this is a pretty small world after all. And that reminds me of another incident which further proves the truth of my assertion:"

"Several years ago I was in South America for the Barnum and Bailey circus, away up about 3,000 miles on the Amazon, among the Indians and bush dwellers. You could travel for a month without ever seeing a white man. I hadn't seen a white man for so long that I had almost forgotten what one looked like. One night, after an exceedingly hard day in the jungle, I put up at a small native settlement up in that wilderness. Scarcely had I seated myself in the hut which had been placed at my disposal for the night, when suddenly the doorway was darkened. Turning around I instantly saw the newcomer was a white man, and I jumped up to give him a warm welcome whoever he was."

"Imagine my surprise and astonishment when I discovered he was an old and very dear friend of mine whom I had known almost from childhood, for my visitor was none other than Colonel Gardiner of Cleveland, at one time mayor of that city. Our surprise and joy was mutual, I can assure you, for the Colonel had no idea as to the identity of the stranger whom he had come to pay his respects to. We both came to the conclusion right then and there, that this is a small world we live in."

The Birth of the Ballet

There were no ballet girls in 1671, when Pomeone was produced, and the male dancers had been recruited among the dancing masters of Paris and their schools. The youngest and plumpest of these passed for shepherdesses, nymphs and goddesses, and all wore masks. It was not until ten years later that four real danceesses, pupils of Luli, appeared to an enthusiastic audience in Le Triomph d'Amour. Their names have merited record—Miles, La Fontaine, Roland, Lepaintre and Fernon. By 1714 the ballet had increased to a dozen dancers, who received from $500 to $600 a month, and ten danseuses with $400 to $500. The most brilliant, and not the least历史性, was the one that was during the Regency, from 1715 onward, and the masks did not fail till much later, when it took all the pyramidal assurance of Gaetan Vestris to break through the custom. He was who said: "There are but three great men alive upon the face of the earth—myself, Voltaire, and the King of Prussia."

Most Popular Play

"The most popular play that was probably ever written is Shakespeare's Julius Caesar," said an eminent Shakespearean scholar to a Harvard Star reporter recently. "From the time that it was first performed in England in the sixteenth century to the present day it is estimated that this tragedy has been enacted in various parts of the world no less than 20,000 times. It has been translated into German nine times, into French seven, into Italian six, into modern Greek three, into Latin and Swedish twice, and into Croatian, Danish, Dutch, Frisian Polish, Roumanian, Russian, Magyar, Portuguese and Yiddish. There are seven or eight English acting editions of the tragedy. But one attempt actually to alter and improve the play has ever been made. This was in 1792 Shefield called it The Tragedies of Julius Caesar and Marcus Brutus, and poor play (or rather, these poor plays). Pope furnished some of the ballet, but they had the usual effect of ill-adjusted ornaments—they served only to make the meaning of the thing they belecked the more conspicuous."

Thomas' Manager Fails

Miss Anna Miller, manager of the Chicago Orchestra, of which Theodore Thomas is conductor, has filed a petition of bankruptcy in the federal court. She estimates her liabilities at $7,500.4.
Brady's First Pugilist

Since Billy Brady has retired as Managing Director of the Koster and Bial syndicate, because of a disqualification of stockholders to continue the payment of $1000 per week to the pugilistic champions engaged in the travesty, Around New York in Eighty Minutes, it will be interesting to note just how this astute and successful manager first came to branch out as a promoter of pugilistic champions. It was during the year 1892 that one of Mr. Brady's shows was playing at W. J. Gilmore's Auditorium in Philadelphia, and the latter concluded that it might improve business if a pugilist could be obtained who would be willing to meet all comers. Brady agreed with him, but wanted to know where he could find the right man. At that time Corbett was being talked of, but had acquired no other reputation save from his bout in St. Louis. He was suggested, and an arrangement made with him. A local champion agreed to go before Corbett for four rounds, if he could stay that long, and John McVey, who for years after that was Corbett's sparring partner and trainer, was living up State somewhere, and he thought it would be a picnic to meet Corbett, and promised to show up for the second night. The local man backed out at the last minute and McVey being on the ground and eager, went before Corbett.

"I don't think I will ever forget that occasion," said Manager Gilmore, talking of it the other night. "Brady officiated as referee, and he was just as quick, nervous and fidgety then as now. Two or three times he barely escaped getting in the way of one of Corbett's upper-cuts or swings; but McVey went out in less time than it takes to tell about it, and the result was the signing of a contract between Brady and Corbett that brought about, as everybody knows, a world's champion.

Duse's Retirement

Private advice from Paris announce that Eleanora Duse has renewed her determination to retire from the stage, and that she has decided definitely upon the plans for her retirement. She will appear but once more, and that as the heroine of Ibsen's Hedda Gabler, and when the production, of course the stage will see her no more.

Duse is of a heavy heart these days, for she has other sorrows than her unfortunate love affair with D'Annunzio, the Italian novelist, who cruelly deserted her after professing the deepest affection. It is said in Paris that she will retire to an estate which she owns and spend her life ministering to the poor and needy about her.

The Lambs Christmas

Out all the clubs in clubdom none had such a jolly Christmas celebration as the New York Lambs on Christmas eve. It also marked the twenty-fifth anniversary of the club. A Christmas tree laden with gifts was a merry-making feature of the occasion. Richard Golden was a "great Santa Claus." Clay M. Greene was among the Californians who added to the Christmas cheer. He assisted in distributing the gifts. Stanford White, C. Cooper Hewitt and James L. Breesch were among the representatives of the social world present. There was a musical and dramatic matinee. A most interesting feature of the entertainment was the living pictures, which represented famous Lambs of the past. Harry Montague, the first Shepherd, and Lester Wallack were among the most successful and life-like presentations of departed spirits who in their day had done much to entertain, edify and amuse the multitudes.

New London Manager

Robert Tabor, it is said, will become an actor-manager in London, the star of his own company in a theater of which he has exclusive control. His theater will be the London Adelphi. It was announced by cable on Dec. 14th that he would enter into control of the house early next Spring. His American agents have just purchased for him a new play, D'Arezy of the Guards, by Louis Shipman, who dramatized Henry Esmond, and in the title role Mr. Tabor will make his debut as a star in London. Friends have subscribed $35,000 to back his first venture, and he is now organizing an English company to support him.

Booth's Othello

On one occasion, two years before Lawrence Barrett's death, the Booth-Barber combination played Othello at Cincinnati and a party of citizens of Newport, Ky., attended. Mr. Booth played Othello. On the way back, on the ferry boat, one of the Kentuckians unconsciously gave Mr. Booth as great a compliment as that gentleman ever received. The visitors, unaccustomed to theatres and tragedies on the stage, were discussing the play they had witnessed, when one of them said to the other, "Be d— if that little nigger didn't hold up his end about as well as any of them. Mr. Booth was that little nigger.

Breach of Contract

Harry Wyatt, manager of the Los Angeles Theatre, December 30th filed a suit for $7000 damages against McKee Rankin for failing to comply with a contract to play his company at Wyatt's theater. The company appeared at another theater in that city.

THE REVIEW has the largest circulation of any theatrical paper in the United States outside of New York.

The Dramatic Review is entered at the post office at San Francisco as second-class matter and is supplied to the trade by the San Francisco News Company, 32 Geary Street.

Score another success for the dramatized novel. Quo Vadis is still coming money in Chicago for its promoters.

Algeria Barrios, widow of the murdered President of Guatemala, and formerly of this city, is progressing wonderfully well in her stage aspirations in New York. She has signed a contract with Arthur Rehan to appear in several roles of Ada Rehan's repertoire.

In behalf of the players, if for no other reason, we must enter a protest against the illbred men and women who, five minutes before the final curtain fall, shuffle their feet, put on their coats and wraps and hats and rise ready to run. By such rude conduct, the climax of many a strong finale scene is utterly ruined to those who would sit quietly and have paid to see the whole show. These people never stop to consider other people's rights. None but a most selfish woman will put her hat on until the curtain goes down.

Through some spiritual motive, no doubt, we have received a note asking who and what is a daily newspaper's dramatic critic. The question had evidently been broken off in the middle, so we can give only half an answer. The critic is the man or woman who accepts a manager's hospitality in free seats every week, and sees a hundred good things in every performance, but one thing perhaps strikes him as a little out of place, which gives rise to an optimistic guess, rather few faults and never say a word about the hundred good things. Such is the way of the man who pulls out over a wrong assumption of his own importance.

Again we have scored. Not many months ago the REVIEW gave a few reasons why Zangwill's Children of the Ghetto couldn't live long. Now comes the information that its failure in London is more pronounced than it was in New York. Thus we are also recorded among the I-told-you-so's. There are only two reasons for the failure of the play—its utter dullness and the smallness of the cola that passed through the box-office window. Serious faults were the special deplore of the public in a city where any high-standard play, for the number does not seem to be increasing very rapidly. But we sincerely hope that Zangwill will not repeat his most recent failure.

Schools for the Chorus

The following throws some light on a practice that has never yet got a foothold in this country:

L. S. Sire of Sire Brothers, a firm dealing in the chorus industry, said that sometimes girls are hired from masters and brought over to this country in numbers. "In England," he said, "there are schools for chorus and ballet girls, and these girls are bound to the masters for certain periods. The masters give the girls enough to live on and get all of the money. They practically own the girls for the time. The girls get some advantage, as they are poor girls, and in this way are able to get an education. The system is common in England, and the hiring of girls from these masters for the purpose of bringing them to the United States does not conflict with any contract labor law, as it comes under the artists' law.

Barnabee's Perpetual Youth

Henry Clay Barnabee, the veteran head-center of the Bostonians, is the poor girl, of his age in the theatrical profession. For forty-five years he has been actively engaged in stage work, and now, at the age of 68, he is as active, lively and vigorous as the majority of men who have scarcely reached the meridian of life. His voice, particularly in the upper tones, which usually are the first to decay, is full and resonant as it was ten years ago, and his activity in stage work shows no evidence of any weight of years.

The other day when asked for the secret, in which so few seem to share, of this perpetual youthfulness, his answer was that he had always taken good care of himself. "One cannot burn the candle at both ends," he said, "and that is what too many members of the profession undertake to do, with disastrous results. Any one familiar with stage history can recall many singers and actors who have fallen by the way simply because they did not keep in training. Singers are particularly susceptible to the injurious effects of liquor, cigarettes and tobacco, and I have known many promising careers cut short by over-indulgence in these particulars."

No doubt Mr. Barnabee's theory, which is supported by every dictate of common sense, will not appeal favorably to many members of the profession who are inclined to prefer fast living to permanent artistic success. But a temperate life is the only possible means of insuring a long and honorable career. Patti, who will celebrate some time next year an extraordinarily long period on the operatic stage, is still ranked as one of the greatest singers in the world, attributes her achievements to the most temperate living and a strenuous regard for all the laws of health. Joseph Jefferson, now approaching the seventieth anniversary of his birth, is another example of correct living which the younger members of the profession would do well to imitate. Late sippers and a convivial life may be very amusing, but they are dangerous to all and impossible to such as aspire to a long artistic career. Possibly this sounds like a sermon, but at all events there can be no doubt in regard to either the facts or the philosophy, and that is more than can be said of all sermons.

Big Receipts

Charles P. Hall of the Victory Theater, San Jose, and the Yo Semite, Stockton, was a caller at the REVIEW office last week, feeling pretty good over the showing made by the Victory the past year. San Jose, as well as other interior cities, showed an increased theatrical attendance, and Stockwell, in My Friend From India, played to $700 one night, and the Old Kentucky engagement amounted to $1,666, while the Toppy Turkey people were enabled to pay their hotel bills, after $1,100 was counted out, the result of their fun-making; and all this convinces Chas. P. that there are worse towns than San Jose.

Zaza and Other Plays

It has always been maintained by great dramatists and important literary critics that any theme in which the problems of life are illustrated in a serious and impressive manner may be the basis of one of the plays. This seems to me rather an extreme doctrine, and I have never been able to feel that the best interests of the theater or of society can be conserved by dramatic discussions of the social evil in any of its phases. At the same time, if we must choose between an ably drawn and brilliantly acted play of this metrical and important type a farce-comedy or the indecency of the so-called current reviews, I must frankly confess a preference for the former. At least they do not make vice alluring. Their incidental teachings of the necessity of an honest stew in the pulpit, that punishment follows sin, and that depravity receives no encouragement from the Camilles, Zazas and Tanquerays as it does from such inimitable and inimitably played in The Turtle, The Rounders, and all other examples of nauseous puerility. It is well enough to bear these distinctions in mind, for the reason that dramatists and historians alike always have immensely the most vivid illustrations of dramatic themes in the relation of the sexes. Love, pure or impure, has been the moving cause in innumerable events that fill artistic pages, and it fills the central motive of all life, involving every element of society, it is evident that this theme always must be predominant in the drama as it is in general literature. For more than a hundred years the treatment of this subject by the dramatists has gradually improved in delicacy and finesse. The brutal vulgarity of the restoration period, which had not disappeared when Peg Woffington and David Garrick reached the dramatic throne was long since banished from the responsible theater, but while we may hope for still greater delicacy in the future, there is no reason to expect that the grand passion in its most vivid manifestation will ever be outgrown by the dramatic writer or discarded by the exceptional artist. For this reason I repeat that lovers of the drama should learn to distinguish between the true spirit of the subject from that intolerable abasement of the drama for which reckless speculators, indocent women and depraved men are responsible. —Lyman B. Glover.

A Valuable Treatise

The Essentials of Elocution, by Alfred Ayres, an exhaustive treatise on the art of acting, has been received by the REVIEW.

The comedians, Charles Boyle and Carrie Graham, will make their appearance shortly at the New Alhambra in that comical comedy, His Better Half, one of the greatest road successes of the season. The company of twenty which surrounds the stars includes many very clever people and warm favorites here.

Lady Windemere's Fan will be produced at the Alcazar the week of January 12th. The new leading lady, Miss May Blaney, direct from London, will make her American debut. Howard Scott will make his reappearance at the Alcazar on that date.
FRANK WESTON makes a splendid Hornito Drake in The Christian. He has a fine stage presence and a good voice.

DENNIS THOMPSON and The Old Homestead will be here at the Columbia next month.

WALTER JONES and Norma Whalley will visit Australia with Dunne & Kiley's company. MILLOSKER, the composer, who had been suffering from a paralytic stroke, died Monday in Vienna.

FANCHON CAMPBELL's Polly Love in The Christian is one of the most striking characterizations of the production. HENRY MILLER has taken The Only Way on tour, and he is said to be in a fair way to eclipse the success of almost any of the reigning stars.

MISS MINNIE TYPHE BRUCE came very near being compelled to rest last week, owing to a severe cold that for a while threatened to turn into gripe.

NAT GOODWIN is proving a strong attraction at the Knickerbocker Theater, New York. His new play is to be called When We Were Twenty-one, instead of Pals.

MISS HOPES is reported to have made a very strong impression in England. At the Lyceum Theater, New York, its business is recorded as being among the best in the history of the house.

CLAY GREENE's trystness of Gillette's Sherlock Holmes put in the Melanie piece at Koster & Bial's in New York, is called by the New York Sun the best thing in the travesty line of the season.

MAUDE REES DAVIS of Los Angeles, the handsome young singer, for two years soprano with the Sousa Band, was married at Glens Falls December 14, to Herbert Merrill Quimby, of Detroit, Mich.

KYLIE BELLEW is to appear as manager of a London theater of his own in The Children's Palace by L. H. Parker and Addison Bright, and will also produce a new version of Monte Cristo, made for him by Henry Hamilton.

HARRY CORSON CLARKE and his company rested a week down in Texas and the comedian and his wife took a trip to the City of Mexico. They also witnessed a bull fight at Jauréz. Mr. Clarke's impressions of the "sport" are so vivid for publication.

J. M. COLVIN, of The Christian company, has been so ill this week with muscular rheumatism, that he was compelled to give up the part of John Storm to Frank Weston, who did very creditably in the part.

FREDERICK WARNE was telling friends the other night that in little eighty-year-old Norman DeWittPhillips of this city, who played one of the little princes in Richard III, he had run across one of the brightest stage children he had ever met. The youngster played with an intelligence and understanding far beyond his years, and his imitations of Wardie during the presentation of Richard III at the Oakland performance last Tuesday night, made a great hit with the audience.

In the Zaza company is Hugo Tolland, well known in San Francisco, who adorns the stage more for the fun of it than anything else. Our Chicago correspondent writes that he is the same old Hugo as ever, with a few more pounds of flesh each year.

NANCE O'NEIL company have given up their intended engagement in Honolulu. They play Salt Lake two weeks, commencing January 17, then in Denver and then to Vancouver, before sailing for the Australian tour. J. LOU HALETT is personally directing the tour of the Passion Play Company, in which his agency is interested. The company is playing to good business along down the line this week, and will tour Arizona, Texas and Mexico.

The Columbia

This Christian continues to hold interest at the Columbia and to draw large audiences. Gradually people are getting to comprehend the magnificent portrayal of Lord Robert Ure by Edward Emery, and to appreciate it as one of the most artistic and convincing performances seen in San Francisco for a long time. Owing to the illness of J. M. Colville, Frank Weston has been giving us a very acceptable John Storm. The play will finish its run next week.

The Tivoli

This brilliant extravaganza, Little Bo-Peep, continues to draw enthusiastic audiences at the Tivoli. It is full of life and merriment, bright catchy songs, gorgeous costumes and picturesque scenic effects. Anna Litcher, with her sweet voice and charming personality, makes a bewitching Bo-Peep, and Charlotte Beck, in a costume of white and gold, is lovely as Fairy Goodluck. Wm. Schuster as Baby Bunting, Annie Meyers, jaunty and vivacious in the role of Little Boy Blue, Alf Wheelan as Old Mother Hubbard, are some of the interesting characters. Tom Greene makes an excellent Mephisto, but in spite of his makeup, sings like an angel, his voice being fresh, ringing and musical. Ferris Hartman, with his usual fund of good humor and wit, keeps things lively from first to last, bursts of laughter and applause greeting his songs and sallies. Miss Ida Wyatt, clever in her songs and dancing, is justly a drawing card. The scene in the Japanese tea garden, with an array of pretty girls in fetching costumes, and the forest scene where Tom Greene sings with a rousing chorus of huntsmen, are bright bits of the charming holiday spectacle. Pantomime and fan dances are introduced and the curtain falls upon the butterfly transformation scene of brilliant color and marvellous beauty.

Mary Francis Faino.

New Alhambra

The famous Irish comedians, Murray and Mack, are at the Alhambra this week in their operatic farce, Finigan's Hall, and they have been favored with splendid houses. Finigan's Hall is by far the best attraction presented at the Alhambra since its opening, and it is to be regretted that it will not remain another week. Murray and Mack are of necessity the life of their play and they keep their audiences in uproarious laughter from start to finish with their famous witticisms. They are ably assisted by Chas. Barry, who played the part of Weary Walker. His makeup, dialect and general characterization were excellent, especially in his imitation of Sousa. Jas. Conlan played the part of Widow Gallagher to perfection, and Kittie Beck cavitons around and does some clever dancing. The Grunson Sisters sing a few raptim melodies in an acceptable manner, and the Primrose Quintette secure numerous encores with their catchy songs.

Grand Opera House

SINBAD, the Christmas extravaganza, is running the second week at this popular house, and crowded houses attest the real worth of this gorgeous spectacular play and they keep their audiences in uproarious laughter from start to finish with their famous witticisms.

The applause is frequent and loud, as the intensely interesting features appear and then vanish. Wm. Wolff is indefatigable in his untiring energies, and is the center around whom revolve the other brilliant satellites. The clever and amusing specialties introduced this week but added to the interest. Mr. Jones has certainly made a great hit with his holiday production this year. Aloma Maitland and Mark T. Burns, two of the stars, are the latest imports of the character department. Other performers, equally well chosen, are due to appear. The Amazon march is a dazzling feature and the finale, The Evolution of Nature, a revelation of perfect stage production.

The Alcazar

CHIMMIE FADDEN is playing its second week at the Alcazar with full the success of the first—for who can resist the chance of a glimpse at the Bowery where "they do such things and they say such things" in so wonderfully a way. Its the opportunity of a life-time to make the acquaintance of such true slum types as Chimmie, the little brick! and the redoubtable Mrs. Murphy. Marie Howe, in the latter role, has made the hit of the season. So clever a characterization, so finished in all the conical details of gesture and make-up, of voice and manner, shows what can be done in a subordinate part and yet not encroach on the principals. Mr. Seabury, as Chimmie, has succeeded truly and guiltlessly loyal to his "loine" friends, yet keen, quick on-witting of trickery that "ain't no farmers." "Miss Crosby is the Frenchiest of French maids, "en passant," as electrifying in unexpected flashes of explosion as the real article, and as artistic in contrivance. Miss Foster, as Fanny Van Cortland, has all the grace of a "t'oroughbred," yet is a shade too condescending in manner, perhaps, too coldly calmly superior to her "entoire age" from her Bowery proteges, Chimmie, his mother, and Maggie, to her papa and rival lovers. George Nicholas as Larry, Ernest Howell as Moxie, represent the unhappy side of the Bowery life, and so complete the picture. Mr. Townsend has so cleverly and truthfully drawn a phase of life almost unreadable of by a large majority even of the people in whose very midst the Bowery lives out its own noisy, throbbing life.

The California

At the California this week T. Daniel Frawley gives the first production in America of Seymour Hicks and Fred G. Latham's Adelphi melodrama, With Flying Colors, though what the name has to do with anything concerning the play, is a mystery. Five acts, with sixteen scenes, and the shortest of short intervals, make up a long evening of constantly recurring surprises. The play is elaborately staged, every detail being carried out with an exactness and a lavish display of extravagant expenditure which the character of the play does not warrant. It speaks volumes, however, for Mr. Frawley's artistic and conscientious carrying out of every possible stage effect, which is one of the many reasons for his great success in the career he has so well mapped out for himself. There being forty-two actors who have speaking parts in this ever-changing, never-ending melodrama—not to mention the hordes who make up the howling mob in several scenes—it is obviously impossible to write up all the various characters and their doings.

Mr. Frawley as Lient. Dare, is cordially applauded at every entrance by his admirers in the audience and as Lient. Dare is offsmes at the mercy of the heavy villain of the play, his fortunes are watched with eager interest. Francis Byrne as James Strange- ways, not only acted, but was, the said villain, the quiet man of dainty nerve, whom you instinctively loathe, but yet admire for his cool assumption of authority.

H. S. Doffield as Sir John Derrick the Banker, was the typical English gentleman of quiet refinement and little force of character. Frank Mathieu, his son, did the happy-go-lucky, spunkthrift part very creditably. Harrington Reynolds as the Bank Manager, did a delightful bit of acting as the dignified, slightly gray business man whom one could but admire in spite of his villainy. Wallace Shaw, as Mr. Weldon of Scotland Yards, went quietly about his work as the skulhounds, did in the genuine detective style.

Clarence Chase as a midshipman deserves especial mention for the very artistic manner in which he carries out his part, evidently a male flirt to the manner born.

Mr. Chas. R. Welch as a Lieutenant—the law girls Idol—is a handsome, dashing officer whom all the ladies adore.

Mary Hampton, as the Banker's daughter, carries out her heavy role with credit to herself.

Miss Van Buren as Polly is full of life, and her cockney speech with that of her lover, Harry Belt (Mr. J. R. Amory) is excellent. Mr. Amory kept the audience on good terms with himself by his irresistibly funny sayings and doings.

Markn Barney, as Mrs. Hackett, is a beautiful woman doing an odious character, which even her late repentance does not atone for. Theodore Hamilton as Gen. Bellingfield, a retired officer, was the very man for the place. One could almost imagine himself at the Presidio in days not long past with this huge, self-complacent officer in charge. Regional Travers, Clarence Montaine, Phosa McAllister and Pearl Landers were all notable for good work in their several parts.

Fred Niblo is on route with the Behman show.
THE COLUMBIA

The final week of The Christian at the Columbia Theater will begin on Monday evening. The attraction to follow is the James-Kidder-Hanford combination, who will present The Winter's Tale on a scale of magnificence. The production of The Winter's Tale by Messrs. Wagenhals & Kemper, in which Louis James, Miss Kidder, and Charles B. Hanford are to appear here, is said to be in every way worthy of comparison with Mary Anderson's. The advance sale of seats for the first week of the engagement will begin on Thursday morning.

THE NEW ALHAMBRA

Tomorrow afternoon the Rentz-Santley Company will open at the New Alhambra for a week's engagement with a very capable company of burlesque people. The performance they give is a very laughable one throughout, interspersed with clever specialties and bright songs. It opens with a hilarious travesty entitled A Masquerade Ball, in which the entire company appears. This is followed by a very strong olio. The chief charm of the entire performance is the grand finale, An Affair of Honor, adapted from the famous French painting at the Bouicere Salon, Paris. There are three scenes to the pantomime, ending with a realistic duel between two women who are very clever with the rapiers. The next attraction at the New Alhambra will be the Kay's great success A Hot Old Time which opens Sunday, Jan. 14.

THE GRAND

The Grand Opera House is being crowded nightly. This is the most conclusive evidence that can possibly be offered of the popularity of Sinbad. Among the Novelties this week is a coon song by Edith Mason, Ma Carolina Twins, the effect of which is heightened by the appearance of a couple of interesting pickanninies. It is encored five and six times nightly. Sinbad will begin its third week Monday evening when a new edition will be presented.

THE CALIFORNIA

The Princess and the Butterfly, next week at this handsome theater, is one of the brightest and cleverest plays Pinero has written. It teems with smart sayings in its clever thrusts at fashionable follies and the unmasking of social hypocrisy. It has for its motto, "Those who love deep never grow old," and tells a love story that is full of pathos and interest. The players interpreting it have been selected with especial care by Mrs. Franksley from Bis large organization, and San Francisco theater-goers can look forward to not only a clever but a most enjoyable series of performances.

THE TIVOLI

With peals of merriment, the holiday spectacle, Little Bo-Peep is nightly being received at the Tivoli Opera House by large and delighted audiences. A significant fact which tells of the great success of the gorgeous extravaganza, is, that almost every evening, patrons of the theater visit the box office between the acts, and secure seats for another performance. Following the extravaganza, the next production at the Tivoli will be Frank Daniels' greatest success, The Idol's Eye, which will be given at the Tivoli for the first time in America at popular prices.

THE ORPHEUM

The new bill includes some of the best entertainment material in the world. At the head of the new bill are the Eliene Sisters, two of the cleverest character comedians in the country. They come armed with a new sketch by George Cohan. The piece is called Dangerous Mrs. De-laney, and is said to be one of the funniest things Cohan ever wrote. Frank Latona, the musical tramp, is one of the most entertaining individuals in vaudeville. He is a natural comedian, and with his ability for humor combines a skill in the manipulation of musical instruments which has made him famous the world over. John and Nellie McCarthy will present a sketch entitled A Wall Street Broker, and said to be very good. Charles A. Gardner, the famous Dutch comedian, completes the list of new-comers. Fougere, the famous Parisian chanteuse, has been retained for one week longer. The other holdovers are Billy Rice and H. W. Frimman, the Rozines, Dorothy Drew, Thorne and Carleton.
NEW YORK
Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK: Dec. 31.—The first week of the new year finds a prosperous midwinter season for all kinds of amusements. Grand opera is of course the most expensive form of amusement to which the public can go, unless it is in piglets that will not let women in. But besides these two extremes of public delight, we have in abundance light operas, comedies, farces, minstrel shows, and plays. A few companies have returned from the road after some rather perilous undertakings, and upon the whole theaters and all kinds of interests have enjoyed marked prosperity.

Manager Grau of the grand opera company has brought joy to all the patrons of the art of singing who do not have money to burn and have to select their favorites operas and music and no magnificence. Herefore, no matter how many times an unexpected opera had to be substituted for the one advertised, and how many principal singers who have a cold has to be absent, the management will return to the money to all who wish it, or will exchange tickets to any other performance desired by the disappointed ticket holders. This is as it should be. It is not likely that much money will ever have to be paid back or lost money will be refunded by the exchange of tickets. It is generally conceded that Mr. Grau has always tried to give the best opera possible for the money, and it is known that many of the substitute performances have been better than some of those originally on the schedule. It is just as likely that some one pays to see Carle in Carvalle, for instance, and Susanne Adams is put on in something else, the purchaser of a ticket should have a right to get his money back if he should happen not to wish to see the substitute performance. Singers cannot afford to appear when they have colds. Changes of program will always be necessary more or less, and the more knowledge that persons can keep their tickets long in advance, with the certainty of getting their money's worth, is going to make grand opera more popular than ever in this city. Even Mr. Grau must be chocking to himself at the success of this season's opening. Getting your money back from a theater box office is something like with a bank; when you know you can get your money back you don't want it.

Christmas brought three new plays to Broadway theaters, which seem to be doing well: My Lady's Lord at the Empire; Three Little Ladies at the Fifth Avenue, and Nat C. Goodwin and Maxine Elliott at the Knickerbocker in The Cowboy and the Lady. My Lady's Lord is the closest of H. V. Esmond's best plays. It is full of romance, full of adventure, contains plenty of comedy and enough tragedy. The cast includes William Fawcett, Jessie Millard, Sidney Herbert, W. H. Crampton, Blanche Burton, Sarah Perry, George W. Howard and Joseph Wheelock Jr. My Lady's Lord may be the means of ridiculing such plays as The Priest and The Little Lord, and you have yet to see their day the advent of My Lady's Lord may be a good thing.

Nat Goodwin's cowboy and Maxine Elliott's lady at the Knickerbocker make a very clever combination as brought to the stage by Clyde Fitch. The cast also includes Burr McIntosh and Minnie Dunpee as fun makers. The Cowboy and The Lady is a kind of imitation of the Paix, but the play is original. It deals with frontier life, with plenty of cowboys and Indians. Thomas O'Brien, Cayler Hastings, Charles Ledyard, John Flood and E. Lewis contribute to the success of the play.

The Three Little Ladies which was brought to the Fifth Avenue last week was called The Queen of the Wheedle if R. A. Bartlet wrote it for the use of the Boston Caedts. As a amateur production it attracted the attention of Augustus Daly and the producer of this opera has but the success of The Runaway Girl kept it off. E. W. Corliss put to music the opera of the Knickerbocker story. Max Calhoun, Raymond Hite and Edward Lawrence were the little ladies. Adele Ritchie, Nellie Braggins, William T. Corliss and William Philip carried off the vocal honors. Others in the cast are Thomas O'Brien, Kathleen, Mary Vandell, Ida, Clara Palmer. The show has plenty of dash and will be a go. The music alone ought to be enough to carry it, because no prettier new music has been heard here this season.

Marcella Sembinski made her first appearance this season last week in Kostin's Il Barbier de Seville, and she revealed the same exquisite vocal quality of tone which enables her to sing like no other woman on the operatic stage. Her singing is a source of unexcited delight. She never has to reach for notes. No matter bow high, they are always at her command. Pini-Corsi, Europe's greatest basso-buffo, also made his first appearance last week in Mozart's Don Giovanni, but he did not have as good an opportunity for the display of humor as Edouard Desicke had. He played handful better and/Index as the season advances. Antonia Scotti was the new soprano in last week's production. He has a genuine baritone voice—one of your tenors short on their upper notes nor your basso shy on the lower register. But he was so nervous in his opening performance that he had to hurry so as not to lose breath before the close of his phrases. This is a fault which will need to be remedied in time. ROB ROY.

ST. LOUIS
Special Correspondent.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 25.—During Mrs. Leslie Carter's engagement at the Olympic Theater, Dramatic Critic Kline of the Post Dispatch and myself after seeing the rendition had a discussion as to what could be the finale of problems plays. Mr. Kline writes the following letter to his paper which will interest the readers of the DRAMATIC REVIEW:

"The query was put to the writer during the Zaza engagement:

"We have had The Turtle and Sappho, and now we have Zaza. Later, I suppose, we will have to go back from Masha Adams reported to be the worst of all. What are we to have after that? It was a question to set one to thinking. Of course, all admit that there must be a line somewhere, which cannot be crossed by the stage, because the public will not follow. Where is that line? And if ever that line has not crossed it, are we not perniciously in it? Were not Sappho and Zaza about the limit?

"That is a matter for argument. We thought Camille was bad, but now, beside some of the things offered us, we send young girls to see it, and call it 'an lesson in morality,' then turn it as a classic. Perhaps, some day we will do the same for Sappho, who knows?

"The series of Problem plays offered us a short while back were rated as at beyond scenery that can be piled up and ingeniously these days. Now, we do not want social perplexities velly set in their presentation to us. Suggestion some time ago was all that we would permit: broad and unexplained exploitation is none too bad for us. Really, after all, there is much more we could have!

"One is inclined to agree with Miss Nether- pole in what she declared when she was here that she had to give this sort of plays by cause the public demanded it. You cannot make the public see what it does not care to witness. Many an author has tried that, to no more.

"The fact is, the public wants to see the risque play, and it is going to have it, so long as there are persons to play that kind. Call it a low tendency, a perverted taste, what you will, the fact remains that both players and playwrights are but supplying the demand—as any good business man does.

"There is this to be urged in extenuation: We may have become so secure, so strong, in our ideas of wrong and right, that we can wish such plays not to be defended, that we can say with Sappho or a Zaza and get no ill effects. When a person is able to look upon sin with impunity and with no fear of consequences, it is a highly moral race. Truly, it is better to be tempted and to resist, than never to be tempted at all, and if—if, mind you, the situation is that where it can we exemptify upon our stage the lowest as well as the most inimitating and fascinating lines of vice, and escape condemnation when they are presented to us in most appealing guise, truly, we are a strong and a good nation. But—can we? Aye, there's the rub."

We are certainly favored with delightful Christmas offerings by the local managers. Pat Short, manager of the Olympic, is presenting Charles Frohman's brightest star, Maud Adams, in The Little Minister. It is indeed a wholesome contrast to Sappho and Zaza, and the splendid patronage that the theater has been receiving conclusively shows that a majority of the play-loving public will not be satisfied until the whole theater plays that have not to be turned upon itself and immorality.

George W. Lederer's latest production, Rounders, has made a personal hit with Manager Short's patrons at the Century. Dan Daly, of course, is the featured artist, and the drool monologue and grotesque limbs are as laugh-provoking as ever, while the Klikathe Phyllis Rankin has taken into our ever-increasing army of chappies. Among the other spirits in the cast are Richard Carroll, D. L. Don, Fred Ure, and William Shiner, Christine MacDonald, and Sarah McVicker.

Managers Middleton and Tate of the Central have been an attractive and successful cast in Tauer's, the brilliant and distinguished comedian who is presenting a pretty sketch called, My Husband's Model. Caron and Herbert, Houdini, the Hagi Lola Family, McCale and Daniels, the Three Schlingerman Sisters, Mr. and Mrs. Houtchens, the Quack and the Quack, the Quack and the Quack, and Frank Hall.

Manager Jim Butler of the Standard is giving his patrons a colorful performance with Pull Sheldon's City's Sports' Bur- lesques. It embraces a dazzling bunch of beauteous femininity.

Murray and Mack, coterie of comedians in Flanagan's Fall, is the attraction at the Grand Opera House.

Manager Garen of Havlin's Theater, is double bill put on the "R. O. C." sign this week. The magician that draws the money is The Guilty Mother.

Manager Sam Gumperts of Hopkins' is pleasing his clientele this week with an excellent production of Camille. The vaudeville features are Amont and Domm, Tyndall Quadrate and Beeler.

The Castle Square Opera Company are resting this week and rehearsing for their double bill put on the "R. O. C." sign this week. The magician that draws the money is The Guilty Mother.

same stage a few years ago, and whose roster embraced such stage-folk as Harriet Ford, Mary Hampton, Emma Maddern, T. Dan Frawley, Hudson Liston, Eugene Jepson, H. D. Blakemore, Ernest Hastings and other capable artists, and it must be said that the Valentines came in a mighty close second. The work of Annie Blancke, as Tom McDow; Jessie Bonstelle, as Phl Orlin ankles; Edward B. Mawson, as Alfred Hastings; Chas. Fleming (of this city, and a son of May Agnes Fleming), as Bender; Kate Blancke, as Mrs. Bender; Robt. A. Evans, as Dabney; and Jack Webster (son of Nellie McHenry), as McSmith and Langhorn, is deserving of special mention. Today's bills, in addition to A Scrap of Paper, makes up this week's offerings.

A Fine Play

The Princess and the Butterfly is a fine play, and nearly always satisfies an exacting taste, and its production deserves the cordial approval of all cultivated persons, as well as their material support. We commend it particularly to those sensitive souls who are forever complaining of the degeneracy of the stage and of the lack of plays of literary value. Here is one to suit them, which has, besides its literary value, positive dramatic vitality, and a charm that gets over the footlights in the performance.—

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

SPOKANE

Special Correspondence.

SPOKANE, Wash., Dec. 30.—Gray County Island, Dec. 17 to 22 to small audiences. Matinée Lockett as Daisy Kidder won merited applause, her stuttering and ragtime songs being exceedingly well rendered. The leading lady, Miss Adah Scott, gave a charming and dignified impersonation of Stella Ware and showed to good advantage a magnetic quality which has been noticeable at all shows. Her voice is as acceptable as Vera Wise. Burt Weston and Charles Belais did good work.

The feature of the entertainment was Miss Marie Store's playing on the violin and singing at the same time. She showed great depth of feeling and won many new admirers.

Brown's in Town 12-25 to largest houses of the week. The Vanilla Tea of Nellie and Enid Hart may have proved the life of the show, her charming petite manner winning every one's heart. Her singing remained Leslie Lott's, and the program was considered for the first time on her. Maude True Knowlton, who plays the part of Letty, is indeed a handsome girl, and every one is in love with her before she is on the stage five minutes. Her gowns are dreams.

Pamie Megedy is clever as Primrose, the "lady cook." The balance of the cast are very acceptable.

The representatives of the Ambitiorum presented Manager Haywood with an elk's horn for Christmas, as a mark of the high esteem in which he is held by his attaches. Treasurer Reamnum made the presentation with a few appropriate remarks.

Manager Hemmery of Brown's in Town Company gave a Christmas supper to his troupe at the Spokane Hotel after the performance. Your correspondent had the honor of being one of the guests. A charming time was enjoyed by all.

Eugenie Blair 17-28. DOLPH.

SACRAMENTO

Special Correspondence.

SACRAMENTO, Jan. 1.—Cannot begin this letter without first saying something in regard to the splendid holiday number of the San Francisco Dramatic Review. It certainly is one of the most attractive papers of its class and reflects much credit upon the editors, artists and writers. It should do much good in increasing your list of subscribers.

J. L. Stockwell and company in My Friend from India opened the Orpheum Opera House with a success today and continues tonight and Tuesday.

Richards and Pringle's Minstrels in a return engagement the 31. On 26 Black Patti, The Highest Paid of the Dowagers, and James Kidder-Hanford Company for three performances, including matinée 9-30. Callie Parlor of Native Daughters minstrelled the 18. The Hoist's Opera Company 12-21, with the exception of the 16th, when they give way for The Christmas . Efforts are being made to have Emma Nevada sing here. As she has many personal friends in this city, there is no doubt of the engagement being successful. Don Camo of this city is spending the holidays with his family. She has just returned from a successful Eastern engagement. Miss Vina Woods, a writer of this city, has submitted a tragedy, Horatio, to Frederick Warde, who has accepted it and it is to be in his repertoire next season.

HONOLULU

Special Correspondence.

HONOLULU, H. I., Dec. 26.—The Boston Lyric Opera Company closed its engagement at the Queen's House Christmas night, playing Cavalleria Rusticana, second act of Fra Diavolo and first act of Boccaccio. The attendance was fair. Tuesday, the 16th, was the event of the Lyric's season, the occasion being the appearance of Mrs. Annis Mahon Turner as Marguerite in Faust. The house was filled and all the notices in Honolulu society were to be seen there. The Government, out of compliment to Mrs. Turner, gave her the use of the Government Band, which appeared in the fourth act. Faust was repeated at the matinée on the 16th, Mrs. Turner again taking the part of Marguerite.

Notwithstanding that the Lyric Company showed here eight weeks and that the prices of admission were rather high, and being holiday season, the financial support has been very good. Col. Thompson expects to have the company play a four weeks' season next month of operas in November or December, 1906.

Through a good deal of negotiating, Manager Cohen of the Orpheum has secured a four weeks' contract from Col. Thompson for the entire Lyric Company to appear in the Opera House, commencing tonight. It is quite a drop in prices and the same repertoire will be produced as was given at the same theatre. Col. Thompson puts his company on with a fixed amount per week, the Orpheum Company standing the loss or gain. The move is satisfactory to all the Lyric people, as they are charmed with Honolulu.

During the stay of the Lyric Company at the Orpheum the regular company, including Francis Beggin, Lilian Haanen, M. B. Curtis and wife, Wm. Fletcher, Edith Fletcher, Guy Livingston and W. S. Johnson as the stock company and others; with L. A. Richlano, serpentine dancer; Jane Broadfoot, soprano; Lilian P. and Frank Smith, rifle shots, and Sid Baxter, slack wire performer, leave for Hilo, Hawaii today for the winter season. Curtis and his wife have been taking part in the curtain raiser at the Orpheum for the last week, and was put on his old favorite, "Hai!" O'Fusen week of January 1st.

H. A. FRANKLIN.

The Winter's Tale, by the James-Kidder-Hanford triumvirate, will prove a decided novelty to local theatrical circles, as it has not been seen here in years, and never, on so pretentious a scale as it will be at the Columbia.

From present appearances the third week of The Christmas at the Columbia will be played to even larger business than either of the first two, although they have been record-breakers in themselves.

McDonough Stock Co.

COTTON, MARK & COMPANY and Belasco & Thall will place a stock company in the McDonough Theater, Oakland, opening January 22 or 28. It will be known as the McDonough Stock Company. For the new company Fred Belasco has already signed Benjamin Howard, leading man, said to be good-looking and the superlatively comfortable and self-assured, leading woman; Helen Henry, ingenue; and Margaret Marshall. This new company will present the very best class of plays at popular prices and should meet with the enthusiastic approval of Oakland people.

Clarence M. Brune Sued

CLARENCE M. BRUNE, the actor, and his wife, Minnie Tittel Brune, were sued Tuesday by Edward Byrne for the recovery of a ranch of 83,000 acres in Durango, Mexico, valued at $14,000, which Byrne purchased for $8,000 for shares of the Moscow National Bank of Moscow, Idaho. Byrne was the cashier and one of the directors of this bank, and represented that the shares were worth $14,000 each, but Byrne contends they were worthless, as the bank was insolvent. The stock was placed in escrow for Byrne, but he has refused to receive it. Brune got the deed for the ranch. Mr. Brune's side of the question will be published later.

Revival of Hoyt's Plays

MANAGER S. H. PRIENDLDER, who, during the summer, present a big revival of Hoyt's best plays by a company of well-known farce comedians, headed by the best of the present Dunn and Riley aggregation. The engagement will be a protracted one and from the people who will be features of the productions, there can be no doubt but that the revival of these old-time popular farces will meet with great popularity.

The talented actress, Mrs. Henry Vanderhoff, comes with the James-Kidder-Hanford Company to the Columbia.
The Orpheum

Fongere, the dashing Parisian, was the hit of the Orpheum last week, despite the fact that it was her second week and that there were several new and very creditable acts on the bill. Hercoon song in French is very artistic—in fact, she is artistic in all of her singing and acting. She is by far the best of the French importations yet seen at the Orpheum. The Rosinos, a pair of acrobatic comedians, present a real novelty. With a bar room setting, they do some clever turns. A bilard table with springs serves to aid their lofty movements. Dorothy Drew is a dainty, pretty and artistic comedienne who makes a hit singing Arrah Go On and I'd Leave My Happy Home for You. She also does some high Kicking, and broke her nose at it in the early part of the week. Billy Rice and H. W. Frillman, popular minstrels, furnish an amusing sketch, called A Deserted Mansion, introduced by a solo by Mr. Rice. The actors are worthy of a more entertaining skit, however; yet they please. Douglas and Ford do a song and dance act that is somewhat above the ordinary. The hold overs are still pleasing. They are La Sylpho, Carleton and Thorne, the Averys, the Biograph. Altogether, it is one of the best bills seen at the Orpheum in a long time, and its equal will be seen the coming week.

The Olympia

The holiday program at the Olympia is good. The Shields Bros., with their bicycle riding are doing seemingly impossible wonders. Offie and Bert Lamott, the clever acrobats, hold the attention of the audience with their marvelous feats. Chandler and McPherson made a hit. Marie Wood was encored for her musical numbers. Carleton & Royce, Camelia and Dot Stanley are still playing to delighted audiences. Vera Chandon and Matt Keefe have pleasing numbers. The Hungarian Orchestra give some good singing music.

Vaudville Notes

Marie Brandes goes to Arizona. Mae Preston is still a big Minneapolis favorite.

Nadine Allen will play in this city at an early date.

Blanche La Mar arrived from Butte a few days ago.

Alice Fairbanks and Grace Anderson are at Dawson City.

Geo. H. Wilson plays the Officers' circuit in the near future.

Madeline, the fancy rifle shot, arrived in town a few days ago.

Carmelita, the Cuban dancer, is at Gem Theater, Missoula, Mont.

The Mohring Brothers are a decided hit at the Los Angeles Orpheum.

The Divine Dodson opens at the Orpheum, Los Angeles, Calif.

Wanda is underlined at the Standard Theater, Bakersfield, Jan. 6.

Elise Bellwood opens at the Monte Carlo Theater, Keewick, on the 8th.

Bessie Bonehill has left Johannesburg for London, and she is coming back home by way of Australia, reaching San Francisco in about six months.

Henderson and Ross, a well-known Eastern sketch team, are heading this way.

Della Le Fevre will be a new face at the Casino Theater, Sacramento, Jan. 8.

Leo Bird and his burlesque company passed through this city en route South.

Josephine Strong will make her first San Francisco appearance at the Chutes Monday night.

The Leonord Brothers opens at the Chutes on the 15th. Roberts, Stanlax & Co. are due on the 4th.

Hastings and Hall, the Coles, and Tilly Taylor open at the New Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, Jan. 8.

Lola Cotton, the child phenomenon, opens at the Savoy Theater, Victoria, B. C., and at the DelElbitt Sisters open same date.

Keeling and Rabston are at the Coeur d'Alene Theater, Spokane, Wash., with Rossland, B. C., and Missoula, Mont., to follow.

Marie Wood, the popular California nightingale, is still an Olympia attraction. She has been secured for the Olympia for an indefinite period. Her engagement has been extended.

The New Vienna Buffet at Los Angeles is now one of the best appointed houses on the coast. It has been enlarged to three times its former size, and now takes in the whole building.

H. B. Tiedemann, the popular manager of Kapp and Streets Concert Hall, has secured for the coming week Rand and Raud, M. Tannous, Madeline, Fanny Foster, Julia Byron, and Minnie Ward.

The Tivoli Theater, Stockton, Calif., under the management of Mastro and Renz, is doing a tremendous business. They contemplate enlarging their house. Particular attention will be paid to the interior decorations.

Edward Adams, the popular Eastern vocalist and comedian, will arrive in this city Jan. 11, 1900. This city is his home, it being his first visit home in five years. His many friends will soon see him on our local boards.

Fongere, the fascinating French comedienne at the Orpheum, is considered the best actress of any of the Canadian girls who have come to the country. She is a real artist. She was it who advertised that she was infatuated with Jim Jeffries; in fact, she came over on the same steamship with him and thus cannot a lot of valuable talk. After such a bold stake as that, it is no wonder that she soon had many offers from astute managers.

Jack Wyatt—forlornly of the song-and-dance team, Silver and Wyatt—died in this city Dec. 31, just as the old year was fading away and the new peeped in. Mr. Wyatt was well and favorably known all over the coast. He was buried Jan. 2, 1900, at Mount Olivet cemetery. His wife, Mae Wyatt, a serio-comic vocalist, father, mother, and two sisters survive him. His funeral was largely attended. Many elegant floral offerings testified that his friends were legion.

Dorothy Drew, the handsome little dance act that is at the Orpheum, broke her nose New Year's matinee, with a misplaced kick. She wears a plug to prevent her nose from growing crooked and marring the beauty of her attractive face. This is the second time. Miss Drew has kicked herself in the face, but before the damage was trifling. Before a few knockouts from landing on the point of the chin and an occasional black eye, Dorothy has not suffered before. She pluckily continues with every performance.

The re-opening of the New Standard Theater, at Bakersfield, Dec. 23rd, was a big success. The house presented a pretty appearance, with its beautiful and new decorations. The theater was packed from pit to dome, while each and every artist "caught on" in big shape. Manager Carillo can well afford to be proud of his opening.

Murray and Mack have been doing a fine business in their tour of this coast. They will continue under the management of Jos. W. Spears next year, and the firm of Mack & Spears will have three attractions on the road: Murray and Mack in a new comedy; Hoy's, a Brass Monkey, and Finnan's Ball.

American vaudeville acts are being greatly appreciated in Berlin. The marvelous Dunham's, Thompson's elephants, the Dare Brothers, single bar act, and Amelia Stone, the American Lariat and Stack & Milbon are meeting with great success in Germany. They expect to return to America this year.

In fact she is a bigger hit than at her previous engagement. This talented artist plays a return engagement, then goes direct East, playing the Orpheum circuit, with the Castle and Koli circuit to follow.

Polly Wells, De Vere and Allen, Beatrice Carlisle, Margaret Grace, Harvey and Rice, Marie Stewart, Minnie Elwood, Mamie Haswick, Laura Lanston, Starkey and Martelle, and Hadley and Hart are at the Parlor Theatre, Duluth, Minn.

Frank Sheppard of the variety team of Wood and Sheppard died Sunday night in London from pneumonia. He had been preparing to return to the United States after a two years' visit to Europe.

Zavo and Mle. Hilda were prominent features at Proctors, New York, last week.

Digby Bell made his entrance into vaudeville at the Haymarket, Chicago, last week.

Billy and Madrid Jackson are playing the Keith circuit.
LOCAL NOTES
DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

Thursday afternoon of last week Vladimir De Pachmann gave his second piano recital before as appreciative an audience as greeted him upon his first appearance. His program included Sonate op. 53 C. Major [Beethoven] Seventeen Variations serious-es op. 34 D. Minor [Schumann] Nocturne

Invitation a La Danse, op. 65, D. flat, [Von Weber] the Chopin numbers creating most enthusiasm. Friday following his program embraced works of Schumann, Chopin, Schubert-Liszt and C. M. von Weber.

CALVARY CHURCH SERVICE.

Calvary Presbyterian Church, that has one of the best choirs in the city gave a beautiful Christmas Song Service, Christmas eve. The program was Organ Prelude, R. D. Burness; Hymn

STUDIO ECHOES.

Madame Jeannette Crawford has returned to Los Angeles after a visit of some days to San Francisco. She says the Ethel Society of Los Angeles are greatly interested in her work and she is to give a talk upon color during the month. The California Ladies Quaret under her direction have had a busy and most successful season.

Madame von Meyerink entertained a number of friends in her hospitable home on Wednesday evening of last week, the guest of honor being Miss Maud Fay, who is coming to the front as a singer through the excellent tuition she has received from Madame von Meyerink. The school has made rapid progress and is turning out very bright pupils. The Faculty embraces Madame Von Meyerink, director and head of the vocal department; Mrs.
Mary Fairweather, operatic and dramatic work. Mr. Arthur Pichon, one of our leading musicians, is in the piano department, Roscoe Warren
Lucy, organist, besides assistants.
The evening spent last week was most enjoyable, several of those present contributing musical numbers. Mrs. Von Meyerink is a charming hostess, and an hour or two in the artistic atmosphere of her home is always a pleasure.

Mr. Franklin Palmer, organist of St. Dominick's Church, gave the third of a series of organ recitals on New Year's Eve, his program being Variations on an Ancient Christmas Carol [Gaston Dethier] Cantilene pastorale
[S. Rousseau] Traumerei [Schumann]
[Transcribed by Franklin Palmer,] March of the Magi Kings [Dubois], the sustained high notes suggesting the guiding star. Offeratory on the Christmas Hymn, Adeste Fidelis [Franklin Palmer,] GrandChorus [Th.
Salome.]

MUSIC IN GENERAL.

Without doubt the finest choir in England today is that of Magdalen College, Oxford. And in the same breath one must also mention St. Paul's cathedral, London, and King's College, Cambridge. These three afford the best examples in the world of the possibilities, the beauty, the perfection, of vested choirs of men and boys.

The problem which Handel so successfully solved in the oratorio was that of giving such dramatic force to the music in which he clothed the sacred texts, as to be able to dispense with all scenic and stage effects. One of the finest operatic composers of the time, the rival of Bach as an instrumental composer and performer on the harpsichord and organ, the unanimous verdict of the musical world is that no one has ever equaled him in completeness, range of effect, elevation and variety of conception, and sublime treatment of sacred music. We can readily appreciate HanDel's own words when describing his own sensations in writing the Messiah: "I did think I did see all heaven before me and the great God himself."

An Old Violin

A Syracusan took an old violin into a music store for repairs the other day. The instrument, he said, had been his father's and his grandfather's before him. The wood of which it was made was full of minute worm holes.

"This violin was brought from England, was it not?" the music dealer asked.

"Yes; but how did you know that?"

"From the worm holes. Such holes as these are frequently found in old violins which have been at some time in England, but, strange to say, the ravages cease when the instruments are brought to this country. There is something in the climate here fatal to the tiny worm which so frequently ruins musical instruments in that country."

An Autograph Steinway

The well-known firm of E. F.
Droop & Sons has in its possession a Steinway baby grand piano that is unique. They call it an autograph piano, for the reason that it bears the autographs of a number of famous people. Whenever a celebrity visits
Washington, he or she, as the case may be, is invited to the Droop music emporium and asked to inscribe his or her name on this piano. The names are scratched on the top board of the instrument, by means of a small sharp-pointed steel instrument produced for the purpose.

In the order in which they appear below are to be seen the names of the peeress Melba, Nordica, Paderewski, Jospeh, Joseph Hoffman, Emil Paur,
Max Heinrich, Ysaye, Henry Martean, Aime Lachaine and Jean Girardy, Reginald de Koven, Lillian Russell, Ben Davis, Wilton Lackaye,
Leo Wheat, Hub. Smith, and G.
Trentanova, the famous Italian sculptor. Another autograph to be seen is that of Eugene Sondheim, the strong man, who lifted the instrument in question at a time when seven men were seated upon it.

The Droops claim to be the originators of this truly original craze for autographs.—Music Trade, Washington, D. C.
When Sacramento was a Great Show Town

Among the oldest theatrical managers in the State is H. S. Beals of Sacramento. Beals went into the theatrical business with Christie's Minstrels on Broadway, New York, above Grand street, in 1842. In 1853 he came to San Francisco and went to work for Manager Tom Maguire as an usher. That same year he went to Sacramento, where he became manager for Tom Maguire's theater, known as the Forrest Theater, and situated on J street, between Second and Third. Beals is full of reminiscences of early days, and delighted to talk of the time when there was plenty of talent and plenty of money in the theatrical business. He tells of the time when Edwin Booth and his brother, together with Mrs. Edwin Forrest and a strong company played all of one season in the old Sacramento Theater on Third street, between I and J. For one whole month they played The Marble Heart, and Beals says the theater was crowded every night, and $1200 houses were the rule straight through.

Mr. Beals, in talking of old times to a Bee reporter recently, said that Booth's engagement in this city was followed with a series of plays with the popular Barney Williams in the title role. Williams and his company opened with The Forty Thieves, followed by Barney, the Baron, Calahan on His Last Legs, and other Irish character pieces which drew heavily every night. He tells of the life in Sacramento in those days when every young man-about-town was personally acquainted with the actors and actresses who nightly occupied the stage, and of the good times that they used to have.

The greatest lion of them all was Edwin Booth. He had not then made his mark, but all of Sacramento recognized him in him a man of wonderful talent and the society people of that day were continually sending him invitations to card parties and socials. But Edwin Booth was a great Bohemian, and at the same time retiring in nature. He preferred the company of such men as composed the Volunteer Fire Department to the prettiest parlor in Sacramento, and could be found almost any time, when not asleep or at work, at department headquarters talking to the members. It is related of him that many a time when his turn came to appear on the stage he had to be sent for and was always found chatting to his adoring friends, the foremen, across the way from the playhouse.—Sacramento Bee.

Bernhardt's Anger

Jean Lorrain says Mme. Sarah Bernhardt had a scene with Rostand, on Tuesday in Paris, over the non-completion of his new play Algésiras, upon which Bernhardt has put all her hopes for the Exposition. The actress discovered upon her return to Paris that only three acts of five were finished. She received the news with shrieks and floods of tears. She made Rostand promise to complete the play as it had been read to the troupe in her theater. She made him come with these three acts ready, which are said to be such a brave. It appears that the principal role is not that of the Duc de Reichstadt, but that of an old hero of the faithful but ill-tempered sort, Chaptamant, and around whom the action is developed. Rostand insists upon Coquelin for the role, while Bernhardt wants Guity. Lorrain remarks that with Bernhardt and Coquelin success is certain, but that means 100,000 francs out of her exchequer. Which will win, actress or author, is the question.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW

JANUARY 6th, 1900
Chiefsly Music and Drama.

The return of the boomerang. What have I done to deserve a pass? Nothing, lady, nothing. It is what I have not done.

No, I should not call it exactly aristotle to have one bunch of flowers do gift and courtship duty through three acts, several years apart, but it is frugal man—frugal. And who for flaws? If they are not puer flowers that rattle, offer up a praise service and put a dollar in the plate.

Peter Robertson needs no lift at the hand of mine, but I hope he will forgive my chuckling aloud over a bully good thing of his and say nothing if I reprint it. I refer to his comparing life to a vaudeville in three olio's. The round-up is the essence.

"The third olio, ladies and gentlemen, will open with the screaming face, 'Domestic Troubles.' No, it will be a serio-comic sketch, 'Darling I am Growing Old!' No, 9, the celebrated monologue, 'Old Age!' and the orchestra will play the funeral march as the performer passes into the wings."

"And the ashenes curtain comes down.

That he did not underline funeral and ashenes, I thank him, yet experience teaches me it would have been better if he had. Now if some one will answer my last remark and tell me I'm not the only rivet in the cruiser, I shall not care at all. I shall be so glad to find that there are others.

"The Program Magazine Publishing Co. Limited—Gentlemen—No, you are no gentlemen. Through you our manners are fast going to the dogs and our morals are tumbling after. Limited—Perhaps, but not as to pages.

Time was when our mothers taught us to fold the program neatly—cast, scenes and orchestration up—and make no further rattle with it, under pain of being subtracted from the orchestra and added to the wrong side of the closet door. But now with five and often six pages of diversified lies mixed up with the truths we are after, how shall we teach our children the manners of the play house? Of course we have the cold comfort of the maid servant, who, breaking a valued bit of old china, knows there is one thing less to dust, but does that fill the niche in the cabinet?

Mr. Redfern's corset may be the most perfect thing he knows of, but hang its perfection—they are deadly offensive when I'm looking to see who plays Tony Lumpkin. The only use I have for La Gripple Pipes at such a time is to shoot them through a pea-shooter at the man who did this thing.

I believe in the Hammam Bath, the cleaner almighty, the maker of five dollar smoking jackets; and in M. Lavin, his only rival, who conceived the brilliant idea of making our own material up. But there are moments no man has a right to steal from me, and I do not believe in the forgiveness of sins. When his funeral march is playing and Peter Robertson's curtain comes down, may the asheas curtain lift it be all that it is cracked up to be. Adopt the foreign custom—give us a clean sheet and charge a penny for it. We shall pay without a murmur.

A friend sends the following as a sample of his ability to write speeches for the heroines of melodrama, the only form of amusement the managers find us worthy of. He comes high, but I think he would be worth it. Heroine (awakening of a dull gray morning). Ah, it rains How the wind howls! Now it rises—but fails to get up. Now it fails—but does not tumble. Upon the roof I hear the drip, drip of the globule from the rainless tank. The alarum soundeth! It is arising time and through the house rushes the odor of the new-mown hot cake and the fried chop. And speaking of odions—do you like the perfume of a cheap green cameris soap? A cake of the aforesaid congenial cleanliness lies hard by. 'Tis never? A gift must be treasured, not laved at the floor of the Spring Valley Water Co. Company? Oh, the sorrow when one has company—the strivings to undo the doings of the previous Mrs. Jones' kisssingame and the erstwhile Mrs. Doolan's wake. But why? The steak is not worth the chew.

The love scene, once so dear to our hearts, is now reduced to ashes and dry bones and we take no pleasure in its. The kiss, the true kiss (none of your pecks mind) the corner-stone of love, is gone where the wood-bine and—will, we allow, but is that any reason it should be shelved altogether to pacify a few elderly trumps and tyrannical Puritans who have no business in the play-houses anyway? And because we overeat, shall there be no more food?

The woman is beautiful. Her gown is a dream—and the man is madly in love. He tells her so. He pours out his very soul. For her he would win the seven diamonds of Launcelot—for her he would desolate another Troy. She yields herself to his arms and—that's all. Or, worse yet, he smooths back the hair from her brow and turns his eyes prayerfully to heaven—as though he heard the wedding bells ring in a formal judgment day and saw the life to follow pass, spectre-like, a special sentence. Is a man thus master of his blood? You know he is not. Such a scene is a silent lie, a cheat, a libel—and I for one, am fast getting in a rage about it. A stage kiss such as one would like to see the climax of a perfect love scene, most imperfect without it, would be the death of several people. Well, let them die. The world could bear up against the loss. At any rate, I could, and just now I have the floor.

Yes, lad, yes, the press agents sometimes lie. Only the very young and pure in heart acknowledge it to be, and then only when brought to bay by the box office receipts. But lie is a hard word, boy, and twere better to call it over-expression.

Side Lights Upon the Well Beloved

FOUGERE
Two twinkling feet, two shapely legs, In silken hose encased, Crippled finger that puffs and pluffles— That's Fougere to the waist. Two wondrous plumos, some coal-black hair, A curl or two afloat, Two saucy eyes, two lips that dare— That's Fougere to the throat. Between the two—now let me think. I can't think—do you care? Some genius—a dash of silk—a bow Well—not much but Fougere!!

MARY VAN BUREN
The rugged road to fame, she sings Across with easy grace. No downward mood is hers—she sings A hope flickers up her face. A countless hope—when stone walls see They tumble in confusion, Beyond, the roses soar. "Come on! We're years in gay profusion."

PADREWSKI
So, you are coming here in March. All hail! We shall then forget De Pacultman, lift thee high upon a pedestal and burn incestry at thy feet. O, the inconstant moon! Next! Ignace Jan, I see thee tottering already.

"O, take me from this insecure position."

Said Ignace.

"For the time is surely coming, When a rival with his thrumming Will outdistance me, if he can, to In the race."

"He has hair two inches shorter."

Said Ignace.

"Should he let it grow I fear me, He will famon be, and hear ye! I, your idol, shall have fallen In disgrace!"

Answers to Correspondents

Mr. Green—What do the vaudeville sketches I see make me think of? They do not make me think.

Dear Miss T.—I mean to educate my little girl for the stage, and as she is far from strong, I thought you might be able to recommend some good tonic in use by the profession.

Madame.—Let the child die.

The Chorus Girl's One Opportunity

Whatever you may think to the contrary, the chorus girl's life is only as merry as she, in her buoyant way, shall make it. "Happy is the man who sings at his work," is daily proven a lie by a look into a tired face, wherein hope and ambition are dulled.

Twenty-five to the dozen or more poorly expresses the chances she thinks she has when she enters the ranks, while one to one thousand is the true ratio.

Farris Hartman said a few words about her some days ago, that may be worth handing on. "Just let her saunter in," he said, "dressed in the top of the fashion, so that all agree she is a stunner, and she stays in the chords, till the last note is dead in her throat, or jarred in its melody, a nail of agony to the principal she supports. (And really, the apropos of a chorus girl is a little obscure.) But let her be down at the heels, coat a misfit, skirt a mishap, hair four colors, hands perhaps none too clean, and she likely has ambition and a healthy chance for big things in future.

Even then, she has but one chance—to quietly and patiently, week by week, understudy the prims donna, and say an extra Ave and three PaterNos ters nightly, that an influenza may take and hold the lady-fast from—say midweek, until Sunday.

This it seems is Alice Neilon's story. Mr. Hartman saw her ability, urged her to try and told her if she did she would see that she was given a chance. Of course he could not see, because he hadn't the least influenza. However, he knew the study would do her no harm and he hoped the chance might come. After bluffing her into studying four long parts [Alice it seems is easily fooled] Gracie Plaisted at last fell ill, Alice stepped into the breach, and her future was made.

Just so with Stella Wilmot, the newly risen star. She was one of the chorus when Kitty Lofrus, the London music hall singer, had the chief part in Gay Paree. No one can be quite sure that the head of an importation will not be summarily struck off and lifted on the point of a lance, and her's was. Giving it as if I got it, she was a "cold frost" and next day was too ill to appear.

The manager was quite brought to bay, for the official understudy was just somebody's friend and had no more voice than a frog.

Miss Wilmot, through Mr. Hartman's urging, was ready for her chance and in twenty-four hours was the talk of New York. Now, with the managerial eye upon her, she may be a little in front of the newest fashion as often as she pleases, and take it for granted that while she is singing herself into the hearts of the public, half a score of the wise are understudying and doubling the influenza petition.

Between Acts

Unconscious plagiarism: "Crimsonbead"—"How history does repeat itself, doesn't it?" "Yeah!—What now?" "Crimsonbead"—"Why, in our town we had a piano concert the other night, and the artist's name was Professor Gridley. When the manager was ready to start the show he shouted: 'You may hang away when ready, Gridley!'"—Yonker's Statesman.

The thorough manner in which the various attractions that have appeared at the New Alhambra have been billed by Managers Ellingsho and Mott, has already been extensively commented upon. But the present billing of Murray and Mack and Fimmie's Ball has smashed all previous records. No amusement attraction, outside of a circus, has ever been billed in San Francisco, as the New Alhambra managers have billed Fimmie's Ball during the past week.

Remarkable Billing

"I never saw such billing in my life outside of a circus," remarked P. O. Mottox, advance agent and business manager for Murray and Mack, to a REVIEW man, in commenting upon the manner in which the New Alhambra managers billed Finigan's Ball. "All I had to do with it was to turn over my paper. Managers Ellinghouse and Mott did the rest and how well they did it was shown by our tremendous opening. An advance man need never go near the New Alhambra. He can count on his billing being done just the same, whether he is there or not. And I tell you there are very few theaters in the country that I can say as much of in this regard."

From one end of Market street to the other, all you could see was Finigan's Ball. The New Alhambra had twenty locations to one of any other theater on that thoroughfare, and the same on Kearny street. Along the block of the Baldwin and Mott street fences, we had three-sheet and eight-sheet posters scattered every few feet on the three frontages-Market, Powell and Ellis street—the first and only theater that has ever had that location. On the Market street fence in front of the Baldwin, the New Alhambra has a big stand surrounded by a row of electric lights, which is by far the best location in the city. You have my word for it, these New Alhambra managers are the warmest hustlers I have ever met with in the theatrical business."

The billing of the New Alhambra attractions has been exciting comment ever since the opening of the popular theater. Managers Ellinghouse and Mott have been very fortunate in securing a very capable force of advertisers, headed by two famous circus agents, Joseph Haas of the Barnum and Bailey Circus and Joseph Rosenthal of the Buffalo Bill show. One Instance of Many

One in a while you run across the confirmed kicker who will tell you there is nothing good anywhere; business is not in sight. We've had several of them here in California the past year. It is refreshing after these few knucklers have passed out of sight to talk with the genial Murray and Mack people, and hear their tale of optimism. They have done very well out here in the west, and gave us some figures on last week's business that isn't so bad—and its only what most of the companies on the coast are telling. Murray and Mack played the week in Pomona, Santa Barbara, Vallejo, Oakland and Sacramento, and the business figured up about seventy-five dollars less than $3,000. And with that Murray and Mack say, they are satisfied, and go ahead, finding life pleasant and agreeable on the slope where wafts the fog-laden breezes of the calm Pacific.

Understudy's Chance

A rude suggestion: Great actress—

That's an atrocious portrait! Is that the best you can do? Is there no one you can improve upon? I suggest something. Photographer—

"Madam, you might permit your understudy to sit for you." — Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Evolution of the Violin

First distinct traces five thousand years before Christ.

The seductiveness of a violin tone has been a mystery for all time. Its progenitors, the ravanstron, the rebec, and all other ancient instruments from which the modern violin was evolved have each successively served as the medium for entertainment and witchcraft. This kind of instruments, even although it be the soprano of the stringed tribe, is still the most impassioned and expressive, the most varied in tone and effects of all instruments.

The origin of the violin is supposed, by the latest research, to belong to India. About five thousand years before Christ an instrument was invented during the reign of Ravana which has been called the ravanstron. This seems to have been the most ancient of instruments played by the bow, and it is still to be found in its primitive form in the possession of the poorer Buddhist monks of the mendicant order.

It is seen that this instrument had all the characteristic elements of the violin—the gut strings, the bridge, the neck, the pegs, the resonant box and the bow.

From the ravanstron sprung the omerith, then the kemauh-a-gower of the Arabs and Persians, and later the immediate predecessor of the violin—the rebec.

The museums and libraries of Europe make it possible to trace the introduction of the rebec there during the middle ages, and mechanical skill, with increased knowledge, proved successively the rebecque, rebelle, rebec, resebecchio—the names of which alone establish their affiliation. Then followed immediately the Italian "lutherie," which quickly took the form of the definite types which the makers of this age strive to imitate.

Gasparo del Solo, of Brescia, 1550-1612, completed the design of the present violin, which was begun by Joan Kerlin, 1446.

Each little part of this wonderful instrument experienced its peculiar epochs of evolution, and they may be traced with a fair degree of accuracy ever since the existence of a bow and arrow. The violin and the bow, or at least that instrument which then represented the present violin, were united on the banks of the Ganges, in the isles of Greece, or, according to the Teutoic assertions, in the huts of their ancestors.

The warrior's bow suggested the now completed harp, and African savages still play on the strings of their bows. Half coconut covers with a bladder skin formed the lowest type of the violin family, and also gave birth to the drum in Africa Asiatia.

The idea of bowing applied to the curious group of crutches, an instrument of Wales and Brittany; rebecs, rottas, geigen and fithieus, the rude outlines of which may be traced in old carvings and manuscripts. Tonite, a Frenchman, 1747-1855, evolved the present perfection of the bow. He determined its length, discovered that Brazil wood was the best material to use, established the exact curve adapted to its balance, suppleness and energy, and invented the method of keeping the hairs flat like a ribbon, thus gaining wonderfully increased volume and force of expression.

Although there is still a mist about the origin of the violin, there can be little doubt but that it was derived from the ravanstron. This Indian instrument could easily have been transported into several civilizations and developed in each simultaneously. A few years ago the Breton crauth (crwth), the rote and lyra were supposed to be solely responsible for the existence of the violin, but later research has made the ravanstron responsible for even these.

It was in Italy, however, that the violin attained its complete development during the sixteenth century, and since that time nothing more has been added to it and no change has been made. In fact, material change seems to be impossible. A curious incident is related of a Scottish amateur who purchased a fine Stradivarius for a hundred guineas, and as the instrument was inconveniently large, and as there were two sizes of this maker's instruments he had it reduced to the ordinary dimensions. The project was not a success, and the next owner got the instrument for £50.

There is a degree of mystery about a violin that can never be fathomed. The location of the bridge, the slightest change in sound bar or the sound post can ruin the tone of the greatest instrument, and these are the least material portions of the instrument, if indeed there be any least. The most valuable violin in existence is supposed to be the one owned by Petschnikoff, the Russian violinist. It is an instrument which belonged to Ferdinand Lautz, and was given to him by Princess Ourousoff.

This wonderful instrument is what may be termed Petschnikoff's fortunate star. It was secured for him through the contribution of funds by Duke George of Meiningen and the Russian general, Malzoff, a brother of the Princess. Serjeon de Verve, a well-known promoter of art in Russia, also lent his financial aid, and thus this young artist became the possessor of a famous instrument even before he had won his name as a great player. The price paid for this instrument was 25,000 marks. Collectors sometimes pay fabulous prices for an instrument with a name, but inquiry reveals the fact that the original makers of these instruments obtained what would now be considered a very moderate price for their work. Two hundred years ago Amatis were sold at from 8 louis up. One Stradivarius brought 1,000 francs in 1769, but there were others selling at the same time for 40 louis. Maggini's could be bought then at from 30 to 35 louis and Klotz for 50 francs, while an Amati cello was worth only 13 louis, but Steiners in 1778 were selling at from 500 to 1,000 francs.

The violin is composed of fifty-eight distinct and separate pieces. The back is of sycamore, in two parts; the belly

!Angel Playing Viola

!Devil Playing Viola

!Minstrel of the Fifteenth Century

!King David Playing the Rota of Swiss pine, also in two parts; the sides of sycamore in six pieces, but by means of a heating iron to the proper form. The linings used to secure the back and belly to the sides are twelve in number, made either of lime tree or pine. The sound-bar of pine is placed under the left foot of the bridge in a slightly oblique position to facilitate the vibration by giving it the same position on the line of the strings. Formerly it was inserted perfectly straight, but by this treatment the instrument is muted to a certain extent.

The bar of the violin strengthens the instrument and forms a portion of the structure, and is exquisitely sensitive to external touch. A slight alteration in its position may make a good violin worthless. The most minute variation in its construction necessitates a different treatment as regards its conjunction with the bridge. Scarcely two violins can be found of identical structure; it is thus impossible to lay down any set of rules for their regulation.

The neck of the violin is made of sycamore or maple, and is much longer than in the days of the great Italian masters. It should be neither too thin nor round, but of a happy medium. The finger-board is of ebony, and is in length according to the position of the sound holes.

The rest is a small piece of ebony over which the strings pass to the finger-board.

The remaining pieces are the pegs, blocks, purfling, strings and tail-piece.

An apparently insignificant item is the button; a small piece of wood against which the heel of the neck rests. The finish of the button affects the whole instrument, and any defect is very apparent. As the keystone is to the arch, so is the button to the violin.

Why is it that a violin attracts so much interest? Why is it that artists and connoisseurs regard it with a feeling akin to affection? That they view it as an art picture or dilate upon its form, color and date? These questions are unanswerable to the inquirer and are never asked by the one who understands the instrument.

The multitude who admire the violin are found among the musicians, painters and literates of a refined mind. It demands unusual attention in this age of progress from the fact that it has hitherto proved incapable of improvement in its material form and features. The only changes made in it since the sixteenth century are confined to the arrangement of the finger-board and the lengthening of the neck.

In Italy five distinct schools of violin making are recognized. That of Brescia from about 1520 to 1620, fathered by Gaspar di Salo. That of Cremona, dating from 1560 to 1760, which includes the makers of Amati—father, son, nephew and grandson. Four Guarnerius, Stradivarius and Bergonzi. Third, the makers of Milan and Naples from 1680 to 1800, known as the Neapolitan School. Fourth, the makers of Florence, Bologna and Rome from 1680 to 1750, and the Venetian School from 1690 to 1764.

The only thing about the violin which defies the science of the age is the varnish. The making of this which is now called the Cremonese, is numbered among the lost arts. The old Italian varnish is divided into four distinct classes—the Brescian, Cremonese, Neapolitan and Venetian. They are separable, however, in but one feature, that of color, and even in this one, three of them appear to have a common basis.

The varnish of an instrument, as all experts know, is as vital to its excellence as any other of its many splendid parts, and pages of opinions—the result of years, yes, centuries, of investigation and analysis—have not disclosed the secret of the early masters.

The violin is the most feminine of all instruments. Its every curve is of classical line, and it seems to be above all other inanimate things the one that appeals most to the senses. It suggests and receives a lingering delicacy of touch whenever it is grasped, no matter by whom, and if it has the eclat of a famous name, even in its silence, suggests an entrancement that is confined by nothing except the ages.

Rough Treatment

Down in Shreveport, La., the other night, a show, advertised as a troupe of lady minstrels, was scheduled to appear. The impression was circulated that the organization would give a vulgar performance and the citizens prepared themselves for the occasion. After egging the performers off the stage the box office was thought of, so they compelled the local manager to refund their money. This left the lady minstrels stranded, but the next day money was collected, the natives gallantly helping the show to get out of town.

The Tragedian—"Yes, but let us rather call it a continuous performance." —Collier's Weekly.
Letter from Edwin Hoff

Some time ago the Review published an item about Edwin Hoff that was not as well founded as in all particulars as it should be. For that reason, we publish the following letter from Mr. Hoff:

The Lamps, New York, Jan. 5
Editor Dramatic Review—Dear Sir—

The next line of your New year's issue does me a real injustice and states untruths that I must ask you to kindly correct. I did get my voice misplaced owing to faulty methods that I was being taught, and my career was interrupted. (I am glad to be able to use the last word.) But I am happy to inform you that I did not "pass on," and moreover that I have succeeded in finding a teacher who has replaced my voice, and that I am in better condition of voice than ever in my life, as an evidence of which I am offered the position of tenor of a company now forming under the management of Nixon S. Zimmermann and T. Henry Frensch, with Camille D'Avrile and Jessie Bartlett Davis as principal soprano and contralto. It is true I have kept quiet for a year or two past, but I have been steadily employed in Brady & Grissmer's Way Down East Company, directing the musical and vocal enterprises. I should be happy to meet your Eastern representative and convince him of the truth of my assertions beforehand, and trust you will do me the favor to correct the impression this article conveys.

Hoping to come to the West to appear before my many good friends in Frisco and "make good" once more, I am, Yours, Edwin W. Hoff.

The Critics on Naughty Anthony

While Naughty Anthony seems to have found a hit with the public, the critics are inclined to take another scene and call on Blanche Bates to put her talents to better use. The play has brought out this screen from the World: "In the last act of Naughty Anthony there occurs a very pleasing scene which lasts for about five minutes and keeps the audience on the qui vive. Miss Blanche Bates, a beautiful and finely talented actress, sits down on the floor facing the audience, pulls up her skirts to the knee and displays her silk stockings. The silk stockings are richly embroidered and very striking. She talks about their especial charm while the music plays a soft accompaniment. Then she peels them off deftly and reveals another pair underneath of different design, but equally elaborate. Then comes another and another. Miss Bates appeared genuinely ashamed of herself last season when it was given to her talents to such employment. That much can be said to her credit. She is worthy of much better things, and the pity is she did not insist upon doing them."

The company open with Too Much Johnson, following with Chimmi Fadden for two weeks. In both plays the original scenery from the Alcazar will be used. In Chimmi Fadden, Forrest Seabury will be loaned by the Alcazar management for this production.

The Winter's Tale will be given at the Columbia Theatre next week in six acts and twelve scenes. Two carloads of special scenery are carried for this production alone, and from all accounts the piece is staged in a most gorgeous manner.
Julia Marlowe secured her divorce from Robert Tabor last Saturday.

The Oakland Macdonough Theatre Stock Company will begin its season Monday, January 29th.

E. M. Walton, the eminent stage manager and character actor, will play August Lorton in Lady Windermere's Fan at the Alcazar.

Mrs. Dunphy, well known to the theatrical profession of this city, has sold her interest in the Oakland bill posting to Fred Siebe.

Gadske is now enrolled in the Metropolitan Opera Company's fold.

Charlotte Skordie, who comes from New York to join the Macdonough Stock Company, is said to be one of the most stunning women on the stage and a gorgeous dresser as well.

A rumor, floating down from Victoria, that Blanche Bates and Frank Worthing were expected to soon join the Frawley Company is authoritatively denied by Manager Frank Murray.

Mrs. Langtry has arrived in New York. She will appear at Wallack's in her latest play, The Degenerates, and it is expected she will extend her tour to four or five other American cities.

There is a young actor at the Alcazar that will make his mark before long in character work. He has been given a number of minor parts that he has handled so well as to cause comment. A little more experience, and the gray matter that is in that young man's cranium will bring him to the front, and the name of Ernest Howell will be better known.

Edna's Mother Married

Edna Wallace Hopper's mother has just revealed to the world a romance running over a dozen years. Twelve years ago she married Alexander Dunsmuir, an heir of the wealthy family of that name. The marriage was kept a secret all this week because of a fear of disinheritance for Mr. Dunsmuir. All danger from that source being over, Mr. and Mrs. Dunsmuir have revealed the secret and are now visiting Edna Wallace Hopper in New York.

Antonio Vargas

The subject of our front page cut this week, Antonio Vargas, the possessor of a baritone voice of great power and brilliancy, has been charming music lovers of this city for several months past, appearing at the Ockron in a repertoire of ballads and operatic selections. Senor Vargas can really claim the credit of being not only one of the most popular concert singers in the city, but one with a voice of unusual excellence, and a presence both magnetic and good to look at.

Playwrights' Rivalry

Belasco and William Gillette have always been rivals in the playwriting business. In their social relations they are rivals. They have achieved, in turn, metropolitan successes as dramatists, and it is said that each works in opposition to the other and having the other in mind as he writes.

For instance, Gillette wrote Held by the Enemy. A big success, Belasco wrote Heart of Maryland—a another big war play triumph. Then Gillette wrote See It Service and that sent his fame several notches higher, and added to the portliness of his bank account.

Belasco came back at his rival with Ezra, a prodigious success.

Gillette promptly gives Sherlock Holmes, and there is no limit to its favor in the eyes of New Yorkers.

And Belasco rolls up with Naughty Anthony. Gillette, it's up to you now. What next?

The Bostonians have decided to give their first metropolitan production of the new Smith and Herbert opera, The Viceroy, in this city instead of Chicago.

The 15th performance of Miss Hobbs will take place next Monday night at the Lyceum Theatre, New York. The comedy is still as big a drawing card as ever.

Desman Thompson has started on his trans-continental tour with The Old Homestead. He will visit about a dozen cities including San Francisco. It will be his first visit West in over ten years.
The Columbia

The Critic says: While the Christian is played in a thoroughly artistic and enjoyable manner, the playwright could have added more power and greater effect to his impassioned play had the curtain dropped as the Doxology rang out in the second act. The scene is so impressive as a wave of religious fervor sweeps over the breathless audience at the opportune sounding of the deep organ tones accompanied by the invincible choir, but unfortunately we are rudely wrenching from this heartfelt, heartfelt yearning for the sorrows of others, by the deep murmurings of the over-running ruthless mob, and so a climax is spoiled that would linger u the memory, a thrilling throbbing, living remembrance.

Grand Opera House

The Grand Opera House is crowded the third week to hear Sinbad. The music is fetching and jolly. A delightful bit of comedy set to laughing melody. Edith Mason, as Sinbad, Hattie Belle Ladd, Besse Fairbairn, Georgie Cooper, Thos. Persce, William Wolf, Arthur Wooley, Winifred Goff and as pretty chorus girls as San Francisco wants to see, make up an evening's entertainment that one cannot afford to miss. William Wolf scores a great hit in the first act with his deep baritone, the audience fairly holding its breath to catch the last hollow sound of the dying note fearing a break in the depths, but he never fails to bring us pleasure with his perfect tone. The chorus is exceptionally good in make up and in quality of work, tone and finish.

New Alhambra

The New Alhambra has been a continual scene of gaiety for the past week, good houses being evidence of the hit scored by the Rentz-Santley Novelty and Burlesque Company. The bill opens with a travesty entitled, A Masquerade Ball, which seemed to please, and kept the audience in a roar of laughter. Especially clever were the four Hebrews—Messen. Bruno, Baker, Zanfetta and Lawrence. This part of the program was completed with a Grand Medley by the entire company. During the intermission the audience was entertained by a strong olio, the principal features of which were the Palmer Sisters giving an excellent exhibition of buck dancing and coon songs; Gus Bruno, the most entertainingly clever person in the company, and Al. S. Lawrence in "something very different," good examples of the ventriloquist's art. This was followed by the feature of the program, a pantomime entitled, An Affair of Honor. The three scenes, quite interesting and decidedly novel, are adapted from the famous painting from the Boujere Salon, Paris. The last scene, rather more tame than the conditions would warrant, contains, however, an exciting duel with swords between two of the women of the company who are expert fencers.

The Tivoli

Little Bo-Peep, with its medley of vaudeville and burlesque, of spectacular song and dance, is running for the third and last week at the Tivoli, and we have to bid farewell to sturdy little Boy Blue, pretty Bo-Peep and her ardent sheep, the handsome Fairy Goodluck, and Mephisto with his sprightly little lieutenant—to Baby Bunting, little darling, to Weary William, genial joker—in short to a host of jolly fun-makers and pretty, laughing girls. With reluctance we see the dainty Punchinillos, the gay be-ribboned dancers, so full of grace and brilliant motion, the fluttering butterflies scintillating with light and color, fade away into the oblivion of a finished run. And yet, and yet—we'll welcome once more a better chance to hear in song our Tivoli favorites in truly comic opera.

Side Lights

The ever welcome Bostonians presenting their two new operas The Viceroy and the Snugglers of Bayadaz as well as Robin Hood and The Serenade will follow the James-Kidder-Hanford combination at the Columbia Theatre.

* * *

Before the close of the Louis James-Kathryn Kidder and Charles B. Hanford combination engagement at the Columbia Theatre a fine production of The Rivals will be staged. The School for Scandal is also in preparation.

The Alcazar

As was well deserved, the Alcazar has been favored the past week with overflowing houses, consequent upon the excellent presentation of the farce, The Mysterious Mr. Bugle, by Madeleine Lucette Ryley. The play is a very interesting and amusing one. Of course, as is usual with light farces, it has for its foundation that inexhaustible subject—love—but it is somewhat superior to the average for the reason that it tends more to the absurdities and fun-producing situations rather than to the extreme sentimentality generally so prominent. It is noticeable for the pure atmosphere and domestic realities displayed, and was well calculated for and appreciated by the highly cultured audience that patronizes this popular playhouse.

The cynosure of the members of the Alcazar Company was Mr. More Everett, who was specially engaged for the part of Betty Fondacere, alias Mrs. Bugle. She is indeed very beautiful, possessing a handsome stage presence, a pleasing manner and such intuitive ways that together with her artistic rendition won her for the meritorious plaudits of an appreciative audience.

Ernest Hastings cleverly handled the character of Tom Pollinger, Betty's fiancée. He depicts the demonstrative and jealous lover in a very realistic manner.

Mr. Frank Dentonhore, as Allan Fondacere, was just as good as ever.

Frank Opperman always seems to be the right man in the right place, and his part as Chickwell, a valet, a most respectable man, afforded him excellent opportunities to display his capabilities. Miss Marie Howe, the wife of Samuel Tote, and George P. Webster as Samuel Tote, Tom's uncle, a stockbroker, were both very good. Forrest Seabury as Bonaparte, a short-sighted, ungainly boy, was very amusing, and Miss Laura Crews as Julia Fondacere, a sister to Betty, fully accredited herself, showing her aptitude for most any character.

The California

The Frawleys have again returned to the society drama and their friends are once more happy, and apparently they themselves feel more comfortable now that they have left behind them the invasion into histrionic melodrama. The Princess and the Butterfly, Pinero's bright and sparkling modern comedy, is the best thing the Frawley Company has given us this engagement. It is the kind of play they shine in and the public evidently wants them in just such productions. The long cast has been very happily fitted. Harrington Reynolds, getting away from villain roles for once, played the part of Sir George Lamorant, with much feeling and excellent acting. Francis Byrne, suffering severely from a sore throat that for some time has necessitated a specialist's attention, gave an impersonation of Edward Oriel, the young and serious member of Parliament in love with a woman older than himself that was excellent, being marred only by a huskiness of voice consequent upon his throat affliction.

Mary Scott, who has just been added to the company, made her first professional appearance in the difficult part of Pay Zuliana, and barring a rather uncertain and unfamiliar broken French dialect, her work was decidedly good. Miss Scott displays none of the nervousness of a debutante and when experience shall have come, she will be a valuable addition to the stage.

Mary Hampton, as Princess Pau- nonia, gives the most convincing, virile characterization of her Frawley career, and in more than one scene the audience testified to its great appreciation. Frank Mathieu's ability for character work was displayed in his interpretation of the Frenchman, Maxime Darnal, Theodore Hamilton, J. R. Anny, H. S. Duffield, Geo. Gaston, Phosa McAllister, Mary Van Buren, and Marian Barney were acceptable, as usual, in the small parts that fell to their care. Minette Barrett, one of Mr. Frawley's new members, had a little better chance to show her ability than has before been accorded her and her Blanche Oriel was in every way a creditable presentation.

The Archie Levy Amusement Association have been doing a tremendous business in the way of private entertainments. This reliable firm has the confidence of its many patrons, and it is a pleasure to note Mr. Levy on the rapid road to wealth.

THE COLUMBIA

The great star triumvirate, Louis James, Kathryn Kidder and Charles B. Hanford and a company of thirty-seven people will present Shakespeare's last and greatest work, The Winter's Tale, at the Columbia Old Time on May 8th. A notable programme in the production of The Winter's Tale to satisfy the eye as well as the ear, and the production in this regard is more than satisfactory. The quaintness of the antique costumes and the magnificent background of temple, palace and landscape together make up a series of pictures, the like of which our stage has not seen before.

THE NEW ALHAMBRA

The Rays' bowling success, A Hot Old Time, will open at the New Alhambra tomorrow afternoon. This is by far one of the funniest and most successful farce-comedies on the road. Since the play was here last, it has been re-written by George M. Cohen. Not only has A Hot Old Time a consistent plot, a flood of humor that is irresistibly contagious, and a liveliness of action that, while escaping actual violence, is both consistent and comic, but it is entirely free from that element of vulgarity and suggestiveness that has handicapped so many productions. The company which promises to be present A Hot Old Time is a very pretentious one for a farce-comedy organization.

THE ALCAZAR

Light, frothy, pretty Mysteries Mr. Bugle, teeming with side lights, beautiful gowns and handsome women, with A Hot Old Time this afternoon and its closing performance this evening. Beginning to mourn, Monday, another handsome face will be seen, this time an English beauty, Miss May Blaney, the young leading woman who will make her American debut in Lady Windermere's Fan, Oscar Wilde's intense drama in four acts. The character of Lord Darlington will be assumed by Howard Scott who returns to the Alcazar company.

THE GRAND

Sinbad closes Sunday evening a three weeks' season, which has been a succession of crowded houses. Monday evening the management offer a novelty in the presentation of an opera entirely new here, but famous throughout Europe. It is by the composer Dellingher and entitled The Wintures' Tale. It must be confounded with Maritana for although its story is very similar, its music is entirely different, much more beautiful and entirely original.

Correspondence and Comments of Interest

NEW YORK

Special Correspondent.

New York, Jan. 7—Chris and the Wonderful Lamp, an extravaganza by Glen McInnes and John Philip Sousa, came to the Victoria last winter under the management of Klaw and Erlanger and R.D. Stevens. Mr. Sousa's music is significant from the fact that it was under his management that the Wolfie Hopper became prominent and strong. Mr. Hopper is and is in his management that Edna Wallace Hopper and Jerome Sykes are known in the legitimate stage. Jerome Sykes does not imitate Mr. Wolfie Hopper. Sykes is as broad as he is tall. But like Hopper, Sykes has a good voice and an abundant fund of humor. If he is not quite so tall as Hopper he looks bigger, and beside little Edna Wallace Hopper the contrast is even more striking than was that of the two Hoppers, once united and now separated artistically and dramatically.

Among many new songs of this show is the introduction of "Chimney Sweeps," written by John Sebastian Hiller, the music director, who had been with Mr. Wolfie Hopper for years, went to Washington, D.C., and is now the director of the Lillith Russell Company with which Edna Wallace then was playing. Mrs. Hopper was overcome by the meeting of the scene, in which she fell upon his neck and wept. "It seems like old times," she sobbed, "to see you leading the orchestra. Just as a little girl, when the Union Jack is shown with the stars and stripes, there is always a cornel reception expected of what England tried to do for us. But any attempt, even on the mimie stage, to pit the United States against the Boers, has thus far met with no encouragement, and has frequently been rudely checked. To put it mildly, the sentiment is divided, and the manager who takes sides will do so at his own risk."

Unless we count the changes of program at the Metropolitan Opera House where the Grand Opera Company is enjoying a successful season there was only one new production in the city last week, but there was a great interest in the appearance of opera and plays which have already won favor. Thus the new year started in January with the last day of the Metropolitan, still crowding the big Broadway Theatre; Papa's Wife, with Anna Held as the principal, by Jeanie and Fred Astaire; and later in the week, was at the Metropolitan; Nat Goodwin and Maxine Elliott were at the Knightsbridge; in The Cowboy and the Lady; and in the last day of the season, during which was the London's; Roxy and Maxine Elliott were in Harned's; and Misses Harned, the alternates being Misses Rountree and Misses Muchmore. The London's; Roxy and Maxine Elliott were in the production of "The Serenade;" a new opera, AIDS, given by the Cleveland Company at the Studebaker for the past week, has been a marvel in regard to scenery, costumes, and stage acting generally. The production has been well given. Misses Strimple and Misses Sheehan take the important casts, while Misses Lyman, Misses Norwood and Misses Davis, Misses Missoum singing as Amneris, Misses Clarke as Ramфи, and Misses Mary as the chorus. The chorus work is creditable with some fine climaxes.

The Girl From Max's, another of those valiant productions on the same old style—only a few bright turns to redeem it—is running at the Columbia. There is a vein of originality throughout the play that may prove a relief to the masses, but one naturally credits human nature with a better side, and prophesies a weariness over the unrelieved dullness. The company is above the average, and far better than the play.

The following afternoon at the Columbia, beginning a week from next Sunday night, is a dramatization of Charles Dickens's novel, A Tale of Two Cities, which ran for more than a year in London. The play is called The Only Way, and follows Dickens's book through the tumultuous French revolutionary period. Mr. Hopper has employed about too people in the production. Henry Miller has the part with a fine support including Margaret Far, J. H. Stoddard, Joseph Brennan, A. H. Weaver, Jr., Byron Douglass and D. H. Herkens.

Jan. 8 begins the farewell week of Sol Smith Russell at the Grand Opera House in A Poor Relation. Mr. Russell will also bid farewell to the stage, at the end of this engagement, in order to enjoy a much-needed rest. Mr. Berger, Russell's manager, is going to continue the tour of A Poor Relation, and Mr. Russell has helped him in the selection of Frank J. Keenan who will take the character, Noah Yale, which has been played by Mr. Russell. Mr. Keenan bears a striking resemblance to Russell in face and figure—and has the same quiet and natural style of manner. Last year he was with Viola Allen in The Christian. At present he is stage manager of the Pike String Company in Cincinnati.

Next week at Powers' Theatre, E. H. Southern and Virginia Harlow will play The Second Mrs. Elmore. It is a love and war, and carries one back in history to the time when Napoleon was made general of the Italian army, 1796.

The following paragraph Symphonie Fantaisie, "Italy" [Richard Strauss], on the program, Among the Ruses of Rome. On the program, the "Italian March," "L'Allegro," "Valse de concert, opus 47 [Glazounow], Marche Heroique [Massenet], Ballad of the Commandante, "So prom" for string orchestra [Schoenfeld].

(a) Meditation, (b) Valse Noble, Batucade March "Toccata," (c) "Scaramaccia" [Wagner], which has been rendered at the Auditorium this week, under the direction of Mr. Thomas, has been particularly interesting to music lovers, and will also be played. The composer, who is a Chinese man, was warmly wel:

Chicago, Jan. 5—Martial music combined with sweet soothing, together with some strangely colored tableaux, produce an intensely dramatic effect in the Song of the Sword, as Mr. Sothern has staged it. Mr. Sothern will hold his audience, since he is gifted with that ever-drawing card—a magnetic presence. His facial mobility does wonders for the character, Captain Fingle. Miss Virginia Harlow as both pleasant girl and Countess is charming. Miss Harned is particularly attractive owing to her gentle feminine manner, an exterior which never fails whatever he mutters. Mr. Norman Parr as Napoleon took the role fairly well considering the fact that he is not Napoleon in stature, consequently his make-up is not ideal. Following the Song of the Sword at Powers' Theatre, next week will be given The Sunken Bell.

Gund's song version of Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet is being presented this week at the Studebaker to well filled houses. The opera is elaborately staged and the Castle Stage Company is one of ability. Next week Mignon will be given in English.
which announcement proves of interest. Two new soprano joins the company next week, and Miss Grace Golden, who has been abroad for a number of years, and Miss Grace Golden, who also returns this season as a term abroad.

The Dearborn Stock Company presents this week one of Arthur Wing Pinero's earlier plays, "The Fair," a staid comedy with the happiest hit of the year at the Dearborn. The farce is well constructed, clean and extremely ludicrous.

Miss Bergere and Mr. Arlen will have the best parts in Miss. Genee, which is being rehearsed by the company.

The Olympic program for the past week has been good, including such talent as Laura Kenyon, Reuben Godfrey and Scott, and shows promise of much future success. The company is also on the stage at the Dearborn.

Digby Bell is the attraction at present at the Bijou. Among the new plays and various specialties are offered by Foy and Clark, the four Oliffans, Frank McNish and Rose Albro, Lieve, Searle and Lieh, Fennell and Lewis and many others.

Que Vadi has been running at Meeker's Theatre for the past week and has done a very good business in the week's act at the house. The drama is a beautifully staged and the lines of Stenke's novel are so well followed that the house is continually filled. The plot, a sincere attempt to include all the lovers of the book, Joseph Haworth in the role of Nicutis is good. Petrovina, the most magnetic character in the play, is taken by Arthur Forest, who assumes the role in a much lighter vein than is intended. The play is scheduled to run with the week's act, and lack of dignity or rather rise in his bearing—a nervousness, which detracts greatly from the strength of the cast. Horace Lewis, who plays the role of the Greek, Chloe Chil- omidas, was formerly a Chicago man; his make-up as Chloe is grotesque enough to suit the most exaggerated impression the imaginative mind can create. Nero is represented by Edmund D. Lyon. One hopes for more of him in the remainder of the week's act, for the force of character in Nero is than is found in Mr. Lyon's creation. The real Nero of history was not a mere mixture of vanity and insolence, but a man of genius, and it is about that, that Mr. Lyon presents to his audience. Kunice, slave to Petrovina, as played by Maunder, is a very interesting character. The girl ever convenient and ready expression for use on all occasions: "Isn't she a dear baby, Mr. Livia?" Livia shows she is not Lygia fairly well. The drama, Que Vadi, is a great success from all standpoints. A. D. CAREY.

ST. LOUIS Special Correspondence

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 2.—Holiday week has not been any too profitable for the local theaters. The Bostonian and the Kelcey-Adams have been closed and the vaudeville theaters played only to fair business.

The coldest weather of the year greeted the opening of the shows of The Planets which are to be shown at the Metropolitan following the theatrical season of 1900 in the Sound Theater.

Manager Pat Short is offering Henry Miller's "The Story of a Love," dramatization of Dickens' "A Tale of Two Cities." Mr. Miller is doing the best work he has ever done. The cast is well chosen. He is in ably supported by J. H. Stoddard, D. H. Harkins, Byron Douglas, Joseph Brennan, J. H. Dryer, Jr., Earl Brown and Margaret Dale.

Willie Collier is before the St. Louis public this week at the Century in a dull role, but in giving us his new comedy, Mr. Smooth, George Parsons, John F. Ward, Alfred Hickman, Thomas Evans, Thomas Garrick, M. L. Heckett, Lawrence Sheehan, Helen Collier, Helen Duncan, and others, to assist the star in making Mr. Smooth equal to its name.

Miss M. C. Southwell of the Castle Square Opera Company, after the unsatisfac- tory success of their double bill Fins of Caravelli and Rusmich last week decided to repeat the program of the past week. Their hus- bands has been marvelous, and Miss Millard Betty as Josephine in Fins of Rusmich is equal to the high standards of the critics. Mme. Kornald and Miss Golden are alternating as Sanzias, and it is a hard ques- tion which is the better singer and every one of their numbers is flawless. Mlle. Southwell, daughter of the popular manager of the Castle Square Op- er Company, is also featured in Fins of Rusmich.

Manager William Gauer's New Year's at- tractions are Jack and the Beanstalk at the Grand Opera House, and McFadden's Row of Flats at Havlin's Theater. The featured merrymakers in Jack and the Beanstalk are Verrington, Marguerite Isles, Laura Mel- ville, Frank Desson and George Gorman, while Bobby Raisin and W. A. Robinson are the funny fellows, and the yellow kids in McFadden's Row of Flats.

At Hopkins' Theater Manager Sam Gump- erty has arranged an attractive bill in Comb the Land 'St. Maurice Freeman does Gordon Granye in a truly artistical manner, while Miss Bourine is very clever as Alice Astine. Pinafore is given a fair opportunity and is gratulated on the smoothness of the perfor- mance and the elaborate stage settings. Bizzie and mobs of Burroughs Bros., Capston, Carter de Haven and Bonnie May, are the vaudevillians at Hopkins this week. It is a good first week's act in the company.

Managers Tate and Middleton have an excellent bill this week in Williams and Walker and their own company, which in- cludes Mme. Astine, Miss Bourine, Eliza- te Wilkes, Ed. Harris, Mallory Bros. and Brooks, Catin, Overton and Halliday, Lottie Rossley, Emma Rossley, the Burs Bros. and Douglas. Miller and May, and Sam and Ida Kelly, Trxle Wade, Prof. Fox and the Kissomode.

Reilly and Woods' Big Show is Manager Butler's inaugural attraction for 1900. Frank Ryan, Pat Kelly, Johnstone Bros., Marshal McCormick, Miss Putt, Lizzie Pender, Alice Aline, Beeby and Elliott, Jesse Lamb and the Mekker-Backer troie make up an interesting bill, whilst the burlesques are as usual.

William Prouette has been signed by the Hopkins Company, and to-morrow night he makes his first appearance next Monday night in Nicceda Spinnell's lively tragedy, A Basin Posto, which will be the first perfor- mance of this opera in America.

Miss Nettie Bourne of the Hopkins Stock Company severs her connection with the local company, and the Ted Catlin Company will play the leads with Col. Hopkins' Com- pany in Chicago.

Hopkins Company has sold his interest in Hopkins Theater to Sam Gumpertz.

The underlings for next week are Julia Arthur in "Little Women," Quo and Miss Margareta of "The Century," a Colonial Girl at the Old Kentucky at Havlin's, Pawn Ticket 200 and vaudeville at next Saturday, 'Right Eyes' at the National, Ringwood Night Owls at the Standard. A Basin Posto and the Pirates of Penzance at the Explo- sion.

DENVER Special Correspondent

DENVER, Jan. 2.—Good weather and good business have prevailed for the past week. The opera house is perfect.

At the Tabor, Von Yonson has been running merely along to spread his business. We have had nine performances of the play.

At Denver his companion players have made a hit with the "Denver folk" and will be well received whenever they come this way.

Next week, A Trip to Chimatown, featuring Harvey Williams, will be presented. Edwin Mayo in Pud'head Wilson is the attraction at the Broadway this week. This play is second to none for it is clean, wholesome, and well acted, and improves with age. This is the first time the heavier public has had the pleasure of seeing Edwin Mayo in this play as he was too ill while here last season to appear, and he undoubtedly played the part all the more effectively. He will not be in the show at Roxy this season. The cast is almost the same as last year. Next week The Ros- toper.

A surprise this week is Miss Clara Thropp at the Denver, in Henrik Ibsen's beautiful drama, "A Doll's House." A young talented lady appeared here in a co- gnomination called Where's Matilda? The result was poor business, and the unfortunate company had a bad finish in your city. But this season things are very different, for the little comedienne has a good play and a good company, and she is proving to the public that she can act. The play is hardly suited to the patrons of the Denver and may be considered Thropp's finest artistic performance as Nora, the young wife. She is particularly strong in the part of the modern Greta Gerwig, but we must consider the intelligence of the husband; he is a hand- some fellow and a good actor. Mr. Felson as Ness, Kingrad, and as Dr. Jorgen of the company.

The American and the Continental is on parts. A Doll's House was followed by a one-act comedy, The Truant Spouse. For several performances the American and the Continental company will present A Remedy for De- vorce. Next week Frank Redfield's great hit "The Gentleman of the Evening." At the Lyceum all one can hear is, "I can give you a couple of good seats later in the week, but you had better call tomorrow." "All right, give me two for Friday night, for I do want to hear Joe New- man." Mr. Newman is the topliner at the Lyceum this week. He is a Denver boy and this is his first appearance in his native city since his return from "Dear old London," where he went about eight months ago. He brought back a lot of good songs, new to Denver, and of course he is a big hit. You can bet the house the rest of this week and the next. The American and the Continental company will be in Denver, and the public closed after their first performance. The balance of the bill is made up of the following: Miss Rostelle, Knuckle Taxi, Frank and Dan; Romley and Roselle and Jerry Sullivan, who are all good. Camille D'Avril is the top liner for next week.

I must congratulate you on the New Year's engrossing "Dramatic Review." It is certainly swell. I have heard many nice re- marks about it and everyone thought it so strange that the price wasn't raised for the last year. Emma Nevada appeared in concert at the Broadway last Friday afternoon to a fair house. I think they HAYS pleasantly sweet voice, though it is not powerful. Mr. Charles Brokate, a student of the "Dramatic Science," has done most of the talent amateurs of the city, has been engaged to play juvenile business with Clara Thropp.

Miss Julia Dickens, formerly with Coen Hollow, has also been engaged by Miss Thropp.

Miss Horace Kiers has had a set-back, and upon the advise of his physician will leave Friday for the mountains.

Manager Harley of the Lyceum is still con- fined to his bed. The latest addition to the Art Gallery is a columns photograph of Miss Maude Adams from "The Second."
LOS ANGELES
Special Correspondence
LOS ANGELES, Jan. 9.—This being the week after the holidays, there is, naturally, somewhat of a calm. The Orpheum and Burbank Theatres are having all its own very, very full in a way. The reason why there are some strong counter attractions in the musical and sporting line.

Manager Morris have announced gift for $100 damages against Nance O'Neill and Manager Rankin, for cancelling his engagement, which had been announced for the first time appearing at Morocho's playhouse.

During the recent trip East your correspondent had the pleasure of meeting several theatrical organizations, returning from the Pacific Coast, who were unanimous in the verdict that the West is no per cent better for the show business than the East, not only in the patronage, but in the appreciation of a good turn. They were all enthusiastic about the West, and almost everyone, without their only regret being that they could not stay longer.

The Orpheum management held a Jenni ovation on the 10th inst. at which very usual photographs of Mr. and Mrs. Reuel were presented to each lady attending the performance. This certainly makes a very valuable addition to the Orpheum album.

Beverle Holness, a Los Angeles girl who took up the stage as a profession, is winning laurels in Chicago. The Chronicle of that city speaks very highly of her to the opera Aida. Beginning on Jan. 14 this Grau Opera Company will commence its fourth week's engagement at Morocho's Burbank Theatre. They will be followed by the Neil Company. Manager Morse has received a telegram from Manager Haywood of the Spokane Opera House and one from Manager McFarland of the Grand Opera House at Butte, giving the highest praise to the Neil Company.

At Morocho's Burbank Theatre the Bailey Stock Company are playing Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's play Emeralds to fairly good business.

There is nothing very striking about the piece, or the way it is put on, but it nevertheless proved a fairly good drawing. The company, not one of the most popular as the Fawley Company or Nance O'Neill Company, have done a fair business in this city, and are doing a fully appreciated. Next week the Grau Opera Company come out in Wang. This should prove a successful business venture, as in the present time a good comic opera company will fill a long felt want with the theater-goers.

At the Orpheum, an excellent bill is on and, of course, they are drawing big crowds to this place. Manager Bronson and Press Agent Eby have a happy faculty of knowing how to place their money in advertising where it will do the most good, and although they are doing some pretty advertising lately, if a person might judge by the crowds that visit their house, it is returning to them after not many days. The bill is headed by La Sylph, followed by Irene Franklin, Harrigan, Douglas & Ford, The Averys, Gertrude Rutledge, Mobing Brown, and Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Milton Royle and company in Capt. Impudence. The Los Angeles Theatre is dark this week.

HERBERT L. CORISH.

MUSICAL NOTES

Vladimir de Pachmann was the artist to welcome the musical New Year in Los Angeles. Mr. Los Angeles Barbican seating was enthusiastically received, and the Chopin program of Wednesday afternoon proved his fine musical character, and composure together with the wild, whirling, sweeping movements that Chopin has given to the world. The morbid beauty and poetic intensity of the Polish composer is marvelously interpreted by this Russian pianist. On Friday evening the Messiah was given at Simpson's Tabernacle by the Oratorio Society under the direction of Prof. F. A. Bacon. The soloists were well chosen and did excellent work throughout. Mme. Genera. Johnston-Sang the soprano role with deep thought and feeling. I Know That My Redeemer Liveth was, the piece, and gives in the noblest manner. Mrs. Florence Scarborough, the contralto, sang. He Was the Expected and Rejected of Men with the feeling that the aria requires; and Mr. A. Willer's interpretation of Thy Reiske Hath Broken His Heart, and Mr. Harry Baraflast's rendering of Why Did the Nation's Rage were both acceptably received.

The choruses were fine and well supported by the orchestra, especially in For Unto Us A Child Is Born, found in the Pastoral Symphony, where the strings showed their marked improvement over their work in the Creation.

Haulit's masterpiece is ever an exponent of the highest ideal good, and expressed gladness from the enjoyment of life, to the tumultuous bursts of triumphant delight which mark the piece.

Clarence Eddy will give three recitals on the grand organ built for the new First Methodist Church. The recitals will take place on Jan. 23 and 24, and a matinee on the last-named date. Mr. Eddy will be assisted by Mme. Johnston-Bishop, soprano; Mrs. Helen Kerr, contralto; W. F. Skelley, accompanist; and Mr. Hurry Harris, flute.

The third Symphony Concert will take place at the Los Angeles Theatre, the afternoon of January 10, with Haydn's Symphony, Militaire, on the program. Miss J. Russell Brown will probably be Walter Denroosch, Gadsky and Blaahet 13 March, also Paderewski in the same month.

SPOKANE
Special Correspondence

SPOKANE, Wash., Jan. 6.—The Spokane Auditorium, H. C. Hayward, Manager, Week of January 10, has been opened with a New Year's matinee that tested the capacity of the magnificent theatre. A Gilded Pool, the play which made Nat Goodwin famous, was the bill, and to judge by the repeated curtain calls, it is safe to say that Mr. Neill imparted to the character of Ozzy Short, the same tender, sympathetic interpretation of the same. Monday eve, A Bachelor's Romance played to S. R. Miss Edythe Chapman and Miss Julis Dean shared jointly with Mr. Neill in the honors of the evening. Wednesday matinee the company presented Amy Robart, taken from Sir Walter Scott's novel, Kenilworth. Miss Grace Lampkin, as Queen Elizabeth, was commanding, bountiful and graceful. The play is beautifully staged and the costumes magnificent. The entire company are thoroughly conversant with their work, and even the smallest details are given the most careful attention. It is safe to say that when the Nell Company visit San Francisco, they will give to the people of that city a repertoire of plays, staged and acted in a manner that will win their most merited appreciation and attendance.

The 8-5, Ellis Brook and Charity Martin concert.

The Devery Theatre this week.

T. F. O'Malley does some very clever work in the role of O'Brien. The popular songs introduced in the first act by the Florence Emery, were repeatedly encored. Geo. M. Longer took the part of Lorinna Leonard, a railroad magnate. Wm. B. Mack was Frank Roberts, his chief engineer. Carl Berch as Jassie Fleece, a lawyer and financier; J. J. Holden, Baron Von Steinberger, the representative of German capitalists; Maurice Stewart, Kerrigan, former officer of O'Brien's forces; Walter F. Whipple, Sharp, the detective; C. O. Retaloff, Hans, Lennan's valet; Fauny Gillette was Mrs. Laura Van Burian and Gracie Plaisit, Cecil Fleece. Develve special mention for the work of the boys.

The play is well staged and the costumes are up to date.

FRESNO
Special Correspondence

FRESNO, Jan. 9.—Fresno theatre-goers were favored Saturday night with the presentation of A Winter's Tale by Louis James, Kathryn Kidder and Charles R. Hauford. The play was splendidly acted, while the costumes and scenic effects were accurate. A matinee today with the School for Scandal as the attraction, and The Rivals this evening close the engagement of this trio of stars. Jan. 19th, The Christian.

Next Wednesday night Califla Parlor of Native Daughters are to give their second minstrel performance, the first given last year was a great success. Sacramento Parlor, N. G. P., has taken the entire orchestra, containing 131 seats, for the minstrels.

PORTLAND
Special Correspondence

PORTLAND, Jan. 2.—The Hottest Coin in Dixie is doing a tremendous business at Goddard's Theatre, Portland, this week, hundreds being turned away from the first four performances. The show will be seen at the Third Avenue Theatre, Seattle, the coming week.

Truly Shattuck, the one time Tivoli chorus girl, sells her word home that her success has been so great in Europe that she will prolong her stay there indefinitely.

THE SAN FRANCISCO DRAMATIC REVIEW
JANUARY 13TH, 1900

EVEN'TS THAT PUSH THE PACIFIC COAST
The Orpheum

J ohn and Nellie McCarthy, in a sketch, The Wall Street Broker; Billy Rice, in a few minutes of monologue work; John J. Thorne and Grace Carleton, in a skit, The Intruder, head the program at this house this week and present their turns, and then you warm up to the entertainers held over from last week who are exceedingly good. Dorothy Drew, a tall, lissome, charming singer and dancer, with a pretty face and magnetic manner, sings andcake-walks, and does high kicking and wins prolonged applause and makes you wish her act was longer. Chas. A. Gardner, who tells dialect stories better than he sings, is genial and droll and amusing. After him comes the Elmore Sisters, and they are immense. The elder is a comedienne of rare ability. She has a complete understanding of the broadest and most laughable humor at her command, and she can keep company with the best monologist in the business. They present a little comedy, The Dangerous Mrs. Delaney. The comedy doesn't amount to much, but the personality of the elder sister made it a vehicle for the greatest conglomeration of absurd nonsense and side-splitting humor that has been witnessed on the Orpheum boards for some time. Fougere, the French music-hall singer, follows with some clever French ideas of his own. His songs, and Miss Hatfield, a piano player, are given every chance of good court and careful training. Seniorita Lyra Polentini and Senior Vargas gave operatic duos which brought down the house, each gave solos showing the power and beauty of their voices. In rich rhythm and beautiful arrangements, three men and contralto voices blended in a harmonious tone of superior coloring and finish. The Projectoscope proves a fascinating number. This week The

The Chutes

A r the Chutes, Major Mite made his first appearance as a stage Irishman—singing in Done with Carrying the Mortar—which was done so well as to call forth several encores each evening. His inimitable manner and favorite down the line. The Columbia Four, men and women, instrumentalists, singers and dancers, made a hit, being received with hearty applause on this, their first appearance here. The triple horizontal bar performers, Mouton, Vidella and Moll were good in their specialty and were encored for their excellent work. Harry de Lain, the high baritone gave an irresistible representation of a French chanteuse. Claude Tharo's new stories and new songs took with the audience, and Al Hazard, the noted ventriloquist introduced some very good numbers.

The Olympia

T he Hungarian Orchestra under the direction of the famous conductor Isidore Fenster, is doing some very enjoyable work. The Artist's Life Waltz of Strauss being received with great applause. Vera Chandon, Dot Stanley and Camellio are still making hits in their specialties. Zoyana and his wonderful performance with his globe keep up an unflagging interest. Carlton and Royce are all right and are clever with their singing and dancing. Marie D. Wood, of California nightingale, sang to the edification of her admiring listeners. Chandler and McPherson the operatic vocalists sang with much expression their repertoire of popular melodies. May Neilson sang acceptably and is receiving much attention as the girl vocalist of the city, like with the gold nuggets. The Lamonts are good equilibrists and acrobats, Matt Reefes, silver toned tenor, rings out his sweetest echoes.

Jas. H. Love Sends Warning

I wish to notify all companies that are pointed towards Montana points, to take a timely warning and switch, unless they want to run into smallpox epidemic. Bute is full of it, and a lot of the other towns too, and they are getting ready to quarantine against each other. Lord pity the companies that get shut up in that country. I leave today on the Aorangi for Sydney. Had to change the plans of the Nance O'Neill Company owing to the bubonic plague in Honolulu. We do not touch there, but will go direct to Australia. Will drop you a line now and then and let you know how we are getting on. With best wishes,

JAS. H. LOVE,
Repsn. Nance O'Neill Co.

READINGS IN MISS CONNELL’S STUDIO

Delightful Thursday morning has been enjoyed for some weeks past in the pleasant studio of Miss Eleanor Connell on Sacramento street, where appreciation of all that is intellectual and artistic has gathered about her a number of ladies who formed a club for the purpose of literary study. Mrs. Mary Fairweather giving readings and lectures upon Wagner, Browning and other poets, and works of famous authors. The course was completed last week, but if the pleadings of the club mal Mrs. Fairweather will doubtless continue her work among the members, for the earnest attention and interest they displayed were highly complimentary to Mrs. Fairweather’s work and to the happy thought of Miss Connell in bringing them together. Why does not Miss Connell give a concert? She is one of those quiet workers who seems content to keep her light under the proverbial bushel, but she should not be so retiring. Good work with good results is done amidst her pleasant home surroundings, bright people interested in music and art and literature are ever sure of a welcome, but public work is an impetus to ambition and it is to be hoped Miss Connell will give an audience the pleasure of hearing her artistic work before the season closes, for she has not appeared in public lately.

DE PACHMANN’S FOURTH RECITAL

Thursday afternoon of last week De Pachmann’s piano recital crowded Sherman & Clay Hall to its utmost capacity. Quite a sensation was created by De Pachmann’s refusal to play upon a lighted stage and his fondness for gloomy shadows aroused not a little speculation as to his motive, and we were reminded of the words: “Some prefer the darkness to the light because their deeds are evil,” although this could hardly apply to De Pachmann’s beautiful work. He began with Sonata, op. 33, B flat minor of Chopin which in the first two movements was extremely disappointing. De Pachmann was uneasy and not in the mood to play—something troubled him, and after the second movement he got up, painted to the light that fell upon the keys from above and strode about the stage with his hands behind him or went through a sort of pantomime which brought the junior to him finally and the lights were extinguished. It did not seem a very dignified proceeding, but then De Pachmann is noted for his little eccentricities. Perhaps he was right, for he was at once in the mood to play, and marched funereal finale completed the number, and if there were whispers “Can he be a Spiritualist?” it was not to be wondered at. The effect of the music was wondrous, to say the least for as the afternoon closed in, De Pachmann’s figure was hardly visible in the darkness. It was a Chopin program, the most charming numbers being Ballade, op. 23, G minor; Berceuse, op. 57, D flat; Barcarole, op. 60, F sharp major and the ever favorite Grand Polonaise, op. 27, A flat major. Somehow his work did not hold me so much as in his first appearance in the California Theatre, his peculiar manner regarding the lights taking somewhat from the dignity of the musician, but there was the same exquisite touch of velvety delicacy, the same sunny grace and flowerlike coloring, but the compositions as a rule did not call for his greatest depth of feeling, and at times his left hand did not do very telling work. Etude, op. 25, No. 1, A flat, the lovely Nocturne, op. 55, No. 1; Trios Mazurkas op. 36, No. 2, op. 67, No. 1, op. 63, No. 1, were also given, the valse op. 64, No. 2, winning an encore. The Grand Polonaise in A flat major closed the program with a scene seldom witnessed in a San Francisco concert room. The audience went perfectly wild and De Pachmann was brought out four times while the people applauded and one lady near me became so enthused that she hammered the floor with the chairs in front of her. As the pianist was again brought out, the tumult increased until he again seated himself at the piano, and the “ohs” and “ahs” of delight remained one of a Fourth of July celebration as the audience crowded to the front, ladies standing in a row bordering the stage and if the pianist had a friendly “spook,” as many supposed, hidden away in the shadows that almost obscured him from view, he must have been proud of De Pachmann’s triumph. His farewell recital occurred on Saturday.

STUDIO ECHOES.

Mr. Harry Brown, whose sweet-toned baritone won favorable comment at the farewell concert of Miss Millie Flynn, who left last week for New York, has plans, I understand, for a European trip later on, but intends to arrange a concert before his departure.

On Thursday evening next, the McKenzie Musical Society will give their twenty-first invitation musicale in Odd Fellows’ Hall. Miss Margie Wheeler will appear in solos, also O. W. D’Suinais, E. A. Robertson, Prissells Davies, J. W. Fisher, Lily Lavs, Chas. F. Le Long and Master George Kroger, the chorus contributing several numbers.

FOREIGN MUSIC

The Musial Times publishes an account of the production of Faust as played recently in Tagalog at the Liberated Theatre.

“The theatre to day is but poorly attended, probably because the Filipinos, like us, do not appreciate the serious drama, but prefer to laugh over the ins and outs of a knockabout farce.”

“It takes hours for Faust to throw off his old age and resume the garb of a young man. The actors are very stagy, more stagy even than our conventional melodrama hero and heroines. They have adopted a high falsetto voice, to which it becomes very wearisome to listen. It is pitched so high that it would seem as though it would keep them busy articulating without attempting any of the emotions.”

“The costumes of the actors would compare favorably with many of our minor theatrical ventures, and seemed to have been carefully copied from Spanish models. All the gentlemen appearing on the scene had swords strapped to their thighs, though they seemed to grade from Spanish cavalry sabres to native bolos. They are all powdered and painted to represent white actors. Faust was very successful in his make-up, and until you looked at his hands it was impossible to tell if she were a Filipino or not.”

“Faust walks up and down the stage with all the vim of a Wilson.
Barrett. The different posturing that he threw himself into all through the play in order to ingratiates himself with Marguerite must have cost him a backache for a week afterwards. None of them seemed to attempt to betray their feelings with a facial expression. If they wanted to make known that they were angry, glad or sorry, they at once struck an attitude. This seemed to arouse the enthusiasm of the audience, who at every fresh pose would applaud vociferously.

"Mephisto was a dreadful old fellow, dressed in the conventional Satanic red, and with three cock's plumes nodding in his cap. He had a large grog-blossomed nose, but then, of course, who drinks if the devil does not?

The scene when Marguerite's brother and his wife defied Mephisto was very imposing. They chivied him round the stage two or three times with the hils of their swords upraised in sign of the cross. Finally the devil naturally gets tired of making ugly faces, and roaring like a young bull, traveling a 2-40 gait, so he settles himself comfortably down on the stage, and, amidst the delighted applause of the audience, he plays 'possum and shows dead.

Valentine seemed to have plenty to say for himself. Indeed, I have never seen a Valentine occupy such a responsible position before. He was out and on the stage all the time, giving long speeches to all sorts of grown-up people, which ought to have had sense enough to tell him to let up and go to bed. Probably it was because Valentine, a pretty little half-caste girl, seemed a general favorite with the audience.

Marguerite was also played by a mestiza. She also seemed fully aware of her charms. It took her about ten minutes to slow music to catch on to the casket of jewels Faust had left for her on the doorstep.

When Faust catches her in "flagrante delicto," or in pure English, on the hop, with the necklace around her neck and the bracelets clasped to her wrists, whatever she said sounded something like this: "Pangig—sampilacing—bangunongq," must have proved a very effectual quid pro quo, for it set the whole audience a-laughing.

Martha very sensibly decided it was mere affectation to ape the airs and graces of a white woman, so she bravely played her part with nut-brown face and bushy hair, in a resemblance to one of Redfern's tailor-made dresses and a broad leather belt.

Everything was attempted that we are accustomed to see on our stage, even the temptations of Faust by a full ballet corps. The premiere dausneuse stalked around on the tip of her toes, with her arched fully extended skyward as if beseeching for rain, and the old haid pates craned their wicked old heads forward in the front row just as you can see them do at the Orpheum or the Alhambra. Who says that the Filipinos are in need of civilization?

MUSIC IN GENERAL

Mark Hambourg, styled by his critics "Rubinstein the Second," made his initial bow now before a Baltimore audience at the Peabody Conservatory of Music. He was greeted by one of the largest, as well as the most appreciative audiences that ever assembled at the Peabody. The face, the walk, the hair, are all after the manner of the greatest pianist of his age. In any case, Mr. Hambourg has many of the physical resemblances and many of the peculiarities of his great master. It is not that of Rubinstein, nor a cheap imitation, but a wonderfully vital and intense expression of a very gifted musical temperament. The applause which punctuated the recital in several instances rose to the height of an ovation.

EDITOR DRAMATIC REVIEW—Why do you so often see that the proof-reader and type-setter make fewer mistakes in spelling Miss Thompson’s articles? I read her thoughts with some pleasure and these errors are most annoying.

Some pleasure—and some pain, I hope. Dear J. X.—judge not. The proof-reader and the type-setter, is it? Never. Their boundless faith in me has been their undoing—and we have loved each other so. Now you come in like a split in the bible, and I am hourly expecting notice. Far be it from me to chase after spelling of mine and compel respect for it, but at least you will allow that it bears the stamp of originality.

Everybody can use the handy dix-shunery.

* *

With character walking about our highways and byways in cosmopolitan plenty, why is it that the stage representation of her is such a poor sorry old case of caricature? If you can not tear yourself away from the rouge pot long enough to go look, a set of Phil May sketches might be a good dress-room garnish.

A dab of gray grease paint on the right cheek and a patch on the trouser leg do not make a merry street gamin. A gown, geometrically slit about the hem is not ragged. A dash of garlic does not make a Frenchman, nor a queue a Chinaman, nor yet a red wig an Irishwoman. A voice pitched to C sharp on a new piano does not make the underbed—any more than preaching makes morality, or bleached hair a blonde or manicured nails a lady. Once perhaps in a whilemouth, we are allowed the perfection of Miss Howe’s Mrs. Murphy or Henry Miller’s John Hinds.

The daily routine of the actor plainly needs refashioning. He who would make the world must be a citizen of the world—know who live in it and what they are doing. Let him livedown to the hard even basis of a green room, a row of foot-lights, a box of grease paint, the costume or tailor and a cafe, and inevitably he will reach the vice of entertaining himself with himself, which is about as profitable as to feed on one’s own empyrean. His leisure hour, be it but one in thirty, should be spent with anyone rather than his fellow. Let this not be construed unhandsomely. His brother is the first one to whom he should reach the hand, but to live faithfully to his engagement, he should find the greatness that is outside of him—know that the rest of us he has much to learn from the sweep and the man who grids colors and the man with the hoe. He should be as full of eyes as a peacock’s tail, that the proper quality and worth of things may not escape him.

When he falls away from human fellowship, his soul misses the truth and he soon forgets how small a part of a great big universe he is.

How few actors really act. Most of them are simply a bad aggravation of themselves, forcing their personality upon the public week by week, until they become as inevitable as Irish potatoes and sterling silver.

A man should play the part assigned him. Where the truth is important, there is always the means of knowing it and he who lies in his part gives a rotten orange for a sweet one and breaks one of the laws of trade.

There would not be so many stage blairs if there were not so many believers in the lies, who applaud veritable rox. It is a vicious imbecility to applaud a man for simply appearing in creased trouser legs and a coat flower. Such bad dragging but aggravates his disease and gives him a pride in virtues that he has not. A well set blister would be a better thing in most cases.

Q, you who are young in the harness, arise when you can to a man’s work, as a means to mental health. Go a-choeling and a-mowing in the sunshine and save up some corn-shelling and tool-grinding for wet days.

If you have no leisure time to do this, why should you have it? Rehearsal should not spread over the day.

The driver of a horse, the owner of a dog is bound to impose no cruel task upon his charge and the stage director who keeps you at it till the smile is wan and the heart dull, is a slave driver, and under the law a criminal. Upon his stage stalk the people nowhere seen upon the larger stage of life.

All great actor is one of the most sublime and wonderful of God’s works, but oh, the degrees below him till the last sad slum is reached—the tailor’s dummy with a phonographic attachment!

The most interesting feature of a function like an Emma Nevada night, is the previous agonized striving to be fit. San Francisco so seldom does her glad rags that when she does there is much that recalls the flying of flapjacks on a new tin spider—they don’t fly. If you would know what grievous wrong can be done to hair for a quarter of a dollar, insist upon the back row and look about at the awful comb and pin shops that crowd the auditorium. Oh, the sorrow of it. “But the end is not yet.”

The lacquer, that transplants the bosom where the tightness is not, and gets madame into her decollete safely if vulgarly. The coquetry that expresses itself in the primary color and cheap lace and pinchback and corsage bouquet of the hot and unhappy.

Then the highly gowned who unite all the fashions of all the magazines in a single, wonderful get-up, load enough to make the welkin ring, only to sit cheek by jowl with the street gamin and the ordinary shab, for at such functions, crush hats lift with well-worn diers and patent leathers walk with muddy twelves. Ach Gott!

To the warm eye of the comedian critic it is all very jolly.

Calmly, and in great peace, let us speak of the chosen few, cool and beautiful and usual, simply and richly clad with shining bands of hair as God fashioned them, unimproved by heat and hate.

Is all this unimportant—a giving of weight to smoke? Perhaps. To err is human.

MARIAN BARNEY

Fair maid whose brow the painters love,
With rings of sunshine bound above,
And lips that curve to scorn or love;
When I shall see thee quiet stand,
A beach of flag bloom in thy hand,
In gown of green and white and gold.
Fashioned as wast the wont of old,
In simple fall and simple fold,
In light that mighty shadows brede,
In gray elusive silhouette,
I'll smile content and say, "What need
The eyes more fair on which to feed?"
I'll quell the vision with regret.

MAY BLAYNEY

The Alazar’s New Leading Woman

To begin with, she is young—ridiculously so for having had six years’ experience in big parts—and pretty, very, in a charming elusive inconspicuous way. One might attach her to her genius by calling her the seven-people-in-a-minute variety. All very lovable people mind. Then she is fresh and fair and makes one think of quiet nights and early rising, of meadow lands and field flowers and pure air—clean alike of the smoke of chimneys and the stink of the vice.

I'll wager she would come off second to no one in a sprint Clifford. In fact she is inexorably healthy in spite of the knowledge that she has come here to seek relief from bronchitis. In San Francisco—did you ever hear the like? And to have her purpose immediately defeated by the season—the thoughtlessness of nature. But, lady fair, be not downright. Wait until we give you a few specimen February days and then you will know we can set up the weather with anyone.

All that I saw was nature's gift, for a simple shirt waist and tie are the severest test of beauty. What she may be able to buy in Broadway besides, may change my opinion. If the loving hint of the Hand that dresses the butterfly and the rose be but heeded, I can fancy her being quite irresistible. Dressing is a fearful responsibility. Were the one needed common apparel, one shall not defeat my beautiful intentions by the use of mad raiment," added the ten, how few actresses could hold up a sinless head.

"My impressions?" Well, your speed is the chief thing. How you can raise the curtain on an even performance after a week's rehearsal is something you have yet to prove to me. We do things in such a leisurely way at home. With us, three weeks is marvelous quick work. But you live briskly, just as you live high, I suppose. Commercially, we begin at the shilling and aspire rather frugally, while your start is the dollar and your goal the riches of Golconda." She said this with just enough Irish accent to live up to her name and dark hair and well-cut curvys.

"My friends on the steamer warned me that I couldn't call 'Hi, there, hansom!' every time I felt a bit weary, and live within my income. Mercy, I should say not. One soon feels like saying to the New York cabman. 'I'll be awfully obliged, sir, if you'll carry me to Sherry's at a dollar the block, and not overcount to your own advantage.' They are perfect vandals. I'm not much indebted to the city. It is too much like London. Same people, same smoke, same noise, same dirt, same vice. But Southern California is delightful. I could go back to Coronado this minute and live happy ever after.

Tired of the same old thing? How so? If one has music and books, the sun, a horse, a dog and a man now and then, what is there else to covet?"

She says little characteristic things that bespeak a something more than a mere cleverness, and looks at you with an expression that finds a great many things queer but unimportant. I dare say she has noticed how badly dressed our men are as a whole, but I don't think she would spare the time to say so.

The word music made me look toward her piano and not a coon song was in sight. She rose about ten in my estimation, and ten more when I saw covers that looked like Chopin and Brahms, the last of the immortals.

"Lonesome so far from home? Naturally, but chiefly for my dog. In fact, he is the only thing in all the world that I love."

My, but that is a confession. It makes one think of some beautiful new copy paper on a well ordered desk, a chair close by and a pearl handled pen within easy reach. You want someone with a heart something like a woman, to sit down and write a heart story that shall give to the paper a value, forty times the stationer's price upon it. If I were a man, I'd have a try at the story myself.

Story of Sol
Smith Russell

There is always a good story about Sol Smith Russell. The beginning of his stage career is almost utterly unknown.

Years ago Sol Smith Russell hung about the old Defiance Theatre, in Cairo, Ill., glorifying at any time when Mary McWilliams, the manageress of the celebrated old playhouse, required the beat of Sol's wonderful drum. Mary McWilliams was the mother of Katie Putnam, and a singularly helpful, independent woman for those backward days before the "new woman kind of woman" had made her appearance.

The Defiance Theatre was given over to melodrama and the usual comedy or tragedy fashionable. Katie Putnam was at school in a convent and saw only the summer season plays at her mother's theatre and no show at all with her business-like parent, who saw little talent in her girl. Katie was sent to the Holy Cross nuns to be educated beyond such transient things as playhouses, but when Katie "rounded to" she was a properly equipped sou-hette of much talent. Before Katie came home to flirt with the tunes Sol Smith Russell had been enticed away by the trumpet's sound and waving banners of Grant's army, and before he knew what his drum could coax him into he was at the front, hammering tattoos and revelling to beat the band.

Our Actor-Legislator

Representative Julius Kahn, one of the four new men sent from California to Congress, is one of the picturesque and interesting figures of the House. He is only 35 years old, but has seen ten years of active life on the stage, and about an equal period of active practice as a lawyer and politician.

"The first time I played in Washington," remarked Mr. Kahn last week to a Washington newspaper man, "was in 1882. I was with the Kiraly Brothers in their production of Michael Strogoff. Later I came here with Joseph Jefferson's Company.

"For three years I was vice-president of the Actors' Order of Friendship. Its membership included Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Jefferson, the Hollands, John Drew, senior and junior, and many other prominent lights. About 1885 or 1888 the order started a movement to have actors included in the provisions of the contract labor law. This was presented before the House, and was ordered to the labor committee.

"I played Hendrick Vedder with Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle, and I played the heavy part of Antonio Palmiere with Clara Morris in Rene de Moray. I also appeared as Jack Burns in Dolly and Son, when it was played by W. J. Florence, whom I regarded as the greatest character actor in this country, and his company."

Representative Kahn has assumed numerous other parts on the stage. He played for several years in stock companies, and gained quite a reputation as Baron Stein in Diplomacy. He secured the lastling friendship of Charles Hoyt for his superb rendition of Brassy Gall, in A Texas Steer. After his appearance in that part, the last he played before devoting himself to the practice of law, Mr. Hoyt offered him an engagement as long as he had a company on the road. The offer was declined.

"Hoyt had been playing one-night stands," said Mr. Kahn, "and at San Jose, Newton Chissell, who had been playing Brassy Gall, was taken sick. Sunday night I received a telegram from Hoyt, reciting his predicament, and asking that I undertake to play the part. The boys say," his telegram read, "that you have a pretty good memory."

"I received the part at 1 o'clock that night," continued Mr. Kahn. "I studied it till 3 o'clock in the morning. At 10 o'clock Monday morning I reported at the California Theatre for rehearsal, which lasted till 2 in the afternoon. Then I caught a little sleep and succeeded that evening in playing my part without a hitch."

The editor of the Review well remembers the occasion and Mr. Kahn's striking portrayal.

The Mechanics Institute has awarded diplomas for superior work to Mr. Louis Thors, Photographer, 826 Market St.

An Actresses' Catch

"Young man you're mighty lucky, she was bred in old Kentucky."

This is the refrain of a little song that Richard R. Lowry is singing as he whirls across the continent with his arm along the back of the car seat, while he gazes fondly at the little woman beside him.

For he is married at last—Richard R. Lowry, "Dick" Lowry, the richest man in solid cash on the Klondike, and his bride, Virgie Graves, is known throughout the United States in innumerable roles with Olga Nethersole, the Frohman's, the Daly's and other standard companies. They slipped away from their friends and were married in an Oakland hotel on Thurs.

"For I was engaged to be married to a young American actresses who have made their debut this season.

Young Women Black Up

Clever amateurs of Sacramento blacked up last week and gave a performance at the Clinic that was a decided success. The performance abounded in localisms, clever dancing and singing and excellent singing. The end women appeared in several specialties. The hit of the performance was made by Miss Vandemark in her song, "I'll Leave My Happy Home For You." The Misses Mackey, as the Snowball Twins, sang "Hesitate, Mr. Nigger, Hesitate." Mrs. William Hood was exceedingly clever in the song, "I'm a Little Too Fat, My Baby Says;" Mrs. Elida Barrett and Mabel Peterson, with Master Wesley Runcie, made a hit in "My Soldier Man."

"Four Black Roses Looking for a Husband" were Mrs. Elida Barrett, Miss Carrie Littlefield, Mrs. G. McWilliams and Miss Flora Luther, and "Isee a Lady," was a bright hit by Mrs. P. H. Kiefer. At the close of the first part a Yankee Doodle dance was prettily given by Helena Biewener.

Orpheum Enterprise

Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Milton Royle, Camille D'Arville and George Fuller Golden were the stars of the Orpheum San Francisco, one week recently. The acts alone cost the management $2,000 a week for salaries and fares. In the East a $4,000 salary list is looked upon as wonderful. Yet the Orpheum people pay out that much weekly and the fact escapes comment.

Answers to Review's Century Query

San Francisco, Jan. 6.

Editor Dramatic Review—Dear Sir,—In answer to the question whether we are in the 19th or 20th century, I hold the following opinion:

For example, take a child and from the moment it is born it is in its first year. At the end of twelve months it commences on the second year, and so forth until its nineteenth year, when it commences on its twentieth year.

Dating back to the birth of Christ, did they count by the month until one year had passed or did they call it the year one at the time of his birth, and after he was twelve months old did it the year two? If so, we are still in the nineteenth century, but if they counted as we at present count the birth of a child then we commenced the Twentieth Century on January 1, 1900.

Yours respectfully,

Alice W. Rodd.

SPERRY'S BEST FAMILY

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 9, 1900.

Editor Dramatic Review—Dear Sir,—The question of when the 20th century begins is so easy of solution that no one should be led astray by the beguiled arguments of those who so logically claim it does not begin until 1901.

Counting back from Jan. 1, 1900, we find that 100 years have passed since the eventful day when it is claimed that Christ was born, so this year must be the 1901st year or the first year of the 20th century. The day of his birth marked the first year, so Jan. 1, year 1 was his second year, Jan. 1, 1900, was his 101st year, and marked the beginning of the second century; consequently Jan. 1, 1900, was his 102nd birthday and the first year of the 20th century.

Its a question which has raised fierce controversy at the beginning of every century for ages. A question long since settled by the Church, celebrated by the Popes, and today has the public sanction of no less personages than the Tsar of Russia and the Emperor of Germany who made public demonstrations of the great event Jan. 1, 1900.

SARAH WOODS.

In Paradise, the spicy French fare which created such a sensation in New York last fall, has been secured by T. Daniel Frawley, and will follow The Countess Guicki at the California. In Paradise is a free adaptation from the French by B. B. Valentine, from whom Mr. Frawley secured the piece. Theodore Hamilton of the Frawley Company was in the original New York cast, and will play his original role here.

As Things Appear

Major Mme, the diminutive comedian, notwithstanding his lack of stature, is one of the biggest sports in town. Like Tod Sloan, he has a vigorous liking for big black cigars, and to see him puffing away at one that would knock an ordinary smoker silly is a sight. The Major's tastes also run in the direction of B & S's, and foaming beverages. As a recontreur he has also established a name for himself, and at several recent banquets his brilliant essays were among the best things heard. Charlie Ackerman, who is at the head of the Chutes concern, has taken a deep personal interest in the Major, and has a five years' contract with the versatile comedian.

T. Daniel Frawley's taste in the matter of beauty is proverbial. He has lived up to this reputation in presenting his handsome present company. Three handsome women here as Mme. Barnard, Mary Van Buren and Mary Hampton, would grace any company. The first-named, a regal beauty of the blonde type, a charming young actress just merging into the twenties, has created a positive furor in San Francisco, and since her extremely creditable performance in the new play, With Flying Colours, in which her inherent ability has had its first chance to show itself, there have been numerous favorable comments on not only her beauty, but the modest and refined air that characterizes her stage work. In the masculine members of the Frawley Company, there is a grand lot of fine young mailhood represented. Harrington, Reynolds, Francis Byrne and Frank Mathien have made deep impressions on the susceptible hearts of our feminine theatre-goers, and in this case there has been no mistake made. All three have more than their share of good looks—all three are interesting, manly fellows, who carry with them the charm of quiet, unostentatious dignity and good fellowship.

* * *

These clever and whole-souled players who constitute the little band at the Alcazar and who have won such an affectionate regard from our theatre-goers were in the lobby of the theatre the other morning discussing the subject of criticism from the papers, and it was refreshing and pleasing to the jaded spirit to hear how they regarded a well meant hint or two that must necessarily now and then be recorded. No actor can be so well placed as to appear in every role, and with the constant change of plays as falls to the lot of the stock actor, there are often parts that must be wholly unitted to both the actor's ability and temperament. We are certain that Miss Florence Thomas, who is so raggeded, a little scene or two that is decidedly unconvincing; we can let that pass because of the hurly of preparation, but it is not so easy for the most forbearing spirit to be callous to the prompter's voice or to witness any display of carelessness. This is coming back to the Alcazar player folk, they in solemn concave, voiced the opinion that judicious criticism was a good thing and that it acted as a needed tonic. Too much applause, too much acclimation, and there is a surfeit of sufficiency that does no man or woman good. Good! Yes, indeed.

Felix Morris Dead

Felix Morris, one of the best character actors in America, died last Sunday at his home in New York from pneumonia. His wife was Florence Wood, formerly of this city. He was an Englishman who had become almost completely Americanized. Felix Morris' first public appearance as an actor was in Lotta's report in Musette. His first great success was in the role of the reporter in Michael Strogoff. Subsequently he was a member of A. M. Palmer's Company. Then he joined Rosina Vokes' Company, where he remained for seven seasons. His greatest successes were made in his support in old-man roles.

After Miss Vokes' death, Mr. Morris started in the dramatis personae. He then joined Daniel Faribault's Stock Company, of which he was nominally a member at the time of his death, although for the last two years he has been appearing in the vaudeville theatres.

Worthy of Every Consideration

The following, from the successful and enterprising manager of Portland, shows the regard the profession has for THE REVIEW.

The Dramatic Review—Your kind favor of late date to hand, calling attention to the importance of THE DRAMATIC REVIEW as an advertising medium. In reply to same will say, I have received a number of copies of this paper and I am very much pleased with it. It really reflects much credit on the promoters. It is a very interesting paper, and in my judgment worthy of every consideration. Enclosed you will please find check for ad and subscription.

Wishing you success, I remain

Very truly yours,

Jno. F. Cordray.

The Dramatic Review in the Orient

Even in China and Japan the profession gets THE REVIEW. Max and Wm. Berol, in a letter from Hongkong telling us how entertaining they find THE REVIEW, enclose some striking advertising matter they are using for their attraction, Madame Korrin, the modern witch. Their engagement in Japan was most successful and they are repeating it in China.
Fred Tjader, who had played many engagements in San Francisco, died in San Diego a short time ago.

Emmet Corrigan, a young actor who has suddenly come to the front, has succeeded E. J. Morgan in Ben Hur.

Tony Bianci has changed around from the California to the New Alhambra and will help look after the billing of that theatre.

John Saunders, aged 83, an English actor, died in Indianapolis last Saturday. He played with Jefferson and other prominent actors.

May Howard, a promising young actress, once connected with the Alcazar forces, has joined the Rag Time Reception Company at Rochester, as leading ingenue.

Amelia Bingham, Della Fox, S. Miller Kent and Edwin Stevens will be the chief players in Hearts Are Trump, which is to be produced at the Garden Theatre, New York, next month.

Joe Rosenthal, who has with Joe Hess been doing the very successful outdoor and window advertising for the New Alhambra, takes charge of the Oakland Macdonough outdoor work next week.

William A. Brady intends shortly to organize a company to tour in a romantic drama called The Rough Riders. Mason Mitchell, who was with Roosevelt in Cuba, and Jim Jeffries, will be in the cast.

Nearly all the principal actors, managers and operatic singers in the city are becoming members of the Press Club. Manager Frank Murray of the Frawley Company and Mr. Frawley himself have only recently been voted in. Among other late applicants are Tom Greene and Alf Wheelan, of the Tivoli, and Winfred Goff of the Grand.

Sweeney Chidley, the artist, died last week. He was 60 years and was born in London, England. Chidley was famous as a scenic painter, although he had been educated for the legal profession. Some of his scenic work has been seen here in the Grand Opera House and the Alcazar. He had also held engagements in theatres in Eastern cities. Chidley had also made some highly meritorious literary contributions to the daily press and the various weekly publications.

Blanche Beach as Nell in The Electrician scored a hit Monday night at Watsonville.

John Abbott as Tom, Edward Kelly as Barney, and Blanche La Mar in an Irish character part, were distinctive hits at The Electrician opening Monday night.

Frank Thompson returned from Watsonville Tuesday, after rehearsing The Electrician Company, which was very favorably received on its opening Monday night, by a big house.

Grace Cameron has been engaged for leading souweste roles with the Bosziotes. She will appear here with them during their coming engagement at the Columbia Theatre.

Miss Gretchen Finney, a Los Angeles girl, is the latest Californian to win recognition in the East.

Stuart Robson's production of Augustus Thomas' comedy, Oliver Goldsmith, has been reported as a genuine success. In fact, if we are to believe out of town contemporaries, Robson has never had a better play.

With the At Gay Coney Island Company which appears at the New Alhambra is Marie Storl, who not only possesses a beautiful soprano voice, but is also very favorably known as a violinist, having appeared as a soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Manager John Fisher, besides handling the Modjeska tour next season, will put on the road a musical comedy which is being written for him by Madeline Lucette Ryley and Julian Edwards. It is Mr. Fisher's intention to feature in this play a young Californian named Guelma L. Baker, whose singing aroused considerable enthusiasm not only here, but in Chicago during the Modjeska engagement. She is only nineteen years old and is the daughter of a well-known railroad man in this State.

Leonora Jackson, the young San Francisco violinist, made her American debut at the concert of the New York Philharmonic Society, in Carnegie Hall, Friday of last week. Her playing was acceptable in every particular, and her performance was greatly added to by her very attractive appearance.

Too Sloan is back in San Francisco holding court at the Palace, in addition to killing small birds and a few birds on our marshes. He rather indignantly denies that he proposes to take Alice Nielsen and her company to London for an engagement.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., Jan. 10, Julia Morrison James, on trial for the murder of Frank Leidenheimer of the Mr. Plaster of Paris Company, on the stage of the Chattanooga Opera House the night of September 23d, was acquitted on one ballot.

Wagenhals and Kemper, managers of the James-Kidder-Hanford combination, are contemplating a big revival for next season of King John as well as A Midsummer's Night's Dream.

The Louisiana, an historical play, will shortly be produced at the Alcazar.

The new Macdonough Theatre, Oakland, will begin its stock season on the 20th with Too Much Johnson.
The Columbia

"The half was never told," so the Queen of Sheba said upon her return from the Court of Solomon; and surely had the great appreciative public but known of a small portion of the splendor of the presentation of Shakespeare's Winter's Tale by the James-Kidder-Hanford Company at the Columbia this week, they would have crowded the house and stood three deep thronging even the Foyer with gladness. Some thoughtless writer recently remarked that this was one of Shakespeare's poorest plays. Not so. "Twas one of his two last finished plays, receiving all the wealth of his matured mind; a story of deepest heart tragedy told with classic taste and form, and acted by a company whose performance has a finish and perfection of detail seldom if ever witnessed upon this coast, aided by magnificent scenery whose every detail has been studied, as have the costumes of each and every performer from the leaf-strewn ground prepared for the shepherd's dance to the Psyche knot that renders the beautiful head of the peerless Kathlyn Kidder as Hermione the great queen, than whom none but Mary Anderson—if any one—can so touch the heart-strings of humanity and play upon them as upon a harp of a thousand strings. All—all is complete to minutest item. The artist and student gaze with rapt attention drinking in each scene and costume. Miss Kidder is always the perfect actress, whether as the devoted wife and fond mother in the domestic scene, or the majestic defender of her own honor in the Tribunal, carrying the house almost to its feet in sympathetic, rapturous motion as she seems to tower above the world in her indignant protest, so that one is almost forced to agree with Mrs. Mary Fairweather's assertion that all life is a tragedy—but the tragedy of The Winter Tale as here produced gives such exquisite pain as to bring to the hearer and beholder a tearful joy on witnessing its pathos and beauty.

The storm scene alone is a revelation of stage settings: in fact, our provincial theatrical people should take a lesson—aye, many lessons—from this immaculate performance. Miss Helen Singer as Pauline, wife of Autigones, has a heroic part which she fills with conscientious care and well-balanced work.

Of Miss Elizabeth Barriscale as the King's son, I heard a feminine voice near me whisper breathlessly, "Isn't that child-like dream—a beautiful child-like character, beautifully portrayed by a beautiful person. Could you ask for a finer combination? Its all there—the simple, ingenious child sporting with the maidens with a naive and grace of careless childhood which carries one back to their own guileless days. The disappearance of this lovely "dream" so early in the play leaves a distinct void.

Mr. Hanford as Leontes, King of Sicilia, is royal in his make-up and costuming, magnificent in voice and carriage. While one could hate this needlessly-jealous King, one can but admire him for his kingly bearing even in his cruel mandates as King and master—yet what does our boast-ed civilizatio bring that this classic Greek had not? Only a refinement of cruelty I opine. In the stride for wealth the jugglingman of today rushes ruthlessly all in its Mairay, regardless of life, limb, love or sorrow, its only the same tyrannical power transferred to another field of action.

Mr. Barry Johnston as Polixenes, King of Bohemia, gives the royal character, grace and dignity, and Mr. Norman Hackett as his son, Florizel, is an ideal lover. The naturalness of his acting, especially with Perdita (which character Miss Kidder assumes in this portion of the play) in the dance in the shepherd's vineyard is a delight to the art lover. This dance, by the way, in its utter abandon and joyousness, takes you out into the fields where you actually breathe the air laden with the perfume of the grape—and those simple shepherds and shepherdess dance into your life until your eyes dance and a joyous light fills your own being from participation in their wild happiness. Miss Aphie James comes to the front here with a bit of fine acting. Mr. John Elsler as the shepherd, and Mr. Collen Kemper as his son are the simple folk you read about—they so readily yield to the tricky, scheming villain. Antolyces, which Mr. Louis James portrays with such fidelity to nature, that you loath this gloating creature, mad with his own mishappe nature which lives but to gather where he has not sown. Mr. James is an artist, and his arrival so late in the play seems to brighten us up when we have become slightly depressed with so much of sorrow and sadness. The closing scene is reminiscent of Darcy as Adimis, although transcending it in every feature.

The statue of the dead (?) Queen is almost too beautiful for earth, as the broken-hearted King exclaims, "She is an angel." As the curtain falls for the last time you are brought back to earth with a shock, and it takes a few minutes to bring you back to the humdrum life of the closing year of the 19th century.

The trombon solo performed by Mr. A. RonceVoci is peculiarly fitting, and the tears all but fall as the familiar strains of the Holy City fall upon the ear.

Grand Opera House

A NOBLE SUCCESS has been made at the Grand Opera House this week in Don Cesar of Irun, a romantic opera by Delliinger. The music is unusually good, so entertaining, in fact, that even the gallery habitues applauded it almost unanimously. Thos. Perce is the hero, Don Cesar, and the role gives him a fine opportunity for both acting and singing. He received a curtain call several times during Monday evening. Miss Mason, as Maritana, sang in her usual vivacious manner and scored a hit with Goff, the King, in a duet. Goff's voice is well suited to the music and he was therefore very acceptable.

Hattie Belfe La愤 had the boy part and handled it well, looking very fascinating and singing in her usual good strain. Woff was the prime minister, the villain, and Miss Fairbairn the wife of Florin, otherwise Woolley. Woolley had all the fun-making to do, and that isn't saying much, for the piece is not comical by any means, but it is one of the best light operas ever produced in San Francisco. The scenic effects were particularly good.

Denman Thompson and The Old Homestead will be with us before many weeks have passed. The celebrated play has been seen here quite often, and with the same great success as when Thompson first came here with it. He returns in the principal role after a long absence during which time Josh has been played by several well known people.

The California

The Frawleys have come into their own—and we are glad of it. In comedy and in drawing-room drama they are a fine organization. Toward the last of their engagement they are giving us the best of their entertainment. Last week we said the Princess and the Butterfly was the best thing they had given us—this week we take it back and proclaim The Countess of Zandari as the cleverest play yet handed out, and big audiences are the usual thing. Mary Van Buren, who plays the role of the Countess—the part that Ada Rehan used to so fond of—takes a big stride in the estimation of the public for a very interesting portrayal. The lightness and deftness and airy grace of Miss Rehan is not there, but Miss Van Buren works out her own ideas very cleverly and displays many moments of delicious comedy work. T. Daniel Frawley himself was immensely enjoyed. That serious comedy element in his make-up that finds its vent in not every comedy character, was capitably suited to the part of the Countess of Zandari. There is always this in Mr. Frawley's work that commends itself to his audiences—he never errs on the side of too much exaggeration; he may at times lack a very much desired spontaneity, but he is never on the side of bad judgment, and this very discrimination—this same dead seriousness that shows in his broadest comedy work, and gives it a distinctive tone, has had the effect of really creating a very good bond of sympathy between player and audience. Mr. Frawley challenges the admiration of his warmest friends by his work in this play. It certainly is worthy of first place in the entertainments the Frawley Company offers this week, and if your every succeeding effort is as good, Mr. Frawley, you will play to the most complaisant audiences that ever fell to the lot of an actor. Frank Mathieu, as Leopold Von Mittersich, had quite a pleasant role, and acquitted himself quite as pleasantly and satisfactorily. George Gaston, as the Court Counsellor, in a make-up quite reminiscent, was good, and the part can be said of Phosa McAllister, who enacted the part of Mrs. Court Counsellor, decidedly automatic. Pearl Landers was sweet and dainty and stronger this week than in a great deal of her past work. Theodore Hamilton, without attempting the Russian enunciation that has been generally surprise, and astonishingly so, as the household servants, Wenzel and Kosa, completed the cast. Mr. Frawley, you can give us The Countess
Gucki again, and not lose money.

The Alcazar

This week it is the men who dominate. The cast of the play and the part of General Sol Watscheff, a bluff, yet tender-hearted Russian bear, were extremely easy, graceful, and too great a sufficiency—all this was brought out clearly and convincingly and was a strong feature of strength, and grace. The chorus at the close of the first act is above the ordinary comic ora— the music rather insufficient,

Ferris Hartman and Al Whiteman as

Miss Hyberts Pryme rendered her songs very cleverly, and Miss Annie
St. Tel was excellent in her novelty dances. John and Bertha Gleeson certainly are pre-eminent dancers, and their many elegant changes of costumes, together with their excellent talents, make them general favorites.

New Alhambra

It's jolly, frolicsome and immensely famous—that is the reason why A Hot Old Time has drawn such crowded houses at the Alhambra this week. With special features were presented throughout the piece which added zest and interest, and were well calculated to satiate the most excelling pleasure seeker.

John W. Jess as Larry Mooney, of Mme. Jourdain's Exposition of Follies, as an all around fun-provoking Irishman, and he is ably seconded by William McRobie, who makes up admirably as his twin—together they form a combination that is seldom surpassed.

St. Tel was excellent in her novelty dances. John and Bertha Gleeson certainly are pre-eminent dancers, and

tumes, together with their excellent

The Tivoli

The Idol's Eve is produced this week at the Tivoli with all and more of the fun that Frank Daniels in-fused into it. With two such jolly comedians as Ferris Hartman and Al Whiteman as center of the produc-cion, "I just dropped in," sings
Hartman, as he drops from the clouds in the most startling manner.
"Hoot Mon," says Wheelan, much to the de-light of the audience, who yell with laughter, as these words constantly cause a disarrangement of Hartman's tainment. The work is very even and well done throughout, every one entering into the spirit and fun of the thing with utter abandon.

The California

The Frawley Company at the Caliifornia Theatre are presenting the last performances of The Countess Gucki.
Tom Gore, as the Ford Greene's solo in the third act, "One Heart's Enough for Me," given with feeling, was heartily encored to which he responded with another verse. The Quintet, Fairy Tale, is a wonderful sweet, sensuous refrain, which was encored recollected again and all. "Twas given

CORRESPONDANCE:
Widower, topical Belle and a Gallagher overcame still was that stage in for wondering Chautauqua, went Thorne, Naughty here was the reputation for beauty which her sister have long enjoyed in California so conspicuous was the success of her first dive into fascial comedy. Those who went to see Naugthy Anthony, expecting that the adapter of Zaza would repeat some of the ragged-edged scenes of that play were disappointed, because the naughtiness of Anthony was not at all vulgar. It is true that Blanche Bates, as the hostess model who was taking a course in moral culture at Chaptumana, displayed enough bone; if joined together, to put out a fire in the Cell tower, but in doing so she was neat and nice. The old habit of the hostess model overcome as she was talking with three Salvation Army lassies, and she pulled off silk stockings, one after another, to the amazement of the three girls. Plenty of textile surface was exposed, but no cuticle was laid bare, so that Naugthy Anthony in that regard can not be compared with the bare-foot set of Trilby nor the dislocation in The Tortoise. It was just enough to send that in the relation and applauded the deal, and insisted on the opening night that Mr. Relacso should make a speech. The speech was short and modest in what it differed from the set speeches of some authors on opening nights. Among others in the cast are Frank Worthing, William J. Le Moyne, Albert Reining, William Elton, Samuel Edwards, Nand Harrison, Mary Barker and Olive Redpath.

Following Chris and the Wonderful Lamp found upon the story of Aladdin, which began the New Year at Hammerstein's Victoria, came another murder story called Little Red Riding Hood, under which title a regular Rice extravaganza was brought to the Casino last week. The production is possible for the new master of Little Red Riding Hood up-to-date are Harrison Wand, Edward R. Ogle, Charles Dunwood and Fred Lang. It is full of Tonderlein jokes and has one barbwire on the underdressing acts which provided here until recently. Among the players are Madge Leaning, Edil Jackson, Kitty Mitchell, Sager Mudgey, Suze Ed- wards, Halloa Mosyn, Clara Havel, Thos. O'Brien and Dave Abraham. The legitimate singer of the aggregation of talent is Belle Thorne, who was in private life Miss Ruby Jones of Talare County, California, before she married Herman Perlet, now manager for Anna Hess in Papa's Wife. Miss Thorne still retains the charm which made her a favorite ten years ago at the Tivoli in San Francisco, although she has just enough surplus weight to give the local cœcarnons here an opportunity to include her among other female characters. This week you announce that Little Red Riding Hood is for children. It would be understood that Franche Thorne is in charge of the show. The audience was that evening surprised by a song sung by Miss Thorne with the accompaniment of Miss Adams, William H. Thompson and George Fawcett.

A CORRECTION

Edward H. Winder, former tenor of the Bostonians, who is now in charge of the singers in Way Down East, in which Phoebe Davies is the central figure, is considerably amused at some of the songs which have been going around about his disappearance. He can't account for the publications about his disappearance. The newspapers have been put together of some writers must have misconstrued metaphor for literal statement. One paper, noticing the absence of Edward Winder, printed a wrong operation. It re- marked that Edward Winder had completely disappeared and so he had, as far as he is concerned. As a leading tenor, he was convinced, but he is taking things easy at the Academy of Music in quartette work and hopes some day to regain his voice.

Emma Calve, who is to sing Cherubino in the Nozze di Figaro for the first time in America on January 29th, when the Gran Opera Company begins its Mozart cycle, played the part first in Brussels in 1903, after suffering a slender girl. Thinking that her legs were too thin she resigned to symmetricals in the first act, but as soon as the manager saw her from the iron he made her change for her own legs, thin as they were. Calve's calves are all right now with- out padding. Gran OPERA at the Metropolitan this season is enjoying a fossial success as such is not known for many years. With women such as Calve, Norden, Eames and the greatest living singer, Neuf- bich, and with Edward de Reske, Cam- parani, Saliganc, Scotti, Alvarez and Pini. Coral Manager Grau has a company that can not fail to give entire satisfaction. Manager Grau's willingness to refund money, wherever a principal singer is prevented from appearing has brought him a much larger patronage than ever, for thus far he has always had such good substitutes in case of a singer's illness that the generous ever- avail themselves of the offer to refund money or exchange tickets. Don Pasquale is a candidate for the last week in December. A notice for the immediate past Monday night as it was the first time it had ever been seen at the Metropoli- tan the previous night. The regular Gran Opera are notified several California students who are studying singing here under various teachers. No new occasion could be obtained than a night listening to such artists.

Jeremy Sykes is the latest real stage hero. While the audience at Chris and the Wonderful Lamp in the Victoria last Tuesday night was getting alarmed by smoke issuing from the basement, Jerry calmed the excited crowd by stepping forward and singling a topic song until the smoke filled the stage. The audience got out without a stampede, but three choral groups were so frightened that they slid down the fire escape and would have been running yet if Manager Ben Stevens had not caught them in the street and sent them back. The trouble was caused by rubber on the electricity wires which got too hot.

Maude Adams received an ovation at the Criterion last Tuesday night upon her re- turn to the city in The Little Minister. Orrin Johnson was the little minister. Support of Miss Adams was by Ollie H. Thompson and George Fawcett.

* * *

Fires seem to be getting popular. The burning rubber scare at the Victoria on Tuesday very soon was followed by a small blaze on Wednesday night in a dressing-room at the Casino which was quickly put out, but the water soaked the stage badly so that no performance of Little Red Riding Hood could be given that night. Dozens of chorus girls and -workers dashed gold-mell across thirty-ninth street into the dining room of the Parker House, but before the diners could get a good look at the scene, the girls had locked themselves in the cloak-rooms until they could get some street clothes. OGDEN

Special Correspondence

OGDEN, Utah, Jan. 7.—After nearly two months of Inactivity, our Opera House puts on two attractions for next week. Jan. 8, Paul Gilmore plays The Dawn of Freedom. Mr. Gilmore has taken a good look at our metropolis. The girls had quite a time getting their numbers in the cloak-rooms until they could get some street clothes. ROY ROG.

DALLAS, Texas, Jan. 4.—While it must be admitted that since the opening of the new season the class of attractions offered Dallas theatre goers could have been greatly improved upon, it is yet an undeniable fact that with but few exceptions the business done by companies appearing here has been very good. The number of subscriptions has been considerably increased, and the music is always of the best.

Indications, however, are that with the new year, a better class of attractions will be offered, and we live in hopes that our management will cater to the requirement of a better class of theatre goers, who are not slow in appreciation, and who constitute the playing element of the amusement-loving inhabitants of Dallas.

January 1st and 2d the management offered the ever vivacious and sprightly Corinne in the Little Hope. The company included our old friend R. W. Graham, who ably handled all the fun-making business required of the part of Joseph Dandridge, and was assisted most ably by Mr. Raff, a member of no ordinary abilities. The production was well staged, with good scene and costume effects and the playing, both vocal and comic, of the principal and supporting players is much improved. One notices an advancement of the stage properties and the performances of all the company.

MONTANA

Special Correspondence

BUTTE, Montana, Jan. 9.—The Grand Opera House, Mr. G. O. McFarland, Man- ager, for four nights commencing Sunday, January 7, Sidney Grundy's play, showing the Wind, appeared at the Grand, to large and pleased audiences.

Great interest was manifested by the audience at each performance and the company closed an unusually successful engagement.

Chas. M. Collyard handled the difficult part of Beaubois, a widower, who opposes the marriage of his adopted son and natural daughter.

The song of Frank Ritchie, Maude Edna Hall, H. W. Turner and A. D. Richardson, deserves special mention.

London Life appears the Grand and is followed by Bronson Howard's Shadonna.

ST. LOUIS

special Correspondence

ST. LOUIS, Jan. 11.—The theatrical offering opens this week with Mg. Julia Arthur, in her Napoleon drama, More Than a Queen, which is scenically at least the most ambitious production that this talented actress has attempted, is pleasing Manager Pat Short's patrons at the Olympic, whilst a bevy of stage beauties and footlight favorites, including W. J. Jergus- son, Joseph Allen, Lewis Baker, Alfred Klein, Paul McAllister, Charles W. Lane, Robert Hickman, Edgar Waley, Joseph F. Hall, Rose Flynn, Mayne Kealty, Blanche Calf, Rose Flynn, Gertrude Whitty, Magie Foreby, Grace Hasson and May Blanchard are receiving favorable comment from both the amusement-loving public and the press in the Frenchly rich comedy, The Girl From Marseilles. She is at the Century.

Manager C. M. Southwell of the St. Louis Square Opera Company is again giving his lyric revues a double bill this week in A Banjo Porte and The Pirates of Penzance. In the casts are Selma Kiomold, Mary Linek, Mary Carrington, William Aundette, Homer Lind, Harry Davies, F. Belcher, W. H. Grimke, Edward Temple, W. W. Hin- chey, William Hawley, Betty May, Lilian Berri, Della Nixon, Rose Campbell and Florence Glover.

Frawley Company management of Mr. Frawley. Murr.
Dedicated January 14th by the Cheerful Lil Company. The house is a beauty in every way, first class comfortably furnished, a drop curtain representing a scene in Bohemian, seven new sets of scenery, entire house seated with new ball bearing opera chairs, new carpet, the latest in color and design. The house is entirely completed and repainted and taken altogether is as neat and cozy a little playroom as one could desire. Manager Clarence H. Jones deserves the thanks of Portland players for all he has done for their comfort. During the last night the house was packed to suffocation, the S, H, O, signs being out at 8 o'clock.

The play will be played a week, but after the opening performance, Manager Jones cancelled the attraction and the house will be closed.

Garst & Brown's Fredricksburg Music Hall, are doing a very nice business. The artists are always of the highest order, which together with an absence of rowdism makes it an ideal place to spend the evening. The bill this week includes Berlin Sisters, Dury- pet, G. & E. Blauvelt and their manufacture.

A member of L. J. Carter's Remember the Maine Company, is seriously ill at the hospital. His name cannot be learned at this time.

Seating capacity for the new Metropolitan has been increased from 900 to 1000. One of the pleasant things between acts at Corday's is the piano playing of the little girl in the orchestra, who is evidently not over 12 years old, but has the touch of a master. He is greatly appreciated by the Corday's patrons, who invariably insist upon or or their encores. A local newspaper is running a contest for the next popular ledge or secret order in Portland. R. F. O. Elks are in the lead, with F. O. Eagles a close second.

Mr. Fred Fairbanks, an old San Francisco favorite, is engaging the lead in Human Hearts with good results.

The Boston Lyric Opera Company is still playing at the Orpheum to good houses; being more than ever the success they so greatly anticipated on account of their long stay at the Opera House under high prices. They are playing on the third week under a four weeks' engagement.

Col. Thompson expects to leave for the Coast on the next Africa the latter part of the month. There is a good deal of talk among the members just how they will be able to get away from here. The steamship companies have been dropping steamers that have just departed for the Coast; the Bubacque Brig being on her way, all of which load and unload at San Francisco. This train will have to go in quarantine and be under the care of some physician, whose duty it will be to examine every one daily. This is what is worrying the Lyric Company. There is some talk of the entire Company moving to the Opera House nearCol. Thompson, but this is not to be decided till after the conclusion of this week's engagement.

The Orpheum Company is still at Hilo on their last cruise, but are now leaving with much success, and will continue to show there for a week or ten days longer.

SACRAMENTO

Sacramento, Jan. 16.—The Boston Lyric Opera Company, which was to have appeared at the Clunie Opera House this week had to postpone, so the engagement is off for the present. Miss Calne's The Christian is booked for Friday night. There is great desire to see it. Emma Nevada will be here on the 24th.

On the 26th the Clunie stage will be taken by fifty amateurs, who will give the comic opera, The Phantom Fiddler, for the benefit of the Sacramento Opera Society and Sacrament Parlor No. 2, J. S. W. Five houses are already sold, and is expected to be sold out, and is expected to be filled with both nights. The following is the cast for the opera, W. E. Lord, Asa; W. E. L. Richards; Frederick, Wilter Longbottom; Major-General Stanley, W. H. Wheeler; Sergeant Chimmie, M. Koenig; Major, Miss Lenna Gore; Ruth, Miss Jane Barnes; Kate, Miss Charlotte Ibarra; Edith, Miss Isabella; Ruby; Isabel, Miss Edna Coppersmith; General Stanley and Lieutenant and policemen by a chorus of forty voices.

HONOLULU

Honolulu, Jan. 9—Word has been received from Honolulu, informing the Metropolitans that they are now playing in the colonies to be left there some time this month or early in February for San Francisco, and figure on stepping off here for two weeks or so.

The Metropolitans were opened and
The Orpheum

There were a host of funny people at the Orpheum this week, on the boards, of course, not in the audience, be it understood. The audience wasn’t a bit funny. They just sat and laughed just like every other audience at the Orpheum—because you can’t help it, you know. There were those comical Elinoire Sisters. How they did ennui- cite! You never missed a word—and you’d have been sorry if you had! Their articulation was the loudest thing about them, except their clothes. And then for more girls there were Hanson and Nelson or Nelson and Hanson; either way it was lovely dancing, lovely gowns, and lovely girls—pretty champions of the new mode of unstayed grace. Then came Hodges and Lauchmere, the colored comedians; which was Hodges and which was Lauchmere is still a question to the average mind—but there is no doubt of the skill of their vocal gymnastics—not to mention no less than seventeen variations of the cake-walk. And Mlle. Emmy with her dogs! pretty terriers, pretty tricks, and more than pretty accessories of flowers and bright lights. Why, those little dogs went through their steps, their remarkable feats, like—well, like little men, bless their hearts! If there is any one thing little dogs like better than another, it is to be hoped they were generously supplied with it after the performance. Then Frank Latona played the Holy City in a truly inspiring way, and Frank Coffin’s much admired tenor voice proved as sweet and warm in popular melodies as it ever had in classical romance. What the last performers on the program did is still a matter for conjecture—it was so mixed up with big hats, stabbing hatpins, war- ring plumes, gauzy veils spread wing- wise, and elbow-joints in action.

The Chutes

There is little that is new at the Chutes this week. Frank Hall’s exhibition as a lion tamer is not bad, the lion Wallasce being apparently subjugated to his will. Harry De Lain, the high baritone, gave some clever imitations of Fangere, the French Chanteuse. Al Hazard, the ventriloquist, was very amusing in his special line. The Leander Bros., the gladi- torial acrobats, gave a fine perform- ance of endurance with graceful pos- turing. The Columbian Four with the musical specialties, and Major Mite are still with us. The Major grows constantly in the public favor. He sang, “You Don’t Weigh No Fifteen Hundred Pounds.”

The Olympia

There is little change in the actors at the Olympia this week, though they had new numbers. Di- rector Feaster led the Hungarian Orchestra with some catchy music. Caradonna in character dancing is very fetching. Olla Chaudron, Matt Keefe, Chandler and McPherson, Mary Nel- son and Zoyarra repeated their several specialties very acceptably. The La- ments are on their last week. The soubrette, Jolly Hamilton, made her first appearance and scored a hit. Marie D. Wood, the California night- ingale, sang the songs the boys love to hear, and Carlton and Royce intro- duced the stanooscope which is a con- ceit of their own and very enjoyable too. Cad. Wilson’s character songs are telling and jolly.

Vaudeville Notes

Maud Darrell opens at the Olympia Jan. 12.
Matt Keefe opens at the Chutes Jan. 22.
Roberts and Smilax open at the Chutes Jan. 27.
W. H. Hill will open at the Olympia Jan. 22.
Adelaide Hermann will do her illusion- ings in Paris.
Mollie Mason leaves for Jerome, Arizona.
Billy Dodson opens at Los Angeles Orpheum, Jan. 22.
De Forrest Sisters will shortly appear in this city.
James F. Goodwin will soon be seen in a local music hall.
Baker and Fonsie are at the Royal Music Hall, Savannah, Ga.
Madeline De Ray is a good card at Monte Carlo Theatre, Keswick.
The Standard Theatre, Bakersfield, Cal., has a very strong bill the week Jan. 22.
Angie and her lions and Frank Hall after their long engagement at the Chutes, go on the road Monday, bound for England.

Al Hazard, the ventriloquist, com-templates a Northern trip.
Geo. H. Wilson opens on the Savoy Circuit, Victoria, B. C., on the 22d.
The Southern Quartet will in the near future play in the Northwest.
Murphy and Raymond made the hits of the season at the Tivoli Theatre, Stockton.
Marie Wilbur is a prime favorite at Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles. This is her fifth week.
Armstrong and O’Neill, one of the best boxing acts on the stage, are a big hit everywhere.
The three Malvern Brothers will make their first San Francisco appear- ance in the near future.
Conlon and Ryder, after one year’s successful engagement in the North- west, will soon return home.
Leoni and Leoni will shortly appear in this city, their home, after a successful engagement in the East.
J. A. Johnson, formally member of the Savoy Theatre, Victoria, will re-open his former theatre in Victoria, the Tribli.
The Vienna Buffet, Los Angeles, is doing a very large business. Patrick and Hogan, the managers, are happy these days.
Molring Brothers, O Enhama, Code Morgan, Allie Delmar and Zolo Sisters open next week at the Standard Theatre, Bakersfield, Cal.
Little Mabel Bowman, the clever little soubrette, has just returned from a tour with Stockwell. She contem- plates re-entering vaudeville.
An acrobatic wonder in the person of Volkya, a Los Angeles boy, has been discovered and been booked for a tour of the Eastern vaudeville houses.
Volkya’s first appearance on any stage was a remarkable hit.
Nelson Roberts is the new manager of Koster & Bines. It will take plenty of good business acumen to give it the prestige it once enjoyed.

Blanche La Mar

This handsome and talented young lady is a native Californian, having been born in Sacramento in 1880. In the profession and in private life she is a great favorite. Miss La Mar is at present playing with much success the Irish character in The Electrization now touring the State. The favorable character of her work has come under the observation of Thall and Kennedy and she leaves for New York in May to begin an engagement in one of their companies. Miss La Mar is the daughter of Geo. W. Ficks, the well- known manager of the Clinic Opera House, Sacramento.

Lord Chumley, E. A. Sothern’s greatest success, will be the bill next week at the Alcazar.

Another Nevada concert will be given January 22d at the California Theatre.

FOR WOMEN

129 Kearny St.
San Francisco
To in his ravings by mistake,
A solemn truth the madman spake.
You notice that I say, "a solemn truth"—singular number. That binds me to just one a week. Run a con-ommoner's eye over the page and make your own selection.

What a wonderful thing is light. Beautiful when it adorns—grotesque and uncanny when it deforns. Night after night it played a silent tragedy in The Christian, all unheeded by the mute masses in front, who saw only Glory and John and the issue at stake.
Streaming in through the window, it captured the cross in John's hand and threw it dancing among the wine bottles—right and left, up and down, bent and twisted and mad and—helpless. Then over it flashed to the champagne cooler, paused in a certain measure of bewilderment at its own defordity—and disappeared. Let the poet end it as he please, there's the whole story. From the eyes of those who saw it, the picture will not easily fade. It goes deep to the spot where resolutions take shape.

There is a charm absolutely impossible to state in words (my words—my brother will not lend me his) that closes about the late fashionable and 'can't sit-it-out vulgar who fill but do not grace our theatres. It is a modern charm—it was not that thing.
No curtain could be late enough to accommodate the former and no masterpiece of a finish delicate enough to keep the latter in their chairs to the end. What is a dainty epilogue spoken by a beautiful woman compared to 'beer and pipes' and a seat at Zinkand's looking doorward? Hang your epilogues. We know a good thing and when we sight it we shout! The drama of the future must begin and end with pantomime.
There is no help for it. For certain men and women will keep on their vulgar ways through you burst with indignation. They can't help it. They act according to their light.

Would it not be a graceful thing for the Columbia Theatre to give a professional matinée of The Winter's Tale, so that each theatre might send its stage manager, and scenic artist, and master of properties to the director to take a needed lesson in the perfection of detail? It is the most melodious chord of harmony that has been struck here for many a day, and a criticism that confines itself to the dominant notes, is no criticism. Its musical echoes will awake again and again to fill the void that lies ever in the future possibility of our city, dramatically. There is such a thing as a natural stage child after all and what a dream of a fairy she is. If Miss Elizabeth Barry-Hale had stepped out of a Grecian frieze, bringing the atmosphere with her, she could not have been more wonderfully like.

Harrington Reynolds has played the parts assigned him with so much good faith and steadfastness, that he has come to have no mean degree of authority as a villain. But a man who plays one tune forever, in time gets to play it on a single string—and there are so many kinds of sinners. Please,
Mr. Frawley, pass around your vil-ains. A stock company should be a very open field for experiment and surely Mr. Reynolds is not the only black spider.

Besides, how can a man's talent be in this way, compelled to yield what it contains? Personally, I should not have thought him capable of what he did as Lamorat in The Princess and the Butterfly. It was far by the best piece of acting in the play, and saved more than one spot from being duller than d a fifteen-cent scissors. May he never be a villain again.

"The Countess Guicki. Mary Van Buren is Ada Rehan's most popular role.
That sort of announcement makes me feel like commending some one, with a few unclerical but definite expressions, to the far back of beyond.
Must no one be anything, without creeping up Ada Rehan's sleeve or living in the light of her reflected glory? Ada Rehan is the greatest actress I have ever seen. I saw her at her best and I did not see her grow, and yet I know that no bad gardener got to work and pruned and grafted to suit his miserable fancy. The growth was spontaneous.

The Rehan tradition is a wicked tyranny. It makes for constraint and no audacity, and the thralldom of it has warped the talent of many. I have seen more than one actress set out with a clear call to greatness and finish by being a puny echo. The sorrow of it will weep in the heart long after these people translate themselves from a field to which they have added nothing, and while they are making a slow but inevitable exit, the critics, in pity, are seeing them through and doing the civil.

There was a time, when every actress in the town, had a touch of the Rehan sling, until the Rehan charms became a text for lamentation—a penance to those who loved art. And I for one am not ever keen on penance.

These be pining, radical times and let each one open his own oyster and season it to his liking. Horse radish is good, but if you eat it to do the proper, you deserve to weep as you usually do, through bad measurement.
In fact, you deserve to choke.

The dupery of tradition anyway. It is a hampered and outgrown creed.
It has played a winning hand in the death of the classic and now it wants a clutch at the modern.

Must we be forever licking the blocking off some one's shoes? I suppose a man or woman must get his technique from somewhere, but a brave and resourceful mind is an excellent master in the lesson and the teeming world a well equipped classroom.

I am sick of hearing how much better Ilooth played Hamlet than anyone who has since tried; and the Hamlet of the future (if there be one, and it is not at all important that there should be), will be the man who has never seen Hamlet played and has listened to none one's cant. He will walk with the author and reveal in the part his own sympathy with its conditions. If he cannot do this, let him have a shy at Reggy Rivers in The Hand without a Palm, and when he fails there, "take his quiets with a bare bodkin."

It is all so silly—just like telling a woman she does not get away from the modern in her emotions when playing a Shakespearean role. As though emotions were the product of certain centuries and could be chronologically tagged, glass-cased and railed in like ancient headgear and good old model chairs. As if individuality should lose itself in the fall of a tabard and the fold of a toga.

Don't be forever digging up the past and coming over in the Mayflower.
Look at the world about you with a fresh smile and still keeping the laurels on the brows of those who earned them, weave new wreathes for the heads of them who sing the notes in their own throats, and, when they are conceived in the egg with nightingale intentions, do not try to break through as mocking-birds.

But the press agent, or the advertising man or whoever he was could not fasten Miss Rehan upon Mary Van Buren. She would not be hampered. Her beauty is anybody with half an eye, which, begging their pardon a great many people do not possess, can see that the woman has a future—if she will it so. If she make up her mind always to portray the fortunes of her own soul in the masterpieces through which it passes. Let every ideal be her own devising, unsupplied with the opinions of the commonplace.

Her Guicki is a fine performance, and the very best parts of it are unquestionably her own. With this assurance, let her make her future what she will. She holds it in the hollow of her hand. How I wish I could borrow a laugh like her's for blue days.

O Mary, Mary, don't follow a lead.
Let inspiration come in the silent hours when you can dig down in your own soul and find the spots where its graces lie. Querrel with the stage managers, if need be—I know you will quarrel prettily—but be the pioneer who breaks definitely with tradition of all sorts and becomes something, if only to fall in with the creed of my dramatic faith. Not but what you could find many a better reason.

Just of Passing Interest
The thoughtless fellow who prints the period 1819, (he did not have to—there was no demand for it) and then raises the curtain on a 1900 setting and costumes of today and yesterday and last week and twenty years back, or twenty-one at a pinch. O, where are we?

The comedian who arranges the stage bouquet so that, "See these beautiful flowers," shall always eventuate in merriment. He is a droll wag and his fingers are mostly thumbs and when his masterpieces come upon the scene, one hears the gardener's spade in the cabbage bed, and the click of Draper's lawn mower, and the mellow slash of mortar in the void. Verily there be round holes and square pegs and likewise there be hammers and a hand to drive.

MR. THEODORE HAMILTON
A Striking Example of a Grievous Wrong

Why is it there is no room on the stage for the man who has grown old gracefully in his profession? On the larger stage of life, when he has done his work well, he stands a prominent central figure, respected, referred to, full of grace and authority, in touch with the world, in tune with its people, in that inoffensive relation with the field he has all his life been cultivating. When he has done his work well, mind. There are not too many who have.

And why should it be! Though an occasional lucky seeker for fortune may find a dazzling prosperity in a brief season or two, the man who wins the prizes of life owes their success to unusual talents, tireless zeal and unremitting labor, and shows at sixty what he set upon the shelf, neatly tagged as relics of antiquity!? The men of sixty are the powers of the world today, but for the ballast they supply, it would swing away at a sorry pace.

But on the mimic stage, which should mirror the world, the man of years and dignity has the consideration of last year's bouquet or the flowers that bloomed in the spring.

Dismissing the general and getting to the specific, let us take Theodore Hamilton of the Frawley Company as an example. In his season of many weeks, he has not had a single part to play worthy of his suppleness of mind—his energetic, high-minded and probing spirit.

And why? Because, in the play of today there are no parts written for him or his fellow. The man of sixty is not reckoned with. He is as though he were not, nor ever had been.

So much has been written about Mr. Hamilton's capabilities, his experience and successes, that there is nothing left to publish in his favor, but there is much to publish against the stage that finds him, and such as he, dispensable and in a way, superficial. When such a state of affairs is reached, criticism loses its serenity and there is no use offering us tea to cool us down.

"Yes," said Mr. Hamilton, "I'm going to get out of the business of acting as soon as I can, and turn my attention to something else. There is no room in the profession for a man of my age—nothing to stimulate the ambition, I mean."

"It would seem so," said I, "but though you play small parts, you give them a touch that makes them seem rather important."

LOCAL NOTES

A PLEA FOR THE MUSICIANS

Frank Coffin's first appearance in vaudeville at the Orpheum scored another success for the popular tenor, and many of his friends were numbered in the audience. Mr. Coffin will doubtless be a drawing card upon the Orpheum Circuit, and shows his wisdom in accepting the engagement to the rather precarious remuneration of the concert stage. Since Camilla Uso appeared at the Orpheum, charming the vast throng with the sweet strains of her violin, many musicians have experienced a change of heart towards the vaudeville stage, and frequently the remark is heard, "If Camilla Uso can appear there, why should not I if the opportunity comes?" Is it not better to earn a handsome salary playing or singing before a crowded house than to appear as our hard-working musicians too often do to a slim audience watching with sickening heart people getting up to leave perhaps in the middle of the program who have no appreciation of music because half the concerts are what is called in professional parlance "paper," and human nature is weak at best, and people only value that for which they are obliged to pay. That our concert artists are not half appreci- ated is a deplorable fact—they are too generous by far, and it is not unusual to hear the remark, "I won't go to that concert unless I get a pass!" Some time ago a woman rang me up and asked me to take her to hear De Pachman, as she supposed I could pass her in. It would be such a favor and she had heard all the great artists and thought I might just as well pass her in on my extra ticket. I wished at that moment that there was a masculine friend near by whom I could ask to swear for me, as my sex was declared from that little vest to the feelings, but I told her simply that I had another use for my ticket, and she rushed out to make a demand on another musical critic. She belonged to the class who never pay for concerts if they can get out of it, and I did not propose to lend myself to any such practice, having a sympathy with the musical people, and I had the pleasure of offering an afternoon's enjoyment to some one who was a real student, and could not afford to go. I suppose she thought me "real mean," but a musical critic fails in loyalty to the profession in failing to support right principles even in little things, but this question of free tickets is not a little thing, but a great evil which should be fought shoulder to shoulder by every man and woman in the profession. Let the musicians take a stand, furnish the best musical talent, first-class concerts, and insist upon being paid for their services whether in the concert-room or church, and we will finally have a better condition of things, and the honest worthy artist will be able to get a living in the town. Some will say, "We can't fill a large hall!" Then take a smaller one. People who really care for music will go to hear that which is good—it is the people with free passes who get up and leave before the program is over. Another thing, amateurs who have had no stage experience or training should not be allowed to fill in among professional talent. If a young singer or player is worth hearing, make a professional of him and pay him for his work; if he is not worth paying he is not worth listening to, and it is an imposition to ask the public to pay to hear him. Unexperi- enced amateurs should be kept in their teacher's studio recitals until they have earned the right to public work. My sympathy is with the musician, but he must work out his own salvation. Let him aim to higher standards, and positively refuse to appear without proper remuneration and with those of standing in the profession.

EMMA NEVADA AT MILLS' COLLEGE

Madame Emma Nevada spent a few happy hours last Saturday in company with her husband, Dr. Palmer, and her clever little daughter, Mignon, at Mills College, where she was educated as a girl, the reception of Mrs. Mills and the students being most truly a love-feast to the distinguished singer, who threw herself heart and soul into the joyous welcome with such womanly grace that she endeared herself to every one of the girls who crowded about her begging for songs and stories of her travels, the hours passing on golden wings in the prettily decorated rooms that held such sweet memories of youthful days, and as Mrs. Mills sat chatting with her old pupil she had lost none of her girlish enthusiasm and sweetness, and was as unassuming as when her fresh young voice rang through the rooms in the days gone by, Alfred Kelleher being her first vocal instructor.

GUITAR RECITAL

Mrs. J. C. and Miss Elsie Tooker, guitarists, gave a concert on Monday evening at Sherman Clay Hall that was a pleasing event. The program opened with piano solo Cachacha Caprice op. 79 [Raff] by Miss Sadie Dore, a pupil of Hugo Mansfeld that was very well received, but she denied an encore. Mr. Harry Wood Brown rendered a baritone solo responding to an encore. This young singer has been growing in fame of late. His voice is of good tone, and his stage appearance pleasing, but upon this occasion he was not at his best, owing to a cold. Mrs. Hillman Smith gave several soprano solos—"Roberts tuo Chi adorà" [Caratuni from Robert II Diabiale] of Meyerbeer, Irish Folk Song [Forte], and The Cuckoo [Abel]. In the first two num-ers the singer showed some efforts while her voice remained clear, but in The Cuckoo song she came out freely and brightly, receiving much praise. Mrs. Tooker and Miss Elsie Tooker gave a guitar duet, Fille du Regiment [Donizetti-Ferrer], but the instruments seemed hardly strong enough after the piano, or perhaps the players were not accustomed to the hall, for in each succeeding rendition the guitars came out more brilliantly, and the audience were most attentive, demanding encores with each appearance. It was regretted that Mrs. Tooker did not give solos, but she doubtless gave way to her talented young daughter who owes everything to her most excellent tuition. Miss Tooker created an excellent impression playing solos—L'Ghisli d' Amose Fantasie [Donizetti-Ferrer], Simple Ayen [Thorne-Tooker], Silver Threads Among the Gold [Hanks] her best numbers being Sérenade [Schnibert-Tooker], and Rigoluto [Verdi-Ferrer], which gave her better play in execution and brilliance of effect. Miss Tooker is artistic and sympathetic in her rendering, and plays with good tone and expression. Miss Charlotte Dorr and Mr. Maurice Kramer accompanied.

STUDIO ECHOES.

Sig. Abramoff's concert, which was to have taken place this month, has been postponed until the 8th of March, owing to the fact that Trebelli's first appearance was set for the same day. Sig. Abramoff's concert will doubtless be a success, as he always aims to a high standard and is a favorite in the profession and with the public. Several of his pupils will appear and Abramoff will give solos.

Ladies' night at the Olympic Club Wednesday of last week was as usual a pleasant affair, the enjoyable program including baritone solo by Mr. Harry Wood Brown and specialties by Mr. Geo. Hammersmith, whom we understand aspires to the stage and gives evidence of considerable talent.

The Knickerbocker Quartet, Roscoe Warren Lucy and Cyrus Brownlee Newton gave a concert in San Mateo Friday evening of last week which was highly successful and attended by a large and appreciative audience.

The regular term of the Pacific Coast Conservatory of Music opens next Monday. The school has a fine faculty and reports steady progress and growth.

Mary Frances Francis.

Side Lights

ANNE ST. TEL, the charming danseuse who has been winning so much admiration by her novelty dancing in A Hot Old Time at the New Alhambra this week, performed a very conspicuous part in the great relay ride across the continent in 1896. She carried the war message, which started from this city, across New York harbor on a water cycle.

Mr. Bowser, the creation of M. Quad, together with his nagging wife, has been made into a play of one act, and Mr. Dooley is also to become a stage character in the near future.

GEORGE SAMUELS is expected in a day or so at the New Alhambra in advance of His Better Half which opens at the popular theatre Sunday afternoon, Jan. 21.

The Heart of Maryland will be presented by the Frawley Company during the last two weeks of its stay at the California.
Between Acts

What promised to be an interesting case touching upon the right of a restaurant keeper to arbitrarily bar either a married or single woman, accompanied by her husband or a friend, has been settled in New York just on the eve of the trial. Louise Willis Hepser and Dorothy Usher were not admitted to Stanley's restaurant, in Broadway, near Forty-second street, on the night of November 3, 1897. Mrs. Hepser at the time was accompanied by her husband, William Hepser, and Miss Usher had a friend, Harry Fulton, with her. The actresses had just left the theatre where they were performing. As they were about to enter the place one of the members of the firm interfered, it is stated, declared there was no room in the place for them, and shut the door in the face of the actresses and their escort. Mr. Hepser said the place was not filled and he at once demanded an explanation. He was told that the party would not be served under any circumstances. At the time of the occurrence it was said that Mrs. Hepser's blonde hair seemed to be objectionable. Mrs. Hepser and Miss Usher say that the settlement was for a substantial sum.

Those who make a study of matters dramatic may be also curious to learn that Charles Wyndham's revival of Robertson's David Garrick at the opening of his new theatre in London, has recalled its early origin. It was founded on a French play entitled Sullivan, which was produced by the Comédie Française. Its author derived the idea from a short story published in 1836, called Garrick Medecin. A German adaptation of the same idea was called Herr Doktor Robin. Albey called his English version of Sullivan Dr. Davy. The French author wanted a contemporary hero, and placing his scene in England named his play-actor after Barry Sullivan, who was then in his prime. The first performance of Robertson's play was given at Birmingham in 1864, with E. A. Sothern in the title role.

STANLEY WHITING is in advance of At Gay Coney Island. He says the company is stronger than ever this time, and that many familiar faces will be seen when the performance opens at the New Alhambra tomorrow. The tour has been very successful. The At Gay Coney Island Company which opens a week's engagement at the New Alhambra tomorrow, is the only one on the road. No number two company is out with this piece.

Mrs. Langtry has appeared in New York. The play is pronounced shockingly bad, almost indecent, and Mrs. Langtry is no more of an actress than she ever was.

The American Trotters, who are appearing successfully in the Orient are headed this way.

Ada Rehan to Star

Contracts were signed last week in New York, between Miss Ada Rehan and Klav & Erlanger, whereby Miss Rehan is to make a ten weeks' tour under their management, beginning at Ford's Opera House, Baltimore, on March 12th, and including the larger cities. As many of the actors who were formerly with Augustin Daly are available, will be engaged to support Miss Rehan.

Her repertoire will consist of The Taming of the Shrew, The School for Scandal, The Country Girl and Subtleties of Jealousy, Love on Crutches, Much Ado About Nothing, Twelfth Night and The Last Word. George Clarke, formerly Daly's stage manager and a member of his organization for many years, will be in Miss Rehan's company.

The Neill's Are Coming to Town
Heroines Plenty, Heroes Scarce

That the making of actresses is easier than the making of actors is asserted by the Ladies' Home Journal and the reason given is that the young women are by nature more apt and pliable. This fact is shown at the matinées of the School of Acting. The female roles are generally well played, while the male ones are not. But the young women meet a difficulty arising from their superiority of sex. If promising actresses are more numerous than actors, the fact operates in favor of the young men in getting work. A good-looking fellow finds himself in no such glutted market as discourages his sister aspirant. If he is clever he will readily get an opening, even though he is ugly. The masculine roles in plays predominate largely. Of comedy, intelligent and tolerably facile actresses the supply is far in excess of the demand. Heroes are scarcer. Heroines are plenty. Genius that manifests itself ever so little is recognized at once. Mediocrity finds scant welcome. For incompetency there is no encouragement. The best graduates pass at once into regular employment. The rest seek it by application to managers or to the dramatic agents. The fee for an engagement is half the first week's salary. The employer pays nothing. The agent keeps a registry of all applicants who have had experience on the stage. In some cases, not usually, he will put amateurs on the list. Those who have come from good teachers get attention. As a rule, however, he will not bother with other than professionals of whose abilities he has a pretty definite knowledge. Amateur experience is not respected. Assertion of ability avails naught. A prepossessing appearance counts. But even those who have reason to be vain in that respect are likely to be told that their good looks would disappear on the stage. The idea that the footlights always enhance beauty is a mistake. The effect is quite as often the other way. Natural color counts for nothing. The person with a fine complexion but irregular features may look ill-favored. The face of an actress depends on the shape of the features and their mobility. It is hard for even an expert to forecast how anybody will appear under such conditions.

As to the life of the people of the stage in general, the Ladies' Home Journal tells the truth in saying that it is not hard, coarse, or unconventional, that evils and vices-studies are much exaggerated by common report. Their work these days is usually easy. Members of the low-priced stock companies are the only ones overtaxed. When a play lasts an entire season in New York, as often happens, the players have no studying to do. Rehearsals are held only once a week to correct carelessness. The day's labor consists of three or four hours' work only, except when matineses are given. Many companies on tour spend half the season in engagements of whole weeks or longer in the big cities. In a sense they are homeless. But they need not be without sociability. There is congenial companionship among themselves. The majority are ladies and gentlemen in breeding and conduct. These need not associate with those who are not. As the status of the players has improved with the dominance of education and refinement in the profession, courtesies from the worthiest people have increased very much. Prejudice is no longer indiscriminate. The hardships of travel are not great nowadays. Even when night-by-night journeys are made by traveling companies the distances are short and sleeping-cars are comfortable. There is leisure in the day-time to enjoy the sights quite as pleasure tourists do. The sun shines in stage-bag as much as it does elsewhere. The clouds are no bigger nor blacker.

David Belasco's New York Theatre

David Belasco is negotiating for the purchase of the Old Square Theatre. He is backed by a syndicate, and it is planned to not only acquire the theatre but the land upon which it stands. Charles Evans, of Parlor Match fame, has a four years' lease of the theatre, and he must be reckoned with, as well as the owners. Belasco has long had an ambition to personally own and conduct a New York theatre. If he does not buy a theatre he will build a new one.

Wilson Enos Writes From Kansas City

Enclosed please find money order in payment of subscription for the year of your first interesting paper. You certainly have supplied a 'long-feet want' to the coast and to those who are interested in what is happening there. I also congratulate you on your splendid holiday number.

The success of the company I am now with (and of which I am stage director) has been something phenomenal. I do not think that in the twenty weeks since the opening of the present season there has been more than that many nights when it has not been capacity, and innumerable times turning them away. I think the problem is easily solved when I say that while our prices are "popular," our productions have all been from a "Broadway," X.-Y., standpoint. Wishing you the success you undoubtedly deserve, I beg to remain, lastly, yet sincerely, WILSON ENOS.

Salaries of Singers

In answer to the ever-recurrent query concerning the salaries of opera singers, Hilary Bell writes: Singers will not tell the terms on which they are engaged, for every one of them firmly believes that his or her art is worth double the money. Nor is the impresario a talkative man. Therefore the writer refuses to be put on about figures that cannot be authoritatively proven. The salaries of this season, however, are about as follows: Mme Calve,$1,500 a performance; Mme Sembrich,$1,700; Mme. Eames,$1,000; Mme. Nordica,$800 (possibly $1,000); Mme. de Lussan,$500; Mme. Terrina,$1,000; Mme. Adams,$500; Mme. Strong,$525; Mme. De Vere,$525; M. Alvarez,$1,000; M. Salez,$800; M. Van Dyck,$800; M. SaligRAND,$400; Herr Dippel,$500; M. Edourard,$500; M. Pol,$500; Signor Campanari,$500; Herr Van Rooy,$500; Mme. Mantelli,$250; Mme. Bruna,$250; Mme. Bamer- meister,$100; Mme. Oliva,$250; Signor Mauelini (conductor),$250; Herr Paur,$150; Signor Bevignani,$100. The absence of M. Jean has not diminished receipts at the box office, but it has relieved the pay roll of $1,500 to $2,500 a night, for the Polish tenor had a percentage of the receipts as well as a salary. With the exception of Calve there is no remarkably high-priced singer in the company this year. The chief singers are engaged for various periods and guaranteed so many performances during their engagement. Thus, if a prima donna signs a contract to remain with the company for, say, three months, an article in her contract gives her, say, twelve performances. She is paid by the piece and receives the same amount for singing a small role as for a great one.

Swell Deadheads

For more than a century past the Chosier family has had the right, according to a Paris correspondent of the Full Moth Gazette, to a box at the Opera Comique. Almost every time the theatre has changed hands or has moved from one site to another—and the Opera Comique has had frequent visits to fortune—the attempt has been made to suppress the privilege, but on each occasion the pretensions of the Chosier family have been confirmed, after long litigation. As is well known, the Opera Comique has been re-built as a result of the terrible fire of 1887. M. Albert Carre, the manager of the new theatre, is as little satisfied as his predecessors at being obliged to concede one of his best boxes for nothing, and so far he has refused to allow the Due de Mar- nier and the Due de Fitzjames, the representatives today of the Chosier family, to enjoy possession of their free seats. In consequence they have brought an action against him.

The box was originally granted by Louis XVI in 1781, to the Due de Chosier in consideration of his having built the original Opera Comique at his own expense. During the revolution the Due de Chosier returned to Paris after the Terror to find all his property confiscated, but his rights to the Opera Comique box had been left intact, so he took up his residence in it, and slept and lived in the theatre for several months.

Notwithstanding the big business being done by Henry Irving on the present tour, the brood of speculators that have accompanied him have had a hard time of it. Seats that cost them $3 a piece they peddled on the sidewalk frequently at 75 cents. And even then they could not dispose of them.
Small-Pox Not Epidemic in Butte

Editor Dramatic Review—Dear Sir—Your issue of Jan. 15 contains an item from the pen of one Jas. H. Love, Rep. Nance O’Neil Company, under head of “Jas. H. Love says warning.” In response to which I desire to inform you that Mr. Love’s assertions are false from beginning to end relative to small-pox situations in the state of Montana, and especially Butte. By what authority do people of his standing dare write and have published, under glaring head-lines, such irre possible stuff? Has he been here, and if he were, do we require such authority? Certainly not; and my advice to Mr. Love is that he will have all he can do to attend to his own business.

So far as a small-pox epidemic is concerned, we have not had one. There may have been and perhaps are yet a few mild form cases of the disease in the state, but no towns in the state have been quarantined, and no danger of any being quarantined. Our business in Butte this season is above the average of other seasons, and at the present our capacity is not sufficient to accommodate the crowds desiring to witness Shenaudoah, and advance sale for the副总经理 now on is phenomenal. Will you kindly give this latter notice in your valuable paper? Yours very truly,

Spear Is Mourning

We still remember those jolly farceurs of Finnigan’s Ball who were with us not long ago. Here is something that will probably interest our readers.

“Mr. Joseph Spear, the manager of that stirring epic which has won international fame under the title, Finnigan’s Ball, has abruptly taken the principal seat on the mourners’ bench, the same being due to the action of one of his business managers, Joseph Gates by name. Mr. Gates has had charge of the No. 2 Finnigan’s Hall Company, which has been touring the far West, and it has recently come to light that he was short in his accounts to the extent of $1,965.”—Sunday Telegraph.

Splendid Organization

The Neil Company, now playing in Portland to immense business, is spoken of everywhere it has played as a more than competent organization. It is one of Manager Friedlander’s early attractions.

Violating Copyright

An effort is being made in Washington to increase the penalty clause of the Copyright Act, whereby it is provided that:

“If any person, after the recording of the title of any dramatic or musical composition, shall, within the term limited, contrary to the provisions of this act, and without the consent of the proprietor of the copyright first obtained in writing, sign to the presence of two or more witnesses, engrave, etch, work, copy, print, publish, cause to be published, dramatize, translate or import either in whole or in part, or by varying the main design with intent to evade the law, or, knowing the same to be so printed, published, dramatized, translated or imported, shall sell or expose to sale any copy of such article as aforesaid, he shall forfeit to the proprietor all the plates on which the same shall be copied, and every sheet thereof, either copied or printed, and shall further forfeit $50 for every copy of the same in his possession, either printing, printed, copied, published, imported or sold, or exposed for sale;” the penalty clause attached provides that the sum to be recovered under an action shall not be less than $250 and not more than $5,000 if the work is included in the fine arts; if it is not, the sum to be recovered shall not be less than $100 nor more than $5,000.

Janet Waldorf in Manila

When the curtain rang down on the last act of The Lady of Lyons at the Teatro Libertad last evening and the farewell testimonial to Miss Janet Waldorf was concluded, the Amateur Dramatic Club had achieved another triumph and fulfilled every expectation of the large and appreciative audience.

Miss Waldorf is a most competent and talented actress. Since her advent to the city she has not been seen to better advantage than on that evening. The part of the betrayed, yet true Pauline, is particularly well adapted to the versatility of Miss Waldorf, and the beautiful and appealing scenes of Lytton’s great drama were artistically acted by her.

Mr. Norval McGregor capably played the part of Claude Melnotte. It is rarely that one has the pleasure of witnessing such graceful acting in Manila. Certainly Mr. McGregor’s superior has never visited this remote spot. His conception of the would-be prince was superb, and his acting showed that he is not only talented, but has had much experience before the footlights.

Mr. B. Cogar, as the French Colonel, was a complete success, and played his part like a veteran.

Mrs. A. Dow Currier, who brought out Julia Marlowe, was perfect in the role of the Widow Melnotte, and her acting of the character cannot be too favorably criticised.—Manila Times.

Geo. W. Lederer and Tom Davis, Gus Kercher and Hugh Morton are having very much of a disagreement over the production of the latter firm’s new London review, The Wirewalkers. Lederer claims the role right for everything Morton and Kercher write, while the latter are trying to get out of their agreement. A settlement of the difficulty will, it is expected, soon occur.

A Queer Proceeding

Wm. Lansing, who claims to have been an actor, and who at present is a talk show performer, who put on the vaudeville circuit, opening at Los Angeles. Parts were given out, rehearsals were gone through regularly, and the members of the little company gathered together a wardrobe and were all ready drama will be emphatic for the Angel City for the opening. But a postponement, on account of a conflict of dates, was reported by Lansing and the start was postponed a week. Then a sudden and unexpected event necessitated another delay. Finally the young ladies became suspicious and made a few inquiries. They sought an audience of Mr. Morrisey, and their fears were confirmed when he told them that they had been duped by such a man as Lansing or so such sketch as they had been rehearsing had ever been considered in connection with the Orpheum Circuit. In fact, Mr. Morrisey doubted if he ever had a nodding acquaintance with the enterprising Lansing. Now, what could have been the object of the scheme? Several people would like to know. Lansing had gotten no money from his company, and had conducted rehearsals as though the engagement was a dead sure thing. One of the young ladies, a well known ingenuous of this city, not only had her trunk packed, but had been given a farewell party by friends, just before the truth came out.

Blanche Bates in 'Naughty Anthony'

The life and spirit of the farce largely depend upon the work of Blanche Bates in the role of Cora, the hirsute model. Those who have seen her in those parts in which she is a great success usually have been shown in the splendid and subtlety of her comedy acting. She sweeps through its three acts with humor, verve and authority. Her audacity is never displeasing, and the scenes in each which she fl

Eleanor Kent's Success

San Franciscans will remember Miss Mabel Love, a very stunning young woman, with a voice of great promise and a personality that promised much for a stage success. That success she has achieved, and under the name of Eleanor Kent, is rated a star singer, sharing with her alternate prima donna roles in the Aborn Stock Company. As Marguerite, in Faust, she has made a marked success. In other standard roles, from comic to grand opera, she has gained much praise and is extremely popular in Baltimore and other Eastern cities.
Milo Oceaster, the Vienna opera producer, is dead.

Robert Lorraine, the ex-husband of Julie Opp, will be Ada Rehn's leading support.

Mrs. Langtry volunteered to recite at a supper function in New York recently, but got a polite refusal.

The Neil company has set the Portland theatre-goers simply wild. The company is meeting with really sensational success.

In a recent interview Frank Worthing said that he was aanny Scot. This will be news to a great many, who regarded him as thoroughly English.

Blanche Bates and David Belasco have become great friends professionally, and Belasco is to write a play for "four Blanches" after the run of Naughty Anthony.

Leila Cassels Ellis, one of the legion of clever San Francisco actresses was a member of the cast producing a satirical comedy, An Appeal to the Muse, at the annual Twelfth Night Celebration in New York.

Hope Ross will be in The Greatest Thing in the World, when it is produced by Mrs. Le Moyne and the Lieblers. The cast is to include Frederick de Belleville, Robert Edeson, George Clark, and possibly Katherine Grey.

Robert Elliott is still acquiring experiences. Not having enough with a very romantic wedding here and a little mixup with supposed friends, he was unfortunate enough to be injured in Seattle by the premature firing of one of the Shenandoah guns.

Mrs. E. C. McCullough, wife of the United States Government Printer in the Philippine Islands at Manila, and who is favorably known in musical circles in California, made her debut before the footlights in the Teatro Filipino at Manila last month as Myrline in Pygmalion and Galatea, which is the first of a series of plays presented in that city by the Actors' Dramatic Club, Miss Janet Waldorf appearing as leading lady. Mrs. McCullough received flattering comments in the Manila press, and her work was such a pronounced success that she has appeared since in prominent parts in several other plays, and always warmly welcomed by her audiences.

Billy West, the minstrel, is reported to be drying from Bright's disease.

Florence Walcott is singing with the Aborn Opera Company in Baltimore.

Lorraine Hollis is still acting. She started out a company the 15th of this month in Ohio.

Harry Seward has taken Andrew Thompson's place ahead of A Cheerful Liar Company.

Nick Long and Ildene Cotton are in the merry crowd presenting Broadway to Tokio at the New York Theatre.

Charlie Prince, a San Francisco boy, comes to the California soon as musical director of the Who's Who Company.

Salt Lake is furnishing a clever young actress. She is Julia Dean Morton, stage name with the Morton left off. She is a niece of Julia Dean Hayne.

Theodore Roberts and Eleanor Robson, Madge Carr Cook's daughter and two seasons ago ingenuous of the Prawley Company, are in the Arizona Company.

William Pruette, well remembered on this coast, made a hit in the recent St. Louis production of In the Lower Harbor, Nicola Spinello's opera, new to America.

Wright Huntington writes that there are quite a number of California actors in Kansas City—nearly all doing well. The Dramatic Review is very popular with them.

Andrew Thompson returned Friday from the north, where he has been doing some great advance work for a Cheerful Liar Company. His work in Portland was something that caused much comment.

Lillian Buckingham, the Los Angeles girl who is doing such good work with the Theatre Francais, Montreal, made a strong impression by her performance of Senora Capreas in A Social Highwayman last week.

Mrs. Lillian Scofield, variously known as Lady Lassner and Libbie Stowell, at one time a famous character in San Francisco, was arrested in New York last week for shoplifting. Her adventures would fill a volume. She was once well known in theatrical circles, having been interested with Salmae Moir in the Passion Play.

George Osborne is supporting Lily Langtry in New York.

Charles Frohman will produce Sherlock Holmes in Australia.

Fred Belasco and Mrs. Belasco leave for their Eastern and European trip next week.

Mrs. Lockwood, grandmother of Laura Crewe, the Alcazar's popular ingenuous, was buried Saturday.

Geo. Welyty arrived in town Monday ahead of the Sharkey-Bejriese biograph pictures. Headquarters, the Alcazar.

Edward Heerik, who finished David Harum, has written a play for Belle Archer, dealing with Western ranch life.

Kate Davis, who used to be well known in Irish characters, is being cared for in Providence by The Actor's Fund. She is a hopeless paralytic.

Edwin Stevens and Geo. Osborne, Jr., are in the cast of Brother Officers produced in New York last Tuesday. Henry Miller, who brought the piece out here, is not in the production.

Gertrude Carlyle, who will be remembered playing child parts with Pearl Lunders at the Tivoli three or four years ago, is in the New York Casino cast of Little Red Riding Hood.

Frank Worthing, the well-known actor who has the leading male role in Naughty Anthony, talks seriously of volunteering for service in the British army for service in the Transvaal war.

Charles Terris, Harty Corson Clarke's stage manager and understudy, was made a little present of a gold scarf pin set with diamonds Christmas Day, by Mr. Clarke and his handsome wife.

Manager Rosenquish contemplates employing farm hands as ushers and dairy maids to pass around milk to the audience during the run of The Village Postmaster at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, New York.

Wm. Whytal has recently produced a play called The Butcher, which promises to create a sensation wherever it is seen. Mr. Whytal says: "It's a horror, but there is a great chance for good acting in it."

Miss Reinholdt, of the Alcazar, distinguished herself last Saturday afternoon and evening with her performance of Lady Agatha Carlisle, she having been called upon as Miss Crewe's understudy to play the part for those two performances, Miss Crewe being absent on account of the death of her grandmother.

Julia Arthur is having all the trouble lately that most anybody would care for. Her latest is to bring suit against Al Hayman and Will J. Davis for $45,000, because she was not allowed to play at the Columbia Theatre last Thursday. Miss Arthur's changeableness of mind seems to have laid the foundation for the little difficulty.

Stage Director Walton, who has charge at the Maldonough, brings with him a well-established reputation for good work.

In Margaret Marshall and Clarence Montaine, the Maldonough Stock Company has two of its very best character people on the stage.

Alice Saunders, late leading lady of the Dewey Theatre, Oakland, Cal. joined Human Hearts Company at Portland, Or. She is credited with a big hit.

The Nevada Concert Monday night drew a well-filled house at the California, but the cantatrice was not at her best, and in one or two instances it was quite evident she was singing off key.

Leo Cooper reports steady progress in his work, numbering several clergymen and lawyers as well as dramatic students in his classes. Miss Mary Scott, who made a success at the Curtain, was his pupil.

S. H. Fridelander went to Sacramento Wednesday to see the interest of the Nevada's appearance in that city. Selby Oppenheim has been out ahead of this, his firm's new attraction, doing some successful advance booking.

Miss Virginia Vaughan, formerly with Harry Corson Clarke, is billed for a good part in The Louisiana at the Alcazar next week. There will be quite a number of new faces in the cast, partly on account of some of the Alcazar Stock going to Oakland to open the Maldonough on its successful career in Too Much Johnson.

Miss Viola Woods of Sacramento a schoolteacher, has just sold a play to Frederick Warde, who will open his season and star in it this year. It is a tragedy and destined, says Mr. Warde, to make the hit of the season in the legitimate line. It is the first of Miss Woods, who is quite young, to produce a drama for the stage, her work hitherto having dealt with short stories, poems and novels, of which latter form of literary production she has published several.

An Exchange says, "Miss Kiddler last evening demonstrated her great versatility in the double role of Hermione, the falsely accused wife and queen, and as Peridia, the shepherd maiden, daughter of Hermione and Leonides. As Hermione she was superior; as Peridia, delightful. As the unjustly suspected wife she battled with queenly dignity against the calumny heaped upon her by her husband, her kin, and all and else, save her love for her children, in attempting to save her honor. The transition to the light-hearted and care-free shepherd maiden was sudden, yet it is difficult to decide in which character Miss Kiddler is about to be better. Neither character has ever been better interpreted—perhaps not quite as well."
The Columbia

Richard Brinsley Sheridan's famous comedy, School for Scandal, was the performance at the Columb–a on Monday night by the James Kidder-Hanford Company. The School for Scandal was first produced at Dewey Lane Theatre, May 8, 1777, and sprang into immediate favor as a modern society play, which place it has occupied in the affections of the theatre-goers for nearly 135 years, and is still the society play par excellence. It was given with great acting and perfection of art and detail by this exceedingly good company. Miss Kidder is a very sweet Lady Teaze whose charmingly winning manner endears her to the heart of bluff Sir Peter Teaze, a bale, hearty, honest old fellow whom everybody loves and respects, a characteristic English gentleman of the old school (would there were more of them). Mr. John A. Ritter as Sir Oliver Backbite, is a stemming fellow full of life, and his old century mannerisms are a perfect study and delight to the artistic sense to see him exchange courtesies with Mrs. Candour is a lesson in old-time politeness never to be forgotten. Mr. Norman Hackett as Sir Harry Bumper gives life and character to the jolly youth who sings and sings well the song of the wine. Mr. Hanford, as Joseph Surface, is a dignified, careful hypocrite, worldly wise though seeming moral, who poses for the good he is not. Mr. James as Sir Charles Surface is a fine picture of the good-hearted profligate who loves pleasure for pleasure's sake, and enjoy's life to the full, who lives today and lets tommorrow take care of itself. There was some fine acting in the auction scene. Mr. Johnstone's Moses was a study for the philosopher. No one could mistake the money-lender with his itching palm. Mrs. Henry Van denhoff is a perfect, simply perfect, Mrs. Candour. Not for an instant does she lose herself, but is ever the invertebrate gossip, whom all detest but come to listen to—and she easily carries off all the honors of the evening. There never was a better Mrs. Candour. Miss Helen Slinger as Lady Sneerwell does the magnificent lady to a dot. Miss Aphie James as Maria acts well the simple part placed at her disposal.

The Winter's Tale.

The magnificent spectacular production, The Winter's Tale, probably the best production of a legitimate play seen in San Francisco for years, was the attraction Tuesday night, and most of the balance of the week. Large houses and great appreciation have resulted.

Grand Opera House

The Queen's Lace Handkerchief playing at the Grand Opera House is a pretty, bright opera, leaving breathing space for several really lovely songs when all hands aren't too distractedly busy carrying out the rapid details of complicated plot. Hattie Belle Ladd is herself again in ravishing costumes as the King, with any number of pretty solos heartily encored. Edith Mason's sweet, full voice is, as always, at its best, though the role of Queen's waiting-maid calls for but little of the spirited, bright action which makes her impersonations always so charming. Besse Fairbairn is an energetic Marquise, too much so at last in her demolishing rage for her disenchanted adorer "for eighteen years!" Ettia Cubrath made her debut as the Queen, and was received with favor. Many of the plot intricacies having at length been courageously disentangled, the third act contains some of the prettiest songs in the opera, and gives the fun-makers more scope for original work. Arthur Woodley, impersonating the King's tutor, was particularly funny, encored again and again in his serenade to the moon—more cleverly sung after every repetition and with a variety astonishing of pose and true work. Here, too, Wmifred Goff, his most grotesque highness, the Minister of War, has his final fall with the ludicrously comic disintegration of costume so long imminent. And Wolff as Prime Minister in this act, rages for the last time his wild and wooley rages. Persse does more fine solo work; and is a regal poet in a stuning costume of brilliant red. The ensemble work all through the opera, particularly in the second act, was received with unprecedented and well-merited enthusiasm. And the chorus girls—well, they were just too sweet for any use, and irresistibly itching in the white wigs and black tights of the commissioners.

New Alhambra

San Francisco has seen at Gay Coney Island three times in almost as many months, twice before with Mathews & Bulger as the bright and shining comedians around whom the mixture of absurdities revolves more or less enjoyment. Now, we have seen the same conglomeration with Mathews & Bulger left out, and there naturally was some disappointment. It is always hard to run against a sentiment connecting certain people with a certain play. The piece contains several clever entertainers of the original company and a few new ones. Much credit is due Burt Weston and Chas. Belmont in the roles of D. Liken Payne and HiPrice. They are clever actors, but comedy of the rip-roaring, horseplay kind is not their long suit. There were some very good specialties to help out the performance, notably the wheeling and animal and bird imitations of Alf Holt and the dancing of Minnie Lockette, the nimble limbed souliette. Both were features of the original company. The violin playing of Miss Marie Storl was particularly clever, and won repeated encores. There was a good attendance throughout the week, as there always is at the Alhambra.

The Tivoli

That San Francisco's population appreciated a first-class entertainment was evidenced by the large attention that favored the second week's performance of The Idiot's Eye at the Tivoli. The faultless manner in which this most comical of comic opera has been presented by the Tivoli's coterie of favorites is certainly deserving of the highest commendation. It is indeed unnecessary to say 'dull care begone,' for from the instant the curtain rises the fun begins and continues throughout without giving an instant's relapse. Frances Graham, the new contralto, has made a genuine hit, and has not only a pleasing personality but a contralto voice of rare beauty. Annie Meyers, too, deserves special mention for a most attractive performance. The men, as we said last week, are exceedingly good.

The California

Mr. Frawley, with great judgment, has this week given us an entertainment both astonishing and rare. The character of In Paradise exhibits what is savory to men at the clubs; what is avoided at tea table functions, yet sometimes creeps on into boudoir and is altogether decent, entertaining and worthy of a two weeks' run. In Paradise needs no apology; neither is it naughty. It is simply a farcical performance of spirit and originality. The wit, which laviishly pads the play, is pointed and sparkling, even playful, but always surprisingly funny, and the Frawley Company handled it with life and action. Miss Mary Van Buren, in the role of artist's model, was charming in her abandon, engaging and sweet. Mary Hampton, as Madame Greasillo, is not so happily cast, and one cannot help but wish that beautiful Marian Burney were more petite in the part of Jeanne, which she interpreted innocently and well. Mr. Amory, as Monsieur Pontiboch, the good with a desire to be bad, father, kept the house in a roar, and Theodore Hamilton shared with him in provoking mirth. Francis Byrne gave a clever performance of the willing to please papa lover, and Wallace Shaw, as the Baron, was well received. Miss Pearl Lunders the French maid, was sprightly and attractive, and Minnette Barrett made all that could be desired out of the part of Justine. The comedy is well staged throughout and the gowns are superb. Mr. Frawley has made a wise selection in his production of In Paradise and the public with generous appreciation continue to pack the house.

The second of the series of Symphony Concerts, under the direction of Henry Holmes, will take place at the Grand Opera House next Thursday afternoon at 3:15. The orchestra will be augmented to seventy pieces for this occasion.
The Alcazar

LORD CHUMLEY, written by David Belasco and Henry C. De Mille, is now being hoarded this week. It is a thoroughly pleasing comedy and fills the house nightly with delighted audiences. Mr. Ernest Hastings is covering himself with glory as Lord Chumley, and acts the character in a manner so perfectly natural as to seem almost to ignore the stage, which from the Sarah Bernhardt point of view is the true acting. Mr. Hastings shows much magnetism and from start to finish carried his audience with him, they frequently breaking in with rounds of applause, and demanding his recall upon the drop of the curtain. He is deservedly a great favorite and is growing in strength and character with the years of careful study and culture. E. L. Howard Scott is an ideal villain as Gasper Le Sage, the gambler, and does his part so well as to call down hisses upon his devoted head from the gallery gods and they know a good thing when they see it.

E. L. Howard Scott does the character of Adam Butterworth well, and his attempts at airing his schoolboy French, are mirthful. Mr. Denithorne as Lieut. Butterworth was rather sad, but is certainly improving in his stage work, and furnished one of the best bits of acting he has done.

Miss Laura Crews was a sweet little Jessie Deane, the sweetheart of the Lieutenant. Miss Marie Howe, Lady Adeline Barker, was perfectly jolly, as the anxious maid—forty, fair and fat—looking for a husband. Juliet Crosby made fun for everybody with her ideal work as Meg, the angel of the attire, and the love making with Tommy Tucker was essentially south of Mark to the utter edification of the audience.

Miss Blayney, beautifully gownned, as Eleanor had but little opportunity for display of talent in this small character. Mr. Forrest Seabury as Tompkins, Mr. Geo. Webster as Blink Blunk and Mr. Carlyle Moore as the dignified Winterbottom, each and all did excellent work.

Thin-Skinned Authors

If actors are thin-skinned when it comes to criticism, it is not because their co-laborers on the stage do not do what they can to be tasteful. Thus a certain well-known author was making light of the pen effort of a friend who, along with being a player, had been guilty of writing a drama, whose grip on fame was not of the strongest. He protested, "it may be bad, but you must remember it only took me a week to write it." "If it took you a week," was the answer, "then you must have loaded." In Paradise will run another week. The Frawley's success in this laugh-provoker has been very great.

THE COLUMBIA

The repertoire for the third and final week of Louis James, Kathrynn Kidder and Charles B. Hanford at the Columbia commencing with Monday night is as follows: Monday and Friday nights, The Rivals; Tuesday, special matines Wednesday, and Thursday and Saturday nights, The Winter's Tale; Wednesday night and Saturday matinee, The School for Scandal; Sunday night, Macbeth. There is already a most promising demand for all the performances, and the outlook is for a big house.

On Monday night, Feb. 5, the famous original Bostomians will commence a limited engagement at the Columbia Theatre during which time they will appear in no less than four operas. One of these, The Idol's Eye, will receive its premiere presentations here, and The Smugglers of Bayswater, in which the company has won a substantial success, will be heard here for the first time.

THE GRAND

The Queen's Lace Handkerchief continues to delight crowded houses at the Grand Opera House. It will be withdrawn after Sunday, and on Monday evening Boccaccio, the sidesplitting comic opera, will be produced in a most gorgeous and lavish scale with the following splendid cast: Boccaccio, Edith Mason; Leonotto, Rattle Belle Legs; Pietro, Thomas S. Perse; Lambertucci, Arthur Wooley; Lotteringi, Wm. Woff; Scals, Winfred Goff; The Unknown, A. E. Arnold; Ciccho, Joseph Witt; Major Dono, A. E. Arnold; Fiametta, Olve Green; Rosaura, Miss Coors; Beatrice, Kathleen O'Neill; Phyllis, Ethel Struchan; Orecia, Gertrude Hayes. The management have in preparation a magnificent production of David Henderson's extravaganza, Aladdia Jr.

THE ORPHEUM

There has never been a time in the history of the Orpheum when the management was in the position to offer such bills as at present. Next week's program is much stronger than that of last week. Here on the list come Reviere, French duettists and mimics. There are no more finished artists than these two. The Holloways, direct from Europe, will present one of the most sensational acrobatic acts ever seen in this city, Madame and Augustus Shohle, with their five pickaninnies, have an act which for daintiness and novelty, has never been equalled. Irene Franklin, the popular little soubrette, is coming back and will bring a number of new songs. The holdovers are Papinta, James O. Barrows and Company, Edna Bossett Marshall and Company, J. Newman, Matinees Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday.

THE TIVOLI

The general belief that New York is the home of theatrical productions has been set aside in pronounced manner by the enormous success achieved by the Tivoli Opera House, with the comic opera, The Idol's Eye, which is pronounced for a third week, commencing with next Monday evening. The stamp of approval set by the press and public on the Tivoli's production of The Idol's Eye is well merited, for at popular prices the Tivoli is giving a far better presentation of the comic opera than was given by Frank Daniels and his New York company at three times the price of seats charged by the Tivoli. When The Idol's Eye is withdrawn, the Tivoli will present a magnificent production of Macbeth, Bound, and later on The Wizard of the Nile.

THE ALCAZAR

Lord Chumley will be presented at a matinée performance this afternoon and evening, whence it will be withdrawn after Sunday, and for a revival of Sol Smith Russell's Peaceful Valley.

The plot to Peaceful Valley is laid in New Hampshire, on one of the many beautiful farms that dot the White Mountains. While Peaceful Valley is not a sparkling fare, there is much good strong comedy in it, and plenty of strong situations which give it an Old Homestead tinge. Prodgal Father is in preparation to follow.

THE NEW ALHAMBRA

The New Alhambra will present tomorrow afternoon one of the cleverest farce comedies ever seen in San Francisco. His Better Half is the title. The company is a strong one and the entire production will be in keeping with the excellence of the piece. Elaborate scenery, pretty costumes, clever specialties and a piece that is extremely hilarious in its mirth provoking qualities. His Better Half is somewhat on the order of Charley's Aunt, but is far more humorous.

The next attraction at the New Alhambra will be the great melodrama, London Life, with a very strong cast and two carloads of scenery.

Ernest Hastings will play his original character of Hosa Joe in Peaceful Valley next week.

The California

So successful has been this week's presentation of In Paradise, that it will be continued another week. It is one of the best laugh provokers ever played in this city, and has been witnessed by large audiences.

A Rising Singer

San Francisco is rapidly adding to its already long list of singers with a frequency that is something remarkable. A. W. Rhodes, the well-known baritone who has been for some time past perfecting himself for the lyric stage, will soon make his professional debut. Mr. Rhodes has a voice of great depth and fullness, of a peculiarly deep organ tone with a range from E below the staff to G above—2 ½ octaves.

Grove Street Theatre

Extensive alterations are being made in the old Grove Street Theatre, and when it comes out of the contractor's hands it will be a comfortable and handsome little play house, seating about 1,500 people. It will be opened Feb. 11, and play combinations till April, when a regular stock company will be installed. A new corporation, the Western Amusement Company, is behind the scheme. Those interested are Horace Ewing, President and Manager; Hunter Brothers, Alfred J. Morgenstern and E. W. Frost, Business Managers. The house will be devoted principally to melodrama, with admissions from 10 to 33 cents. New scenery and new opera chairs, supplied by Wcher & Co., have been put in, and it appears that a serious effort will be made to add this to our list of permanent play-houses.

At San Diego Monday night M. B. Leavitt, manager of The Spider and Fly Company, was arrested on a charge of failing to pay his war tax while his company was in New Mexico. He gave $500 bail to appear for examination on the 30th before Commissioner Knales. Leavitt says he was not with the company in New Mexico, and was not to blame if the tax was not paid.

New York

Special Correspondence.

New York, Jan. 21—Lily Langtry, after an absence of several years from the stage in America, reappeared here last week as a professional actress and as a personal exhibit in a play by Sydney Grundy called The Degenerates. A crowded and eager audience gave her respectful attention at the Garden Theatre last Monday night. The Degenerates depicts life in an out and fast circle of English aristocracy, and through the kindness of the press agent we are led to believe that much of this matter is taken from the life of the Jersey Lily. There is much in the play, however, which could not be true in any woman's life. The woman portrayed by Mrs. Langtry (for she doesn't desire to be known by the name of her new husband) has a daughter who has been kept away at school not only to keep her free from talent, but to conceal the real age of the mother. When she goes home she succeeds in winning her mother from her gay life. It is a beautiful fiction, honestly far, which seldom if ever happens in real life. But to the partisans something to talk about, and the more they talk the more money will flow into the coffers of the Jersey Lily. Mrs. Langtry looks a little older than when here last, and acts better, although she does not pretend to be a great actress. Prominent in her support are Frederick Kerr and George Osborne. Mr. Osborne, with all the cleverness which usually accompanies the part of a Jew who was always insisting that he was a Christian. Lucy Milner was the maid and Susan, the heroine. The presence of such a character among the degenerates was a relief to the audience that found expression in applause.

Brother Officers, by Capt. Leo Trevor, as produced at the Empire Theatre last Tuesday night by Charles Frohman's forces, is a comedy in which the heroess's marry the girl. The hero is a young unpolished lieutenant in the British Army, who has been raised from the ranks on account of his bravery. But at social functions he is like a ball in a china shop. One officer whose life the hero saved does his best to pilot him through the social whirl, but he feels hopelessly lost. Both officers love the same girl. The polished officer is in debt to a blackleg whom the rough and ready officer can expose. But in exposing the blackleg the hero would lose the girl. He chooses to expose the gambler, and his brother officer gets the girl and the hero's virtue is its own and only reward. But if the hero had married the girl and lived happily ever after, Brother Officers would have been the same as hundreds of other comedies. Now it's different. William Faversham was the hero, Guy Standing his friend and Margaret Anglio the girl. All were excellent. The blackleg was cleverly played by Edwin Stevens, the old-time Tivoli favorite. George Osborne, Jr., also has a part which he plays acceptably.

Frank Daniels in The Ameer is the new leader of the Bostonians' engagement at the Columbian Theatre will commence Thursday morning.

Denver

Special Correspondence.

Denver, Colo., Jan. 16—Things are very dull theatrically this week.

At the Broadway we have the Jeffries-Sharky Fight Pictures, which are very good. Week of 200, Otto Skinner in The Liar.

Black Pati and a company of clever colored performers are pleasing large audiences at the Tabor. Next week, the 21st, Murray and Mack in Plummer's Hall.

The Denver's offering is Harvey Ferguson in McCarthy's Misfortune. The company opened Sunday to a packed house. It is one of those "knock down and drag out" Irish farce comedies which pack a big hit during the week. The company is above the average. Next week, the 21st, The Bitter Corner.

The New Lyceum has an excellent bill this week and is doing a great business. The top draw is Whiting, the Virginia Duke. He does some very clever work and will do better when he becomes better acquainted with the American people. He has been but a short time in this country. Others in the bill are the Harts, Balancers, The Lellymans, ballad singers; Lish, Searle and Lieb in a farcical absurdity; Trixie Wade, character soubrette; Monroe and Hart, Something New in Comedy; Arthur Lane, Musical Monologist; and Matthews and Thompson, grotesque comedians.

Peter McCourt is paying a ten days' visit to his wife's home, Springfield, Missouri. Manager Harper of the New Lyceum is on more work than an average time of one each.

I was informed today that the Orpheum Company intended building a new vaudeville house in Denver within the next few months.

Montana

Special Correspondence.

Butte, Montana, Jan. 15—Grand Opera House, G. O. McFarland, Manager—Shenandoah created a scene at the Grand last night such as has never been witnessed before. The house was filled to its utmost capacity and hundreds were turned away. The piece is booked for Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

This was the second appearance of Shenandoah in Butte, and surpassed in attendance its first production by the Frawley Company here two seasons ago. The play created the wildest enthusiasm ever seen at the Grand.

The staging of the piece is the most realistic ever seen here. All the scenery and the pit are so made that the audience is a part of the scenery and the pit. This latter will be as much a novelty as was Taming of the Shrew.

CHAS. CARRIEHAN.

The advance sale of seats for the first week of the Bostonians' engagement at the Columbus Theatre will commence Thursday morning.

Ogden

Special Correspondence.

Ogden, Utah, Jan. 20.—Plummer's Hall drew a crowded house on last Tuesday, and kept it in an uproar.

Wednesday, Clara Thropp appeared in A Doll's House and gave an artistic performance. Sorry to say that the night before took most of the people's money, and that in the end they had a house that nearly came up to her merits.

We are talking of running a special excursion to Lake to see Mrs. O'Neil well filled. The production was a light comedy drama, Held in Slavery.

L. MACKAY RANK.

St. Louis

Special Correspondence.

St. Louis, Jan. 22.—Our theatrical offerings this week have a very melodramatic tinge. R. H. Sotler remains over at the Olympic Theatre, giving us The Smugglers and The King's Musketeers. Blanche Walsh and Melbourne MacDowell are Manager Pat Short's appointing menu at the Century. They are doing Fanny Davenport's old piece, Gismonda, La Tosca, Cleopatra and Fedora.

Manager Daniels of the Castle Square Opera Company is presenting Romeo and Juliet this week with Yvonne De Trevilla, Adelaide Norwood, Bernice Holmes, Berne Reithard, Homer Lind, W. H. Clarke, Clinton Elder, W. F. Starr, Miro Delamont, Harry Luckstone, Franke Bayle and Donna Miller, the cast.

Counted into Court is Manager Garen's attraction. Billy Clifford and Maud Huth are ably assisted by Oscar Dico, who is a bit Louis boy and son of Rabbi Mising, Eugene Weimer, Howard Long, John Price, E. C. Hoye, Nellie V. Michals Vera King, May Ollinger, Wilma C. Gilmor, Pearl Reddins and Mattie George.

Lincolln J. Carter's newest melodrama, Just Before Dawn, is pleasing the orchestra patrons and throwing the gallery gods into convincing by the most realistic stage effects ever seen at Harvill’s Theatre.

Managers Middleton and Tate have an inviting vaudeville bill in William Cressy and Claude Daye, Agnes Herman, Blocksm and Burns, The Cosmopolitan Trio, James W. Cullen, Gypsy and Roma, Favrette, Tom Dolphy, Dean and Mona, Edward La Zelle and Morris Mealey.

Harry Morris’ Twentieth Century Maidels are playing a return engagement this week at the St. Andrew’s and Manager Jim Butler’s is reaping a financial harvest by their revisit. His burlesque Cyano de Rubber Neck, is very popular.

Col. Hopkins bill this week is in Missouri. While Maurice Freeman may not play Jim Kimball like Nat Goodwin, yet the Hopkins clientele cannot discover the difference as far as art is concerned. Col. Hopkins vaudeville villains are D. J. and Floy Kinley, Don Allman and Clayton and Clarice.

You will note that Miss Bernie Holmes, a Los Angeles girl, laising with the Castle Square Opera Company this week. She will unquestionably become very popular in St. Louis.

Kelly and Violet made a great hit last week at the Columbia. Mr. Kelly is one of your future stars.

Henry Miller informs me that he is making elaborate preparations for his summer engagement in San Francisco. The Only Way and Heartsease will please the Golden Gate patrons. He will produce a dozen Eastern successes during his engagement.

TATY PELLEN.

SALT LAKE

SALT LAKE CITY, UT. Jan. 22—SALT Lake is enjoying one of the best theatrical attractions of the season—the Nance O’Neill Company. Monday and Tuesday past week the Bostonians played to three packed houses at the theatre. Wednesday, Nance O’Neill dropped in with as little bill board and lithograph advertising almost as was done by the famous musical organization. She played the first night to a good house, and as usual the second and each succeeding performance has been drawing larger audiences. The St. Saturday matinee audience heartily jammed the theatre to its highest seating pieces given, Magda and Leah, the Forsaken, the former seems to have made the best impression on theatre-goers. The present week Miss O’Neill presents The New Camille, School for Scandal, Oliver Twist and Peg Wellington.

Dublin’s Uncle Tom’s Cabin and Carter’s Remember the Maine, filled the week of 15-20 at the Grand. Both companies were poor and did small business. The last half of the bill is the latter half of the week the Jeffries-Sharkey pictures are to be exhibited.

Evans Stephens, musical director of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir, has been granted a two years’ leave of absence to make a tour of Europe. During his absence Professor Stephens will make it a point to be present at most of the big musical festivals and will devote some time to new compositions. At the last choir rehearsal, Horace S. Ensign was named by the Presidency of the Mormon Church to occupy the position of conductor of the Choir during the absence of Professor Stephens. Mr. Ensign is a pupil of Professor Stephens and has successfully conducted the Happy Valley Chimes Club of this city for many years. After working nearly three months preparing for the tour of the choir through the East, the choir has been bailed out. Director Highbee having failed to carry out the terms of the contract.

JAMES K. HARDY.

America’s popular comedians, Nat Goodwin and Willie Collier are among the star attractions to appear at the Columbia in the near future.

Watch Presentation

A very pleasant feature of the performance of The Idol’s Eye at the Tivoli Sunday evening was quite as pleasantly surprising to the audience and the members of the company, was the presentation of the solid gold watch awarded by the Dramatic Review to Hannah Davis, the winning chorus girl contest. Ferri Hartman, in a genial little speech, telling how proud both the Tivoli and he himself was that one of their number had been selected as the most beautiful chorus girl of the Pacific Coast, introduced Miss Davis to the audience and presented her with the watch, amid great applause. Miss Davis, with charming embarrassment responded and received further applause.

LOS ANGELES.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

THE most noticeable feature of the Los Angeles theatrical week was the pres-ence of thousands of out-of-town visitors and theatre people, who came to take part in the opening of the new theatre, the Marionette, and to see the productions of the various companies. The week was marked by the opening of several first-class productions, and the week's events were well attended by the public.

The Los Angeles Theatre Company opened its season with a performance of "The Merry Widow." The cast included Miss Marionette, Miss Bentley, Mr. and Mrs. Lunt, and other well-known actors. The production was well-received by the audience, who gave it a standing ovation.

The Los Angeles Opera Company presented "Rigoletto," with Mr. Case, Miss Adams, and other members of the company. The performance was highly praised by the critics, who commended the singing and acting of the principals.

The Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra gave a concert in the new Auditorium, under the direction of Mr. Price. The programme included works by Beethoven, Haydn, and Mozart.

The Los Angeles Light Opera Company gave a performance of "The Mikado," with Mr. and Mrs. Marlowe, Miss Adams, and other members of the company. The production was well-received by the audience, who gave it a standing ovation.

The Los Angeles Theatre Company presented "The Green Pastures," with Mr. and Mrs. Marlowe, Miss Adams, and other members of the company. The production was well-received by the audience, who gave it a standing ovation.

The Orpheum

The Orpheum is playing to crowded houses nightly, and has one of the best bills presented at this popular Vaudeville Theatre for many a day. The Hungarian Orchestra, under the able leadership of Conductor Rosner, discourses enlivening music.

Edna Bassett Marshall presents a realistic novelty singing act, Sunshine and Sorrows. She sings well, and her boys and girl are certainly a clever little quartet. The little girl's ragtime business is up-to-date and superior to much of that class of work done by older performers. James O. Barrows, assisted by John Lancaster and Company, presented Teches, a little dramatic comedy reminiscent of the late unpleasantness, which with the sweet little love story of the children brings to a happy close the hate engendered by the Civil War. Jos. Newman sings a number of humorous songs of his own composition, and was an instant hit, being exceedingly funny. His singing is very enjoyable, and his personality very taking, especially to My Girl's a Different Kind, did the audience respond heartily. He had many recalls and will prove a star attraction.

Papinta, the Queen of Spectacular Dancers, has not lost any of her charm. She easily eclipses Mme. Herrmann or even Loie Fuller in their famous Terpsichorean effects. She introduces a number of charming, startling effects this season.

Brut and Reverie gave some good French duets and inimitable minuets.

The Holloways in their gymnastic feats, the Soblikas novelty dancers, and Irene Franklin, the singing soubrette, were well received, and the holdovers, Honson and Nelson, Nelson and Abbey, Hodges and Lauchmire, and Mlle. Emily's dogs, all keep up their record in their several lines; of these, Hodges and Lauchmire, the colored comedians, alone had new numbers, and they were good ones, too.

The Oberon

Senor Antonio Vargas and Senorita Lya poetenli are the leading attractions still at this popular Music Hall. Senor Vargas has a glorious baritone which in solos or in duos with Senorita Poletini's rich contralto are thoroughly enjoyable. Miss May Wied Ganke, the cornet soloist, is new, and performed acceptably some pleasing numbers. The Projectoscope was put on the Devil's Castle, Bevitched Jun, Wm. Tell, Hypnotists and Dancing in the Barn to delight onlookers. The Ladies American Orchestra led by Mr. Louis N. Ritaua are giving some excellent numbers notably, Overture, Franz Schubert, by Suppe and Surpersi, a popular melody by Brahms.

The Olympia

The Olympia has as good a show as has ever graced its stage this week. Mlle. Thelma, upon whose beautiful form the stereopticon throws its dazzling light, makes a glorious picture. Will H. Hill is exceedingly clever in his voice performance. Camella, Carleton & Rogers, and John D. Wood are still favorites with the audience. Cad Wilson, the Kloto soubrette, is throwing the glimmer of her sparklers upon her admirers, who loudly call for more. Vera Chandon, Jolly Hamilton, Mande Darrell and May Nealon are adding laurels to their fame here nightly, and Zoyaarla and Harry de Lain are among the good attractions.

Vaudeville Notes

The Zimmermans are playing the northwestern circuit. This week they are at Javenport, Iowa.

Wilds and Bunker, Walter Reed and Hal Colet are all making good at the Ceur D' Alene Theatre, Spokane, Wash.

Baby Ruth Roland opens at the Omaha Orpheum the 29th, following Feb. 4 in Kansas City with St. Louis. 29th.

The Five St. Leon, Kate Hope Sprague, Boyle and Lewis are the features at the People's Theatre, Seattle, Wash.

Cleo Ashley and the La Mont Sisters make their first Los Buffet appearances at the Olympic, Chicago, Jan. 29th.

Zola Sisters, Allie Delmar, Oshama, the Jap, and Helen Moulton are the latest attraction at the Olympic in the Standard Theatre, Bakersfield, the 27th.

A Victoria paper calls Smith and Ellis the most popular team that has ever appeared on the variety stage in Victoria. They have just returned for another engagement at the Savoy.

At Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 20, the damage wrought by the fire at the winter quarters of the Barnum and Bailey circus was fully $125,000. The circus is to open at the Standard Theatre, Los Angeles, on the 29th.

The De Moras, acrobats and equil isters, are meeting with much success and are now having their first appearance at the Olympic, Chic ago, Jan. 29th.

F. J. Crosby, Jr. and Inez Forman, who made a hit with their little play at the Orpheum last week, are now playing Los Angeles, playing the Orpheum circuit East from there. Mr. McRobie, while a rich man, with a bank account, is a talented and conscientious actor and a hard worker.

The Tramp Acrobat, Harrigan, recently at the Orpheum, met and married Belle Rogers, sister of Mrs. Fitz Roy Tobin, during his three weeks German. engagement and now with his wife is on his way to New York, filling engagements on the way; two weeks at Koster & Bial's; two weeks at Palace Music Hall, Las Vegas; and two months in Paris. On their return they occupy a flat with the Fitz Roy Tobins in New York.

Paul La Croix, the society juggler, opens at the Chutes, Feb. 12.

David Henderson's latest venture, a vaudeville house in Havana, has been a keen proposition.

Miakowski's new opera, The Smugglers of Bayazed, will be sung by the Bostonians during their coming engagement at the Columbia Theatre.

Primrose & Dockster are credited with having closed a most phenomen onal engagement in New York last week, having completely surprised people with a performance entirely new and entertaining in the minstrel line.

Boloski Kirlow, who used to crack beer bottles in America, when not putting on the boards gorgeous speci men, known in theatrical circles as tent creditors, has declined to offer supervising the tickets that will be made a feature of Koster Biels. He has been engaged for the next two years by a Paris syndicate, who will build a vaudeville theatre and produce talent exclusively.

Opie Read, the author of the Jack lins and other popular stories, now playing at the Olympia, was managed by Justice Kerrigan Saturday. On Thanksgiving day, 1895, William R. McRobie and his wife, known in theatrical circles as Vira Evans, separated after a married life of seven years. McRobie heard nothing of his divorced wife during the long interval until he arrived in San Francisco last week to play the "double" in A Hot Old Time at the New El Met. Thereafter, when he performed McRobie, in company with several friends, dropped in at the Olympia just as McRobie and McPherson were doing their musical act. In the former McRobie recognized his former wife. At the conclusion of the tour he then listened to Miss Chandler in her dressing-room, and soon the reconciliation was complete. They both agreed that the separation had been a mistake, and decided to start all over again, hence the marriage yesterday morning. Mrs. McRobie will return to her home in Chicago. McRobie will reach Chicago in about two months where he will join his wife who will travel with him in the future.

AND A STRONG CAST

EVERYBODY SPEAKS WELL OF HER
LOCAL NOTES

THE McKENZIE CONCERT.

The McKenzie Musical Society gave a concert in Odd Fellows' Hall Thursday of last week which was the best they have given for some time, encore being repeatedly demanded. The choruses were brighter than usual, but again I must call attention to the carelessness of expression that sometimes appears. Every member of the society should write the word "pianissimo" and paste it in their hats. A little better attention to their director would remedy these faults. The numbers of the chorus were Soldier's Chorus from Faust, Espanita Waltz, Caroline Travis, Whistling Rufus March, most of them being arranged by Mr. McKenzie. Miss Maggie Wheeler was the success of the evening, singing Love's Sorrow and encore. She has quite a powerful voice and appears to be in earnest as a student, and her notes were very clear, but she requires much more expression and toning down, which will come with more experience. In the meantime she deserves encouragement. Miss Priscilla Davies sang Angelus [operét]. Her voice has gained in strength, but she still lacks sympathy. Think a little more of the soul, little girl, and your voice will be more musical. Master George Kroger was as usual a favorite, singing The Palms, but Mr. McKenzie and I will fall out seriously if the little fellow sings music beyond him. Some simple melody not too high will be better. Besides, he has rather too lofty an opinion of his abilities as it is, although his bearing upon the stage is better. Life Has No Power was sung by Lilly Laws, Chas. F. LeLong and Mrs. E. A. Robertson, but Miss Laws' voice was far too strong for the other singers. Treador Song from Carmen was sung by J. W. Fisher and the chorus, but the soloist got off the key in the first verse, doing better work, however, as he progressed, and he showed some taste and made a very good appearance. A voice that pleased me for an inexperienced singer was that of O. W. D'Athias, who sang Denza's Si Tu M'ama. He had the charm of not pretending too much and his tones were very sweet and pleasing to the ear, and his work has won a claim to the writer's interest. An orchestra played during the evening.

HOLMES' QUARTET CONCERT.

On Sunday afternoon the Henry Holmes Quartet gave a successful concert in Heast Hall, Berkeley, before a delighted audience; this being the first of a course that Mrs. Hearst has generously provided. The Mendelssohn string quartet in E flat, op. 12, and Schumann's string quartet in A, Holmes excelling in Schumann's interpretation. Mrs. Charles O. Richards rendered some vocal numbers.

CONCERT OF THE ORION CLUB.

An interesting program was rendered by the Orion Society at the Club room last Thursday evening under the direction of Messieurs Idas de Semianario, Sand, Jungbluth, Solomon, Brown, Strelitz, Davis and members of the San Francisco Choral Society. Julius Harrisen rendered a tenor solo, Mme. de Semienario, Wagner's Elsa's Dream, and the Orion male chorus contributed numbers. Several piano selections also were given.

MINETTI QUARTET CONCERT.

Friday afternoon of last week a most appreciative audience greeted the Minetti Quartet in the fourth concert of this season, the artists comprising Guilio Minetti, first violin; Ferdinand Stark, second violin; Chas. Hansen, viola; Arthur Weiss, cello; Mr. S. G. Fleishman, pianist; and Mr. G. Ormay, accompanist. The program opened with Grieg's String Quartet in B flat major op. 27, which was rendered with much fire and beauty of expression. Arthur Weiss delighted his audience with a cello solo, Popper's Hungarian Rhapsodie, which is always a favorite of this artistic player's admirers, and in response to generous applause granted an encore. F. Semetana's piano trio in G minor op. 15, three movements played for the first time was beautifully rendered. Mr. Fleishman is one of our finest local pianists, and acquitted himself admirably upon this occasion. Mr. Fleishman has one fault—we do not hear him often enough, and by the way I overheard a compliment to him during a De Pachmann recital, for as De Pachmann won rounds of applause for his playing of Chopin's Hallade, some one near me remarked warmly, "Splendid—but he can't beat Samuel Fleishman in that!" It always does me good when people appreciate the work of our local musicians. Mrs. Alice Bacon Washington, pianist, and Samuel Savannah, viola, will appear at the next concert.

ADELAIDE RODDY'S CONCERT.

Another little songstress has taken up her work here—Miss Adelaide Roddy, daughter of a naval officer, whose family were prominent in Vallejo, Miss Roddy giving a successful concert before their departure. Tuesday evening she appeared in Byron Mauzy Hall, assisted by Hother Wise and pianist, and Fred Maurer pianist, before a large and refined audience who gave Miss Roddy warm encouragement, and she made a very favorable impression. Her sweet girlish voice is a light soprano and very sympathetic, and after a little pardonable nervousness gained confidence and came out more strongly in each number, her best work being done in Ave Maria with violin obligato [Bach-Gounod]. Other numbers were Alpine Rose [Seldier], Bird in the Wood [Faubert], Una Voce vocal from T. Barbiere, and Haday's With Verdure Club from the Creation. She has made a praiseworthy beginning, and has already had experience as a teacher, and was the pupil of Mrs. Hilton who has given her good instruction and very true interest; and her voice will grow stronger and richer with more mature years. At present she sings with correctness and tender sympathy. Violin solo, Sieg fried Idylle [Wagner] was rendered by Mr. Wimer and Sonata in A major [Handel], by Messers. Wimer and Maurer who were as usual well received.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Thursday afternoon of last week the first Symphony Concert was given in the Grand Opera House under the direction of Henry Holmes. The audience was large and there was much applause, but hardly the enthusiasm that should greet such noble works. A few rousing Bravos would have lent zest to the occasion. I am a warm admirer of Mr. Holmes and glad to see the baton in his hand, yet I was conscious of a lack of fire and vim at times but there were often glorious effects produced. The program opened with Ruy Bias [Mendelssohn] followed by Symphony in D, No. 2, of Haydn, four movements, a work of much beauty, with joyous, flowery themes and called forth much praise. Wagner's Siegfried Idyl was beautifully rendered. Then came Symphony Pathétique op. 74 [Tischalkowsky] six movements, and some of the passionate, stormy passages were admirably done, with good attack and feeling, the leader and orchestra gathering new life as they progressed. Mrs. Hearst, with a party of friends, were interested listeners, and the encouragement she has given Mr. Holmes will be a very precious impetus to his success.

TREBELLI'S CONCERT.

Mlle. Antonette Trebelli's first concert in Sherman Clay Hall Monday evening was a glorious success, the artist winning every heart by her exquisite art and beautiful voice, to which was added the charm of magnetic grace and a face of womanly purity, for Trebelli is wonderfully lovable, yet possessing a certain dignity that inspires deference. In her first number, O, Virgin Mother [Dvorak], she was slightly nervous, but after the first few measures threw life and soul into her work, making captive every listener; every number strengthening her hold upon her audience and calling forth rapturous applause, for in each song was some new beauty or grace. Balatelle [I Pagliacci], Leoncavallo-Pena D'Amore, La Tus Stella [Mascagni] were beautifully rendered, but Carnival of Venice [Masse], air and variations, aroused her audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm, her voice being clear and sweet as a flute, while her method was shown in the magnificent execution of every difficulty and her perfect ease, the house rang with applause as she bowed again and again, her sweet noble face as radiant as a saintess as flowers were laid at her feet, and an encore was demanded. Mr. Robert Clarence Newell was the pianist and played the accompaniments with much sympathetic grace and skill, rendering also solos Schutz's Prelude op. 30, No. 1 Intempero, op. 31, No. 3, and Etude Mignonne, to much applause. Away, Away [Lee], Cherry Ripe [Kora] and My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair [Haydya] were sung in fascinating style, tenderness and buoyancy being delightfully blended. Trebelli playing her own accompaniment, and as I listened I wished that every student might have been present, for they could have had no grander lesson than to hear and watch so true an artist. Her voice is of fine compass, rich in quality and marvellously sympathetic, and there is strength and purity in every tone. Serenade [Benberg] Si j’etais Jardinier [Chaminade] and Tosti’s Spring Song closed the program that seemed all too short, and for an encore she rendered a laughing song that was bewitchingly done, and to hear Trebelli laugh is music indeed, for it comes from her lips in silvery sweet notes that makes sunshine in the heart of the listener. Several musicians remained to offer their congratulations, among those present being Edward Xavier Rolker, Arthur Fickenscher, Mr., and Mrs. von Meyerink, Mr. Epstein and others.

STUDIO ECHOES

Mr. Fred M. Biggerstaff, who was well known here as a pianist and teacher, and who spent two years in Berlin after leaving California, is now in Paris, studying with Moscowsky.

Alfred Keller has arranged to spend a day in Stockton once a week with vocal pupils, as well as in Santa Rosa and Petaluma, and his city work is steadily growing.

Macbeth will be produced by the students of Cyrus Brownlee Newton at the St. Ignatius College on the 31st of this month.

Jos. Greven’s Choral Society assisted at a benefit concert given in Golden Gate Hall Thursday evening of last week.

Homer Tourjee has composed a drinking song, Fill up the Tanks, which will be sung at a banquet to be given by the Bohemians of America, who will celebrate the birthday of President McKinley. David Stum Jordan, Mayor Phelan and Wm. Barnes J., will be among the guests.

The Pacific Coast Women’s Press Association will give a reception in honor of Mr. Waterhouse of the Examiner next Monday evening at Century Club Hall. The receptions of the Association are charming affairs and excellent musical talent is often an interesting feature.

Henri-Sandi Stollnitz gave a concert in Sherman-Clay Hall Thursday of last week in which Miss Ella McCloskey, Miss Bell Rosenthal, Miss Flora Rosenthal, Messrs. Cerf, Rosenthal, L. Waterman, Signor Dellepiane participated, Miss Ella McCloskey, contralto, carried off the honors of the evening.

Hannah Ingham Dead

"I am tired—so tired," sighed Hannah May Ingham, the leading woman of the Murray Hill Theatre last Tuesday. "If I could only have fifteen minutes rest!"

As the weary words left her lips, there came a deep breath of relief; her eyes closed, and her head sank gently forward. Her companions at the table glanced at her sympathetically. Then, as the minutes passed, they spoke to her, but she did not answer. Her wish had been granted, but the repose was for more than fifteen minutes. It was for all eternity.

Miss Ingham, in private life, was Mrs. E. T. Stetson. As an actress her brief career was full of promise. She was born in California and resided at a Shakespearean dramatic club when only nine years old. Then she joined a road company, and while playing Ophelia in Hamlet, she came to the notice of Mr. Stetson, who engaged her for leading roles in the company. He was then organizing, though she was little more than 15 years old.

Miss Ingham joined the Murray Hill Stock Company in '89, and had been increasing in her labors since then.

Change in the Frawleys

Mary Hampton, leading woman of the Frawley Company, has left that organization and there is some talk of her joining the Alcazar forces. A change in the class of plays to be presented by the company left very few parts suitable for Miss Hampton, so she and Manager Frawley have parted company. As mostly comedies will be produced, Miss Van Buren will in all probability assume the leading roles.

Landers Stevens Home

Landers Stevens, the well known Oakland manager, is home after a trip to New York, taking in theatrical and securing new plays for his house, The Dewey. Mr. Stevens found things booming in New York, and saw all the notable productions. Ben Hur, he said, was superb scenically, but the actors did not realize their parts.

While away Mr. Stevens secured the coast rights for fifty-two mello-dramas. He is expecting Lawrence Hanly very shortly to open at his house with The Player. Mr. Stevens has also secured for production at the Dewey many of Manager Frawley’s plays.

There’s no use reading novels that are dramatized. In but few cases have they even shown any resemblance to the books. Sappho is an instance. Sappho on the stage is even worse than Sappho in the book.

The Dramatic Review for the news. $3.00 per year.
For his savages by mistake,—
A solemn truth the madman spake.

O, you who hold the priceless treasure of enthusiasm untouched by the years, "down on your knees and thank Heaven fasting." For you, there are joys the blaze, the posseur shall never know. Let the treasure flow on, a matter dang nor bound, and may the hot air of experience never lie over it to lap it as it flows. And this is apropos of what follows.

A memory gem—said of the James-Kiddier-Hamford production of The Winter's Tale. "The general presentation is quite commendable."

Ah, really. Quite nice, quite decent, in fact almost fact. With a little struggle one might say—good. But will thee do better next time?

Go back! And sit beneath the shady foliage of the Egyptian bean, with jars of barley beer and palm wine within easy reach. Or get into a canoe with your arms behind your head and a fishing line tied to your great toe. What a bore it must be for some people to live. There really should be a method invented for printing a signed yawn.

Theodore Hamilton thinks the melodrama of today is not half lird enough to represent the life it mirrors—that in the Journal and Examiner worse things may be read almost any day. Well, let us resurrect Sweeney Todd, the old English horror. It is sure to draw an enormous gallery. The hero's pleasant pastime was luring his victims to his barber shop, and cutting them into sausage meat.

Within limits, there is nothing in modern dress more beautiful than an evening gown cut decollete. But beyond the limits, it becomes uncebarably vulgar.

Some things, seen from time to time, in unvarying variety upon our local stage, dimly recall the Pogge-dytes of old whose only dress was an ointment—a sort of g ree paint as it were. And they, poor things, were thoughtful enough to live underground.

History repeats itself, and all this may but presage an evolution backward to the wholesome innocent simplicity of, "In the beginning."

But what is the use? It would only mean another Eden, another apple, another temptation, another no machines to sew the fig mantillas. Let us let well enough alone.

When you Alcazars with your nine performances feel overworked and wan, just call up visions of the old New York Bowery Theatre in 1856-60. They changed the bill seven times a week and gave three performances in a night, tragedy, farce and melodrama. They began at seven with let us say Macbeth or The Lady of Lyons, followed it with The Post of Honor, and topped off hurdlv with Robert Macaire ringing the last curtain down at about one-thirty. Talk about your continuous, there was where a man got his money's worth.

And speaking of the Alcazar brings me to the manner in which of late they are staging their plays. Claims of color and elegance are both carefully looked to. The results would often do credit to a dollar-and-a-half house.

Dear Miss T.—Why do you growl about advertisements on theatre programs? Do you not know that they stimulate a lagging dialogue between act?

No, I do not. I get my topics in other ways. But perhaps I can guess. Something high class like the following perhaps:

Do you wear the Redfern corset?—She—No; too many bones.

He—Ah, like shad.
She—Ha, ha! And too tight about the hips.
He—How about the waist?—She—(archly) I don't mind being squeezed there.

He (frugal fellow)—These 3$ shoes are filling a long felt want.
She (hastily)—I can't wear cheap shoes. My feet are too long and slender.

He (brutally)—Rubbish! It's money in your shoemaker's pocket to make you think so. Just like doctors telling you you have an incurable disease.

She (frigidly)—I suppose long feet are an incurable disease—except with the Chinese.

He (seeing the wrinkles in her angry face)—Why don't you correct these 'little mistakes of nature' with Creme de Lis?

She—I will, when you use Jones Dandruff Cure and Dol's Walnut Cosmetic.

He (giddily, after a painful silence)—"Van Camp's Lumber Company. Do you like to saw wood?"

The little touch of the old school one gets in Mrs. Vandenhoff's Mrs. Cawdons, makes one impatient for her Mrs. Malagrop. From what one reads from the critical pen it will not be wise to miss The Rivals of Critics are divided into two great classes—those who think and those who opinie. I wonder how it feels to opinie. I wonder if it hurts.

Side Lights Upon the Well Beloved

THE CRITIC WHO OPINES

You do opinie—O, wondrous mind,
That two times two are four.
O, Latin thunder, you're a find,
To think was such a bore.

Opine's a word to conjure with,
It strikes the public dumb.
Now if they only knew the truth,
"It's not so much, but some."

You do opinie that "Moses wept,"
That parapines have quills,
That poor old Rip Van Winkle slept,
That ducks have yellow bills.

You do opinie that water's wet,
A pint is just four gills,
That vacant founies are to let,
That Carter bottles gills.

You do opinie that leaves are green
That chicknez hatch from eggs,
A planted bean will sprout a bean,
A man walks with his legs.

You do opinie that paste will stick,
That d-o-g spells dog.
You do opinie that miles will kick,
That ham is made from hog.
You make me think of birds and beer,
Of beans on golden plates,
Of corns girls in sealskin gear,
And other things not mates.

O, give us good old Anglo-S.
Do anything in fine.

Just reckon, calculate or guess,
But let up on opinie!!

The Zinkand Face

It is the newest thing in faces and it is becoming fearfully plural and plur-} larly fearful. It is owned by a lot of good people, too—good, honest vul-} garians, I mean, who can do anything with their manners but use them. I wonder why men take such care to polish up their substantial conduct, to see to it they are not thieves or liars or blackguards and then defeat the purpose of goodness by riding it in on an ox.

I do not speak of the face here with any hope of bettering it or curing it, for it has come to stay; but when a new species appears in the animal kingdom, the lover of nature doth long to describe it and give it a name. By right of discovery I claim the questionable honor of christening it.

It is a huntcd, haunted thing
That walks, shall be able
By leaving ere the play is done
To get a well-placed table?"

It is a vulgar, vicious thing
And are the curtain drops,
It gets beneath a Sunday hat
And rushes out—nor stops.

To hear the blessings it deserves
From all of the—more preachers.
And in our peep-out cultured wrath,
We've lost some twenty speeches.

It is a lurid, breathless thing,
Up Market street it chases,
Nor heeds the people slung aside,
While toward the goal it races.

It is a hungry, sandwich thing,
And while you stand you see it
A-groping at you from a chair.
You'd like to rope and tree it.
And how the face does multiply,
It soon will reach a million.
O, Zinkand, save us from ourselves
And hire the Pavilion.

A Word About Kathryn Kiddie

The popular off-hand epitome of Miss Kiddie is that she is cold. Some one said so long ago, and the word, most cleverly cherished, has become a theme, an obsession with the paragrapher. The unthinking, and those who think to order in a certain false fashion extend its application even to private life, so that the original Dears-

The Only Nat's Brother

Nat Goodwin's only brother has been having a good time in Frisco during the past week, doing the cocktail tour, and showing plenty of money, and claiming to be a next week's attraction at the Orpheum, in an interesting sketch. Manager Morrissey says that may be so, but somehow or other he doesn't know anything of the Trebelli and the Beer Bottle

There is a little story going the rounds that is interesting, if not wholly true. It tells how Antoinette Trebelli's manager reported the privilege of leasing the Congregational Church in Oakland because when she last sang in that edifice, some three years ago, an empty beer bottle had been found in the extemporized artist's room. The fact that it was a small bottle, and that the manager explained how Trebelli really preferred milk as a vocal tonic, but substituted beer in the absence of lactic fluid, did not avail. There is a moral to all temperance stories, and in this instance it is not hard to deduce—i.e., singers who perform in churches should take their nerve tonic at their hotels or else swallow the bottle.

Fougere's Diamonds

Fougere lost some diamonds in Los Angeles last week and The Capital of that city tells this story about it:

Speaking of Fougere, who was an Orpheum performer last week, did you notice how gingerly the papers handled her "lost diamond" story? Fougere actually lost a lot of diamonds and the circumstance did not admit of any question, but with one exception, the dailies put on their gloves, and in a very conservative fashion modestly referred to the event. The real facts of the Fougere diamond story were hilariously funny. Guy Barham and Tommaso Garrett, representing respectively the moral and intellectual light and sweetness of the city, had been routed from their comfortable chairs at the Palace by Fougere, whose distress over her loss was pitiful to see. Barham and Garrett having basked in the light of her face for a week she felt it proper to call on them for help in a diamond-hunting excursion. So at midnight the trio, attended by a group of retainers who followed at a respectful distance, walked up and down Main street from the Orpheum to the Van Nuys, carrying lanterns and searching for the lost jewels. They were not found—the jewels, I mean.

New Jersey Barbarians

Burton's Carmen Gaiety Girls closed a week's engagement at New Brunswick, New Jersey, Saturday night with such enthusiastic expressions of regard that the police were called to protect the soubrettes from the too affectionate Jersey "Johnnies." There was almost a riot at the close of the performance. Two hundred young men crowded around the stage door of the theatre, and in some cases mobbed each "gaiety girl" as she emerged.

There were eleven women and ten men to the company, and the vaudeville performance they gave was so tame in contrast to the lithographs that the New Brunswick young men decided they were not getting their money's worth.

The crowd howled for Mabel Ashton and Mary Lamb, and when the two appeared, the audience made a rush for the stage.

The somersaulters, running shrieking to the dressing-rooms, followed by the crowd. Several men of the company held the too eager auditors back while the women hastily threw wraps over their costumes and tried to get out. As they left the theatre they were seized by the men outside. Their clothing was torn from them.

One woman used a hat-pin savagely and managed to break away, but she was chased half a block and dragged back. A squad of policemen rescued the women and escorted them to a hotel. Many of them were bruised and their costumes were in tatters.

Morosco's Oakland Theatre

Notwithstanding a denial published in an Oakland paper, Mr. Lewis Bishop of the Morosco Company tells the Review that their Oakland theatre will be built. He further said that he had a letter from the architects only a day or so ago announcing that preliminary arrangements would be finally consummated within a week or ten days, after which everything would be ready for work to commence. One of the purposes of Walter Morosco's trip to New York is to select a new opera company to occupy the Grand, when the present organization will have gone to Los Angeles to fill a protracted engagement at the Burbank, the Morosco theatre in that city.

A Dramatic Reading

A dramatic reading was given Tuesday in the parlors of Mrs. Calhoun Anderson by Mrs. Virginia Drew Prescott of The Last Letter, by Ella Wheeler Wilcox; scenes from Camille and Macbeth were also among the selections rendered. There is an intelligent purpose in Mrs. Prescott's acting and a charm of dainty womanliness about her that at once arouses the sympathy and admiration of her audience. The scenes from Camille gave an opportunity to disclose the possession of great emotional talent which she used with fine discrimination. Mrs. Prescott is the fortunate possessor of that not-to-be-acquired gift, a magnetic personality. Her work in the sleep-walking scene from Macbeth was given with an intensity and force that made a strong impression on her auditors.

At Seattle last Wednesday night the Frederick Wadsworth Company produced, after months of rehearsal, The Duke's Jester, a new romantic comedy, by Espy Williams. The performance was witnessed by a big house, and was an unqualified success.

Manager Howe of Seattle, last week made a stand that must meet with the approval of every actor and traveling manager. Every late comers after the rise of the curtain, was compelled to remain in the lobby till the conclusion of the act, with the result that there was no spilling of effective scenes and no grumbling from people who came to enjoy the performance.

There is no accounting for tastes. One section of the country will not have what another is pleased with. The English melodrama, With Flying Colors, has made a big hit in Boston, and is on for a run. While here, not-withstanding the sumptuous production given it by the Frawleys, the public would have none of it. Sometimes it costs a manager a pretty penny to find out just what the public does want.

There is no profession that can more strikingly remark on the many changes brought about by the rapid flight of time than the dramatic. In the days of Queen Elizabeth actors and their kind of folk were declared by law to be rogues and vagabonds. The other day actor Henry Irving was a guest of the President of the United States, and on the same evening the Secretary of War gave a supper in his honor.

Sardou, the great French playwright, in his old age is getting pensions. In spite of the fact that he is possibly the most successful of modern stage purveyors and has maintained his pre-eminance longer than any of his predecessors, his sentiment are not of the most satisfying. The few leads he says he cannot enter into competition with the younger French dramatists, who rely for the success of their plays upon questionable scenes. He says he holds himself too good for that, as he writes only for the educated people of civilized nations.

Frank Daniels made an experiment recently at Wallack's, New York, as to the most valuable form of advertising. Between the acts which distributed among the audience slips with a brief printed statement setting forth the disputed question and politely asking the recipient to indicate by a check marked in the proper space whether advertising forms employed which one had attracted him to the performance— the advertisement in the newspaper, the bill boards, window lithographs or something else. Eleven hundred slips were handed to the actors after the next curtain, and of that number 991 showed that the spectator had been attracted by the newspaper advertisement.

Manager Church, the seven-foot referee of the Rossow mediums, has brought suit against Rossow, the proprietor of the diminutive performers, for back salary and for money enough to heal his wounded feelings in having to always travel second class, bathe the mediums, rub down Rossow and boss the performance on the vaudeville circuit. Church was engaged in this city for $15 per show, simply on account of his size, as his huge size made a striking contrast to the pigmies. He does not seem to have received the $15. Church charges Rossow with all kinds of neglect which leads the casual observer to believe, like the proverbial policeman, that the life of a vaudeville attaché is not a happy one.

Critic Glover of the Chicago Times-Herald uses two columns in discussing whether there is anything in the doctrine of heredity when applied to the stage. The whole argument is correctly summed up by himself as follows: "Perhaps after all environment rather than heredity is responsible for most of those instances in which the son follows in the footsteps of his father. The stage, a terra incognita to the public, exercises a certain mysterious fascination over all, and it is strange, aside from all considerations of birthright, that the youth who hears of those things in his drama-work. Benjamin Howard

The Macdonough's new leading man, Benjamin Howard, comes to the new company with ten years of active theatrical experience and a number of stage successes to his credit. Before going on the stage he was for two years assistant critic of the dramatic weekly, paper and becoming enamored of stage work, he entered the ranks and commenced his professional experience with Thomas W. Keene's company, visiting with the company during the season in New York and the Pacific Coast. After the completion of the season, as Mr. Howard expresses it, he learned that the legitimate did not dovetail with his artistic prejudices— being a realist by birth and education, and, as such, must be prejudiced against that peculiar school of art whose motto seems to be, "When in doubt, make a noise." Mr. Howard's next engagement was with Mlle. Rhea, as leading juvenile. Later, followed a try at the farce comedy, "Nicolle," which was terminated only by reason of the manager's reluctance to declare a salary dividend. Following, engagements were played with Frederick Paulding. Following the World War, Howard, convinced of the fallacy of all those romantic dreams, took part in an exploration party into "darkness Iowa," and a pleasant season of more than three hundred performances as John Van Buren, in the Charity Ball, followed by leads in Men and Women, and The Wife. After which Howard was engaged in traveling also in two years as leading man for Stuart Robson, originating among other parts that of AlFlicklin, in The Jucklinis. Mr. Howard's versatility afterwards bubbled up in the direction of musical comedy, and he danced and sang for a brief period in The Girl from Paris, at the Herald Square Theatre. Next came forty weeks at the Davidson Stock, Milwaukee, after which came engagements at the Pike Opera House, Cincinnati, then back to San Francisco, where Mrs. Fiske in Beaky Sharp and James Neill, coming from the latter company direct to the Macdonough. Edward C. White, manager of the Two Little Vagabonds and On the Wabash Companies, writes to The Dramatic Review that he has received the New Year's Review and that it is a beautiful number.

Dennan Thomas is coming this way from the South, where he is being tendered magnificent ovations wherever he appears with his revival of The Old Homestead.

Adelaide Lloyd-Smith Concert

The concert to be given Tuesday evening, February 16th, at Sherman Clay Hall by Mrs. Adelaide Lloyd-Smith, will be extremely interesting to music lovers of this city. Mrs. Smith has a magnificent dramatic soprano of great power, and is an experienced vocalist, having been for a number of years a valued and popular member of the well-received Emma Abbott Opera Company. She is a pupil of Marchesi and her voice work reveals the training she has received. From the Kansas City Journal come these words of commendation: "Mrs. Lloyd-Smith has a voice of rare power and excellent cultivation; she carries her listeners and renders her selections in that finished manner of which only an artist is capable. Mrs. Smith will be assisted at the concert by the Minetti Quartet, Cantor E. J. Stark, baritone; Mr. Chas. M. Hecht, flutist and Mr. Roscoe Warren Lucy, accompanist.

Charity Fund Benefit

The Columbia Theatre will be packed to its utmost capacity tomorrow afternoon when San Francisco Lodge No. 21, Theatrical Mechanics' Association, will have their eighth annual benefit. The cards will be treated with a grand operatic melodrama, in which will be the premiere performance of "Vagrants," the new piece by Mr. and Mrs. Richard B. Sherman. The program will include the best talent now playing at the local theatres. Brother Louis Jones will deliver the address of welcome and the Frawleys will present the second act of In Paradisum. There will be given a grand operatic melodrama, participated in by Frances Graham, Anna Lichter, Thomas Greene and Brother Ferris Harman of the Tivoli, William Woff and Windsor Golf of the Grand Opera House, and Signorini, Signor Gherlandini and Signor Antonio Vargas of the Okeron. Clever vaudeville contributions will be sent from the Orpheum, Chutes and Olympia, and a delightful sketch by Collins Kemper, entitled Don will be presented by members of the James-Kidder-Hanford Company.

Now Is The Time

Manager John Cornday, the Portland manager, is thoroughly up-to-date. Following up the agitation for the removal of ladies' hats in the audience, he has carried out the following unique idea: Just as the orchestra leader appears and the musicians get ready to play, a sign in front of the leader that reads—"Ladies, now is the proper time to remove your hats." The ladies take the hint, and at Cornday's the hat nuisance is abated for once and all.

Nat C. Goodwin is to produce his new play entitled When We Were Twenty-One, Monday night at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York.
James A. Brough, reknowned a Pacific Coast favorite, is doing some extensive work for the Meffett Stock Company, Louisville.

Edith Lemmert, a talented actress hailing from Los Angeles, is being highly praised for her work in The Adventures of Lady Ursula.

Billy West, probably the best all around man in the Tivolli ever had, and an intimated of all the Tivolli tickets, is now enrolled in the Andrews Opera Company.

Pilar Morin, the pantomimist, who filled an engagement at the Orpheum a couple of seasons ago, leaves for Manila with a company of fellow Thespians very shortly.

Homes Henley, the favorite baritone, will be one of the principal singers in a series of concerts to be given in the interior cities, beginning at Stockton on Monday evening.

The Union Quartet will sing for the Theatrical Mechanics' Association Benefit at the Columbia Theatre tomorrow. It is composed of Chas. Henley, Egerton Smith, Thomas Nowlan and Harold Bashford.

Maude Lillian Berki, the San Francisco girl with the Castle Square Opera Company, made a big hit in Chicago, and the Chicago critics speak most flatteringl of her singing.

Notices like this are cropping into the papers very frequently now: Miss Louise Moore of the Grau Company, has a fresh, sweet charm about her voice and dainty self that is altogether pleasing.

Are all the rich girls going on the stage? There is hardly a week that passes but that we have to chronicle the appearance in town of one or more handsome daughters of rich fathers. This week it is Sue Belle Mead of His Better Half Company, daughter of W. H. Mead of the Contra Costa Water Company, who made Assistant Treasurer Ellison of the Alhambra open his eyes by buying $1 tickets in a bunch for the opening performance, afterwards taking the entire crowd out for a supper.

Mrs. Daisy Mott secured a divorce from her husband, Steven Mott, a son of the pioneer capitalist, Thomas Mott of Los Angeles, Monday morning. She was married about three years ago and supplied a delicious morsel for gossips. She had just gone on the stage, having joined Moe.

Miss Motteska's Company. After three weeks of stage life she eloped to Santa Ana with her young blood and was married.

Louise Moorer, the handsome young prima donna of the Grau Company, severs her connection with the Grau forces tonight and will soon leave for New York.

Geo. McQuarrie, of the Jessie Shirley Company, is an exceptionally good actor, and has made a very favorable impression this season in a wide range of parts.
